Quod quis sciens indebitum dedit hac mente, ut postea repeteret, repeteri non potest. What one has paid knowing it not to be due, with the intention of recovering it back, he cannot recover back. Dig. 2. 6. 50.

Quod quisquis norit in hoc se exerceat. Let every one employ himself in what he knows. 11 Co. 10.

Quod remedio destituitur ipsa re valet si culpa absit. What is without a remedy is by that very fact valid if there be no fault. Bacon, Max. Reg. 9; 3 Bla. Com. 20; Broom, Max. 212.

Quod semel aut bis existit prætereunt legislatores. Legislators pass over what happens (only) once or twice. Dig. l. 3. 6; Broom, Max. 46.

Quod semel meum est amplius meum esse non potest. What is once mine cannot be mine more completely. Co. Litt. 49 b; Shep. Touch. 212; Broom, Max. 465, n.

Quod semel placuit in electione, amplius displicere non potest. That which in making his election a man has once been pleased to choose, he cannot afterwards quarrel with. Co. Litt. 146; Broom, Max. 255.

Quod solo inædificatur solo cedit. Whatever is built on the soil is an accessory of the soil. Inst. 2. 1. 29; 16 Mass. 449; 2 Bouv. Inst. n. 1571.

Quod sub certa forma concessum vel reservatum est, non trahitur ad valorem vel compensationem. That which is granted or reserved under a certain form, is not to be drawn into valuation or compensation. Bacon, Max. Reg. 4; Broom, Max. 464.

Quod subintelligitur non deest. What is understood is not wanting. 2 Ld. Raym. 832.

Quod tacite intelligitur deesse non videtur. What is tacitly understood does not appear to be wanting. 4 Co. 22.

Quod vanum et inutile est, lex non requirit. The law does not require what is vain and useless. Co. Litt. 319.

Quod vero contra rationem juris receptum est, non est producendum ad consequentias. But that which has been admitted contrary to the reason of the law, ought not to be drawn into precedents. Dig. 1. 3. 14; Broom, Max. 158.

Quodcumque aliquis ob tutelam corporis sui fecerit jure id fecisse videtur. Whatever one does in defense of his person, that he is considered to have done legally. 2 Inst. 590.

Quodque dissolvitur eodem modo quo ligatur. In the same manner that a thing is bound, it is unbound. 5 Rolle 39; Broom, Max. 881; 2 M. & G. 729.

Quorum prætextu nec auget nec minuit sententiam, sed tantum confirmat præmissa. "Quorum prætextu" neither increases nor diminishes the meaning, but only confirms that which went before. Plowd. 52.

Quotiens dubia interpretatio libertatis est, secundum libertatem respondendum erit. Whenever there is a doubt between liberty and slavery, the decision must be in favor of liberty. Dig. 50. 17. 20.

Quotiens idem sermo duas sententias exprimit, ea potissimum accipitur, quæ rei gerendæ aptior est. Whenever the same words express two meanings, that is to be taken which is the better fitted for carrying out the proposed end. Dig. 50. 17. 67.

Quoties in stipulationibus ambigua oratio est, commodissimum est id accipi quo res de quo agitur in tuto sit. Whenever in stipulations the expression is ambiguous, it is most proper to give it that interpretation by which the subject-matter may be in safety. Dig. 41. 1. 80; 50. 16. 219.

Quoties in verbis nulla est ambiguitas, ibi nulla expositio contra verba expressa fienda est. When there is no ambiguity in the words, then no exposition contrary to the words is to be made. Co. Litt. 147; Broom, Max. 619.

Quum de lucro duorum quæritur, melior est conditio possidentis. When the gain of one or two is in question, the condition of the possessor is the better. Dig. 50. 17. 126 n.

Quum in testamento ambigue aut etiam perperam scriptum est, benigne interpretari et secundum id quod credibile est cogitatum, credendum est. When in a will an ambiguous or even an erroneous expression occurs, it should be construed liberally and in accordance with what is thought the probable meaning of the testator. Dig. 34. 5. 24; Broom, Max. 567. See Brisson, Perperam.

Quum principalis causa non consistit ne ea quidem quæ sequuntur locum habent. When the principal cause does not hold its ground, neither do the accessories find place. Dig. 50. 17. 129. 1; Broom, Max. 496; 1 Pothier, Obl. 413.

Ratihabitio mandato æquiparatur. Ratification is equal to a command. Dig. 46. 3. 12. 4; Broom, Max. 867; 20 Pick. (Mass.) 95. See Omnis ratihabitio, etc.

Ratio est formalis causa consuetudinis. Reason is the source and mould of custom.

Ratio est legis anima, mutata legis ratione mutatur et lex. Reason is the soul of the law; the reason of the law being changed, the law is also changed. 7 Co. 7.

Ratio et auctoritas duo clarissima mundi lumina. Reason and authority are the two brightest lights in the world. 4 Inst. 320.

Ratio in jure æquitas integra. Reason in law is perfect equity.

Ratio legis est anima legis. The reason of the law is the soul of the law. Jenk. Cent. 45.

Ratio non clauditur loco. Reason is not confined to any place.

Ratio potest allegari deficiente lege, sed vera et legalis et non apparens. Reason may be alleged when the law is defective, but it must be true and legal reason, and not merely apparent. Co. Litt. 191.

Re, verbis, scripto, consensu, traditione, junctura vestes sumere pacta solent. Compacts usually take their clothing from the thing itself, from words, from writings, from consent, from delivery. Plowd. 161.

Receditur a placitis juris potius quam injuriæ et delicta maneant impunita. Positive rules of law will be receded from rather than that crimes and wrongs should remain unpunished. Bacon, Max. Reg. 12; Broom, Max. 10. (This applies only to such maxims as are called placita juris; these will be dispensed with rather than crimes should go unpunished, quia salus populi suprema lex, because the public safety is the supreme law.)

Recorda sunt vestigia vetustatis et veritatis. Records are vestiges of antiquity and truth. 2 Rolle 296.

Recurrendum est ad extraordinarium quando non valet ordinarium. We must have recourse to what is extraordinary when what is ordinary fails.

Reddenda singula singulis. Let each be put in its proper place; that is, that the words should be taken distributively. 2 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 614; 3 Pa. Dist. Rep. 344; 12 Pick. (Mass.) 291; 18 id. 223.

Regula est, juris quidem ignorantiam cuique nocere, facti vero ignorantiam non nocere. The rule is, that ignorance of the law does not excuse, but that ignorance of a fact may excuse a party from the legal consequences of his conduct. Dig. 22. 6. 9; Broom, Max. 253. See Irvine, Civ. Law 74.

Regula pro lege, si deficit lex. In default of the law, the maxim rules.

Regulariter non valet pactum de re mea non alienanda. Regularly a contract not to alienate my property is not binding. Co. Litt. 223.

Rei turpis nullum mandatum est. A mandate of an illegal thing is void. Dig. 17. 1. 6. 3.

Reipublicæ interest voluntates defunctorum effectum sortiri. It concerns the state that the wills of the dead should have their effect.

Relatio est fictio juris et intenta ad unum. Relation is a fiction of law, and intended for one thing. 3 Co. 28.

Relatio semper fiat ut valeat dispositio. Reference should always be had in such a manner that a disposition in a will may avail. 6 Co. 76.

Relation never defeats collateral acts. 18 Vin. Abr. 292.

Relation shall never make good a void grant or devise of the party. 18 Vin. Abr. 292.

Relative words refer to the next antecedent, unless the sense be thereby impaired. Noy, Max. 4; Wing. Max. 19; Broom, Max. 606; Jenk. Cent. 180.

Relativorum cognitio uno, cognoscitur et alterum. Of things relating to each other, one being known, the other is known. Cro. Jac. 539.

Religio sequitur patrem. The father's religion is prima facie the infant's religion. Religion will follow the father. [1902] 1 ch. 688.

Remainder can depend upon no estate but what beginneth at the same time the remainder doth.

Remainder must vest at the same instant that the particular estate determines.

Remainder to a person not of a capacity to take at the time of appointing it, is void. Plowd. 27.

Remedies for rights are ever favorably extended. 18 Vin. Abr. 521.

Remedies ought to be reciprocal.

Remissius imperanti melius paretur. A man commanding not too strictly is better obeyed. 3 Inst. 233.

Remoto impedimento, emergit actio. The impediment being removed, the action arises. 5 Co. 76; Wing. Max. 20.

Rent must be reserved to him from whom the state of the land moveth. Co. Litt. 143.

Repellitur a sacramento infamis. An infamous person is repelled or prevented from taking an oath. Co. Litt. 158; Bract. 185.

Repellitur exceptione cedendarum actionum. He is defeated by the plea that the actions have been assigned.

Reprobata pecunia liberat solventem. Money refused releases the debtor. 9 Co. 79. But this must be understood with a qualification. See TENDER.

Reputatio est vulgaris opinio ubi non est veritas. Reputation is a common opinion where there is no certain knowledge. 4 Co. 107. But see CHARACTER.

Rerum ordo confunditur, si unicuique jurisdictio non servatur. The order of things is confounded if every one preserves not his jurisdiction. 4 Inst. Proem.

Rerum progressu ostendunt multa, quæ in initio præcaveri seu prævideri non possunt. In the course of events many mischiefs arise which at the beginning could not be guarded against or foreseen. 6 Co. 40.

Rerum suarum quilibet est moderator et arbiter. Every one is the manager and disposer of his own matters. Co. Litt. 223.

Res accendit lumina rebus. One thing throws light upon others. 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 149.

Res accessoria sequitur rem principalem. An accessory follows its principal. Broom, Max. 491. (For a definition of res accessoria, see Mack. Civ. Law 155.)

Res denominatur a principali parte. A thing is named from its principal part. 5 Co. 47.

Res est misera ubi jus est vagum et incertum. It is a miserable state of things where the law is vague and uncertain. 2 Salk. 512.

Res generalcm habet significationem, quia tam corporea, quam incorporea, cujuscunque sunt generis naturæ sive speciei, comprehendit. The word things has a general signification, because it comprehends as well corporeal as incorporeal objects, of whatever sort, nature, or species. 3 Inst. 482; 1 Bouv. Inst. n. 415.

Res inter alios acta alteri nocere non debet. Things done between strangers ought not to injure those who are not parties to them. Co. Litt. 132; Broom, Max. 954, 967; 11 Q. B. 1028; 67 N. H. 369; Freem. Judg. § 154.

Res inter alios judicatæ nullum aliis præjudicium faciunt. Matters adjudged in a cause do not prejudice those who were not parties to it. Dig. 44. 2. 1.

Res ipsa loquitur. See RES IPSA LOQUITUR.

Res judicata facit ex albo nigrum, ex nigro album, ex curvo rectum, ex recto curvum. A thing adjudged makes white, black; black, white; the crooked, straight; the straight, crooked. 1 Bouv. Inst. n. 840.

Res judicata pro veritate accipitur. A thing adjudged must be taken for truth. Dig. 50. 17. 207; Co. Litt. 103; Broom, Max. 328, 333, 945; 2 Kent 120; 13 M. & W. 679; 59 Pa. 68. See RES JUDICATA.

Res nullius naturaliter fit primi occupantis. A thing which has no owner naturally belongs to the first finder. See FINDER.

Res per pecuniam æstimatur, et non pecunia per res. The value of a thing is estimated by its worth in money, and the value of money is not estimated by reference to things. 9 Co. 76.

Res perit domino suo. The destruction of the thing is the loss of its owner. Hare, Contr. 83; Story, Bailm. 426; 2 Kent 591; Broom, Max. 238; 14 Allen (Mass.) 269. This maxim is said to be quoted chiefly in cases to which it did not apply in the Roman Law; 9 Harv. L. Rev. 106. See RES PERIT DOMINO; SALE.

Res propria est quæ communis non est. A thing is private which is not common. 8 Paige (N. Y.) 261, 270.

Res quæ intra præsidia perductæ nondum sunt, quamquam ab hostibus occupatæ, ideo postliminii non egent, quia dominum nondum mutarunt ex gentium jure. Things which have not yet been introduced within the enemy's lines, although held by the enemy, do not need the fiction of postliminy on this account, because their ownership by the law of nations has not yet changed. Grotius, de Jur. Bell. 1. 3, c. 9, § 26; 1. 3, c. 6, § 3.

Res sacra non recipit æstimationem. A sacred thing does not admit of valuation. Dig. 1. 8. 9. 5.

Res sua nemini servit. No one can have a servitude over his own property. Trayner, Max. 541.

Res transit cum suo onere. The thing passes with its burden. Fleta, 1. 3, c. 10, § 3.

Reservatio non debet esse de proficiis ipsis quia ea conceduntur, sed de redditu novo extra proficiua. A reservation ought not to be of the annual increase itself, because it is granted, but of new rent apart from the annual increase. Co. Litt. 142.

Resignatio est juris proprii spontanea refutatio. Resignation is the spontaneous relinquishment of one's own right. Godb. 284.

Resoluto jure concedentis, resolvitur jus concessum. The right of the grantor being extinguished, the right granted is extinguished. Mack. Civ. Law 179; Broom, Max. 467.

Respicendum est judicanti, nequid aut durius aut remissius constituitur quam causa deposcit; nec enim aut severitatis aut clementiæ gloria affectanda est. It is a matter of import to one adjudicating that nothing should be either more severely or more leniently construed than the cause itself demands; for the glory neither of severity nor clemency should be affected. 3 Inst. 220.

Respondeat raptor, qui ignorare non potuit quod pupillum alienum abduxit. Let the ravisher answer, for he could not be ignorant that he has taken away another's ward. Hob. 99.

Respondeat superior. Let the principal answer. Broom, Max. 7, 62, 268, 369, n. 843; 4 Inst. 114; 4 Maule & S. 259; 10 Exch. 656; 98 Mass. 221, 571.

Responsio unius non omnino auditur. The answer of one witness shall not be heard at all. 1 Greenl. Ev. § 260. (This is a maxim of the civil law, where everything must be proved by two witnesses.)

Reus excipiendo fit actor. The defendant by a plea becomes plaintiff. Banner, Tr. des preuves, §§ 152, 320; Best, Evid. 294, § 252.

Reus læsæ majestatis punitur, ut pereat unus ne pereant omnes. A traitor is punished that one may die lest all perish. 4 Co. 124.

Reus non debet esse sub homine sed sub Deo et lege. The king should not be under the authority of man, but of God and the law. Broom, Max. 47, 117; Bract. 5.

Reus non potest fallere nec falli. The king cannot deceive or be deceived. Grounds & Rud. of Law 438.

Reus non potest peccare. The king can do no wrong. 2 Rolle 304; Jenk. Cent. 9, 308; Broom, Max. 52; 1 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 246.

Reus nunquam moritur. The king never dies. Broom, Max. 50; Branch, Max. 5th ed. 197; 1 Bla. Com. 249.

Riparum usus publicus est jure gentium, sicut ipsius fluminis. The use of river-banks is by the law of nations public, like that of the stream itself. Dig. 1. 8. 6. pr.; Fleta, 1. 3, c. 1, § 5; Loccenius de Jur. Mar. 1. 1, c. 6, § 12; 3 Kent 425.

Roy n'est lié par aucun statute, si il ne soit expressement nomme. The king is not bound by any statute, if he is not expressly named. Jenk. Cent. 307; Broom, Max. 72.

Sacramentum habet in se tres comites, veritatem, justitiam et judicium: veritas habenda est in jurato; justitia et judicium in judice. An oath has in it three component parts—truth, justice, and judgment: truth in the party swearing, justice and judgment in the judge administering the oath. 3 Inst. 160.

Sacramentum si fatuum fuerit, licet falsum, tamen non committit perjurium. A foolish oath, though false, makes not perjury. 2 Inst. 167.

Sacrilegus omnium prædonum cupiditatem et scelerem superat. A sacrilegious person transcends the cupidity and wickedness of all other robbers. 4 Co. 106.

Sæpe constitutum est, res inter alios judicatas aliis non præjudicare. It has often been settled that matters adjudged between others ought not to prejudice those who were not parties. Dig. 42. 1. 63.

Sæpe viatorem nova non vetus orbita fallit. Often it is the new track, not the old one, which deceives the traveller. 4 Inst. 34.

Sæpenumero ubi proprietas verborum attenditur, sensus veritatis amittitur. Frequently where the propriety of words is attended to, the meaning of truth is lost. 7 Co. 27.

Salus populi est suprema lex. The safety of the people is the supreme law. Bacon, Max. Reg. 12; Broom, Max. 1, 10, 287, n.; 13 Co. 139; 8 Metc. (Mass.) 465; 12 Id. 82; 116 Mass. 260. See 39 Am.

L. Rev. 911. The correct reading is given as: Salus populi suprema lex esto.

Salus reipublice suprema lex. The safety of the state is the supreme law. 4 Cush. (Mass.) 71; 1 Gray (Mass.) 386; Broom, Max. 366.

Salus ubi multa consilia. In many counsellors there is safety. 4 Inst. 1.

Sanguinis conjunctio benevolentia devincit homines et caritate. A tie of blood overcomes men through benevolence and family affection.

Sapiens incipit a fine, et quod primum est in intentione, ultimum est in executione. A wise man begins with the last, and what is first in intention is last in execution. 10 Co. 25.

Sapiens omnia agit cum consilio. A wise man does everything advisedly. 4 Inst. 4.

Sapientia legis nummario pretio non est aestimanda. The wisdom of the law cannot be valued by money. Jenk. Cent. 168.

Sapientis judicis est cogitare tantum sibi esse permissum, quantum commissum et creditum. It is the duty of a wise judge to think so much only permitted to him as is committed and intrusted to him. 4 Inst. 163.

Satisfaction should be made to that fund which has sustained the loss. 4 Bouv. Inst. n. 3731.

Satius est petere fontes quam sectari rivulos. It is better to seek the fountain than to follow rivulets. 10 Co. 118.

Scienti et volenti non fit injuria. A wrong is not done to one who knows and assents to it. Bract. 20.

Scientia scilorum est mixta ignorantia. The knowledge of smatterers is mixed ignorance. 8 Co. 159.

Scientia utrinque par pares contrahentes facit. Equal knowledge on both sides makes the contracting parties equal. 3 Burr. 1910; L. R. 2 Q. B. 589; Broom, Max. 772, 792, n.

Scire debes cum quo contrahis. You ought to know with whom you deal. 11 M. & W. 405, 632; 13 id. 171.

Scire et scire debere æquiparantur in jure. To know a thing, and to be bound to know it, are regarded in law as equivalent. Trayner, Max. 551.

Scire leges, non hoc est verba earum tenere, sed vim et potestatem. To know the laws, is not to observe their mere words, but their force and power. Dig. 1. 3. 17.

Scire proprie est rem ratione et per causam cognoscere. To know properly is to know a thing by its cause and in its reason. Co. Litt. 183.

Scribere est agere. To write is to act. 2 Rolle 89; 4 Bla. Com. 80; Broom, Max. 312, 967.

Scriptæ obligationes scriptis tolluntur, et nudi consensus obligatio contrario consensu dissolvitur. Written obligations are dissolved by writing, and the obligations of a naked agreement by a naked agreement to the contrary.

Secta est pugna civilis, sicut actores armantur actionibus, et quasi accinguntur gladiis, ita rei (e contra) muniuntur exceptionibus, et defenduntur quasi clypeis. A suit is a civil battle, as the plaintiffs are armed with actions and as it were girt with swords, so on the other hand the defendants are fortified with pleas, and defended as it were by shields. Hob. 20; Bract. 339 b.

Secta quæ scripto nititur a scripto variari non debet. A suit which relies upon a writing ought not to vary from the writing. Jenk. Cent. 65.

Secundum naturam est, commoda cujusque rei eum sequi, quem sequuntur incommoda. It is natural that he who bears the charge of a thing should receive the profits. Dig. 50. 17. 10.

Securius expediuntur negotia commissa pluribus, et plus vident oculi quam oculus. Business intrusted to several speeds best, and several eyes see more than one. 4 Co. 46.

Seisina facit stipitem. Seisin makes the stock. 2 Bla. Com. 209; Broom, Max. 525, 528; 1 Steph. Com. 367; 4 Kent 388, 389; 13 Ga. 238.

Semel civis semper civis. Once a citizen always a citizen. Trayner, Max. 555.

Semel malus semper præsumitur esse malus in eodem genere. Whoever is once bad is presumed to be so always in the same degree. Cro. Car. 317.

Semper in dubiis benigniora præferenda sunt. In dubious cases the more liberal constructions are always to be preferred. Dig. 50. 17. 56.

Semper in dubiis id agendum est, ut quam tutissimo loco res sit bona fide contracta, nisi quam aperte contra leges scriptum est. Always in doubtful cases that is to be done by which a bona fide contract may be in the greatest safety, except when its provisions are clearly contrary to law. Dig. 34. 5. 21.

Semper in obscuris quod minimum est sequimur. In obscure cases we always follow that which is least obscure. Dig. 50. 17. 9; Broom, Max. 687, n.; 3 C. B. 962.

Semper in stipulationibus et in cæteris contractibus id sequimur quod actum est. In stipulations and other contracts we always follow that which was agreed. Dig. 50. 17. 34.

Semper ita fiat relatio ut valeat dispositio. Let the reference always be so made that the disposition may avail. 6 Co. 76.

Semper necessitas probandi incumbit ei qui agit. The claimant is always bound to prove (the burden of proof lies on him).

Semper præsumitur pro legitimatione puerorum, et filiatione non potest probari. The presumption is always in favor of legitimacy, for filiation cannot be proved. Co. Litt. 126. See 5 Co. 98 b.

Semper præsumitur pro negante. The presumption is always in favor of the one who denies. See 10 Cl. & F. 534; 3 E. & B. 723; 1 Bish. Mar. Div. & Sep. 400.

Semper præsumitur pro sententia. Presumption is always in favor of a judgment. 3 Bulstr. 42.

Semper qui non prohibet pro se intervenire, mandare creditur. He who does not prohibit the intervention of another in his behalf is supposed to authorize it. 2 Kent 616; Dig. 14. 6. 16; 43. 3. 12. 4.

Semper sexus masculinus etiam femininum continet. The male sex always includes the female. Dig. 32. 62; 2 Brev. 9.

Semper specialia generalibus insunt. Special clauses are always comprised in general ones. Dig. 50. 17. 147.

Senatores sunt partes corporis regis. Senators are part of the body of the king. Staunf. 72 E; 4 Inst. 53, in marg.

Sensus verborum est anima legis. The meaning of words is the spirit of the law. 5 Co. 2.

Sensus verborum est duplex, mitis et asper, et verba semper accipienda sunt in mitiore sensu. The meaning of words is twofold, mild and harsh; and words are to be received in their milder sense. 4 Co. 13.

Sensus verborum ex causa dicendi accipiendus est, et sermones semper accipiendi sunt secundum subjectam materiam. The sense of words is to be taken from the occasion of speaking them, and discourses are always to be interpreted according to the subject-matter. 4 Co. 14.

Sententia a non iudice lata nemini debet nocere. A judgment pronounced by one who is not a judge should not harm any one. Fleta, l. 6, c. 6, § 7.

Sententia contra matrimonium nunquam transit in rem judicatam. A sentence against marriage never passes into a judgment (conclusive upon the parties). 7 Co. 43.

Sententia facit jus, et legis interpretatio legis vim obtinet. The judgment makes the law, and the interpretation has the force of law.

Sententia facit jus, et res judicata pro veritate accipitur. Judgment creates the right, and what is adjudicated is taken for truth. Ellesm. Postn. 55.

Sententia interlocutoria revocari potest, definitiva non potest. An interlocutory order may be revoked, but not a final one. Bacon, Max. Reg. 20.

Sententia non fertur de rebus non liquidis. Judgment is not given upon a thing which is not clear.

Sequi debet potentia justitiam, non præcedere. Power should follow justice, not precede it. 2 Inst. 454.

Sermo index animi. Speech is an index of the mind. 5 Co. 118.

Servanda est consuetudo loci ubi causa agitur.

The custom of the place where the action is brought is to be observed.

Servitia personalia sequuntur personam. Personal services follow the person. 2 Inst. 374; Fleta, 1. 3. c. 11. § 1.

Si a jure discedas, vagus eris et erunt omnia omnibus incerta. If you depart from the law, you will wander without a guide, and everything will be in a state of uncertainty to every one. Co. Litt. 227.

Si alicujus rei societas sit et finis negotio impositus est, finitur societas. If there is a partnership in any matter, and the business is ended, the partnership ceases. 16 Johns. (N. Y.) 438, 439.

Si aliquid ex sollemnibus deficiat, cum æquitas possit subveniendum est. If anything be wanting from required forms, when equity requires it will be aided. 1 Kent 157.

Si assuetis medicari possis nova non sunt tentanda. If you can be relieved by accustomed remedies, new ones should not be tried. 10 Co. 142.

Si duo in testamento pugnantia reperiuntur, ultimum est ratum. If two conflicting provisions are found in a will, the last is observed. Loft 251.

Si judicas, cognosce. If you judge, understand.

Si meliores sunt quos ducit amor, plures sunt quos corrigit timor. If those are better who are led by love, those are the greater number corrected by fear. Co. Litt. 392.

Si non appareat quid actum est, erit consequens ut id sequamur quod in regione in qua actum est frequentatur. If it does not appear what was agreed upon, the consequence will be that we must follow that which is the usage of the place where the agreement was made. Dig. 50. 17. 34.

Si nulla sit conjectura quæ ducat alio, verba intelligenda sunt ex proprietate, non grammatica sed populari ex usu. If there be no inference which leads to a different result, words are to be understood according to their proper meaning, not in a grammatical, but in a popular and ordinary, sense. 2 Kent 555.

Si plures condiciones ascriptæ fuerunt donationi conjunctim, omnibus est parendum; et ad veritatem copulative requiritur quod utraque pars sit vera, si divisim, quilibet vel alteri eorum satis est obtemperare; et in disjunctivis, sufficit alteram partem esse veram. If several conditions are conjunctively written in a gift, the whole of them must be complied with; and with respect to their truth, it is necessary that every part be true, taken jointly; if the conditions are separate, it is sufficient to comply with either one or other of them; and being disjunctive, that one or the other be true. Co. Litt. 225.

Si plures sint fidejussores, quotquot erunt numero, singuli in solidum tenentur. If there are more sureties than one, how many soever they shall be, they shall each be held for the whole. Inst. 3. 20. 4.

Si quid universitati debetur singulis non debetur, nec quod debet universitas singuli debent. If any thing is due to a corporation, it is not due to the individual members of it, nor do the members individually owe what the corporation owes. Dig. 3. 4. 7; 1 Bla. Com. 484; Lindl. Part. *5.

Si quidem in nomine, cognomine, prænominē, agnomine legatarii testator erraverit, cum de persona constat, nihilominus valet legatum. If the testator has erred in the name, cognomen, prænomen, or title of the legatee, whenever the person is rendered certain, the legacy is nevertheless valid. Inst. 2. 20. 29; Broom, Max. 645; 2 Domat b. 2, l. 6, §§ 10, 13.

Si quis cum totum petisset partem petat, exceptio rei judicatæ vocet. If a party, when he should have sued for an entire claim, sues only for a part, the judgment is res judicata against another suit; 2 Mart. O. S. (La.) 83.

Si quis custos fraudem pupillo fecerit, a tutela removendus est. If a guardian behave fraudulently to his ward, he shall be removed from the guardianship. Jenk. Cent. 39.

Si quis prægnantem uxorem reliquit, non videtur sine liberis decessisse. If a man dies, leaving his wife pregnant, he shall not be considered as having died childless.

MAY. Is permitted to; has liberty to. In interpreting statutes the word may should be construed as equivalent to shall or must in cases where the sense of the entire enactment requires it; People v. Common Council, 22 Barb. (N. Y.) 404; Kansas City, W. & N. W. R. Co. v. Walker, 50 Kan. 739, 32 Pac. 365; or where it is necessary in order to carry out the intention of the legislature; Minor v. Bank, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 46, 7 L. Ed. 47; Rock Island County v. U. S., 4 Wall. (U. S.) 435, 18 L. Ed. 419; Kelly v. Morse, 3 Neb. 224; or where it is necessary for the preservation or enforcement of the rights and interests of the public or third persons; Bansemmer v. Mace, 18 Ind. 27, 81 Am. Dec. 344; Steins v. Franklin County, 48 Mo. 167, 8 Am. Rep. 87; Com. v. Haynes, 107 Mass. 194, 197; but not for the purpose of creating or determining the character of rights; Ex parte Banks, 28 Ala. 28. Where there is nothing in the connection of the language or in the sense and policy of the provision to require an unusual interpretation, its use is merely permissive and discretionary; Williams v. People, 24 N. Y. 405; Fowler v. Pirkins, 77 Ill. 271; Seiple v. Borough of Elizabeth, 27 N. J. L. 407; Carlson v. Winterson, 7 Misc. 15, 27 N. Y. Supp. 368; Com. v. Haynes, 107 Mass. 196. See a note in 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 340.

MAYHEM. In Criminal Law. The act of unlawfully and violently depriving another of the use of such of his members as may render him less able, in fighting, either to defend himself or annoy his adversary. 8 C. & P. 167. See Com. v. Newell, 7 Mass. 247.

"Maiming is when one member of the commonweale shall take from another member of the same, a naturall member of his bodlie, or the use and benefit thereof, and thereby disable him to serve the commonweale by his weapons in the time of warre, or by his labour in the time of peace, and also diminisheth the strength of his bodlie, and weaken him thereby to get his owne living, and by that means the commonweale is in a sort deprived of the use of one of her members." Pulton, De Pace Regis, 1609, fol. 15, § 58.

One may not innocently maim himself, and where he procures another to maim him, both are guilty; Co. Litt. 127 a; People v. Clough, 17 Wend. (N. Y.) 351, 31 Am. Dec. 303. The cutting or disabling or weakening a man's hand or finger, or striking out his eye or foretooth, or depriving him of those parts the loss of which abates his courage, are held to be mayhems; Chick v. State, 7 Humphr. (Tenn.) 161; Cl. Cr. L. 183. But cutting off the ear or nose, or the like, are not held to be mayhems at common law; 4 Ala. Com. 205; but see State v. Abram, 10 Ala. 928. The injury must be permanent; State v. Briley, 3 Port. (Ala.) 472; State v. Harrison, 30 La. Ann. 1329; and if inflicted on an assailant in self-defence, it is not mayhem; Hayden v. State, 4 Blackf. (Ind.) 546.

These and other severe personal injuries are punished by the Coventry Act, which is common law and also has been re-enacted in most of the states; 1 Hawk. P. C., Curw. ed. 107, § 1; Ryan, Med. Jur., Phil. ed. 191; and by act of congress. See Act of April 30, 1790, s. 13; Act of March 3, 1825, s. 22; Rev. Stat. § 1342, art. 58 (when committed by a soldier in time of war, etc.); State v. Abram, 10 Ala. 928; Adams v. Barrett, 5 Ga. 404; Com. v. Newell, 7 Mass. 245; State v. Girkin, 23 N. C. 121; Scott v. Com., 6 S. & R. (Pa.) 224; Com. v. Lester, 2 Va. Cas. 198; People v. Wright, 93 Cal. 564, 29 Pac. 240. Mayhem was not an offence at common law in Massachusetts, but only an aggravated trespass; Com. v. Newell, 7 Mass. 248; but at the early common law it was a felony punishable by the loss of member for member, a punishment disused later; see id.; 1 McCl. Cr. L. § 432. Maim as used in the statutes is not equivalent to mayhem but to mutilate; McCl. Cr. L. § 432.

See PHYSICAL EXAMINATION. As to loss of a member in accident insurance, see LOSS.

MAYHEMAVIT. Maimed.

This is a term of art which cannot be supplied in pleading by any other word, as mutilavit, truncavit, etc.; 3 Thomas Co. Litt. 548; Com. v. Newell, 7 Mass. 247. In indictments for mayhem the words feloniously and did maim are requisite; Whart. Cr. Pr. § 260, n.

MAYOR. The chief governor or executive magistrate of a city. Cowell derives it from mayr, used by the Britains, and derived from miret, meaning to keep and preserve, and not from the Latin major.

The old word was portgreve. The word mayor first occurs in 1189, when Rich. I. substituted a mayor for the two bailiffs of London. The word is common in Bracton. Brac. 57. In London, York, and Dublin, he is called lord mayor. Wharton, Lex.

It is generally his duty to cause the laws of the city to be enforced, and to superintend inferior officers, such as constables, watchmen, and the like. But the power and authority which mayors possess, being given to them by local regulations, vary in different places.

MAYOR'S COURT. The name of a court usually established in cities, composed of a mayor, recorder, and aldermen, generally having jurisdiction of offences committed within the city, and of other matters specially given them by the statute. There is a mayor's court in London having civil jurisdiction.

MAYORAZGO. In Spanish Law. A species of entail known to Spanish law. 1 New Rec. 119; Escriche.

MEADOW. A tract of land lying above the shore overflowed only by spring freshets or extraordinary tides, and which yields grass good for hay. Church v. Meeker, 34 Conn. 429.

MEAL RENT. A rent formerly paid in meal.

MEANDER. To wind as a river or stream. Webster.

The winding or bend of a stream.

"Lines which course the lines of navigable streams or other navigable waters." Niles v. Cedar Point Club, 175 U. S. 306, 20 Sup. Ct. 124, 44 L. Ed. 171.

Meander lines are run in surveying public lands bordering upon navigable rivers, not as boundaries of the tract, but to ascertain the quantity of the land subject to sale; and the watercourse, and not the meander line, as actually run on the land, is the boundary; Jefferis v. Land Co., 134 U. S. 178, 10 Sup. Ct. 518, 33 L. Ed. 872; Hardin v. Jordan, 140 U. S. 376, 11 Sup. Ct. 808, 338, 35 L. Ed. 428; Mitchell v. Smale, 140 U. S. 406, 11 Sup. Ct. 819, 840, 35 L. Ed. 442; St. Paul & R. R. Co. v. Schurmeir, 7 Wall. (U. S.) 286, 19 L. Ed. 74.

Where a stream was meandered in the original survey, and the conveyance made and the price paid for the quantity within the meandered lines, the grant conveyed title to the thread of the stream, and the boundaries of the land were held not to be determined by the meander line; Fuller v. Shedd, 161 Ill. 462, 44 N. E. 286, 33 L. R. A. 146, 52 Am. St. Rep. 380.

See LAKE; Turner v. Parker, 14 Or. 340, 12 Pac. 495.

MEANS OF SUPPORT. All those resources from which the necessities and comforts of life are or may be supplied, such as lands, goods, salaries, wages, or other sources of income. Meidel v. Anthis, 71 Ill. 242.

MEASE. A messuage or dwelling-house. Whart.

MEASON-DUE. A corruption of Maison de Dieu.

MEASURE. A means or standard for computing amount. A certain quantity of something, taken for a unit, which expresses a relation with other quantities of the same thing.

Before the Conquest, the measures for the things a man handles are the thumb, span, cubit, ell; for the ground, the foot and pace; for large spaces and distances, recourse was had to time—labour—units; the day's journey, and the morning's plowing. Maitl. Domesd. Book and Beyond 368. A cloth ell, or cloth yard, becomes a standard; one third of it is a foot and one thirty-sixth of it a thumb or inch, and five and one-half yards is a land measure—a rod. Again, one rod will represent the arm of an average man; a longer rod may serve to mediate between the foot and the acre, or a day's ploughing. But it is said that "the whole story will be very intricate." Maitland, Domesday Book 368.

The constitution of the United States gives power to congress to "fix the standard of weights and measures." Art. 1, s. 8. The states, it seems, possess the power to legislate on this subject, or, at least, the existing standards at the adoption of the constitution remain in full force; 3 Story, Const. 21; Rawle, Const. 102; but this constitutional power is exclusive in congress when exercised; Weaver v. Fegely, 29 Pa. 27, 70 Am. Dec. 151.

By a resolution of congress, of June 14, 1836, the secretary of the treasury is directed to cause a complete set of all weights and measures adopted as standards, and now either made or in the progress of manufacture, for the use of the several custom-houses and for other purposes, to be delivered to the governor of each state in the Union, or to such person as he may appoint, for the use of the states respectively, to the end that a uniform standard of weights and measures may be established throughout the United States. The act of March 3, 1881, requires the same to be furnished to such agricultural colleges in every state as have received grants of land from the United States.

By act of March 3, 1893, a standard gauge for sheet and plate iron and steel was established.

The act of July 12, 1894, defined and established units of electrical measure: ohm, unit of resistance; ampere, unit of current; volt, unit of electro-motive force; coulomb, unit of quantity; farad, unit of capacity; joule, unit of work; watt, unit of power; henry, unit of induction.

The act of March 3, 1901, established a national bureau of standards, with custody of the standards, and in charge of the comparison of standards, testing and calibration, etc. The bureau exercises its functions for the government; for any state or municipal government; or for any scientific society, educational institution, corporation or individual engaged in manufacturing or other pursuits requiring the use of standards or standard measuring instruments. For all service, except for the government or state governments, a reasonable fee is charged according to a schedule made by the secretary of the treasury. A visiting committee of five members, appointed by the secretary of the treasury, consisting of men prominent in the various interests involved and not in the employ of the government, is appointed to visit the bureau at least once a year and to report to the secretary upon the efficiency of its scientific work and the condition of its equipment. One member retires each year. The appointment is for five years. The members serve without compensation, except their actual expenses incurred.

The act of July 28, 1866, authorized the use of the French metric system of weights and measures in this country, and provided that no contract or dealing, or pleading in any court, shall be deemed invalid or liable to objection, because the weights or measures expressed or referred to therein are weights or measures of the metric system; R. S. § 3569. Annexed to § 3570 is a schedule which shall be recognized in the construction of contracts, and in all legal proceedings, as establishing in terms of the weights and measures now in use in the United States, the equivalent of the weights and measures expressed therein in terms of the metric system. See infra; WEIGHT; FROM.

METRIC SYSTEM. The fundamental, invariable, and standard measure, by which all weights and measures are formed in this system, is called the mètre, a word derived from the Greek, which signifies measure. It is a lineal measure, and is equal to 3 feet, 0 inches, 11 44-1000th lines, Paris measure, or 3 feet, 3 inches, 370-1000th, English. This unit is divided into ten parts; each tenth, into ten hundredths; each hundredth, into ten thousandths, etc. These divisions, as well as those of all other measures, are infinite. As the standard is to be invariable, something has been sought from which to make it, which is not variable or subject to any change. The fundamental base of the mètre is the quarter of the terrestrial meridian, or the distance from the pole to the equator, which has been divided into ten millions of equal parts, one of which is the length of the mètre. All the other measures are formed from the mètre, as follows:—

CAPACITY. The litre. This is the cubic décimètre, or the cube of one-tenth part of a mètre. This is divided by tenths, as the mètre. The measures which amount to more than a single litre are counted by tens, hundreds, thousands, etc., of litres. By above statute the litre is 0.908 quarts, dry measure, and 1.0567 quarts, liquor or wine measure.

WEIGHT. The gramme. This is the weight of a cubic centimètre of distilled water at the temperature of 4° above zero Centigrade. By above statute, the gram is 15.432 grains.

SURFACE. The are, used in surveying. This is a square, the sides of which are of the length of ten mètres, or what is equal to one hundred square mètres. Its divisions are the same as in the preceding measures. One hundred ares make a hectare. By above statute the are is 119.6 square yards.

The stère, used in measuring firewood. It is a cubic mètre. Its subdivisions are similar to the preceding. For the measure of other things, the term cube mètre, or cubic mètre, is used, or the tenth, hundredth, etc., of such a cube. The stère is not adopted in the above statute.

MONEY. The franc weighs five grammes. It is made of nine-tenths of silver and one-tenth of copper. Its tenth part is called a décime, and its hundredth part a centime.

As already stated the divisions of these measures are all uniform, namely, by tens, or decimal fractions; they may, therefore, be written as such. Instead of writing,

1 mètre and 1-tenth of a mètre, we may write, 1 m. 1.

2 mètres and 8-tenths,—2 m. 8.

10 mètres and 4-hundredths,—10 m. 04.

7 litres, 1-tenth, and 2-hundredths,—7 lit. 12, etc.

Names have been given to each of these divisions of the principal unit; but these names always indicate the value of the fraction and the unit from which it is derived. To the name of the unit have been prefixed, déci, for tenth, centi, for hundredth, and milli, for thousandth. They are thus expressed: a décimètre, a décilitre, a décigramme, a déclistère, a déclaire, a centimètre, a centilitre, a centigramme, etc. The facility with which the divisions of the unit are reduced to the same expression is very apparent.

As it may sometimes be necessary to express large quantities of units, collections have been made of them in tens, hundreds, thousands, tens of thousands, etc., to which prefixes derived from the Greek have been given namely, deca, for tens; hecto, for hundreds; kilo, for thousands; and myria, for tens of thousands; they are thus expressed: a décamètre, a décalitre, etc.; a hectomètre, a hectogramme, etc.; a kilomètre, a kilogramme, etc.

The above act of congress gives the equivalents thus:

The Mètre is 39.37 in.

Litre is .908 quarts, dry measure, or 1.0567 quarts, wine measure.

Are is 119.6 square yards.

Gramme is 15.432 grains avoirdupois.

The Stère is 35.317 cubic feet.

As to certain measures under Mexican grants, see Ainsa v. U. S., 161 U. S. 219, 16 Sup. Ct. 544, 40 L. Ed. 673.

See WEIGHT.

MEASURE OF DAMAGES. A rule or method by which the damage sustained is to be estimated or measured. Sedg. Meas. Dam. § 29.

It is the duty of the judge to explain to the jurors, as a matter of law, the footing upon which they should calculate their damages. If their verdict is for the plaintiff. This footing or scheme is called the "measure of damages." Pollock, Torts 27.

The defendant is to make compensation for all the natural and proximate consequences of his wrong, but not for secondary or remote consequences. There are cases in which this principle of compensation is departed from; as, where exemplary damages are awarded, or double or treble damages are allowed by statute. But, in general, the law seeks to give compensation.

Value is in most cases the measure of compensation and it is a fundamental principle that market value is resorted to not as a test, but only as an aid in getting at the real value, the latter being the true measure of a recovery, whether it be property, time, labor, or service which were affected by the contract or tort which is the subject matter of the action; 1 Sedg. Meas. Dam. §§ 242, 243.

The compensation awarded may be based upon, (1) pecuniary loss, direct or indirect; (2) physical pain; (3) mental suffering; to which have been added the value of the time required for the enforcement of the plaintiff's rights and his actual expenses incurred in so doing. There may be also in the case of injuries resulting from design, malice, or fraud, the sense of wrong or injury to one's feelings which is in some cases taken into consideration as a proper subject of compensation. See Hale, Dam. 86; 1 Sedg. Meas. Dam. § 37. The injuries for which compensation may be recovered are stated generally to include all those which affect any right protected by the common law where they are the direct result of actionable wrong. They may be to property, family relations, reputation, or the person, —whether affecting the body or mind or personal freedom of action; id. § 39.

Pecuniary compensation includes every kind of damage which can be measured by money value; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Carr, 71 Md. 135, 17 Atl. 1052. Such loss is almost always an element to be considered and in most cases the primary one; Hale, Dam. 87. So important is the idea of compensation that it is laid down as the fundamental rule of the measure of damages that the recovery must be "by way of compensation for loss and not to punish the wrong doer;" 8 Eng. Rul. Cas. 360. The test is compensation, not restitution, and beyond this it is rarely possible to lay down any general rule; Pollock, Torts 180. This idea of compensation which lies at the root of the subject, may be illustrated by cases of the most diverse character. The measure of damages for failing to fulfil a covenant which the other party performs, is what it cost to fulfil it; Appeal of McDowell, 123 Pa. 381, 16 Atl. 753; in a trespass for an injury to the realty, by the inadvertent removal of part of coal, it is its value as part of the realty, and not as a chattel after its removal; Warrior Coal & Coke Co. v. Mining Co., 112 Ala. 624, 20 South. 918; for illegal diversion of water by an upper riparian owner, it is the cost of enough water to take the place of that unlawfully diverted; Standard Plate Glass Co. v. Water Co., 5 Pa. Super. Ct. 563; for a breach of contract to return borrowed stock, it is the price of the stock at the time of the refusal to return it; Jennings v. Loeffler, 184 Pa. 318, 39 Atl. 214. In an action of replevin for wrongful detention, the value of its use during detention may be recovered, although ordinarily the damages would be the interest on its value while detained; Werner v. Gralley, 54 Kan. 383, 38 Pac. 482. Where an attorney undertakes for a client a search of records for liens and overlooks a lien, his client, a mortgagee, who has thereupon loaned money on what was supposed to be a first lien upon real estate, may recover from the attorney the difference in value between a first lien and the lien which the client got; Lawall v. Groman, 180 Pa. 532, 37 Atl. 98, 57 Am. St. Rep. 662. The amount stolen from a safe, warranted burglar proof, may be recovered in an action for breach of the warranty; Deane v. Stove Co., 69 Ill. App. 106.

The rental value of a cotton gin is the measure of damages for breach of contract to furnish new machinery which prevents the operation of the gin for a whole season, but anticipated profits cannot be recovered; Standard Supply Co. v. Carter, 81 S. C. 181, 62 S. E. 150, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 155. Where a builder fails to build an elevator to do its intended work in an office building, he is not liable to the owner of the building for loss of rents during the time of unsatisfactory service; Winslow Elevator & Machine Co. v. Hoffman, 107 Md. 621, 69 Atl. 394, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1130.

Breach of contract to make a loan on a demand note secured by mortgage, to take up an existing lien, renders the lender liable for damages caused by foreclosure of the latter, although ordinarily there is no recovery for breach of contract to make a demand loan; Doushness v. Brewing Co., 20 App. Div. 375, 47 N. Y. Supp. 312; and where a reasonable sum was stipulated for as liquidated damages for the breach of agreement to loan money, such stipulation will be enforced; Peekskill, S. C. & M. R. Co. v. Village of Peekskill, 21 App. Div. 94, 47 N. Y. Supp. 305. The compensation is not necessarily for actual loss or expense. In many cases there may be a recovery for the amount of expenditure proper to be made and charged where the service was, in fact, gratuitous, as in the case of services of physicians and nurses which cost the plaintiff nothing, and for which he is held entitled to recover upon the ground that he recovers not for their cost but for their value; Brosnan

v. Sweetser, 127 Ind. 1, 26 N. E. 555; Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Lorentzen, 79 Fed. 291, 24 C. C. A. 592; contra, Peppercorn v. City of Black River Falls, 89 Wis. 38, 61 N. W. 79, 46 Am. St. Rep. 818, where it was held that the recovery could only be for expense incurred.

The other essential requisite is that the amount is determined, not by the actual loss, but only that which is the natural result of the act complained of, or as its consequence may be presumed to have been in contemplation of the parties. This rule was established by the leading case of Hadley v. Baxendale, 9 Exch. 341; 5 Eng. Rul. Cas. 502; 8 id. 405 (for a full discussion of that case see 16 L. Q. Rev. 175), which was a suit against a carrier.

Remote, contingent, or speculative damages will not be allowed, but only such as naturally flow from the breach of the contract; Cahn v. Telegraph Co., 46 Fed. 40.

Those which are the natural, but not the necessary, consequences of the act complained of; Roberts v. Graham, 6 Wall. (U. S.) 578, 18 L. Ed. 791; St. Louis Police Relief, etc., v. Strode, 103 Mo. App. 694, 77 S. W. 1091; Carroll v. Caine, 27 Wash. 406, 67 Pac. 993.

The principle of Hadley v. Baxendale, supra, however, is held to cover damages resulting from the failure of the plaintiff to comply with other contracts, made upon the faith of his contract with the defendant, for the breach of which he sues, where the fact of his having made such other contracts was known to the defendant; 20 Q. B. D. 86. But it is held that the mere fact of such consequences being communicated to the other party to a contract, without showing that he was told that he would be answerable for them and consented to undertake such a liability, will not increase the damages for breach by such other party. The knowledge must be brought home to the party sought to be charged, under such circumstances that he must know that the person he contracts with reasonably believes that he accepts the contract with the special condition attached to it. Mere notice to a seller of some interest or probable action of the buyer is not enough necessarily and as matter of law to charge the seller with special damage on that account if he fails to deliver the goods; Globe Refining Co. v. L. Cotton Oil Co., 190 U. S. 540, 23 Sup. Ct. 754, 47 L. Ed. 1171, where it was said that "the suggestion thrown out by Bramwell, B., in Gee v. Lancashire & Yorkshire Ry. Co., 6 H. & N. 211, that perhaps notice after the contract was made and before breach, would be enough, is not accepted by the latter decision. * * * The consequences must be contemplated at the time of the making of the contract." Anticipated profits are, as a general rule, too speculative and remote to be recovered as damages; Howard v. Mfg. Co., 139 U. S. 199, 11 Sup.

Ct. 500, 35 L. Ed. 147; Cincinnati Siemens-Lungren Gas Illuminating Co. v. Western Siemens-Lundgren Co., 152 U. S. 200, 14 Sup. Ct. 523, 38 L. Ed. 411; Simmer v. City of St. Paul, 23 Minn. 408; Griffin v. Colver, 16 N. Y. 489, 69 Am. Dec. 718; but by way of exception, loss of profits from the interruption of an established business may be recovered, though only if the actual loss is shown with reasonable certainty; Central Coal & Coke Co. v. Hartman, 111 Fed. 96, 49 C. C. A. 244; Goebel v. Hough, 26 Minn. 252, 2 N. W. 847; Chapman v. Kirby, 49 Ill. 211; Shafer v. Wilson, 44 Md. 268; 6 Bing. N. C. 212.

The law requires the injured party to use all reasonable means to reduce his damages to a minimum; Warren v. Stoddart, 105 U. S. 229, 26 L. Ed. 1117; D. A. Tompkins Co. v. Oil Co., 153 Fed. 817; and where the suit is based on the fault of the other party in confiding in his representations and promises, the burden is upon him to show from what time the other should have abandoned his faith and set about retrieving his error and minimizing the damages; Kentucky Distilleries & Warehouse Co. v. Lillard, 160 Fed. 34, 87 C. C. A. 190. The rule of Warren v. Stoddart, supra, requiring reasonable effort to reduce damages means merely reasonable action, and not such as upon after-thought defendant may show would have been more favorable; The Thomas P. Sheldon, 113 Fed. 779.

Where the plaintiff sues for breach before the time of complete performance, he is entitled to compensation for loss during the continued breach, less any abatement of which he ought reasonably to have availed himself; Roehm v. Horst, 178 U. S. 1, 20 Sup. Ct. 780, 44 L. Ed. 953.

As to mental suffering, see that title.

With regard to the measure of damages, the same principles are, to a great extent, applicable to cases of contract and tort; Poll. Torts 529; 9 P. Div. 113. Where the action is for breach of contract, the damages are limited to what may reasonably be considered to have been contemplated by the parties at the time of making it as likely to arise from a breach; Bradley v. R. Co., 94 Wis. 44, 68 N. W. 410. They may include, however, gains prevented, as well as losses sustained, if certain, and reasonably to be expected; Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Wilhelm, 48 Neb. 910, 67 N. W. 870. They are measured by the loss which results from the breach and not the sum of money or property involved in the transaction; [1897] 1 Q. B. 692. As a general rule, the contract itself furnishes the measure of damages.

In an action of tort based upon negligence in the performance of a contractual obligation without malice, the damages would be substantially the same as for breach of contract under the same circumstances; Fererro v. Telegraph Co., 9 App. D. C. 455.

There are dicta to the effect that a more liberal rule of damages should be applied in cases of tort than of contract; Walsh v. Ry. Co., 42 Wis. 23, 24 Am. Rep. 376; Allison v. Chandler, 11 Mich. 542; but they are contrary to the general current of authority which is in favor of applying the same principles to both classes of cases; Baker v. Drake, 53 N. Y. 211, 216, 13 Am. Rep. 507; Sedg. Meas. Dam. § 429, note a.

While the rule which affords the measure of damages is to be supplied by the court, the amount is a question for the jury, and unless the damages are so excessive as to lead to the conclusion of passion or prejudice on the part of the jury, the court cannot interfere with their verdict; Dwyer v. R. Co., 52 Fed. 87.

Damages should not exceed the amount claimed; but cases have been known in which the verdict was in excess of the amount claimed, and the court has amended the statement of claim to enable it to enter judgment on the verdict; Poll. Torts 180; but this is said to be an extreme use of the power of the court; id.; 43 Ch. Div. 327. Where there is uncertainty as to the measure of damages, the rule is to give the lowest sum; Appeal of Jones, 62 Pa. 324.

Estimates of value made by friendly witnesses, with no practical illustrations to support them, are too unsafe, as a rule, to be made the basis of a judicial award. The Conqueror, 166 U. S. 134, 17 Sup. Ct. 510, 41 L. Ed. 937.

In an action for injuries, an instruction not to award damages for hysteria, not directly caused by the accident, was properly refused as it might restrict the jury to damages directly caused by the accident, while there might properly be a recovery for indirect damages which were its natural consequences; Metropolitan St. Ry. Co. v. Hudson, 113 Fed. 449, 51 C. C. A. 283.

The measure of compensation allowed as damages has been somewhat definitely fixed, as to many classes of cases, by rules of decision, many of which are important and well established.

DEATH BY WRONGFUL ACT. The right of action in this case is entirely statutory, being based on Lord Campbell's Act and similar statutes in most states. See DEATH. These statutes are constitutional, even if applicable to one class of corporations; Schooncraft's Adm'r v. R. Co., 92 Ky. 233, 17 S. W. 567, 14 L. R. A. 579; Boston, C. & M. R. R. v. State, 32 N. H. 215; and they are construed by some courts as remedial, by others as in derogation of common law; Hale, Dam. 126; Tiff. Death Wrongf. Act, c. 2, § 32, where the cases are collected. They are said to operate not by way of exception or repeal of the common law, but to create an action totally new in species, quality, or principle; Blackburn, L. J., in 10 App. Cas. 59. This bears upon the measure of damages. It has been said that life is to be regarded as property to be compensated for "without regard to past earnings or capacity to earn at time of death;" Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Keller, 67 Pa. 300; but this case is severely criticised as unsound reasoning; 2 Sedg. Meas. Dam. § 572, where it is remarked that at common law life was not property, and no civil action lay for its loss, which "rule has only been modified by this statute, under which injuries are allowed to give, in most states, damages for pecuniary injuries only." These pecuniary damages embrace: (1) Present pecuniary loss; (2) prospective pecuniary loss; (3) the interest of one who would presumably derive pecuniary benefit from the services of the deceased. Any case may involve one or all of these elements. Present pecuniary loss is based upon actual compensation for loss to the time of action, and although the action is maintainable only where it might have been brought by the deceased if he survived, the measure of damages rests upon different principles. The deceased might have recovered both for pecuniary loss and his pain and suffering, physical and mental, while his representatives recover only for the injury to his family resulting from his death; 18 Q. B. 93; Whitford v. R. Co., 23 N. Y. 465; and not for his suffering, medical attendance, funeral expenses, loss of society of husband or wife, and the like; 2 Sedg. Meas. Dam. § 573; loss of society being considered in a material and pecuniary and not in a sentimental sense; Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Freeman, 83 Fed. 82, 27 C. C. A. 457. In the latter sense loss of society is not an element of damage; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Wilson, 48 Fed. 57, 1 C. C. A. 25, 4 U. S. App. 25; Donaldson v. Mississippi & N. R. Co., 18 Ia. 280, 87 Am. Dec. 391. Prospective pecuniary loss is based on a reasonable expectation of pecuniary benefit from the life of the deceased; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. State, 60 Md. 449; Kesler v. Smith, 66 N. C. 154; Kaspari v. Marsh, 74 Wis. 562, 43 N. W. 368. It is what the deceased would have probably earned during the residue of his life, taking into consideration his age, condition, ability, disposition, habits, and expenditures, without any solatium for distress of mind; Sharswood, J., in Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Butler, 57 Pa. 335; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Stacker, 86 Tenn. 343, 6 S. W. 737, 6 Am. St. Rep. 840; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Wightman's Adm'r, 29 Gratt. (Va.) 431, 26 Am. Rep. 384; and no account can be taken of income from investments; Demarest v. Little, 47 N. J. L. 28; or of profits in a partnership business in which the deceased was engaged; Boggess v. Balt. & O. R. Co., 234 Pa. 379, 83 Atl. 356; nor expectations of inheritance by him; Wiest v. Traction Co., 200 Pa. 148, 49 Atl. 891, 58 L. R. A. 666; Baltimore & P. R. Co. v. Golway, 6 App. D. C. 143; where evidence of earnings is admissible it cannot be proved that he was in the line of promotion; Geary v. R. Co., 73 App. Div. 441, 77 N. Y. Supp. 54; Fajardo v. R. Co., 84 App. Div. 354, 82 N. Y. Supp. 912; Chase v. Ry. Co., 76 Ia. 675, 39 N. W. 196 (unless the promotion was stipulated for in the contract of employment; Bryant v. Bridge Co., 98 Ia. 483, 67 N. W. 392); contra, Galveston, H. & S. A. Ry. Co. v. Ford (Tex.) 46 S. W. 77.

In the third class of cases damages are allowed to a husband for the loss of a wife's services, not her society; 11 Can. 422; to a wife for the loss of support; id.; for the same reason to a child during minority; Ihl v. R. Co., 47 N. Y. 317, 7 Am. Rep. 450; Ewen v. Ry. Co., 38 Wis. 613; Robel v. Ry. Co., 35 Minn. 84, 27 N. W. 305; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Slater, 129 Ill. 91, 21 N. E. 575, 6 L. R. A. 418, 16 Am. St. Rep. 242; Cleary v. Ry. Co., 76 Cal. 240, 18 Pac. 269; and on the weight of authority, for the expectation of pecuniary benefit after majority; Birkett v. Ice Co., 110 N. Y. 504, 18 N. E. 108; Munro v. Reclamation Co., 84 Cal. 515, 24 Pac. 303, 18 Am. St. Rep. 248; Scheffler v. Ry. Co., 32 Minn. 518, 21 N. W. 711; and if the statute gives the damages to the estate of the deceased, they are not limited to the minority of a child; Pennsylvania Co. v. Lilly, 73 Ind. 252; Walters v. R. Co., 36 Ia. 458; to a parent for the loss of a child to the extent of the pecuniary value of his services during minority; McPherson v. R. Co., 97 Mo. 253, 10 S. W. 846; to the next of kin if dependent on the deceased for support; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Shannon, 43 Ill. 338; but not otherwise for nominal damages; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Weber, 33 Kan. 543, 6 Pac. 877, 52 Am. Rep. 543; Johnston v. R. Co., 7 Ohio St. 336, 70 Am. Dec. 75; Baltimore & R. Turnpike Road v. State, 71 Md. 573, 18 Atl. 884. Where a mother loses her life through the wrongful act of a third party, the children may recover damages for the deprivation of pecuniary advantage; Carter v. R. Co., 76 N. J. L. 602, 71 Atl. 253, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 128, 16 Ann. Cas. 929. Exemplary damages cannot generally be given, but in some states they are expressly authorised, either generally or in special circumstances set forth in the act. Hale, Meas. Dam. § 128.

In estimating the damages in these cases the expectation of life may be reckoned; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Orr, 91 Ala. 548, 8 South. 360, affirming 94 Ala. 602, 10 South. 167; Wheelan v. R. Co., 85 Ia. 167, 52 N. W. 119. See LIFE TABLES.

NEGOTIABLE PAPER. In suits on negotiable paper the measure of damages is its face value with interest from the breach; Murray v. Judah, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 484; Murphy v. Lucas, 58 Ind. 360. The value of a note is prima facie the amount thereof; Metropolitan El. R. Co. v. Kneeland, 120 N. Y. 134, 24 N. E. 381, 8 L. R. A. 253, 17 Am. St. Rep. 619; Buck v. Leach, 69 Me. 484; Menkens v. Menkens, 23 Mo. 252; Robbins v. Packard, 31 Vt. 570, 76

Am. Dec. 134. Formerly it was said that interest was only recoverable as damages allowable at the discretion of the jury; 2 B. & Ald. 305. It was early settled that interest, as a matter of law, could not be given without an express or implied contract for its payment; 2 B. & C. 348. The present rule is said to be that in England it is allowed on commercial paper; 1 Sedg. Meas. Dam. § 291; and that in the United States the jury should be instructed to give it; 2 id. § 699; Rensselaer Glass Factory v. Reid, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 610; Lewis v. Rountree & Co., 79 N. C. 122, 28 Am. Rep. 309. Where interest is provided for in the paper the recovery is under the contract and not as damages, and there has been much conflict as to whether in case of non-payment at maturity interest thereafter is payable as interest at the contract rate or as damages at the statutory rate. The former view is supported upon the doctrine of an implied contract to pay the stipulated rate after maturity; Kerr v. Haverstick, 94 Ind. 178; Downer v. Whittier, 144 Mass. 448, 11 N. E. 585; Hydraulic Co. v. Chatfield, 38 Ohio St. 575; Warner v. Juif, 38 Mich. 662. Following the latter view—the statutory rate; Duran v. Ayer, 67 Me. 145; Cummings v. Howard, 63 Cal. 503; First Ecclesiastical Society v. Loomis, 42 Conn. 570; Moreland v. Lawrence, 23 Minn. 84; Hamilton v. Van Rensselaer, 43 N. Y. 244 (but contra, Miller v. Burroughs, 4 Johns. Ch. [N. Y.] 436; Andrews v. Keeler, 19 Hun [N. Y.] 87); Brown v. Hardcastle, 63 Md. 484; Ludwick v. Huntzinger, 5 W. & S. (Pa.) 51; L. R. 7 H. L. 27; 14 Ch. D. 49 (contra, 3 C. B. N. S. 144). See 1 Sedg. Meas. Dam. § 325 n., where the authorities are collected and the conclusion stated that the weight of authority is in favor of the latter position, which is also sustained by the supreme court of the United States when not controlled by local law; Holden v. Trust Co., 100 U. S. 72, 25 L. Ed. 567. See Cromwell v. County of Sac., 96 U. S. 51, 24 L. Ed. 681.

If there is an intention expressed it prevails, whatever may be the form of words used; Paine v. Caswell, 68 Me. 80, 28 Am. Rep. 21; 25 Ch. D. 338; Taylor v. Wing, 84 N. Y. 471; Broadway Sav. Bank v. Forbes, 79 Mo. 226. Where a higher rate after maturity is expressed it is generally allowed; Reeves v. Stipp, 91 Ill. 609; Portis v. Merrill, 33 Ark. 416; Capen v. Crowell, 66 Me. 282; L. R. 2 Eq. 221; 15 U. C. C. P. 360; but not by some courts, on the theory that it is a penalty; Watts v. Watts, 11 Mo. 547; White v. Iltis, 24 Minn. 43. It is said that the question properly rests upon the doctrine of liquidated damages, but that the courts have not generally so held; 1 Sedg. Meas. Dam. § 331.

In most of the states there are statutory provisions for damages upon protested paper, ranging as to foreign bills from five to twenty per cent; and on bills payable in another state there are varying rates, some statutes making discriminations between states or groups of states, based, apparently, upon contiguity, or extent of business relations and the like. For a summary of the provisions of these statutes, see 1 Stims. Am. Stat. L. § 4753.

CARRIERS. Upon a total failure to deliver goods, the carrier is liable for the value of the goods at their place of destination, with interest from the time they should have been delivered, deducting the freight; Gillingham v. Dempsey, 12 S. & R. (Pa.) 186; Bailey v. Shaw, 24 N. H. 297, 55 Am. Dec. 241; Sturges v. Bissell, 46 N. Y. 462; Erie Ry. Co. v. I. J. Lockwood & Son, 28 Ohio St. 358; Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co. v. Stanbro, 87 Ill. 195; Gray v. Packet Co., 64 Mo. 47; Whitney v. Ry. Co., 27 Wis. 327; Cushing v. Wells, Fargo & Co., 98 Mass. 550; Mississippi Cent. R. Co. v. Kennedy, 41 Miss. 671; Taylor v. Collier, 26 Ga. 122; Cole v. Rankin (Tenn.) 42 S. W. 72. Upon a failure to receive the goods at all for transportation, he is liable for the difference between the value at the place of shipment and at the place of destination, less his freight; or, if another conveyance can be found, the difference between the freight agreed on with defendant and the sum (if greater) which the shipper would be compelled to pay another carrier; Grund v. Pendergast, 58 Barb. (N. Y.) 216; McGovern v. Lewis, 56 Pa. 231, 94 Am. Dec. 60; Ward's Cent. & P. Lake Co. v. Elkins, 34 Mich. 439, 22 Am. Rep. 544. Upon a delay in delivering the goods, the plaintiff is entitled to an indemnity for his loss incurred by the delay, taking into account any fall in the market occurring between the time when the property should have been delivered by the carrier and the time when it actually was; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Cobb, 64 Ill. 143; Peet v. R. Co., 20 Wis. 594, 91 Am. Dec. 446; Scott v. Steamship Co., 106 Mass. 468; Deming v. R. Co., 48 N. H. 455, 2 Am. Rep. 267; Ward v. R. Co., 47 N. Y. 29, 7 Am. Rep. 405; Newell v. Smith, 49 Vt. 255; or, in some cases, the additional price paid for goods required by him to take the place of the delayed goods; Palmer v. Lumbering Ass'n, 90 Me. 193, 38 Atl. 108; New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. v. Estill, 147 U. S. 591, 13 Sup. Ct. 444, 37 L. Ed. 292; in case of property for exhibition at a museum, the probable net profits; Yoakum v. Dunn, 1 Tex. Civ. App. 524, 21 S. W. 411; or in case of stock injured, the depreciation measured by market value at the place of destination; St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Deshong, 63 Ark. 443, 39 S. W. 260; Texas & P. Ry. Co. v. Avery (Tex.) 33 S. W. 704.

A carrier who fails to deliver goods promptly, knowing that the shipper had contracted to re-deliver on a specified date or forfeit a certain sum, is liable for the loss sustained by the shipper under the penalty clause of his contract; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Cabinet Co.,

The measure of damages for a breach of a contract to transport freight by vessel, is the difference between the contract and the actual price of freight paid; The Oregon, 55 Fed. 666, 5 C. C. A. 229, 6 U. S. App. 581.

In general in actions against a carrier for delay the measure of damages will include loss of profits; Hillsdale Coal & Coke Co. v. R. Co., 229 Pa. 61, 78 Atl. 28, 140 Am. St. Rep. 700; Paxton Tie Co. v. R. Co., 10 Inters. Com. Rep. 422. The measure of damages for failure to furnish cars to transport coal from a mine, is the difference between the reasonable selling price and the cost of mining and placing the coal on the market, plus its value in the mine; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Coke Co., 150 Ky. 489, 150 S. W. 641, 44 L. R. A. (N. S.) 643, and note id. 654.

In modern times, the conditions which led to the adoption of the common law rule making a carrier an insurer having changed, it is very common to limit, by contract, the amount of the shipper's recovery. The effect of such contracts is to fix a valuation on the goods which shall be the measure of damages in case of loss, and to this the shipper is held; Hart v. R. Co., 112 U. S. 332, 5 Sup. Ct. 151, 28 L. Ed. 717; Magnin v. Dinsmore, 70 N. Y. 410, 26 Am. Rep. 608; Elkins v. Transp. Co., *81 Pa. 315; Graves v. R. Co., 137 Mass. 33, 50 Am. Rep. 282. Some courts, however, hold such contracts invalid; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Wynn, 88 Tenn. 320, 14 S. W. 311; upon the theory that it is in fact an exemption from liability for negligence which is not permitted; New York C. R. Co. v. Lockwood, 17 Wall. (U. S.) 357, 21 L. Ed. 627. It is suggested that the true doctrine is that the carrier cannot himself limit the damages, but that a contract to do so, fairly made by both parties to it, should be sustained; Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Hale, 6 Mich. 243.

LAND CONTRACTS. In actions for the breach of contracts for the sale of land where the vendor fails to convey, the English rule limits the damages to the amount advanced with interest and expenses incurred in examining the title. The rule dates back to Y. B. 30 Edw. III, 14 b; but the leading case is Flureau v. Thornhill, 2 W. Bla. 1078. The rule was qualified by an exception, established in Hopkins v. Grazebrook, when the vendor knew of the defect in title; 6 B. & C. 31; but that case was discredited as authority and the earlier rule adhered to by the house of lords; L. R. 7 H. L. 158, affirming L. R. 6 Excheq. 59, which was followed in 36 Ch. D. 619. In American law there is great lack of harmony in the decisions, and a distinction is taken in many cases growing out of the motive of the party in default. The extreme English rule has been followed in Pennsylvania, and, apparently, even where there is fraud; Burk v. Serrill, 80 Pa. 413, 21 Am. Rep. 105; see Betner v. Brough, 11 Pa. 127; Meason v. Kaine, 67 Pa. 126. In other states a failure to convey for want of good title does not involve liability for the value of the bargain, unless there be fraud, bad faith, or other misconduct; Margraf v. Muir, 57 N. Y. 155; Baltimore Permanent Bldg. & Land Society v. Smith, 54 Md. 187, 39 Am. Rep. 374; Tracy v. Gunn, 29 Kan. 508; Yokom v. McBride, 56 Ia. 139, 8 N. W. 795; see Erickson v. Bennet, 39 Minn. 326, 40 N. W. 157.

Knowledge of the defendant that the title was in a third person has been considered in some cases sufficient to warrant substantial damages; Pumpelly v. Phelps, 40 N. Y. 59, 100 Am. Dec. 463; and where the failure to convey was the result of the refusal of the wife to sign the deed, the same rule was applied, upon the theory that the vendor knew that it was doubtful if his wife would sign; Drake v. Baker, 34 N. J. L. 358; Plummer v. Rigdon, 78 Ill. 222, 20 Am. Rep. 261. In a case of contract by the defendant to sell the lands of another which he had contracted to purchase, and failed to accomplish his object because the real owner could not make title, the judgment was reversed because the judge had charged in favor of substantial damages, and Cooley, J., held, upon a review of the cases, that Flureau v. Thornhill must be considered as established law, but that where a party acted in bad faith or sold what he did not own, such damages should be allowed; Hammond v. Hannin, 21 Mich. 374, 4 Am. Rep. 490.

In many jurisdictions what is sometimes called the rule of the United States Supreme Court is adhered to and the purchaser is held to be entitled to the difference between the amount he has agreed to pay and the value at the time of breach. This is the opposite extreme from the English rule. Barbour v. Nichols, 3 R. I. 187; Harrison v. Charlton, 37 Ia. 134; Doherty v. Dolan, 65 Me. 87, 20 Am. Rep. 677; Carver v. Taylor, 35 Neb. 429, 53 N. W. 386; Telfener v. Russ, 145 U. S. 522, 12 Sup. Ct. 930, 36 L. Ed. 800; Bangs v. Paullin, 37 Ill. App. 465; Dunshee v. Geoghegan, 7 Utah 113, 25 Pac. 731.

When the purchaser refuses to perform, the measure has been held, in England, to be the difference between the price fixed in the contract and the value of the land at the time fixed for the delivery of the deed; 7 M. & W. 474. But the rule does not appear to be well settled in this country.

The English rule has been followed by some courts; Sanborn v. Chamberlin, 101 Mass. 409; Meason v. Kaine, 67 Pa. 126; Evrit v. Bancroft, 22 Ohio St. 172; Allen v. Mohn, 86 Mich. 328, 49 N. W. 52, 24 Am. St. Rep. 126. In some states where a deed has been tendered and refused, it is held that the contract price may be recovered in full; Richards v. Edick, 17 Barb. (N. Y.) 260, the question having been left undecided in Franchot v. Leach, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 506; Alna v. Plummer, 4 Greenl. (Me.) 258; Goodpaster v. Porter, 11 Ia. 161; contra, 1 Pugs. 195. A purchaser in possession on an instalment contract of sale on eviction was held entitled to recover instalments made and cost of improvements; Hawkins v. Merritt, 109 Ala. 261, 19 South. 589; contra, if buildings were erected without the vendor's request; Gerbert v. Trustees of Congregation, 59 N. J. L. 160, 35 Atl. 1121, 69 L. R. A. 764, 59 Am. St. Rep. 578.

One who has contracted for the right to purchase public land is entitled on a breach to the difference between the contract price and the saleable value of such right, and it is the vendor's duty to re-sell the right, or, failing this, to show its market value; Telfener v. Russ, 145 U. S. 522, 12 Sup. Ct. 930, 36 L. Ed. 800; evidence of particular sales of other real estate is not admissible to establish market value; Allison v. Montgomery, 107 Pa. 460.

EVICITION. The damages recoverable for an eviction, in an action for breach of covenants of seisin and warranty in a deed, are the consideration-money, interest thereon, and the costs, if any, of defending the eviction. This is not in accordance with the fundamental doctrine of the law of damages, but it is the rule in most of the states, and is sometimes termed the New York rule; Taylor v. Barnes, 69 N. Y. 434; McClure's Ex'rs v. Gamble, 27 Pa. 288; Ware v. Weathnall, 2 McCord (S. C.) 413 (earlier decisions were contra; Liber v. Parsons' Ex'rs, 1 Bay [S. C.] 19; Eveleigh v. Stitt, 1 Bay [S. C.] 92; Guerard's Ex'rs v. Rivers, 1 Bay [S. C.] 265); Threlkeld's Adm'r v. Fitzhugh's Ex'rs, 2 Leigh (Va.) 451; (also after conflicting decisions, Mills v. Bell, 3 Call [Va.] 320); Abernathy v. Phillips, 82 Va. 769, 1 S. E. 113; Shaw v. Wilkins' Adm'r, 8 Humph. (Tenn.) 647, 49 Am. Dec. 692; Clark v. Parr, 14 Ohio 118, 45 Am. Dec. 529; Carvill v. Jacks, 43 Ark. 439; Martin v. Gordon, 24 Ga. 533; Harding v. Larkin, 41 Ill. 413; Rhea v. Swain, 122 Ind. 272, 22 N. E. 1000, 23 N. E. 776; Shorthill v. Ferguson, 44 Ia. 249; Levitzy v. Canning, 33 Cal. 299; McGary v. Hastings, 39 Cal. 360, 2 Am. Rep. 456; Morris v. Rowan, 17 N. J. L. 304; Winnipiseogee Paper Co. v. Eaton, 65 N. H. 13, 18 Atl. 171; Phipps v. Tarpley, 31 Miss. 433; Tong v. Matthews, 23 Mo. 437;

Devine v. Lewis, 38 Minn. 24, 35 N. W. 711; Ramsey v. Wallace, 100 N. C. 75, 6 S. E. 638; Glenn v. Mathews, 44 Tex. 400; Cristfield v. Storr, 36 Md. 129, 150, 11 Am. Rep. 480; Iloffman v. Bosch, 18 Nev. 360, 4 Pac. 703; Kingsbury v. Milner, 69 Ala. 502; Stebbins v. Wolf, 33 Kan. 765, 7 Pac. 542; Butcher v. Peterson, 26 W. Va. 447, 53 Am. Rep. 89; 8 U. C. Q. B. 191 (but see 13 U. C. C. P. 146); but the value of improvements may be recovered; Coleman v. Ballard's Heirs, 13 La. Ann. 512; and see as to Louisiana, New Orleans v. Gaine's Adm'r, 131 U. S. 191, 9 Sup. Ct. 745, 33 L. Ed. 99; though excluded by the New York rule; Pitcher v. Livingston, 4 Johns. (N. Y.) 1, 4 Am. Dec. 229. In Mississippi a vendee who has lost land by reason of a title paramount to his remote vendor may recover the amount which such remote vendor received for the land; Brooks v. Black, 68 Miss. 161, 8 South. 332, 11 L. R. A. 176, 24 Am. St. Rep. 259.

What is known as the New England rule establishes as the measure of damages the value of the land at the time of eviction, together with the expenses of the suit, etc., and this is followed in all the New England states, Quebec, and Michigan; Furnas v. Durgin, 119 Mass. 500, 20 Am. Rep. 341; Rycerson v. Chapman, 66 Me. 557; Sterling v. Peet, 14 Conn. 245; Park v. Bates, 12 Vt. 381, 36 Am. Dec. 347; Keeler v. Wood, 30 Vt. 242; 6 Can. 425; and it is also recognized as the rule in England; 9 Q. B. D. 128.

Where a paramount title is purchased to prevent actual eviction the measure of damages is the price paid with interest; Jenks v. Quinn, 61 Hun 427, 16 N. Y. Supp. 240; James v. Lamb, 2 Tex. Civ. App. 185, 21 S. W. 172; and where the breach alleged was the foreclosure of a mortgage, it is the amount paid to redeem the land and expenses of defending the title; Matheny v. Stewart, 108 Mo. 73, 17 S. W. 1014.

INCUMBRANCES. On a breach of a covenant in a deed against incumbrances, the purchaser is entitled to recover his expenses incurred in extinguishing the incumbrance, if practicable; Stowell v. Bennett, 34 Me. 422; Schooley v. Stoops, 4 Ind. 130; Harrington v. Murphy, 109 Mass. 299; Porter v. Bradley, 7 R. I. 538; Koestenbader v. Peirce, 41 Ia. 204.

For a permanent incumbrance the compensation should be measured by the decreased value of the land; Grant v. Tallman, 20 N. Y. 191, 75 Am. Dec. 384; Bronson v. Coffin, 108 Mass. 175, 11 Am. Rep. 335; Mitchell v. Stanley, 44 Conn. 312; but the amount is limited by the sum recoverable for a total loss of the land; Koestenbader v. Peirce, 41 Ia. 204; Clark v. Zeigler, 79 Ala. 346. If the incumbrance causes a total eviction the damages are the same as in other cases of eviction. See supra.

SALES. Where the seller of chattels fails to perform his agreement, the measure of damages is the difference between the contract price and the market value of the article at the time and place fixed for delivery; Windmuller v. Pope, 107 N. Y. 674, 14 N. E. 436; McKercher v. Curtis, 35 Mich. 478; Randon v. Barton, 4 Tex. 289; Smith v. Dunlap, 12 Ill. 184; Shepherd v. Hampton, 3 Wheat. (U. S.) 200, 4 L. Ed. 369; Berry v. Dwinel, 44 Me. 255; Bickell v. Colton, 41 Miss. 368; Arnold v. Blabon, 147 Pa. 372, 23 Atl. 575; Humphreysville Copper Co. v. Mining Co., 33 Vt. 92; Smith v. Synder, 82 Va. 614; Osgood v. Bauder, 75 Ia. 550, 39 N. W. 887, 1 L. R. A. 655; Griffith v. Construction Co., 46 Mo. App. 539; Kehler v. Einstman, 38 Ill. App. 91; Erwin v. Harris, 87 Ga. 333, 13 S. E. 513; Ramish v. Kirschbraun, 98 Cal. 676, 33 Pac. 780; 8 Q. B. 604; Benj. Sales § 758; Moffat v. Davitt, 200 Mass. 452, 86 N. E. 929.

The same rule applies as to the deficiency where there is a part-delivery only; 16 Q. B. 941; Benjamin v. Hillard, 23 How. (U. S.) 149, 16 L. Ed. 518; Horn v. Batchelder, 41 N. H. 86; Shreve v. Brereton, 51 Pa. 175; Fisk v. Tank, 12 Wis. 276, 78 Am. Dec. 737; Converse v. Burrows, 2 Minn. 229 (Gil. 191). Where, however, the purchaser has paid the price in advance, some of the cases, particularly in England and New York, allow the highest market price up to the time of the trial; Arnold v. Bank, 27 Barb. (N. Y.) 424; Bank of Montgomery v. Reese, 26 Pa. 143; Calvit v. McFadden, 13 Tex. 324. Where the purchaser refuses to take and pay for the goods, the seller may sell them fairly, and charge the buyer with the difference between the contract price and the best market price obtainable within a reasonable time after the refusal; Saladin v. Mitchell, 45 Ill. 79; Girard v. Taggart, 5 S. & R. (Pa.) 19, 9 Am. Dec. 327; Pollen v. Le Roy, 30 N. Y. 549; Cook v. Brandeis, 3 Metc. (Ky.) 555; Tufts v. Grewer, 83 Me. 407, 22 Atl. 382; Adler v. Kiber, 5 Tex. Civ. App. 415, 27 S. W. 23. Where the goods are delivered and received, but do not correspond in quality with a warranty given, the vendee may recover the difference between the value of the goods delivered and the value they would have had if they had corresponded with the contract; Tuttle v. Brown, 4 Gray (Mass.) 457, 64 Am. Dec. 80; Crabtree v. Kile, 21 Ill. 180; Moulton v. Scruton, 39 Me. 287; Muller v. Eno, 14 N. Y. 597; Stoudenmeier v. Williamson, 29 Ala. 558; English v. Commission Co., 57 Fed. 451, 6 C. C. A. 416, 15 U. S. App. 218. But where the article is one which cannot be bought in the market (a machine), and it was not of the warranted capacity, it appearing that the vendee had contracted to supply the products of the machine, which he was unable to do because of the breach, and the facts were known to the vendor, the measure of damages is the difference between what it would have cost to fulfil his contracts and what the vendee would have received if he had not lost them by reason of the defects in the machine; or if the work was done by others, the difference between what it would have cost him to do the work and what he paid for having it done; Carroll-Porter Boiler & Tank Co. v. Machine Co., 55 Fed. 451, 5 C. C. A. 190, 3 U. S. App. 631; Springfield Milling Co. v. Mfg. Co., 81 Fed. 261, 26 C. C. A. 389, 49 U. S. App. 438.

Where one ordered a water wheel of unusual size and repudiated the contract, the contract price was held the measure of damages; Bookwalter v. Clark, 10 Fed. 793; so where one ordered a printing press to be made, and ordered the work stopped before completion, the manufacturer was entitled to recover the contract price less the value of the machine when the work was stopped and the cost of completing it; Katz v. Koster, 6 Misc. 327, 26 N. Y. Supp. 785.

A vendee who accepts a motor built from a model furnished by him can recover as damages, if the motor does not conform with the model, only the cost of making necessary changes; North Chicago St. Ry. Co. v. Burnham, 102 Fed. 669, 42 C. C. A. 584.

Extraordinary and unusual profits lost because of the vendor's failure to fulfil his contract cannot be recovered as damages, although the vendor knew that the goods were bought to fill a previous contract with a third person; Guetzkow Bros. Co. v. Andrews, 92 Wis. 214, 66 N. W. 119, 52 L. R. A. 209, 53 Am. St. Rep. 909; ordinary profits are recoverable; Gardner v. Deeds & Hirsig, 116 Tenn. 128, 92 S. W. 518, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 740, 7 Ann. Cas. 1172; contra, H. G. Holway & Bro. v. Shoe Co., 151 Fed. 216, 80 C. C. A. 568, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 704.

Speculative profits which might have resulted from displaying a machine at an exhibition cannot be considered; Winston Cigarette Machine Co. v. Tobacco Co., 141 N. C. 284, 53 S. E. 885, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 255. Where inferior articles are furnished, the measure of damages is the difference of value between those delivered and those agreed to be delivered at the time and place of delivery; Ellison & Co. v. J. T. Johnson & Co., 74 S. C. 202, 54 S. E. 202, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1151. Failure to deliver bonds renders the promisor liable for the value of the bonds at the time of delivery; Henry v. Construction Co., 158 Fed. 79, 85 C. C. A. 409. In the absence of special circumstances or special damage shown, damages for loss by failure of delivery in time is measured by the interest on the investment tied up by the breach, for the time the use of the property was postponed; Wood v. Gaslight Co., 111 Fed. 463, 49 C. C. A. 427; New York & Colorado Min. Syndicate & Co. v. Fraser, 130 U. S. 611, 9 Sup. Ct. 665, 32 L. Ed. 1031; and this rule was applied for failure to deliver a vessel, but damages for the loss of a vessel in a hurricane are too speculative for recovery in an action for breach of contract to construct and deliver at a designated time and place; De Ford v. Steel Co., 113 Fed. 72, 51 C. C. A. 59.

The measure of damages for breach of a contract to deliver articles if they have no market value or cannot be had in the market where the delivery was to be made, is the additional cost and expense of obtaining them at the nearest market, or on the most advantageous terms; Vickery v. McCormick, 117 Ind. 594, 20 N. E. 495.

Many courts allow the highest intermediate value between the breach and the end of the trial; Gilman v. Andrews, 66 Ia. 116, 23 N. W. 291; Ellis v. Wire, 33 Ind. 127, 5 Am. Rep. 189; but it is generally denied; Ingram v. Rankin, 47 Wis. 406, 2 N. W. 755, 32 Am. Rep. 762; Third Nat. Bank of Baltimore v. Boyd, 44 Md. 47, 22 Am. Rep. 35; Brewster v. Van Liew, 119 Ill. 554, 8 N. E. 842; Hale, Dam. 186, 194, where the rule is discussed, with the authorities. This rule was originally adopted in New York as to chattels generally; Romaine v. Van Allen, 26 N. Y. 309. It was modified to exclude stock transactions on the ground that the highest intermediate value was not the natural and proximate result; Baker v. Drake, 53 N. Y. 211, 13 Am. Rep. 507. The rule of the last cited case is adopted in Galigher v. Jones, 129 U. S. 193, 9 Sup. Ct. 335, 32 L. Ed. 658. In Pennsylvania the rule is rejected in its general application; Smethurst v. Woolston, 5 U. & S. (Pa.) 106, but adopted in case of stocks; Musgrave v. Beckendorff, 53 Pa. 310; see Neiler v. Kelley, 69 Pa. 403. In some cases it is left to the jury to allow any value between the highest value and that at the time of conversion; Renfro's Adm'x v. Hughes, 69 Ala. 581; and in others, where the transaction is free from bad faith, value is taken at the time of conversion, with interest; Whitfield v. Whitfield, 40 Miss. 352.

For breach of contract by a broker to deliver stocks on the demand of a customer for whom they were bought on margin, the damages are to be determined by the highest intermediate value between the default and the time when the customer has notice thereof reasonably sufficient to enable him to replace the stocks; In re Swift, 114 Fed. 947.

The damages for breach of contract to deliver stock are held in some cases to be the difference between the contract price and the highest market price which the stock attains during such reasonable time after that set for delivery as would enable the purchaser to secure the stock elsewhere; Vos v. Child, Hulswit & Co., 171 Mich. 595, 137 N. W. 209, 43 L. R. A. (N. S.) 368; Joseph v. Sulzberger, 136 App. Div. 499, 121 N. Y. Supp. 73. But the preponderance of authority is that the damage is measured by the difference between the market value and the contract price at the time of delivery;

Sloan v. McKane, 131 App. Div. 244, 115 N. Y. Supp. 648; Collin v. State, 144 Ind. 578, 43 N. E. 654, 55 Am. St. Rep. 188; Gray v. Bank, 3 Mass. 390, 3 Am. Dec. 156; Bank of Montgomery v. Reese, 26 Pa. 143.

Where the breach is by the vendee, the vendor may hold the stock and sue for the price or the unpaid balance of it; Reed v. Hayt, 51 N. Y. Super. Ct. 121, affirmed on opinion below in 109 N. Y. 659, 17 N. E. 418; Thorndike v. Locke, 98 Mass. 340; or he may sell it for the vendee and sue for the difference between the contract and sale price; Lebus v. Roode, 16 Ky. L. Rep. 128; Stewart v. Canty, 8 M. & W. 160; or he may retain the stock and sue for the difference between the market price at the date of delivery and the contract price; Hamilton v. Finnegan, 117 Ia. 623, 91 N. W. 1039; Reed v. Hayt, supra; Corser v. Hale, 149 Pa. 274, 24 Atl. 285; Sharpe v. White, 25 Ont. L. Rep. 298. Where the vendor agreed to repurchase and refused to receive and pay for the stock, he was held liable for the contract price; Browne v. Plow Works, 62 Minn. 90, 64 N. W. 66; and where the vendee failed to pay for stock sold with no price designated, he was held liable and the measure of damages was the market price at the time and place of delivery; Deck's Adm'r v. Feld, 38 Mo. App. 674.

See generally as to the measure of damages for breach of such contracts, note to Vos v. Child, Hulswit & Co., supra, in 43 L. R. A. (N. S.) 368.

COLLISION. The general principle followed by the courts of admiralty in cases of collision between vessels is that the damages awarded against the offending vessel must be sufficient to restore the other to the condition she was in at the time of the collision, if restoration is practicable. Both damages to vessel and cargo are to be made good. But hypothetical and consequential damages are excluded. The loss of the use of the injured vessel while undergoing repairs is proper to be included. See The Margaret J. Sanford, 37 Fed. 148. If the injured vessel is a total loss, her market value at the time is the measure of damages. See Williamson v. Barrett, 13 How. (U. S.) 106, 14 L. Ed. 68; Vantine v. The Lake, 2 Wall. Jr. 52, Fed. Cas. No. 16,878; Jolly v. Terre Haute Drawbridge Co., 6 McLean, 238, Fed. Cas. No. 7,441; O'Neil v. The I. M. North, 37 Fed. 270.

If the fault is equal on the part of both vessels, the loss is to be divided between them; New Haven Steam Transp. Co. v. The Continental, 14 Wall. (U. S.) 345, 20 L. Ed. 801; Atlee v. Packet Co., 21 Wall. (U. S.) 389, 22 L. Ed. 619; The Wydale, 37 Fed. 716; The Viola, 60 Fed. 296; The Manitoba, 122 U. S. 97, 7 Sup. Ct. 1158, 30 L. Ed. 1095.

For a total loss of cargo, its value at the place of shipment, or its cost, including expenses, charges, insurance, and interest, should be allowed; The Umbria, 59 Fed. 489, 8 C. C. A. 194, 11 U. S. App. 612; when part is recovered and sold, after expenses are incurred, the rule is to allow the difference between the market value of the goods, if uninjured, and the value in their damaged condition; d. The allowance of interest and costs in case of collision rests in the discretion of the lower court, and will not be disturbed on appeal; The Maggie J. Smith, 123 U. S. 349, 8 Sup. Ct. 159, 31 L. Ed. 175.

Funeral expenses of persons whose death was caused by collision are recoverable as part of the damages against the vessel in fault; The Mauch Chunk, 139 Fed. 747.

LIBEL OR SLANDER. The elements to be considered in fixing the measure of damages are those only which are the natural consequences of the act complained of; Merchants' Ins. Co. v. Buckner, 98 Fed. 222, 39 C. C. A. 19; but the damages are not confined to the actual pecuniary loss; Hearne v. De Young, 132 Cal. 357, 64 Pac. 576; they may include injury to reputation; Scripps v. Reilly, 38 Mich. 10; even where the statute provides for recovery only for injury to property, business, trade, profession, occupation or feelings; McGee v. Baumgartner, 121 Mich. 287, 80 N. W. 21; mental suffering (q. v.); Van Ingen v. Star Co., 157 N. Y. 695, 51 N. E. 1094; even if that is the only element of damages from malicious slander; Hacker v. Heiney, 111 Wis. 313, 87 N. W. 249. The interposition of a plea of justification which is not proved is matter in aggravation of damages; Coffin v. Brown, 94 Md. 190, 50 Atl. 567, 55 L. R. A. 732, 89 Am. St. Rep. 422; Sun Printing & Pub. Ass'n v. Schenck, 98 Fed. 925, 40 C. C. A. 163; Potter v. Pub. Co., 68 App. Div. 95, 74 N. Y. Supp. 317. In an action on the case for reflecting on the integrity or responsibility of a merchant, he is entitled to substantial damages; Wolkowsky v. Garfunkel (Fla.) 60 South. 791, 44 L. R. A. (N. S.) 351 and note. All the consequences of the wrongful act which were reasonably to be foreseen and resulted from it in the ordinary consequences; Brown v. Durham (Tex.) 42 S. W. 331; King v. Patterson, 49 N. J. L. 417, 9 Atl. 705, 60 Am. Rep. 622; or were the natural direct and reasonable consequence of it; Blumhardt v. Rohr, 70 Md. 328, 17 Atl. 266; among those included by various cases are, diminution of business; Daisley v. Douglass, 119 Fed. 485; or its suspension; Minter v. Bradstreet Co., 174 Mo. 444, 73 S. W. 668; prospective damages; Gregory v. Williams, 1 Car. & K. 65; (but these were held too remote and speculative in Bradstreet Co. v. Oswald, 96 Ga. 396, 23 S. E. 423); injury to credit; Mitchell v. Bradstreet Co., 116 Mo. 226, 22 S. W. 358, 724, 20 L. R. A. 138, 38 Am. St. Rep. 592; Bradstreet Co. v. Gill, 72 Tex. 115, 9 S. W. 753, 2 L. R. A. 405, 13 Am. St. Rep. 768; injury to feelings; Simons v. Burnham, 102 Mich. 189, 60 N. W. 476; especially when malice is shown; Orth v. Featherly, 87 Mich. 315, 49 N. W. 640. Of course malice may be considered, and, if shown, there may be punitive damages; Orth v. Featherly, and Minter v. Bradstreet Co., supra; and they are also allowed in the case of libel where the publication is actionable per se, and malice is presumed; Pennsylvania Iron Works Co. v. Mach. Co., 139 Ky. 497, 96 S. W. 551, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1023, 139 Am. St. Rep. 504; Dun v. Weintraub, 111 Ga. 416, 36 S. E. 808, 50 L. R. A. 670; Mowry v. Raabe, 89 Cal. 606, 27 Pac. 157. See 44 L. R. A. (N. S.) 351, note.

CONTINUING TORTS. Ordinarily the damages which may be recovered for a tort include only compensation for the injury suffered to the time of suit, and the theory formerly acted upon was that each continuance of a trespass or a nuisance was a fresh one for which a new action would lie; 3 Bla. Com. 220; Vedder v. Vedder, 1 Den. (N. Y.) 257. The only remedy applied in such cases is that exemplary damages will be given, if, after one verdict against him, any one has the hardihood to continue it; 2 Selw. N. P. 1130. In cases, however, where the injury is of a nature to be permanent, it is held that entire damages may be recovered in one action; Sedg. Meas. Dam. § 924; as where the trespass was the insertion of girders into a wall; Ritter v. Sieger, 105 Pa. 400; or maintaining a brothel next to the plaintiff's dwelling-house; Givens v. Van Studdiford, 72 Mo. 129.

The same principle is applied in actions for breach of contract by neglect of a continuing duty imposed by it. Each moment the neglect continues is a separate breach and is often considered and treated as a total breach for which the entire damage, past and prospective, may be recovered in one action, the judgment being a bar to any further suit; Hale, Dam. § 33; but not if the contract be divisible, as was held a contract to issue an annual pass renewable from year to year during the pleasure of the promisee; Kansas & C. P. Ry. Co. v. Curry, 6 Kan. App. 561, 51 Pac. 576. Whether a tort is permanent or not is a question of fact to be determined according to circumstances; Sedg. Meas. Dam. § 924; the presumption being that a wrong will not continue; Savannah & O. Canal Co. v. Bourquin, 51 Ga. 378. Damages due to subsidence resulting from the working of a mine under another person's property are measured by the market value of the property attributable to the risk of future subsidence; [1906] 2 Ch. 22.

The question of the right to recover in one action of damage resulting from a continuing trespass, and to be protected by the judgment from further suit, is a very important one in connection with the exercise of the right of eminent domain under those modern constitutions which secure compensation for property damaged as well as for that taken.

OTHER ACTIONS. False Imprisonment. In an action against an individual for causing the plaintiff to be taken into custody on a charge of felony, evidence affording reasonable and probable cause of suspicion of the defendant's guilt is admissible in mitigation of damages; Rogers v. Toliver, 139 Ga. 281, 77 S. E. 28, 45 L. R. A. (N. S.) 64, and note. Undoubtedly such evidence is admissible in mitigation of punitive damages; Beckwith v. Bean, 98 U. S. 266, 25 L. Ed. 124, where it was also held that such evidence was not admissible in mitigation of compensatory damages and in both these conclusions many other courts concur, among which are: Holmes v. Blyler, 80 Ia. 365, 45 N. W. 756; Garnier v. Squires, 62 Kan. 321, 62 Pac. 1005; Roth v. Smith, 54 Ill. 431; loss of employment resulting from false imprisonment is an element of damage; Stoecker v. Nathanson, 5 Neb. (Unof.) 435, 98 N. W. 1061, 70 L. R. A. 667.

Abduction of Child. The damages for abduction of a minor child, are not limited to loss of services, but include compensation for expense and injury, and punitive damages for the wrong done the parent in his affections and the destruction of his household; Howell v. Howell (N. C.) 78 S. E. 222, 45 L. R. A. (N. S.) 867.

For the Pollution of a Stream by coal dirt, the damages are the cost of removing the coal dirt, unless it exceeds the value of the entire property; there can be no recovery in excess of entire property value; Stevenson v. Coal Co., 201 Pa. 112, 50 Atl. 818, 88 Am. St. Rep. 805.

In an action for deceit the measure of damages is the difference between the real value of the property at the date of the sale and the price paid, together with interest and remunerations for outlays resulting from the defendant's conduct; Sigafus v. Porter, 179 U. S. 116, 21 Sup. Ct. 34, 45 L. Ed. 113.

As to the measure of damages in actions against telegraph and telephone companies see TELEGRAPH AND TELEPHONE.

Injuries to Women. In a personal injury cause it is held that a married woman cannot recover for loss of time, services or wages or impaired capacity to work, in connection with her household duties, since her services belong to her husband; Norfolk Ry. & Light Co. v. Williar, 104 Va. 679, 52 S. E. 380; Denton v. Ordway, 108 Ia. 487, 79 N. W. 271. She cannot recover the amount she paid for domestic service during her disability; Frohs v. City of Dubuque, 109 Ia. 219, 80 N. W. 341; even where she is working outside to help support the family, it is held that she cannot recover for impaired capacity; Plummer v. City of Milan, 70 Mo. App. 598; Dawson v. City of Troy, 49 Hun 322, 2 N. Y. Supp. 137; or where she had not lived with her husband for 12 years; Thuringer v. R. Co., 71 Hun 526, 24 N. Y. Supp. 1087. But where she is carrying on an independent business, the rule is otherwise; Jordan v. R. Co., 138 Mass. 425; Fife v. City of Oshkosh, 89 Wis. 540, 62 N. W. 541; Healey v. P. Ballantine & Sons, 66 N. J. L. 339, 49 Atl. 511. So if she is a deserted wife; Schmelzer v. Traction Co., 218 Pa. 29, 66 Atl. 1005. But other cases held that the loss of ability to labor is an element of damage; Giffen v. City of Lewiston, 6 Idaho 231, 55 Pac. 545; Harmon v. R. Co., 105 Mass. 100, 42 N. E. 505, 30 L. R. A. 658, 52 Am. St. Rep. 499. A married woman may recover for bodily pain and mental suffering; Bennett v. Bennett, 116 N. Y. 584, 23 N. E. 17, 6 L. R. A. 553; and for expenses attending her cure when paid from or chargeable to her own estate; Schulte v. Holliday, 54 Mich. 73, 19 N. W. 752.

A miscarriage is an element of damage in an action for negligence; Chicago Union Traction Co. v. Ertrachter, 228 Ill. 114, 81 N. E. 816; Berger v. Ry. Co., 95 Minn. 84, 103 N. W. 724; Durham v. City of Spokane, 27 Wash. 615, 68 Pac. 383; Engle v. Simmons, 148 Ala. 92, 41 South. 1023, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 96, 121 Am. St. Rep. 59, 12 Ann. Cas. 740; Witrak v. Electric Co., 52 App. Div. 234, 65 N. Y. Supp. 257; ignorance on the defendant's part of the woman's condition is no defence; Kimberly v. Howard, 143 N. C. 398, 55 S. E. 778, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 545. In Sullivan v. Ry. Co., 197 Mass. 512, 83 N. E. 1091, 125 Am. St. Rep. 378, it was held that the negligence might be the proximate cause of the miscarriage, though conception had taken place seven months after the injury. Where there were two successive miscarriages after the injury, it was held that the second could be considered as bearing on the extent of the injury only and not in assessing specific damages; Rapid Transit Ry. Co. v. Smith, 98 Tex. 553, 86 S. W. 322. Compensation may be given for mental suffering because of the probable deformity of the child, and for disappointment from the birth of a deformed child; Prescott v. Robinson, 74 N. H. 460, 69 Atl. 522, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 594, 124 Am. St. Rep. 987. Only increased pain over the natural pain can be considered; Hawkins v. Ry. Co., 3 Wash. 592, 28 Pac. 1021, 16 L. R. A. 808, 28 Am. St. Rep. 72; but in Morris v. Ry. Co., 105 Minn. 276, 117 N. W. 500, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 598, it was held that the natural suffering, in case the child had been born in the natural course, cannot be deducted from the pain and suffering caused by the miscarriage. The loss of the child is not an element of damage; Witrak v. Electric R. Co., 52 App. Div. 234, 65 N. Y. Supp. 257; Morris v. Ry. Co., 105 Minn. 276, 117 N. W. 500, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 598; Sullivan v. Ry. Co., 197 Mass. 512, 83 N. E. 1091, 125 Am. St. Rep. 378. See, generally, Tunnicliffe v. R. Co., 102 Mich. 624, 61 N. W. 11, 32 L. R. A. 142; Morris v. Ry. Co., 105 Minn. 276, 117 N. W. 500, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 598; UNBORN CHILD.

Sale of Seeds. On a sale of seed of a certain quality or variety, it is the difference between the value of the crop produced and what would have been produced less the expense of raising it; Moody v. Peirano, 4 Cal. App. 411, 88 Pac. 380; Crutcher & Co. v. Elliott, 13 Ky. L. Rep. 592; Dunn v. Bushnell, 63 Neb. 568, 88 N. W. 693, 93 Am. St. Rep. 474. Where rice sold for seed did not grow and it was too late to plant other seed, the measure of damages is the price of the rice, the expense of preparing the soil and planting and a reasonable rent of the land for the year, less rent that could have been obtained by renting the land for other crops; Reiger v. Worth, 127 N. C. 230, 37 S. E. 217, 52 L. R. A. 362, 80 Am. St. Rep. 798. See SALE.

Destruction of Crops. It is the value at the time of destruction; Teller v. Dredging Co., 151 Cal. 209, 90 Pac. 942, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 267, 12 Ann. Cas. 779, with note; Gulf C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Pool, 70 Tex. 713, 8 S. W. 535. Some cases add the value of the owner's right to harvest the crop when ripe; St. Louis Merchants' Bridge Terminal Ry. Ass'n v. Schultz, 226 Ill. 409, 80 N. E. 879. Some cases hold it to be the net profit the owner would have received less the expense of raising and marketing it; Hopkins v. Commercial Co., 16 Mont. 356, 40 Pac. 865. In Drake v. R. Co., 63 Ia. 302, 19 N. W. 215, 50 Am. Rep. 746, it was held to be the difference in the value of the land just before and just after the injury was inflicted; but this case is criticised as stating an impracticable rule; 2 Farnham, Waters 1873. Interest has sometimes been allowed; Little Rock & Ft. S. R. Co. v. Wallis, 82 Ark. 447, 102 S. W. 390; Clark v. Banks et al., 6 Houst. (Del.) 584.

Eminent Domain. Where land is condemned and taken for public use under the power of eminent domain the measure of damages is the marketable value of the property taken. The value of the property to the government, state or city, for whose particular use it is taken "is not a criterion. The owner must be compensated for what is taken from him and that is done when he is paid its fair marketable value for its uses and purposes"; U. S. v. Water Power Co., 229 U. S. 53, 33 Sup. Ct. 667, 57 L. Ed. 1063; U. S. v. Plantation Co., 122 Fed. 581, 58 C. C. A. 279; Moulton v. Water Co., 137 Mass. 163; Allaway v. Nashville, 88 Tenn. 510, 13 S. W. 123, 8 L. R. A. 123.

As to property taken or injured for public use, see EMINENT DOMAIN; Sedg. Meas. Dam. ch. xxxvi.; Hale, Dam. 167; 5 Am. & Eng. Ry. Cas. 352, 386; 14 id. 207; change of grade; 4 Am. Ry. & Corp. Cas. 277; rights of landlords, tenants, and reversioners; Corrigan v. City of Chicago, 144 Ill. 537, 33 N. E. 746, 21 L. R. A. 212; 4 Am. Ry. & Corp. Cas. 744; benefit to abutting property to rebut proof of damage; Bohm v. R. Co., 129 N. Y. 576, 29 N. E. 802, 14 L. R. A. 344.

See DAMAGES; CONSEQUENTIAL DAMAGES; LIQUIDATED DAMAGES; LATERAL SUPPORT; TELEGRAPH.

Exemplary Damages. Those allowed as a punishment for torts committed with fraud, actual malice, or deliberate violence or oppression; they are allowed in trespass for assault and battery in addition to compensatory damages; Fay v. Parker, 53 N. H. 342, 16 Am. Rep. 270; and may be recovered against corporations; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Roth, 130 Ky. 759, 114 S. W. 264.

In nearly all of the states, in such cases, the jury are not confined to a strict compensation for the plaintiff's loss, but may, in assessing damages, allow an additional sum by way of punishment for the wrong done. This allowance is termed "smart money," or "exemplary," "vindictive," or "punitive" damages.

Some courts, however, have declined to recognize the doctrine; Spear v. Hubbard, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 143; Barnard v. Poor, 21 Pick. (Mass.) 378 (and see Hawes v. Knowles, 114 Mass. 518, 19 Am. Rep. 383); Murphy v. Hobbs, 7 Col. 541, 5 Pac. 119, 49 Am. Rep. 366; Riewe v. McCormick, 11 Neb. 261, 9 N. W. 88; Wilson v. Bowen, 64 Mich. 133, 31 N. W. 81; Bixby v. Dunlap, 56 N. H. 456, 22 Am. Rep. 475 (overruling earlier cases).

Some other courts refuse punitive damages; but allow exemplary damage as compensatory or "indeterminate damages;" Pegram v. Stortz, 31 W. Va. 220, 6 S. E. 485; Union Pac. R. Co. v. Hause, 1 Wyo. 27; Quigley v. R. Co., 11 Nev. 350, 21 Am. Rep. 757. In some of these jurisdictions they are really allowed under the guise of compensation for mental suffering and the like.

"Whenever the injury complained of is the result of the fraud, malice or wilful or wanton act of the defendant, and the circumstances of the case are such as call for such damages, vindictive damages may be given. The general rule is that, when the injury has been inflicted maliciously or wantonly, and with circumstances of contumely or indignity, the jury are not restricted to actual damages, but may give such damages in addition thereto as the circumstances of the case seem to warrant, to deter others from like offences." Wood's Mayne, Dam. 58; Webb, Pollock, Torts 219.

"All rules of damages are referred by the law to one of two heads, either compensation or punishment. Compensation is to make the injured party whole. Exemplary damages are something beyond this, and inflicted with a view not to compensate the plaintiff, but to punish the defendant." Per Dillon, Circ. J., charging the jury; Berry v. Fletcher, 1 Dill. 71, Fed. Cas. No. 1,357.

It has been said that the distinction between exemplary damages, and damages given as special or extraordinary compensation is one of words merely; and the effect of allowing the former is the same as that produced upon the theory of compensation, when this is extended to cover injury beyond the pecuniary loss; Hill, Torts 440; Field, Dam. 70.

The propriety of allowing damages to be given by way of punishment under any circumstances has been strenuously denied in many of the cases, and the question has given rise to extensive discussion; but the weight of authority is decidedly that such allowance, in a suitable case, is proper. In Brown v. Swineford, 44 Wis. 289, 23 Am. Rep. 582, the court said: "The argument and consideration of this case have gone to confirm the present members of this court in their disapprobation of the rule of exemplary damages which they have inherited; but they . . . do not feel at liberty to change or modify the rule at so late a day against the general current of authority elsewhere . . . if a change should now be made, it lies with the legislature, etc." See, also, 7 So. L. Rev. N. S. 675; Smithwick v. Ward, 52 N. C. 64, 75 Am. Dec. 453; 20 Am. Law. Reg. N. S. 573; Quigley v. R. Co., 11 Nev. 350, 21 Am. Rep. 757.

Actual malice need not be shown if the act complained of was wantonly or recklessly done; Farwell v. Warren, 51 Ill. 467; Paddock v. Somes, 51 Mo. App. 320; or conceived in a spirit of mischief, or in evident disregard of the rights of others, or of civil or social obligations; Dibble v. Morris, 26 Conn. 416; New Orleans, J. & G. N. R. Co. v. Statham, 42 Miss. 607, 97 Am. Dec. 478; Wood's Mayne, Dam. 59, note. In an action for slander, however, exemplary damages cannot be recovered without proof of express malice; Nelson v. Wallace, 48 Mo. App. 193. Where motive may be ground of aggravation of damages, evidence on this score, as of proof of provocation, or of good faith, is admissible in mitigation of damages; Pollock, Torts 184. So exemplary damages cannot be recovered where the defendant acted on advice of counsel; Livingston v. Burroughs, 33 Mich. 511; Shores v. Brooks, 81 Ga. 468, 8 S. E. 429, 12 Am. St. Rep. 332; City Nat. Bank v. Jeffries, 73 Ala. 183; Carpenter v. Barber, 44 Vt. 441; or in good faith; Pierce v. Getchell, 76 Me. 216; Millard v. Brown, 35 N. Y. 297; Oursler v. R. Co., 60 Md. 358; Pratt v. Pond, 42 Conn. 318; or with a fixed belief that he was acting in the right; Farwell v. Warren, 70 Ill. 28; Brown v. Allen, 35 Ia. 306; Wilkinson v. Searcy, 76 Ala. 176.

The ground of the doctrine is said to be that society is protected by this species of punishment, while the party is also compensated at the same time and persons are deterred from like offences; Cole v. Tucker, 6 Tex. 266.

Mere negligence on the part of the defendant is not enough; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Ogier, 35 Pa. 60, 78 Am. Dec. 322; Goetz v. Ambs, 27 Mo. 28; but see Morning Journal Ass'n v. Rutherford, 51 Fed. 513, 2 C. C. A. 354, 16 L. R. A. 803; Smith v. Matthews, 6 Misc. 162, 27 N. Y. Supp. 120. Malicious motives alone can never constitute a cause of action but, where the allegations are sufficient to sustain the action, malice may be alleged and proved to enhance the damages; Stevens v. Kelley, 78 Me. 445, 6 Atl. 868, 57 Am. Rep. 813; Burke v. Smith, 69 Mich. 380, 37 N. W. 838; Glendon Iron Co. v. Uhler, 75 Pa. 467, 15 Am. Rep. 599; Smith v. Goodman, 75 Ga. 198. See MALICE; MOTIVE.

Exemplary damages as a rule are recoverable only in tort, except that they are allowed for breach of promise of marriage; L. R. 1 C. P. 331; Chellis v. Chapman, 125

N. Y. 214, 26 N. E. 308, 11 L. R. A. 784; McPherson v. Ryan, 59 Mich. 33, 26 N. W. 321; see PROMISE OF MARRIAGE; and where there was a breach of a statutory bond by such tort as would warrant exemplary damages; Richmond v. Shiekler, 57 Ia. 486, 10 N. W. 882; Floyd v. Hamilton, 33 Ala. 235; contra, Cobb v. People, 84 Ill. 511.

Exemplary damages have been allowed, where one trespassed and cut timber from another's land; Kolb v. Bankhead, 18 Tex. 228; so where armed men broke into a store, carried off the stock, threatened the plaintiff's life, and injured his trade; Freidenheit v. Edmundson, 36 Mo. 226, 88 Am. Dec. 141; in actions for malicious prosecution, when bad faith was shown; Brown v. Chadsey, 39 Barb. (N. Y.) 253; for throwing vitriol in the plaintiff's eyes; Munter v. Bande, 1 Mo. App. 484; for maliciously setting fire to a person's woods, etc.; Smalley v. Smalley, 81 Ill. 70; against an innkeeper for wrongfully turning a guest out of the inn; McCarthy v. Niskern, 22 Minn. 90; where a newspaper was informed of the falsity of a libellous article before publication; Hatt v. Evening News Ass'n, 94 Mich. 114, 53 N. W. 952; where a libel was recklessly or carelessly published, as well as one prompted by personal ill will; Alliger v. Mail Printing Ass'n, 66 Hun 626, 20 N. Y. Supp. 763, for an assault and false imprisonment, against the liberty of a subject; 2 Wils. 205; for wilful trespass on land with intemperate behavior; 5 Taunt. 422; for seduction; 3 Wils. 18; adultery with the plaintiff's wife; Stumm v. Hummel, 39 Ia. 478; Peters v. Lake, 66 Ill. 206, 16 Am. Rep. 593; perhaps for gross defamation; Poll. Torts 182; for negligently pulling down buildings, to an adjacent owner's injury, the defendant's conduct showing a contempt of the plaintiff's rights; 6 H. & N. 54; for injuries which are the result of negligence and accompanied with expressions of insolence; id. 58; where a passenger was improperly required to leave a street car in obedience to an order of a policeman called by the conductor to remove him; Laird v. Traction Co., 166 Pa. 4, 31 Atl. 51; but not against a physician for malpractice unless gross negligence is proved; Cochran v. Miller, 13 Ia. 128; nor against a railway company, which by reason of defective equipment, failed to return a passenger, with a return ticket, to his starting point; Hansley v. R. Co., 115 N. C. 602, 20 S. E. 528, 32 L. R. A. 543, 44 Am. St. Rep. 474, disapproving Purcell v. R. Co., 108 N. C. 414, 12 S. E. 954, 12 L. R. A. 113.

Inasmuch as the objection of permitting exemplary damages is to punish a wrongdoer and protect society, it is necessary in order to justify such damages that there should be some willful or malicious action by the defendant; Voltz v. Blackmar, 64 N. Y. 440; or negligence of a gross and flagrant character, evincing a reckless disregard of human life and safety; Florida Southern Ry. Co. v. Hirst, 30 Fla. 1, 11 South. 506, 16 L. R. A. 631, 32 Am. St. Rep. 17.

It does not prevent a recovery, that the defendant is criminally liable for his wrongful act, and that he has been criminally punished for it; Roach v. Caldbeck, 64 Vt. 593, 24 Atl. 989; Ward v. Ward, 41 Ia. 686; Rhodes v. Rodgers, 151 Pa. 634, 24 Atl. 1044; contra, Fay v. Parker, 53 N. H. 342, 16 Am. Rep. 270; Austin v. Wilson, 4 Cush. (Mass.) 273, 50 Am. Dec. 766; Humphries v. Johnson, 20 Ind. 190; Albrecht v. Walker, 73 Ill. 69; but see Bixby v. Dunlap, 56 N. H. 456, 22 Am. Rep. 475.

A master may be liable in exemplary damages for his servant's wanton act within the scope of his business; Hawes v. Knowles, 114 Mass. 518, 19 Am. Rep. 383; Rucker v. Smoke, 37 S. C. 377, 16 S. E. 40, 34 Am. St. Rep. 758. Wherever the servant would be liable in exemplary damages for an act, the master would be so liable for the same act, if done by the servant within the scope of his employment; Goddard v. Grand Trunk Ry., 57 Me. 202, 2 Am. Rep. 39; New Orleans, J. & G. N. R. Co. v. Hurst, 36 Misc. 660, 74 Am. Dec. 785; the same rule applies to corporations and their servants; Moraw. Priv. Corp. 728; Jeffersonville R. Co. v. Rogers, 38 Ind. 116, 10 Am. Rep. 103; Taylor v. R. Co., 48 N. H. 305, 2 Am. Rep. 229.

This rule was applied when such damages were awarded against the master whose servant ordered the defendant off the premises and struck him, when he came with a wagon load of goods to sell; Boyer v. Coxen, 92 Md. 366, 48 Atl. 161. This seems to be an extreme case and is disapproved in 15 Harv. L. Rev. 71. Ordinarily there must be the express authorization of the tort of a servant or agent, or the employment of an obviously unfit man to make the master liable to punitive damages; Burns v. Campbell, 71 Ala. 271, 292. Punitive damages may also be recovered against a public service corporation for insulting language used by its employee; Yazoo & M. V. R. Co. v. May (Miss.) 61 South. 449, 44 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1138, and note collecting many cases; Haines v. Schultz, 50 N. J. L. 481; but the subsequent approval of a trespass by a third person will not render him liable unless the act was originally done in his name or for his use; Grund v. Van Vleck, 69 Ill. 478.

A distinction is made in New York, that the master is liable only when he also has been guilty of misconduct, as by the improper employment or retention of the servant, or by the nature of the orders given him; Cleghorn v. R. Co., 56 N. Y. 44, 15 Am. Rep. 375. The master would not be liable if the servant acted from an innocent motive and in the supposed discharge of his duty;

Donivan v. Ry. Co., 1 Misc. 368, 21 N. Y. Supp. 457.

They are allowed in cases of nuisance, only when the injury is wanton or malicious; Wood Nuisance, § 868; as for depriving an abutting owner of access to a street without reasonable ground, necessity, or legal advice; Walker v. R. Co., 52 La. Ann. 2036, 28 South. 324; for carrying on blasting in a manner which was protested against; Berlin v. Thompson, 61 Mo. App. 234; for refusal by a railroad company to remove from its right of way the carcasses of animals killed by it; Yazoo & M. V. R. Co. v. Sanders, 87 Miss. 607, 40 South. 163, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1119; for not abating a nuisance after one verdict; Pickens v. Timber Co., 51 W. Va. 445, 41 S. E. 400, 90 Am. St. Rep. 819; or not abating it within a reasonable time; Oursler v. R. Co., 60 Md. 358.

Exemplary damages must be given as a part of the verdict, and not as a separate finding; Bixby v. Dunlap, 56 N. H. 456, 22 Am. Rep. 475; but see Hinckley v. Ry. Co., 38 Wis. 194; and only in cases where there has been some actual damage; Farwell v. Warren, 70 Ill. 28; Freese v. Tripp, id. 496. The jury may consider the defendant's pecuniary condition; Jones v. Jones, 71 Ill. 562; Bull. N. P. 27; Wood's Mayne, Dam. 64; Guengerech v. Smith, 34 Ia. 348; Buckley v. Knapp, 48 Mo. 152; but in a case where they are not warranted in awarding exemplary damages, evidence to show defendant's wealth is not admissible; West. Union Tel. Co. v. Cashman, 132 Fed. 805. The subject of compensatory and punitive damages in cases of tort is exhaustively considered in Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Prentice, 147 U. S. 101, 13 Sup. Ct. 261, 37 L. Ed. 97.

It has been said that the doctrine of punitive damages is opposed to sound legal principles, but it is supported by the weight of authority; 15 Harv. L. Rev. 71, and see Greenleaf, Evidence (16 Ed.) § 253.

Special Damages. The damages recoverable for the actual injury incurred through the peculiar circumstances of the individual case, above and beyond those presumed by law from the general nature of the wrong.

These damages must be specially averred in the declaration, or they cannot be recovered; while damages implied by law are recoverable without any such special averment. Thus, in the case of an action for libel, the law presumes an injury as necessarily involved in the loss of reputation, and will award damages therefor without any distinct averment. But if there was any peculiar loss suffered in the individual case, as the plaintiff's marriage prevented or the plaintiff's business diminished, etc., this must be especially averred; Chit. Pl. 410; Dumont v. Smith, 4 Den. (N. Y.) 319; Barruso v. Madan, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 149. When they are the natural and proximate result of the act or default they are general and are legally imported, otherwise they are special and must be pleaded; Sedg. Meas. Dam. § 1262; in equity as well as at law; Hooper v. Armstrong, 69 Ala. 343. A fortiori where the special damage is essential to support the action; Agnew v. Johnson, 22 Pa. 471, 62 Am. Dec. 303; Sedg. Meas. Dam. § 1262. In Chase v. Fitz, 132 Mass. 359, in referring to and sustaining a rule that an action for breach of promise of marriage does not survive when no special damage is alleged, the court said, "Whatever that phrase may be understood to mean"—and afterwards it was said that "this phrase, 'the allegation of special damage,' undoubtedly found its way into the books because of extreme caution of the learned judges who were called upon to decide a case for the first time, and all the possible aspects of it was not deemed necessary to anticipate."

Double or Treble Damages. In some actions statutes give double or treble damages; and they have been liberally construed to mean actually treble damages. In these cases the jury find such damages as they think proper, and the court enhances them in their judgment; Brooke, Abr. Damages, pl. 70; Co. 2d Inst. 416; Lobdell v. Inhabitants of New Bedford, 1 Mass. 155. For example, if the jury give twenty dollars damages for a forcible entry the court will award forty dollars more, so as to make the total amount of damages sixty dollars; 4 B. & C. 154; McClell. 567. The statute must be pleaded; Bell v. Norris, 79 Ky. 48. As to the rule in patent cases, see PATENT.

The construction of the words treble damages is different from that which has been put on the words treble costs; in the case of damages they are actually doubled or trebled, while double or treble costs are assessed. See Rees v. Emerick, 6 S. & R. (Pa.) 288; Benton v. Dale, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 160; Livingston v. Platner, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 175; Beekman v. Chalmers, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 584; Hubbell v. Rochester, 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 115.

Single damages may be recovered if the claim under the statute is not made out; Osburn v. Lovell, 36 Mich. 246.

MECHANIC. Any skilled worker with tools; a workman who shapes and applies material in the construction of houses; one actually engaged with his own hands in constructive work. City of New Orleans v. Lagman, 43 La. Ann. 1180, 10 South. 244. It has been held that a painter is not a mechanic; Smith v. Ins. Co., 107 Mich. 270, 65 N. W. 236, 30 L. R. A. 368; and that a printer is one; Smith v. Osburn, 53 Ia. 474, 5 N. W. 681. A dentist is a mechanic in Michigan; Maxon v. Perrott, 17 Mich. 332, 97 Am. Dec. 191; see Berks County v. Bertolet, 13 Pa. 525; but not in Mississippi; Whitcomb v. Reid, 31 Miss. 567, 66 Am. Dec. 579.

MECHANICAL EQUIVALENT. See PATENT.

MECHANICAL PURSUIT. One closely allied to or incidental to some kind of manufacturing business; Cowling v. Iron Co., 65 Minn. 263, 68 N. W. 48, 33 L. R. A. 508, 60 Am. St. Rep. 471. Mining of iron is a mechanical business; id. A mechanic who contracts and shapes materials with his hands is engaged in such a pursuit, in the sense of a statute exempting such from taxation; City of New Orleans v. Lagman, 43 La. Ann. 1180, 10 South. 244.

MECHANIC'S LIEN. See LIEN.

MEDALS. The word medals in a bequest will pass curious pieces of current coin kept by the testator with his medals. 3 Atk. 202; Wms. Ex. 1205.

MEDIA ANNATA. In Spanish Law. Profits of land received every six months. McMullen v. Hodge, 5 Tex. 79.

MEDIA CONCLUDENDI. The steps of an argument. Thus "a judgment is conclusive as to all the media concludendi." Fauntleroy v. Lum, 210 U. S. 230, 28 Sup. Ct. 641, 52 L. Ed. 1039. See U. S. v. Land Co., 192 U. S. 358, 24 Sup. Ct. 266, 48 L. Ed. 476. The theory or basis of facts upon which a legal conclusion is reached, per Holmes, C. J., in Hoseason v. Keegen, 178 Mass. 250, 59 N. E. 627.

MEDIATE POWERS. Those incident to primary powers, given by a principal to his agent. For example: the general authority given to collect, receive, and pay debts due by or to the principal is a primary power. In order to accomplish this, it is frequently required to settle amounts, adjust disputed claims, resist those which are unjust, and answer and defend suits; these subordinate powers are sometimes called mediate powers. Story, Ag. § 58. See 1 Campb. 43, note; 4 id. 163; Peck v. Harriott, 6 S. & R. (Pa.) 149, 9 Am. Dec. 415.

MEDIATION. In International Law. States which are at war may accept an offer from a third power, or extend an offer to a third power, friendly to both, to mediate in their quarrel.

It differs from intervention in being purely a friendly act. In the Middle Ages and down to the present time the Pope has been a frequent mediator. Mediation must be distinguished from good offices. The demand of good offices or their acceptance does not confer any right of mediation; 8 Encyc. Laws of Eng. 303.

"A mediator is a common friend who counsels both parties with a weight proportionate to their belief in his integrity and their respect for his power, but he is not an arbitrator, to whose decisions they submit their differences and whose award is binding upon them." Id., quoting Sir James Mackintosh.

In the Convention for the Pacific Settlement of International Disputes, adopted at

The Hague in 1899, the contracting powers recognized (Arts. 2-8) the expediency of mediation, whether at the instance of the parties in dispute or upon the initiative of a third party, and laid down certain rules governing the exercise of it. In no case is the attempt of a third party to mediate to be regarded as an unfriendly act. Mediation is to have the character of advice without any binding force upon the states at variance. Moreover, the acceptance of mediation cannot, in default of an agreement to the contrary, have the effect of interrupting mobilization or other preparations for war. II Opp. §§ 7-11.

MEDIATORS OF QUESTIONS. Six persons authorized, under statute in the reign of Edw. III., to certify and settle, before the mayor and officers of the staple, questions arising among merchants, relating to the wool trade. Toml. Staple.

MEDICAL ATTENDANCE. See MEDICINE.

MEDICAL EVIDENCE. Testimony given by physicians or surgeons in their professional capacity as experts, or derived from the statements of writers of medical or surgical works.

This kind of evidence was first recognized by Charles V. of Germany, and incorporated in the "Caroline Code," framed at Ratisbon in 1532, wherein it was ordained that the opinion of medical men—at first surgeons only—should be received in cases of death by violent or unnatural means, when suspicion existed of a criminal agency. The publication of this code encouraged the members of the medical profession to renewed activity, tending greatly to advance their science and the cause of justice generally. Many books soon appeared on the subject of medical jurisprudence, and the importance of medical evidence was more fully understood. Elwell, Malp. & Med. Ev. 285.

The evidence of the medical witness is strictly that of an expert; Elwell, Malp. & Med. Ev. 275; 1 Phill. Ev. 780; 1 Whart. Ev. § 441.

In the case of Com. v. Rogers, 7 Metc. (Mass.) 505, 41 Am. Dec. 458, Shaw, C. J., presiding, the court held that the proper question to be put to the professional witness was: "If the symptoms and indications testified to by other witnesses are proved, and if the jury are satisfied of the truth of them, whether in his [the witness's] opinion the party was insane, and what the nature and character of that insanity; and what state did they indicate, and what he would expect would be the conduct of such a person in any supposed circumstance." Under this ruling the medical witness passes upon the condition of the person whose condition is at issue. To do it correctly he must hear all the evidence that the jury hears; he must judge as to the relevance of the evidence of others, and make an application of the facts that legally and properly bear upon the case to it, and reject all others; in short, he is judge and jury in the case. Since the trial of Rogers, a different rule has been adopted by the courts in Massachusetts. In the case of the United States v. McGlue, reported in 1 Curt. 1, Fed. Cas. No. 15,679, Mr. Justice Curtis instructed the jury that medical experts "were not allowed to give opinions in the case."

MEDICAL JURISPRUDENCE. That science which applies the principles and practice of medicine to the elucidation and settlement of doubtful questions which arise in courts of law.

These questions are properly embraced in five different classes:

The first includes questions arising out of the relations of sex: as, impotence and sterility, hermaphroditism, rape, pregnancy, legitimacy, delivery.

The second, injuries inflicted upon the living organization: as, infanticide, wounds, poisons, persons found dead.

The third, those arising out of disqualifying diseases: as, the different forms of mental alienation.

The fourth, those arising out of deceptive practice; as, feigned diseases.

The fifth is made up of miscellaneous questions: as, age, identity, presumption of seniorship, life assurance, and medical evidence.

See the several titles.

MEDICINE. The practice of medicine includes the application and use of medicines and drugs for the purpose of curing, mitigating, or alleviating bodily diseases, while the practice of surgery is limited to manual operations usually performed by surgical instruments or appliances. Smith v. Lane, 24 Hun (N. Y.) 633.

The primary meaning of the terms medical attendance or medical services is the rendering of professional medical services.

See DRUGGIST; PHYSICIAN.

MEDICO-LEGAL. Relating to the law concerning medical questions.

MEDIETAS LINGUÆ (Lat. half tongue). A term denoting that a jury is to be composed of persons one-half of whom speak the English and one-half a foreign language. See JURY.

MEDIO ACQUIETANDO. A judicial writ to distrain a lord for the acquitting of a mesne lord from a rent, which he had acknowledged in court not to belong to him. Reg. Jur. 129.

MEDITERRANEAN PASSPORT. A pass issued by the admiralty of Great Britain under various treaties with the Barbary States in the eighteenth century. They were granted to British built ships and were respected by the Barbary pirates. See 2 Halleck, Int. L., Baker's ed. 100. They were also issued by the United States. The term is still retained in R. S. § 4191 (act of Mar. 2, 1803).

MEDIUM CONCLUDENDI. See MEDIA CONCLUDENDI.

MEDLEY. An affray; a sudden or casual fighting; a hand-to-hand battle; a mêlée.

MEDSCEAT. A bribe; hush money. Anc. Inst. Eug.

MEETING. A number of people having a common duty or function, who have come together for any legal purpose, or the transaction of business of a common interest; an assembly.

One person does not constitute a meeting; 2 Q. B. Div. 26; but where all of certain preference shares were held by one person and a "meeting" was called, it was held competent for him to hold such meeting, preside, move resolutions, etc.; [1911] 1 Ch. 163.

In the law of corporations the term applies to every duly convened assembly either of stockholders, or of directors, managers, etc.

A distinction is made between general stated meetings of a corporation and special meetings. The former occur at stated times usually fixed by the constitution and by-laws; the latter are called for special purposes or business. Generally speaking, every member of a corporation has a right to be present at every meeting thereof, and to be notified of the meeting, in some way; People v. Batchelor, 22 N. Y. 128; 2 H. L. C. 789. In the absence of a by-law or a custom to the contrary, at least one full day's notice must be given of a directors' meeting of a corporation; Mercantile Library Hall Co. v. Library Ass'n, 173 Pa. 30, 33 Atl. 744. An omission to give the required notice will generally, though it be accidental, invalidate the proceedings; 7 B. & C. 695; see Bank of Little Rock v. McCarthy, 55 Ark. 473. 18 S. W. 759, 29 Am. St. Rep. 60; but it will not, where the action taken thereat is duly ratified at a subsequent meeting; Taylor County Court v. R. Co., 35 Fed. 161. When all who are entitled to be present at a meeting are present, whether notice has been given or not, and no objection is made on account of the want of formalities, there is a waiver of the want of notice; People v. Peck, 11 Wend. (N. Y.) 604, 27 Am. Dec. 104; Minneapolis Times Co. v. Nimocks, 53 Minn. 381, 55 N. W. 546; but if any one member is absent or refuses to give his consent the proceedings are invalidated; People's Mut. Ins. Co. v. Westcott, 14 Gray (Mass.) 440. Notice should be personal; Stow v. Wyse, 7 Conn. 214, 18 Am. Dec. 99; in writing, and signed by the proper person; Johnston v. Jones, 23 N. J. Eq. 216; should state the time and place of meeting, and, if a special meeting, the business to be transacted; People's Mut. Ins. Co. v. Westcott, 14 Gray (Mass.) 440; L. R. 2 Ch. 191. Ordinarily, notice of stated meetings is not required; People v. Batchelor, 22 N. Y. 128. A general notice, not specifying the business to be transacted, is all that is necessary to authorize the transaction of the ordinary business affairs of the corporation; In re Argus Co., 138 N. Y. 557, 34 N. E. 388.

All proceedings carried on by the members of a corporation, while sitting outside of the state which created it, are void; Wood Hydraulic Hose Min. Co. v. King, 45 Ga. 34; Freeman v. Water Power & Mill Co., 38 Me. 343; Duke v. Taylor, 37 Fla. 64, 19 South. 172; 31 L. R. A. 484, 53 Am. St. Rep. 232; Montgomery v. Forbes, 148 Mass. 249, 19 N. E. 342; Smith v. Mining Co., 64 Md. 85, 20 Atl. 1032, 54 Am. Rep. 760; but this rule does not apply to the meetings of the directors of a corporation; Moraw. Priv. Corp. § 533; Newburg Petroleum Co. v. Weare, 27 Ohio St. 343; Smith v. Alvord, 63 Barb. (N. Y.) 415; and a corporation created by the laws of two states may hold its meetings and transact its business in either state; Covington & C. Bridge Co. v. Mayer, 31 Ohio St. 317.

Where a corporate election of officers was held at a place other than that fixed by the by-laws, it was held that the election of directors thereat was valid; Union Nat. Bank of Troy v. Scott, 53 App. Div. 65, 66 N. Y. Supp. 145. Special meetings of directors may be held, although the by-laws are silent on the subject; United Growers Co. v. Eisner, 22 App. Div. 1, 47 N. Y. Supp. 906.

A corporate contract made without approval at a lawful meeting of the directors may be binding on the company if the negotiations leading up to it were known to the members of the board, and the other party had made large expenditures in the matter, and both companies had acted under the contract for a considerable length of time; Greensboro Gas Co. v. Gas Co., 222 Pa. 4, 70 Atl. 940, 128 Am. St. Rep. 790. See Blackwell, Meetings; 2 Welmer, Corp. Law, App., for an interesting paper on corporate meetings, by George M. Dallas; FAMILY MEETINGS; DIRECTORS; STOCKHOLDERS; INSOLVENCY; PROXY; MAJORITY; QUORUM; MINUTES; ELECTIONS IN CORPORATIONS.

As to meeting of minds in a contract, see AGREEMENT.

MELANCHOLIA. In Medical Jurisprudence. A name given by the ancients to a species of partial intellectual mania, now more generally known by the name of monomania. It bore this name because it was supposed to be always attended by dejection of mind and gloomy ideas. See MANIA.

MELDFEON. A recompense given to a person who made discovery of any breach of penal laws committed by another person. Tomlin.

MELIORATIONS. In Scotch Law. Improvements of an estate, other than mere repairs; betterments. 1 Bell, Com. 73.

MELIUS INQUIRENDUM VEL INQUIRENDO. In Old English Practice. A writ which in certain cases issued after an imperfect inquisition returned on a capias utligatum in outlawry. This melius inquirendum commanded the sheriff to summon another inquest in order that the value, etc., of lands, etc., might be better or more correctly ascertained.

MEMBER. A limb of the body useful in self-defence. Membrum est pars corporis habens destinatam operationem in corpore. Co. Litt. 126 a.

As to the loss of a member, see Loss.

An individual who belongs to a firm, partnership, company, or corporation. A statutory provision that all the members of a company shall, in certain cases, be liable, is not confined to such as were members when the debts were contracted; Curtis v. Harlow, 12 Metc. (Mass.) 3. See CORPORATION; PARTNERSHIP; JOINT STOCK COMPANY.

One who belongs to a legislative body, or other branch of the government; as, a member of the house of representatives; a member of the court.

A child living with the father does not necessarily cease to be a member of his family on reaching his majority; Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co. v. Chisholm, 79 Ill. 584.

MEMBER OF CONGRESS. A member of the senate or house of representatives of the United States; but more commonly used of the lower house.

MEMBERS. In English Law. Places where a custom-house has been kept of old time, with officers or deputies in attendance; and they are lawful places of exportation or importation. 1 Chitty, Com. Law, 726.

MEMBRANA (Lat.). In Civil and Old English Law. Parchment; a skin of parchment. Vocab. Jur. Utr.; Du Cange. The English rolls were composed of several skins, sometimes as many as forty-seven. Hale, Hist. Comm. Law 17.

MÉMOIRE. In French Law. A document in the form of a petition by which appeals to the court of cassation are initiated.

MEMORANDUM. An informal instrument recording some fact or agreement: so called from its beginning, when it was made in Latin. It is sometimes commenced with this word though written in English: as, "Memorandum, that it is agreed;" or it is headed with the words, Be it remembered that, etc. The term memorandum is also applied to the cause of an instrument.

A note to help the memory. Bissell v. Beckwith, 32 Conn. 517. A letter may be a memorandum. Id.

The word is also used in England to designate the objects for which a trading corporation is formed. The term prospectus is commonly used in the United States. See PROSPECTUS.

In Record Practice. The commencement of a record in king's bench, now written in English, "Be it remembered," and which gives name to the whole clause.

It is only used in proceedings by bill, and not in proceedings by original, and was introduced to call attention to what was considered the bye-business of the court. 2

Tidd, Pract. 775. Memorandum is applied, also, to other forms and documents in English practice: e. g. memorandum in error, a document alleging error in fact and accompanied by an affidavit of such matter of fact. 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, § 158. Kerr's Act. Law. Proceedings in error are now abolished in civil cases; Jud. Act, 1875. Also, a memorandum of appearance, etc., in the general sense of an informal instrument, recording some fact or agreement.

A memorandum of association is a document subscribed by seven or more persons for the purpose of forming themselves into an incorporated company, with or without limited liability. 3 Steph. Com. 20.

In Contracts. A writing required by the Statute of Frauds. See NOTE ON MEMORANDUM.

In the Law of Evidence. A witness may refresh his memory by referring to a written instrument, memorandum, or entry in a book, and may be compelled to do so, if the writing is in court; State v. Cardoza, 11 S. C. 195; but the memorandum is not competent evidence to prove the facts stated, in itself; Baum v. Reay, 96 Cal. 462, 29 Pac. 117, 31 Pac. 561; nor is the memorandum admitted in evidence merely because the witness uses it to refresh his recollection; 130 U. S. 611. The writing need not be an original or made by the witness himself, provided, after inspecting it, he can speak from his own recollection, not relying wholly upon the writing; Cameron v. Blackman, 39 Mich. 108; Finch v. Barclay, 87 Ga. 393, 13 S. E. 566; Labaree v. Klosterman, 33 Neb. 150, 49 N. W. 1102; Culver v. Lumber Co., 53 Minn. 360, 55 N. W. 552. And a writing may be referred to by a witness, even if inadmissible as evidence itself; 8 East 273; Kunder v. Smith, 45 Ill. App. 368. A witness may refer to a writing which he remembers having seen before, and which he knew at that time to be correct, although he has no recollection of the facts contained therein; so, when he neither recognizes the writing nor remembers anything therein, but yet, knowing it to be genuine, his mind is so convinced, that he is enabled to swear to the fact, as where a banker's clerk is shown a bill of exchange with his own writing upon it; Whart. Ev. § 518; 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 436-439. See Brayley v. Kelly, 25 Minn. 160; Bates v. Sabin, 64 Vt. 511, 24 Atl. 1013. The admission in evidence of a memorandum made by the witness is error if it does not appear that the witness could not have testified from memory; Howe v. Cochran, 47 Minn. 403, 50 N. W. 368.

It is held that where a witness uses a memorandum, but refuses to show it to opposing counsel, his testimony will not be suppressed; Parks v. Biebel, 18 Colo. App. 12, 69 Pac. 273; also that documents from which the witness has refreshed his memory before examination need not be produced at the trial (though failure to produce them would weaken his evidence); McCormick v. Cleal, 12 App. D. C. 335; it is no ground for rejecting his testimony that the witness, having refreshed his memory by a memorandum, fails to produce it in court; Loose v. State, 120 Wis. 115, 97 N. W. 526 (contra, Banking House of Wilcoxson & Co. v. Darr, 139 Mo. 660, 41 S. W. 227); especially if he was able, after refreshing his memory, to testify from his independent recollection; State v. Magers, 36 Or. 38, 58 Pac. 892. Other cases hold that opposing counsel has a right to examine a memorandum used by a witness; Volusia County v. Bigelow, 45 Fla. 638, 33 South. 704; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Hays, 8 Kan. App. 545, 54 Pac. 322; Schwickert v. Levin, 76 App. Div. 373, 78 N. Y. Supp. 394; before it is used; Morris v. U. S., 149 Fed. 123, 80 C. C. A. 112, 9 Ann. Cas. 558; but this is discretionary with the trial judge; Com. v. Burke, 114 Mass. 261.

The opposite party may cross-examine on the memorandum; 6 C. & P. 281; Mt. Terry Min. Co. v. White, 10 S. D. 620, 74 N. W. 1060; Schwickert v. Levin, 76 App. Div. 373, 78 N. Y. Supp. 394; Cortland Mfg. Co. v. Platt, 83 Mich. 419, 47 N. W. 330. This extends only to the part covered by the memorandum used by the witness; Com. v. Haley, 13 Allen (Mass.) 587; Parks v. Biebel, 18 Colo. App. 12, 69 Pac. 273; contra, People v. Lyons, 49 Mich. 78, 13 N. W. 365; State v. Bacon, 41 Vt. 526, 98 Am. Dec. 616; 2 C. & P. 325.

While a witness may refresh his memory by use of an original memorandum made by him, he may not in general testify wholly therefrom without having some recollection independently of the memorandum; Southern Ry. Co. v. State, 165 Ind. 613, 75 N. E. 272; Johnson v. State, 125 Ga. 243, 54 S. E. 184 (contra, Akins v. Banking Co., 111 Ga. 815, 35 S. E. 671). If the witness depends entirely upon books of account, and not at all upon his recollection, he should not be permitted to testify from them, as the books are the best evidence; Eatman v. State, 48 Fla. 21, 37 South. 576.

A stenographer may testify to the correctness of her notes, and read them in the trial court, where she took the testimony of certain witnesses before the grand jury; Keith v. State, 157 Ind. 376, 61 N. E. 716; so of a former trial; Toohey v. Plummer, 69 Mich. 345, 37 N. W. 297; though independently of her notes she has no knowledge of such testimony; State v. Smith, 99 Ia. 26, 68 N. W. 428, 61 Am. St. Rep. 219; Miles v. Walker, 66 Neb. 728, 92 N. W. 1014; he may read from his longhand notes; Harmon v. Territory, 15 Okl. 147, 79 Pac. 765.

A witness may refresh his memory from notes taken by counsel or other persons at a former trial, or from his own testimony at such time; State v. Dean, 72 S. C. 74, 51 S.

F. 324; or from testimony taken down by him in the grand jury room; Luttrell v. State, 40 Tex. Cr. R. 651, 51 S. W. 930; or from a stenographic report of his evidence at a former trial; Portsmouth Street R. Co. v. Peed's Adm'r., 102 Va. 662, 47 S. E. 850.

On an issue as to prior invention a witness may refresh his memory as to the time and issue of the invention from contemporaneous newspaper articles which he read at the time; Bragg Mfg. Co. v. New York, 141 Fed. 118.

A partner may refresh his memory from his ledger entries showing the gross amounts of invoices sold to customers and payments thereon, posted at the end of each month, where he had examined them at or near the time they were made and then knew them to be correct; Grunberg v. U. S., 145 Fed. 81, 76 C. C. A. 51.

Where a newspaper reporter was present when the police examined a bag and made notes of the contents, which were published in his newspaper, and he examined the publication and found it correct, and then destroyed his notes, he was allowed to refresh his memory by reference to the published record; Erdman v. State, 90 Neb. 642, 134 N. W. 258, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 577. Where a writer of articles in a newspaper testified that all the articles written by him were true, a court allowed him to examine one of his articles and testify whether he had any doubt that the fact was as therein stated; 1 C. & K. 320.

A medical expert in a poison case, who "had opened the body and committed the appearances to writing," was allowed to read the writing to the jury; 18 How. St. Tr. 1138. So in the Trial of Webster, Bemis 91.

A witness was called to give an account of a voyage, and was shown the log book, the entries in which were not made by him. He testified that he had examined the entries from time to time while they were fresh and always found them accurate; held that they could be used as if he had made them himself; 2 Campb. 112.

Where a witness has made a memorandum of certain investigations, and on the following day had it copied on the typewriter, and signed a copy and sent it as a report to his superior, he may be permitted to refresh his recollection by the typewritten memorandum; Edwards v. Gimbel, 202 Pa. 30, 51 Atl. 357.

An officer who has taken goods on legal process may refresh his memory from a copy of a return made out in his presence and under his direction; Flohr v. Territory, 14 Okl. 477, 78 Pac. 565; so of an officer who searched defendant's premises on a prosecution for keeping intoxicating liquor; State v. Costa, 78 Vt. 198, 62 Atl. 38; a bank teller testifying to checks on the bank may use entries in his books, though some of them were not written by him; Breese v. U. S., 106 Fed. 680, 45 C. C. A. 535. A jailer may refer to the jail record made by himself as to days when defendant was in jail and when he was discharged; State v. Kennedy, 154 Mo. 268, 55 S. W. 293.

A witness as to the price of milk at a given time may refresh his memory from newspapers shown to be the standard authority on the exchange price of milk; Blanding v. Cohen, 184 N. Y. 538, 76 N. E. 1089; so of a witness who testified that a certain book was the only and best evidence of the grain market, and who saw such book and remembered that he knew its quotations on that day to be correct, although he had no independent recollection of the facts in it; Rogers v. Fenimore (Del.) 41 Atl. 886.

A physician may refresh his memory as to the condition of a patient from a memorandum made at the time of a visit; Bailey v. Warner, 118 Fed. 395, 55 C. C. A. 329.

One who testified that he had no recollection of a medical examination made by him for an application for life insurance and that an inspection of the application did not refresh his memory, although he could state that the statements in the application were true when made, was allowed to use the paper; Holden v. Ins. Co., 191 Mass. 153, 77 N. E. 309.

A memorandum made by a witness the day after a transaction, but while he was completing it, may be used; Sibley Warehouse & Storage Co. v. Durand & Kasper Co., 200 Ill. 354, 65 N. E. 676. A memorandum made at the time of the facts in question and known then to be correct may be used; Johnson v. Spaulding, 1 Neb. (Unof.) 699, 95 N. W. 808. A witness may use a memorandum in his own handwriting; Smith v. Pickands, 148 Mich. 558, 112 N. W. 122.

Where a witness testified that he would not have made a record if it had not been true, he may use the record, though unable to recall the facts; Franklin v. R. Co., 74 S. C. 332, 54 S. E. 578.

A memorandum made by another may be used if the witness saw it while the facts were fresh and knew that the memorandum was correct; The Queen of the Pacific, 180 U. S. 49, 21 Sup. Ct. 278, 45 L. Ed. 419; it is not necessary that the memorandum should have been made by the witness; Texas & P. Ry. Co. v. Birdwell (Tex.) 86 S. W. 1067; so where the statements were made before the witness; State v. Magers, 35 Or. 520, 57 Pac. 197; but it must appear that it was read by him at or about the time the transaction was fresh in his memory; Emanuel v. Casualty Co., 47 Misc. 378, 94 N. Y. Supp. 36.

A memorandum book, out of which some of the entries bearing on the cause of action have been torn after the action was commenced, is not admissible in evidence; Johnson v. Fry, 88 Va. 695, 12 S. E. 973, 14 S. E. 183. Memoranda, if admissible at all as independent evidence, cannot be admitted when it is not shown that they were made at the time of the transactions referred to, or why they were made; Bates v. Preble, 151 U. S. 149, 14 Sup. Ct. 277, 38 L. Ed. 106.

A witness may refresh his memory by reference to a copy of a memorandum made by him, only when it is first shown that the copy is correct; Mayor and Aldermen of City of Birmingham v. McPoland, 96 Ala. 363, 11 South. 427.

After a memorandum book has been introduced in evidence without objection, no objection will lie to its use as evidence; nor to a witness using it as a basis for the facts to which he testifies, on the ground that he did not make the entries; Manchester Assur. Co. v. Navigation Co., 46 Or. 162, 79 Pac. 60, 69 L. R. A. 475, 114 Am. St. Rep. 863. The matter is largely discretionary with the trial judge; Michigan Fire & Ins. Co. v. Wich, 8 Colo. App. 409, 46 Pac. 687.

In Insurance. A clause in a policy limiting the liability of the insurer.

Policies of insurance on risks of transportation by water generally contain exceptions of all liability from loss on certain articles other than total, or for contributions for general average; and for liability for particular average on certain other articles supposed to be perishable or specially liable to damage, under specified rates on each, varying from three per cent. to twenty, and for any loss whatever under three or five per cent. Some seventy or eighty articles are subject to these exceptions of particular average in the divers forms of policy in use in different places; 1 Phill. Ins. § 54, n. These exceptions were formerly introduced under a "memorandum," or "N. B.," and hence have been called "memorandum articles," and the body of exceptions the "memorandum." The list of articles and rates of exceptions vary much in different places, and from time to time at the same place; De Peyster v. Ins. Co., 19 N. Y. 272, 75 Am. Dec. 331.

The construction of these exceptions has been a pregnant subject in jurisprudence. 4 Maule & S. 503; 5 id. 47; 3 B. & Ad. 20; 5 id. 225; 4 B. & C. 736; 7 id. 219; 8 Bingh. 458; Williams v. Cole, 16 Me. 207; Morean v. Ins. Co., 1 Wheat. (U. S.) 219, 4 L. Ed. 75; Murray v. Hatch, 6 Mass. 465; De Peyster v. Ins. Co., 19 N. Y. 272, 75 Am. Dec. 331; [1893] Prob. 164, 209.

MEMORANDUM ARTICLES. A term used to designate the articles of merchandise mentioned in the memorandum clause. See MEMORANDUM.

MEMORANDUM CHECK. It is not unusual among merchants, when one makes a temporary loan to another, to give the lender a check on a bank, with the express or implied agreement that it shall be redeemed by the maker himself, and that it shall not be presented at the bank for payment; such understanding being denoted by the word memorandum upon it. If passed to a third person, it will be valid in his hands like any other check; Dykens v. Bank, 11 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 612. Being given by the maker to the payee rather as a memorandum of indebtedness than as a payment, between these parties it is considered as a due bill, or an I. O. U. It can be sued upon as a promissory note, without presentment to the bank, whereas the holder of a regular check must first demand its payment at bank, and be refused, before he can maintain an action against the drawer; Van Schaack, Bank Checks 184.

The fact that the word "memorandum" or an abbreviation of it is written on a check makes it a memorandum check, but the bank is not bound to pay any attention to these words, and if such a check is presented for payment and the drawer has sufficient funds to meet it the bank must honor it like any ordinary check; Norton, Bills and Notes 383. If the agreement between the maker and payee is that it shall not be presented for payment, any remedy of the drawer for the breach of such agreement is solely against the payee; Morse, Banks 313. Such a check has all the features of a negotiable instrument in the hands of a bona fide holder for value; id. See CHECK.

MEMORANDUM CLAUSE. A clause inserted in a marine insurance policy to prevent the underwriters from being liable for injury to goods of a peculiarly perishable nature, and for minor damages. Maude & P. Shipp. 371. See MEMORANDUM.

MEMORANDUM IN ERROR. A document alleging error in fact, accompanied by an affidavit of such matter of fact. 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, s. 158.

MEMORIAL. A petition or representation made by one or more individuals to a legislative or other body. When such instrument is addressed to a court, it is called a petition.

MEMORIZATION. No action will lie for pirating a play by means of memorization alone; 5 Term 245; see 14 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 207, where the subject is discussed in a note by Mr. J. A. Morgan.

MEMORY. Understanding; a capacity to make contracts, a will, or to commit a crime, so far as intention is necessary.

Memory is sometimes employed to express the capacity of the understanding, and sometimes its power; when we speak of a retentive memory, we use it in the former sense; when of a ready memory, in the latter. Shelford, Lun. Intr. 29, 30.

The reputation, good or bad, which a man leaves at his death.

This memory, when good, is highly prized by the relations of the deceased; and it is therefore libellous to throw a shade over the memory of the dead, when the writing has a tendency to create a breach of the peace, by inciting the friends and relations of the deceased to avenge the insult offered to the family. 4 Term 126; 5 Co. 125; Hawkins, Pl. Cr. b. 1, c. 73, s. 1. See LIBEL; PRIVACY.

As to witness refreshing his memory, see MEMORANDUM.

MEMORY, TIME OF LEGAL. According to the English common law, which has been altered by 2 & 3 Will. IV. c. 71, the time of memory commenced from the reign of Richard the First, A. D. 1189. 2 Bla. Com. 31. But proof of a regular usage for twenty years, not explained or contradicted, is evidence upon which many public and private rights are held, and sufficient for a jury in finding the existence of an immemorial custom or prescription; 2 Saund. 175 a, d; 2 Price, Exch. 450; 4 id. 198. See PRESCRIPTION.

MEN OF STRAW. Men who used in former days to ply about courts of law, so called from their manner of making known their occupation (i. e. by a straw in one of their shoes), recognized by the name of straw-shoes. An advocate or lawyer who wanted a convenient witness, knew by these signs where to find one, and the colloquy between the parties was brief. "Don't you remember?" said the advocate (the party looked at the fee and gave no sign; but the fee increased, and the powers of memory increased with it)—"To be sure I do." "Then come into court and swear it." And straw-shoes went into court and swore it. Athens abounded in straw-shoes. 13 L. Quart. Rev. 344.

MENACE. A threat; a declaration of an intention to cause evil to happen to another. The word menace is not restricted to threats of violence to person and property nor to threats of accusing a person of crime; it includes a threat to accuse one of immoral conduct; [1895] 1 Q. B. 706.

When menaces to do an injury to another have been made, the party making them may, in general, be held to bail to keep the peace; and when followed by any inconvenience or loss, the injured party has a civil action against the wrong-doer. Webb, Poll. Torts 210. Com. Dig. Battery (D); Viner Abr.; Bacon, Abr. Assault; Co. Litt. 161 a, 162 b, 253 b; 2 Lutw. 1428. See THREAT.

MENIAL. Pertaining to servants or domestic service; servile. This term is applied to servants who live under their master's roof. See stat. 2 Hen. IV. c. 21; 1 Bla. Com. 425. It has been held not applicable to a housekeeper in a large hotel; 1 R. 10 C. L. 188.

MENS REA. A term meaning a guilty intent and commonly used only in connection with the maxim, actus non facit reum, nisi mens sit rea.

The use of the term and the maxim has been criticised. "Though the phrase is in common use, I think it most unfortunate . . . and actually misleading. . . . It naturally suggests that, apart from all particular definitions of crimes, such a thing exists as a 'mens rea' or 'guilty mind,' which is always expressly or by implication involved in every definition. This is obviously not the case, for the mental elements of different crimes differ widely. 'Mens rea' means, in the case of murder, malice aforethought; in the case of theft an intention to steal. . . . In some cases it denotes mere inattention. For instance, in the case of manslaughter by negligence it may mean forgetting to notice a signal. It appears confusing to call dissimilar states of mind by one name. . . . To an illegal mind, it suggests that, by the law of England, no act is a crime which is done from laudable motives; in other words, that immorality is essential to crime." Stephen, J., in L. R. 23 Q. B. D. 186.

The maxim relating to "mens rea" means no more than that the definition of all, or nearly all, crimes contains not only an outward and visible element, but a mental element, varying according to the different nature of different crimes. To comprehend "mens rea" we must have a detailed examination of the definitions of particular crimes, and therefore the expression is unmeaning. 2 Steph. Hist. Cr. L. 95.

In offences against the acts relating to adulterating food, etc., the defence of mens rea is not good unless the acts use the word "wilfully"; [1896] 1 Q. B. 65.

See 13 Cr. L. Mag. 831; 1 Bish. New Cr. L. §§ 287, 288, 303 a; 8 Eng. Rul. Cas. 16; IGNORANCE; MOTIVE; INTENT; SCIENTER; ANIMUS FURANDI.

MENSA (Lat.). An obsolete term, comprehending all goods and necessities for livelihoods.

MENSA ET THORO. See DIVORCE; A MENSA ET THORO.

MENSURA DOMINI REGIS. The measure of our lord the king, being the weights and measures established under King Richard I. in his parliament at Westminster, 1197. 1 Bla. Com. 275.

MENTAL INCAPACITY. See DELIRIUM; DELUSION; DEMENTIA; IDIOCY; IMBECILITY; INSANITY; MANIA; PABESIS; PARANOIA.

MENTAL RESERVATION. A silent exception to the general words of a promise or agreement not expressed, on account of a general understanding on the subject. But the term has been applied to an exception existing in the mind of the one party only, and has been degraded to signify a dishonest excuse for evading or infringing a promise. Wharton.

It differs from equivocation; in the latter the words employed, although doubtful, and perhaps not fitted naturally to convey the real meaning of the speaker, are yet absolutely speaking, and without the addition of any further clause, susceptible of that meaning; in the former some word or clause, necessary to convey fully the meaning of the speaker is held back. Int. Cyc.

MENTAL SUFFERING. Where mental suffering is the natural and proximate result of a tort or of a breach of contract it is a proper subject of compensation, but standing alone it will not support an action of which actual damages is the basis; Hale, Dam. §§ 39, 40.

Damages for mental suffering are allowable where there has been a malicious, intentional or wilful invasion of plaintiff's rights, although there was no physical injury; Rowan v. Telegraph Co., 149 Fed. 550.

A jury is not confined to compensatory damages, but may consider the sorrow, mental distress and bereavement of a father suing for the wrongful and negligent killing of his son; Kelley v. R. Co., 58 W. Va. 216, 52 S. E. 520, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 898.

It was the common-law rule that mental suffering unconnected with physical injury or other element of damage to person or property, is not a cause of action for which damages may be recovered; Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Rogers, 68 Miss. 748, 9 South. 823, 13 L. R. A. 859, 24 Am. St. Rep. 300, L. R. 10 Q. B. 122; 9 H. L. Cas. 577; Curtin v. Telegraph Co., 13 App. Div. 253, 42 N. Y. Supp. 1109; Connell v. Telegraph Co., 116 Mo. 34, 22 S. W. 345, 20 L. R. A. 172, 38 Am. St. Rep. 575; Wolf v. Stewart, 48 La. Ann. 1431, 20 South. 908; Joch v. Dankwardt, 85 Ill. 331; City of Salina v. Trospen, 27 Kan. 544; Johnson v. Wells, Fargo & Co., 6 Nev. 224, 3 Am. Rep. 245; Russell v. Telegraph Co., 3 Dak. 315, 19 N. W. 408; International Ocean Telegraph Co. v. Saunders, 32 Fla. 434, 14 South. 148, 21 L. R. A. 810.

Damages for a personal injury may properly include compensation for pain and suffering, both physical and mental; and also permanent injuries, which it is fair to believe will result in the future; Denver & A. G. R. Co. v. Roller, 100 Fed. 738, 41 C. C. A. 22, 49 L. R. A. 77; or resulting from a miscarriage caused by fright from the falling of an incandescent light bulb on plaintiff's temple; Jones v. R. Co., 23 App. Div. 141, 48 N. Y. Supp. 914; but the right to recover for mental suffering resulting from bodily injuries is restricted to the person who received the bodily injury. Distress caused by sympathy for another's suffering is not an element of damages; Woodstock Iron Works v. Stockdale, 143 Ala. 550, 39 South. 335, 5 Ann. Cas. 578; and likewise mental distress from seeing a pet cat mangled by a dog, in the absence of wilfulness of the dog's owner, is not recoverable; Buchanan v. Stout, 123 App. Div. 648, 108 N. Y. Supp. 38.

This continues to be the prevailing rule with respect to all actions upon contracts of which the consideration is something having a specific value in money. In such cases mental suffering is treated as not being within the limitations of the doctrine of proximate cause and natural consequences, as settled in Hadley v. Baxendale, 9 Exch. 341; Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Fowler, 6 Tex.

Civ. App. 755, 27 S. W. 268; Thompson v. Telegraph Co., 107 N. C. 449, 12 S. E. 427.

A line of cases contra is based upon a decision in So Relle v. Telegraph Co., 55 Tex. 308, 40 Am. Rep. 805, which has been followed in several states; Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Henderson, 89 Ala. 510, 7 South. 419, 18 Am. St. Rep. 148; Wadsworth v. Tel. Co., 86 Tenn. 695, 8 S. W. 574, 6 Am. St. Rep. 864; Reese v. Telegraph Co., 123 Ind. 294, 24 N. E. 163, 7 L. R. A. 583; Shepard v. Ry. Co., 77 Ia. 54, 41 N. W. 564; Porter v. R. Co., 71 Mo. 66, 36 Am. Rep. 454; Leach v. Leach, 11 Tex. Civ. App. 699, 33 S. W. 703; but the doctrine of these cases has been the subject of severe criticism; Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Rogers, 68 Miss. 748, 9 South. 823, 13 L. R. A. 859, 24 Am. St. Rep. 300.

Substantial damages may be recovered for mental anguish, irrespective of physical injury caused by negligently delaying the delivery of a telegram; Cashion v. Telegraph Co., 123 N. C. 267, 31 S. E. 493; Cowan v. Telegraph Co., 122 Ia. 379, 98 N. W. 231, 64 L. R. A. 545, 101 Am. St. Rep. 268; Gray v. Telegraph Co., 108 Tenn. 39, 64 S. W. 1063, 56 L. R. A. 301, 91 Am. St. Rep. 706; Postal Telegraph Cable Co. v. Terrell, 124 Ky. 822, 100 S. W. 292, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 927; Arkansas & L. Ry. Co. v. Stroude, 82 Ark. 117, 100 S. W. 760; contra, Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Shenep, 83 Ark. 476, 104 S. W. 154, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 886, 119 Am. St. Rep. 145.

A further rule in regard to telegrams is established by reason of the relationship between the parties concerned. Damages may be recovered for the delay or negligent transmission of a telegram, notifying the sendee of the serious illness of a near relative; Meadows v. Telegraph Co., 132 N. C. 40, 43 S. E. 512; Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Hollingsworth, 83 Ark. 39, 102 S. W. 681, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 497, 119 Am. St. Rep. 105, 13 Ann. Cas. 397; causing distress by falsely alleging the death of receiver's mother; Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Hines, 22 Tex. Civ. App. 315, 54 S. W. 627; where a mother notifies her husband that their child has been sent to a pest house; Thurman v. Telegraph Co., 127 Ky. 137, 105 S. W. 155, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 497.

But recovery was denied: Where the telegram announced to a brother-in-law the death of the sender's husband; Cashion v. Telegraph Co., 123 N. C. 267, 31 S. E. 493; where there is nothing on the face of the telegram to apprise the company that a claim will result because a father is deprived of the services of a doctor for his sick son as a result of its negligence; Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Reid, 120 Ky. 231, 85 S. W. 1171, 70 L. R. A. 289; where one is prevented from attending the funeral of his fiancée; Randall v. Telegraph Co., 139 Ky. 373, 107

S. W. 235, 32 Ky. L. Rep. 859, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 277, 139 Am. St. Rep. 477.

Mental suffering will not be presumed where one is deprived of the opportunity to attend his first cousin's funeral; Johnson v. Telegraph Co., 81 S. C. 235, 62 S. E. 244, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1002, 128 Am. St. Rep. 905; or the funeral of a son's wife; Foreman v. Telegraph Co., 141 Ia. 32, 116 N. W. 724, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 374. And evidence is not admissible to prove that the sendee is a physician, where he is prevented from attending his mother's death-bed; Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Williams, 129 Ky. 515, 112 S. W. 651, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 409.

An undisclosed principal cannot recover for mental suffering caused by delay in transmitting a telegram, although both the sender and sendee are his agents; Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Potts, 120 Tenn. 37, 113 S. W. 789, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 479, 127 Am. St. Rep. 991; nor can one for whose benefit the telegram is sent and who pays the charges; Helms v. Telegraph Co., 143 N. C. 386, 55 S. E. 831, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 249, 118 Am. St. Rep. 811, 10 Ann. Cas. 643.

Damages for mental suffering can be recovered in the state of delivery under a statute subjecting telegraph companies to such liability for delay in delivering telegrams, although the telegram was sent from a state where such damages are not allowed; Gray v. Telegraph Co., 108 Tenn. 39, 64 S. W. 1063, 56 L. R. A. 301, 91 Am. St. Rep. 706; Gentle v. Telegraph Co., 82 Ark. 96, 100 S. W. 742; contra, Johnson v. Telegraph Co., 144 N. C. 410, 57 S. E. 122, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 256, 119 Am. St. Rep. 961, where it was held that the law of the state where the telegram is presented for transmission governs.

The federal courts deny the right to recover damages in such cases; Chase v. Telegraph Co., 44 Fed. 554, 10 L. R. A. 464; Tyler v. Telegraph Co., 54 Fed. 634; Kester v. Telegraph Co., 55 Fed. 603; Gahan v. Telegraph Co., 59 Fed. 433; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Wood, 57 Fed. 471, 6 C. C. A. 432, 21 L. R. A. 706, where Pardee, J., after discussing the authorities, holds that the weight is against it; and where the mental suffering complained of was not the proximate cause of the injury, this was said to render it unnecessary to consider whether, under a statute giving a right of action for refusal or delay of a telegram, it was held a proper element of damages; Stafford v. Telegraph Co., 73 Fed. 273; Stansell v. Telegraph Co., 107 Fed. 668; Southern Pac. Co. v. Hetzer, 135 Fed. 272, 68 C. C. A. 26, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 288.

It was early settled that substantial damages might be recovered in a class of actions of tort where the only injury suffered is mental, such as cases: Of assault without physical contact; 3 C. & P. 373; Goddard v. Grand Trunk Ry., 57 Me. 202, 2 Am. Rep. 39; for false imprisonment, where the plaintiff has not been touched by the defendant; 6 C. & P. 774; 4 Bing. N. C. 212; Hawk v. Ridgway, 33 Ill. 473; for the mutilation of a husband's body by dissection; Larson v. Chase, 47 Minn. 307, 50 N. W. 238, 14 L. R. A. 85, 28 Am. St. Rep. 370; for wrongful or wanton removal of a child's body from a burial lot; Meagher v. Driscoll, 99 Mass. 281, 96 Am. Dec. 759; for wrongful ejection from a train; Shepard v. R. Co., 77 Ia. 54, 41 N. W. 564; for slander and libel; Terwilliger v. Wands, 17 N. Y. 54, 72 Am. Dec. 420; for malicious prosecution; Fisher v. Hamilton, 49 Ind. 341; where a conductor kissed a woman passenger against her will; Craker v. R. Co., 36 Wis. 657, 17 Am. Rep. 504; in a suit for the alienation of a husband's affections; Nevins v. Nevins, 68 Kan. 410, 75 Pac. 492; for a mother's physical injury resulting from mental suffering caused by the mistreatment of her daughter by a railroad company's employees; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Coopwood (Tex.) 96 S. W. 102; contra, Sanderson v. R. Co., 88 Minn. 162, 92 N. W. 542, 60 L. R. A. 403, 97 Am. St. Rep. 509; abuse of passenger by a carrier's agent; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Taylor, 84 Ark. 42, 104 S. W. 551, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 159; where a conductor wrongfully takes up plaintiff's commutation ticket, following a public altercation with the plaintiff, who was a passenger; Harris v. R. Co., 77 N. J. L. 278, 72 Atl. 50; also where a passenger is wrongfully ejected from a railroad train; Lindsay v. R. Co., 13 Idaho 477, 90 Pac. 984, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 184; but a non-commissioned officer in the Navy, who, in uniform, is refused admission to a dance hall on a ticket bought by him, can recover only the price of the ticket; Buenzle v. Amusement Ass'n, 29 R. I. 23, 68 Atl. 721, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1242; a parent cannot recover damages for mental shock and distress because his minor children have been unlawfully arrested on a charge of malicious mischief; Sperier v. Ott, 116 La. 1087, 41 South. 323, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 518, 114 Am. St. Rep. 587; and parents of a deceased child are not entitled to damages for mental pain caused by the mutilation of the dead body of the child; Long v. R. Co., 15 Okl. 512, 86 Pac. 289, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 883, 6 Ann. Cas. 1005.

So also in cases upon contracts, of which the consideration is not pecuniary in its nature, mental suffering has been treated as a proper basis for damages. Exceptions to the general rule upon this footing are, breach of promise of marriage; Sherman v. Rawson, 102 Mass. 395; Bird v. Thompson, 96 Mo. 424, 9 S. W. 788; Reed v. Clark, 47 Cal. 194; Sauer v. Schulenberg, 33 Md. 288, 3 Am. Rep. 174; breach of an undertaker's contract to keep safely the body of a child; Renihan v. Wright, 125 Ind. 536, 25 N. E. 822, 9 L. R. A. 514, 21 Am. St. Rep. 249; and so also in case of an action by a wife against a railroad company for negligence in transporting her husband's body; Hale v. Bonner, 82 Tex. 33, 17 S. W. 605, 14 L. R. A. 336, 27 Am. St. Rep. 850; and by one arrested for failure to appear as a witness by reason of negligence of a policeman in signing in blank a warrant of arrest containing a false recital of service of subpoena on the witness; Gibney v. Lewis, 68 Conn. 392, 36 Atl. 799; injury to a passenger's feelings caused by insulting language of its employees on the ground of breach of its contract to transport passengers respectfully and courteously; Gillespie v. R. Co., 178 N. Y. 347, 70 N. E. 857, 66 L. R. A. 618, 102 Am. St. Rep. 503; injury to a wife's feelings caused by drunken men using obscene language on a railroad car; Houston E. & W. T. R. Co. v. Perkins, 21 Tex. Civ. App. 508, 52 S. W. 124; breach of contract to transport a corpse; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Hull, 113 Ky. 561, 68 S. W. 433, 57 L. R. A. 771; but where the breach consists in the negligence of the company's agents causing a delay in the funeral arrangements, and there is no wilful or malicious misconduct, damages for mental anguish cannot be recovered; Beaulieu v. R. Co., 103 Minn. 47, 114 N. W. 353, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 564, 14 Ann. Cas. 462; failure to transmit promptly money sent to secure the forwarding of a daughter's corpse; Cumberland Telegraph & Telephone Co. v. Quigley, 129 Ky. 788, 112 S. W. 897, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 575; but a man cannot recover damages for a carrier's delay in delivering baggage to his intended wife which causes the postponement of the wedding; Eller v. Railroad, 140 N. C. 140, 52 S. E. 305, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 225, 6 Ann. Cas. 46.

Mental suffering accompanying physical pain is a subject of compensation; 4 Q. B. Div. 406; Wade v. Leroy, 20 How. (U. S.) 34, 15 L. Ed. 813; Carpenter v. R. Co., 39 Fed. 315; South & N. A. R. Co. v. McLendon, 63 Ala. 266; City & Suburban Ry. v. Findley, 76 Ga. 311; Alexander v. Humber, 86 Ky. 565, 6 S. W. 453; Kendall v. City of Albion, 73 Ia. 241, 34 N. W. 833; Smith v. Holcomb, 99 Mass. 552; Matteson v. R. Co., 62 Barb. (N. Y.) 364; the two cannot be disassociated; Kennon v. Gilmer, 131 U. S. 22, 9 Sup. Ct. 696, 33 L. Ed. 110; Montgomery & E. Ry. Co. v. Mallette, 92 Ala. 210, 9 South. 363. So is fright caused by apprehension of physical harm; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Whitman, 79 Ala. 328; contra, 13 A. C. 222; or nervous shock produced by a false report of a husband's injury; [1897] 2 Q. B. 57; Kendall v. City of Albion, 73 Ia. 241, 34 N. W. 833; but see Spade v. R. Co., 168 Mass. 285, 47 N. E. 88, 38 L. R. A. 512, 60 Am. St. Rep. 393; so loss of peace of mind and happiness; Cox v. Vanderkleed, 21 Ind. 164; sense of insult or indignity, mortification or wounded pride; Quigley v. R. Co., 5 Sawy. 107, Fed. Cas. No. 11,510; Ward v. Blackwood, 48 Ark. 396, 3 S. W. 624; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Whitman, 79 Ala. 328; Pennsylvania R. Co. v.

Connell, 112 Ill. 295, 54 Am. Rep. 238; sense of shame and humiliation; Barbour v. Stephenson, 32 Fed. 66; Hatch v. Fuller, 131 Mass. 574; Simons v. Busby, 119 Ind. 13, 21 N. E. 451; Craker v. Ry. Co., 36 Wis. 657, 17 Am. Rep. 504.

Damages for such injuries need not be specially pleaded, but may be proved under a general allegation of bodily injury; Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Roller, 100 Fed. 738, 41 C. C. A. 22, 49 L. R. A. 77; and likewise damages for humiliation resulting from disfigurement due to the loss of an eye; United States Exp. Co. v. Wahl, 168 Fed. 848, 94 C. C. A. 260; contra, Diamond Rubber Co. v. Harryman, 41 Colo. 415, 92 Pac. 922, where it was held that there could be no damages for a shortening of the plaintiff's leg due to accidental injury.

Fright alone is not, in the absence of personal injury, a ground of recovery; Ewing v. R. Co., 147 Pa. 40, 23 Atl. 340, 14 L. R. A. 666, 30 Am. St. Rep. 709; Johnson v. Wells, Fargo & Co., 6 Nev. 224, 3 Am. Rep. 245; Haile's Curator v. Ry. Co., 60 Fed. 557, 9 C. C. A. 134, 23 L. R. A. 774; Chicago, R. I. & T. Ry. Co. v. Hitt (Tex.) 31 S. W. 1084; Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Roller, 100 Fed. 738, 41 C. C. A. 22, 49 L. R. A. 77; Hess v. Mfg. Co., 221 Pa. 67, 70 Atl. 294; though it produced a miscarriage; Mitchell v. R. Co., 151 N. Y. 107, 45 N. E. 354, 34 L. R. A. 781, 56 Am. St. Rep. 604; contra, Barbee v. Reese, 60 Miss. 906; Oliver v. Town of La Valle, 36 Wis. 596; Hill v. Kimball, 76 Tex. 210, 13 S. W. 59, 7 L. R. A. 618; [1901] 2 K. B. 669, where Mitchell v. R. Co. was criticised and disapproved. See 14 L. R. A. 666, n.

The rule in 13 App. Cas. 222, was that "damages arising from mere sudden terror, unaccompanied by any actual physical injury, but occasioning a nervous or mental shock, cannot be considered a consequence which in the ordinary course would flow from the negligence of the gatekeeper" (who invited the plaintiff and his wife to cross the track when a train was approaching). This was doubted in [1896] 2 Q. B. 248; disapproved in 26 L. R. Ir. 428; and not followed in [1901] 2 K. B. 669. It has been criticised by Pollock, Sedgwick, and Beven.

A wife cannot recover for the death of her husband from shock of an explosion; Huston v. Freemansburg Borough, 212 Pa. 548, 61 Atl. 1022, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 49; physical incapacity for work due to mental excitement and fright is recoverable under a policy of insurance which provides "absolutely for all accidents however caused"; [1896] 2 Q. B. 248.

Even in cases where mental suffering properly enters into the computation of damages, they are not allowed for such as result from mere disappointment; Wilcox v. R. Co., 52 Fed. 264, 3 C. C. A. 73, 8 U. S. App. 118; Hancock v. Telegraph Co., 137 N. C. 497, 49 S. E. 952, 69 L. R. A. 403; contra, Prescott v.

Robinson, 74 N. H. 460, 69 Atl. 522, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 594, 124 Am. St. Rep. 987, where they were allowed for disappointment of an injured mother at the birth of a deformed child; or apprehension of danger to one's family; Wyman v. Leavitt, 71 Me. 227; of the result of injury to a child from negligence; Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Trimble, 8 Tex. Civ. App. 335, 28 S. W. 96.

Where as the result of a slight injury there was a radical impairment of the nervous system and general health, with serious consequences, they were not the ordinary and natural result of the accident but the physical consequences of the fright and no damages could be recovered either for fright or for the physical consequences of it; Hack v. Dady, 134 App. Div. 253, 118 N. Y. Supp. 906.

See MEASURE OF DAMAGES; DEAD BODY; 12 Mich. L. Rev. 149.

MENU, LAWS OF. Institutes of Hindu law, dating back probably three thousand years, though the Hindus believe they were promulgated "in the beginning of time, by Menu, son, or grandson, of Brahma, the first of created beings, and not the oldest only, but the holiest of legislators."

"Such rules of the system as relate to man in his social relations will be found singularly wise and just, and not a few of them embodying the substance of important rules, which regulate the complex system of business in our day." Our knowledge of these laws is derived chiefly from the translation of Sir William Jones, and a translation by A. L. Des Longchamps, 1833. See Maine's Anc. L.; 9 Am. L. Reg. O. S. 717; Code.

MERCANTILE AGENCY. See COMMERCIAL AGENCY; PRIVILEGED COMMUNICATIONS; LIBEL.

MERCANTILE LAW. That branch of law which defines and enforces the rights, duties, and liabilities arising out of mercantile transactions and relations. As to the origin of this branch of law, see LAW MERCHANT; and for its various principles, consult the articles upon the various classes of commercial property, relations, and transactions.

MERCANTILE LAW AMENDMENT ACTS. The statutes 19 & 20 Vict. cc. 60 and 97, passed mainly for the purpose of assimilating the mercantile law of England, Scotland, and Ireland.

MERCATUM (Lat.). A market. Du Cange. A contract of sale. Id. Supplies for an army (commeatus). Id. See Bracton 56; Fleta, l. 4, c. 28, §§ 13, 14.

MERCEN-LAGE. The law of the Mercians. One of the three principal systems of laws which prevailed in England about the beginning of the eleventh century. It was observed in many of the midland counties, and those bordering on the principality of Wales. 1 Bla. Com. 65. See MERCIAN LAW.

MERCES (Lat.). In Civil Law. Reward of labor in money or other things. As distinguished from pensio, it means the rent of farms (prædia rustica). Calvinus, Lex.

MERCHANDISE. A term including all those things which merchants sell, either wholesale or retail: as, dry goods, hardware, groceries, drugs, etc. It is usually applied to personal chattels only, and to those which are not required for food or immediate support, but such as remain after having been used, or which are used only by a slow consumption. See Pardessus, n. 8; Dig. 13, 3, 1; 19, 4, 1; 50, 16, 66; U. S. v. One Hundred Twelve Casks of Sugar, 8 Pet. (U. S.) 277, 8 L. Ed. 944; Sewall v. Allen, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 335.

It may be and often is used as the synonym of "goods," "wares" and "commodities." If used in an insurance policy to describe the goods of a merchant it may very properly be limited to goods intended for sale. If used for the same purpose to describe the goods of a painter, it may be held to cover property intended for use, and not for sale; Hartwell v. Ins. Co., 84 Me. 524, 24 Atl. 954.

Mere evidences of value, as bank-bills, are not merchandise. "The fact that a thing is sometimes bought and sold does not make it merchandise." Story, J., Citizens' Bank v. Steamboat Co., 2 Story 16, Fed. Cas. No. 2,730; 2 Parsons, Contr. 331.

"Goods, wares, merchandise," has been held to embrace animate, as well as inanimate, property, as oxen; Weston v. McDowell, 20 Mich. 353; or horses; U. S. v. One Sorrel Horse, 22 Vt. 655, Fed. Cas. No. 15,953. "Merchandise" may include a curricule; Anth. N. P. 157; or shares in a joint-stock company; Pray v. Mitchell, 60 Me. 430; or horses and trucks; The Garden City, 26 Fed. 766. See Stock.

MERCHANT (Lat. mercator, merx). A man who trafficks or carries on trade with foreign countries, or who exports and imports goods and sells them by wholesale. Webster, Dict.; Lex Mercatoria 23. These are known by the name of shipping-merchants. See Com. Dig. Merchant (A); Dy. 279 b; Bacon, Abr. Merchant.

One whose business it is to buy and sell merchandise: this applies to all persons who habitually trade in merchandise. Thomson v. Hopper, 1 W. & S. (Pa.) 469; 2 Salk. 445.

One who is engaged in the purchase and sale of goods; a trafficker; a trader. Crater v. Deemer, 4 Pa. Co. Ct. Rep. 378.

A person engaged in buying and selling merchandise at a fixed place of business, which business is conducted in his name, and who during the time he claims to be engaged as a merchant does not engage in the performance of any manual labor except such as is necessary in the conduct of his business as such merchant. Tom Hong v.

U. S., 193 U. S. 517, 24 Sup. Ct. 517, 48 L. Ed. 772.

Merchants, in the statute of limitations, means not merely those trading beyond sea, as formerly held; 1 Chanc. Cas. 152; Thomson v. Hopper, 1 W. & S. (Pa.) 469; but whether it includes common retail tradesmen, quære; 4 Scott N. R. 819; 2 Parsons, Contr. 369, 370. See, also, Spring v. Gray, 6 Pet. (U. S.) 151, 8 L. Ed. 352; Anderson v. Com., 9 Bush (Ky.) 569.

The term has been held to include: an ice-dealer; Kansas City v. Vindquest, 36 Mo. App. 584; a hotel-keeper; 12 Duv. 107; a banker; Brown v. Pike, 34 La. Ann. 576; the keeper of a boarding stable; 17 Bankr. Rep. 73; and a saloon-keeper; id. 102; but not a brewer; L. R. 7 Ex. 127; a commercial traveller or drummer; Ex parte Taylor, 58 Miss. 478, 38 Am. Rep. 336; City of Kansas v. Collins, 34 Kan. 434, 8 Pac. 865; the superintendent and treasurer of a steamboat corporation; In re Merritt, 7 Fed. 853; a theatrical manager; In re Duff, 4 Fed. 519; or a speculator in stocks; L. R. 2 Ch. 466; Ex parte Conant, 77 Me. 275, 52 Am. Rep. 759; a farmer; Lansdale v. Brashear, 3 T. B. Monr. (Ky.) 330; a druggist; Anderson v. Com., 9 Bush (Ky.) 569; or the principal of a boarding school who provides the students with clothes and books; State v. Smith, 5 Humph. (Tenn.) 394.

According to an old authority, there were four species of merchants: namely, merchant adventurers, merchants dormant, merchant travellers, and merchant residents; 2 Brownl. 99. See, generally, 9 Salk. 445; Bacon, Abr.; Comyns, Dig.; 1 Bla. Com. 75, 260; 1 Pardessus, Droit Comm. n. 78; 2 Show. 326; Bracton 334.

MERCHANT APPRAISERS. Merchants selected, under the revenue laws, to appraise the value of imports, where the importer is dissatisfied with the official appraisement, and there is no appraiser appointed by law. The collector appoints two respectable resident merchants; R. S. § 2609. Repealed.

MERCHANT SHIPPING ACTS. Certain English statutes, beginning with the 16 & 17 Vict. c. 131, whereby a general superintendence of merchant shipping is vested in the board of trade. Provisions are made for the registration, etc., of merchant ships, the discipline and protection of seamen, the regulation of pilotage, etc.

MERCHANT VESSELS, IMMUNITIES OF. In international law, a merchant vessel in a foreign port is subject to the jurisdiction of the foreign state. In France, however, it is held that acts and offences connected solely with the discipline of the ship are not subject to the local laws; Snow, Int. Law 36.

This immunity from local jurisdiction in matters which do not affect the peace of the port has now come to be the prevailing rule by convention. In the Case of Wildenhuis it was held that a murder committed on board a Belgian steamer moored to a dock in New Jersey affected the peace of the port, and was not subject to consular jurisdiction; 120 U. S. 1, 7 Sup. Ct. 385, 30 L. Ed. 565.

MERCHANTABLE. This word in a contract means, generally, vendible in market. Merchandise is vendible because of its fitness to serve its proper purpose; Wood v. U. S., 11 Ct. Cl. 680; Hamilton v. Ganyard, 34 Barb. (N. Y.) 204, 206. See, generally, Warner v. Ice Co., 74 Me. 475; 2 Q. B. Div. 102; Harris Bros. v. Waite, 51 Vt. 480, 31 Am. Rep. 694; Cullen v. Bimm, 37 Ohio St. 236; Swett v. Shumway, 102 Mass. 365, 3 Am. Rep. 471.

MERCHANTMAN. A ship or vessel employed in the merchant-service.

MERCHANTS' ACCOUNTS. Accounts between merchant and merchant, which must be current, mutual, and unsettled, consisting of debts and credits for merchandise. Fox v. Fisk, 6 How. (Miss.) 328; Spring v. Gray, 6 Pet. (U. S.) 151, 8 L. Ed. 352.

The statutes of limitation in most of the states contain an exception in favor of such accounts, following the stat. 21 Jac. I. c. 16, § 3, which, however, was repealed in England by 19 & 20 Vict. c. 97, § 9, and has not been retained in the latest revised acts of limitation in this country. Whether the exception applied to accounts in which there had been no item for six years, has been the subject of conflicting adjudication, but was settled affirmatively in England, in Robinson v. Alexander, 8 Bligh N. S. 352. See 8 M. & W. 781; Murray v. Coster, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 576, 11 Am. Dec. 333; Bond v. Jay, 7 Cra. (U. S.) 350, 3 L. Ed. 367; Todd v. Rafferty's Adm'rs, 30 N. J. Eq. 254; Ang. Lim. ch. xv.

MERCHANTS OF THE STAPLE. See STATUTE STAPLE; 17 L. Q. R. 56.

MERCHET. A fine or composition paid by inferior tenants to their lord for liberty to dispose of their daughters in marriage. Cowell.

In mediæval law, the fine paid for leave to give a son or daughter in marriage. 3 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 24.

MERCIAN LAW. One of the main bodies of customs (with the Dane law and the West Saxon law and perhaps an admixture of Norman laws and customs) which composed the law in the early Norman days. 1 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 3. See MERCEN-LAGE.

MERCIMONIATUS ANGLIÆ. The impost of England upon merchandise. Cowell.

MERCY (Law Fr. merci; Lat. misericordia). In Practice. The arbitrament or discretion of the king, lord, or judge in punishing offences not directly censured by law. 2 Hen. VI. c. 2; Jacob, Law Dict. So, to be in mercy, signifies to be liable to punishment at the discretion of the judge.

IN CRIMINAL LAW. The total or partial remission of a punishment to which a convict is subject. When the whole punishment is remitted, it is called a pardon; when only a part of the punishment is remitted, it is frequently a conditional pardon; or, before sentence, it is called clemency or mercy. Rutherford. Inst. 224; 1 Kent 265; 3 Story, Const. § 1488.

As to the construction of "mercy" in the exception to the Sunday laws in favor of deeds of necessity and mercy, see 2 Pars. Contr. 262, notes. See IN MERCY.

MERE (Fr.). Mother. This word is frequently used, as, in ventra sa mère, which signifies a child unborn, or in the womb.

MERE MOTION. See EX MERO MOTU.

MERE RIGHT. A right of property without possession. 2 Bla. Com. 197.

MERE-STONE. A stone for bounding land. Yearb. P. 18 Hen. VI. 5.

MERETRICIOUS. Pertaining to unlawful sexual relations. Anderson, L. Dict.

When persons who are under legal disabilities wed it is called a meretricious union. 1 Bla. Com. 436.

MERGER. The absorption of a thing of lesser importance by a greater, whereby the lesser ceases to exist but the greater is not increased.

The annihilation of one estate and its absorption in another by act of law.

The extinction of a security for a debt by the creditor's acquisition either of a higher security, or of the corpus of the property upon which his debt is a lien or charge.

Merger is distinguished from surrender and extinguishment, though in its effects not unlike both. "Strictly speaking" it has been said that it "should be confined to the sinking of one estate in another, or, at most, it should embrace, in addition, the extinction of an incorporeal hereditament through the union of its ownership with that of the land, in, over, or upon which it is exercisable." Ordinarily, however, the Roman doctrine of confusio, which we call extinguishment of a charge or equity, is also denominated merger, and, being governed by the same rules, it is here, and indeed generally, discussed under that title. See 3 Sharsw. & Budd L. Cas. R. P. 228.

Of Estates. When a greater estate and less coincide and meet in one and the same person, without any intermediate estate, the less is immediately merged, that is, sunk or drowned, in the latter; but they must be in one and the same person, at one and the same time, in one and the same right; 2 Bla. Com., Sharsw. ed. 177; 6 Madd. 119; Nicholson v. Halsey, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 417; Lockwood v. Sturdevant, 6 Conn. 373. But see 3 Prest. Conv. 277. See, also,

The estate in which the merger takes place is not enlarged by the accession of the preceding estate, and the greater or only subsisting estate continues, after the merger, precisely of the same quantity and extent of ownership as it was before the accession of the estate which is merged, and the lesser estate is extinguished; Prest. Conv. 7; Wash. R. P. As a general rule, equal estates will not merge in each other.

The merger is produced either from the meeting of an estate of higher degree with an estate of inferior degree or from the meeting of the particular estate and the immediate reversion in the same person; 4 Kent 98. See Wash. R. P. Index; 3 Prest. Conv.; 15 Viner, Abr. 361; Pratt v. Bank, 10 Vt. 293, 33 Am. Dec. 201; Moore v. Bank, 8 Watts (Pa.) 146. A merger takes place only when the whole title, equitable as well as legal, unites in the same person; Jordon v. Cheney, 74 Me. 362.

Merger is held to have taken place in the following cases: An antecedent life estate purchased by the owner of a consequent life estate limited on the former; Boykin v. Annum, 28 S. C. 486, 6 S. E. 305, 13 Am. St. Rep. 698; life estate of the husband in the fee of the wife, both bought by the same person; Shelton v. Hadlock, 62 Conn. 143, 25 Atl. 483; life estate under a will, in remainder in fee, devolved upon the life-tenant by the death of her child, the tenant in remainder; Harrison v. Moore, 64 Conn. 344, 30 Atl. 55; where a tenant acquires the interest of the landlord, in which case the former cannot recover for breach of contract of the latter to repair; McMahan v. Jacoway, 105 Ala. 585, 17 South. 39; where the tenant for life acquires the fee; Jenkins v. Artz, 6 Ohio Dec. 439; estate by the curtesy released to the owner of the fee; Lineberger v. Newkirk, 179 Pa. 117, 36 Atl. 193. Where a lease for years and an equity of redemption come into the same hands, the legal estate may merge in the equitable, if the parties so intended; Hudson Bros. Commission Co. v. Sand & Gravel Co., 140 Mo. 103, 41 S. W. 450, 62 Am. St. Rep. 722; contra, Little v. Ott, 3 Cra. C. C. 416, Fed. Cas. No. 8,389.

There has been held to be no merger in the following cases: where the tenant in tail acquires the reversion in fee; 2 Co. 61; Lockwood v. Sturdevant, 6 Conn. 373; a trust estate for life of testator's daughter, undisposed of after her death, in her fee by inheritance; Martin v. Pine, 79 Hun 426, 29 N. Y. Supp. 995; where the co-tenant for years is also the owner of the reversion, there is no merger so as to prevent a separate partition of the leasehold interest; Jameson v. Hayward, 106 Cal. 682, 39 Pac. 1078, 46 Am. St. Rep. 268; where a landlord purchases improvements on property on which the lessee has forfeited his lease, it does not merge so as to entitle the holder of a mechanic's lien against the leasehold to enforce it against the fee; Masow v. Fife, 10 Wash. 528, 39 Pac. 140; a conveyance in fee to husband and wife by entirety was held not to merge in an estate for life already vested in one of them; Bomar v. Mullins, 4 Rich. Eq. (S. C.) 80; Co. Litt. 299 b; Litt. 525; contra, 2 Saund. 386 b. A life estate of the father by a conveyance to a trustee for ninety-nine years to secure payment of charges covenanted to be paid by the son, the succeeding tenant for life; 76 L. T. Rep. 489. Unassigned "dower" of husband in his wife's estate does not merge in the inheritance unless required for the promotion of justice; Moore's Adm'r v. Moore, 6 Ohio Dec. 154.

Under the English judicature act of 1873, a life estate in possession conveyed to the next tenant for life in trust to pay a rent charge, and, subject thereto, to the use of the grantee in fee, does not merge the estate per auter vie, it being apparent that no merger was intended; [1892] 3 Ch. 110. See 30 L. R. A. 313 n.

Merger is not favored in equity and is only allowed to promote the intention of parties or for other special reason; McLaughlin v. McLaughlin, 80 Md. 115, 30 Atl. 607; Chase v. Van Meter, 140 Ind. 321, 39 N. E. 455; Hoffman v. Wilhelm, 68 Ia. 512, 27 N. W. 483; 4 Kent 102; 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 788; Jones, Mort. 870; the intention actual or presumed is the criterion; 18 Ves. 390; if no intention is expressed, equity will examine the circumstances and presume an intention in accordance with the advantage to the acquirer of the two estates; 32 Beav. 244; Dodge v. Hogan, 19 R. I. 4, 31 Atl. 268, 1059; and wherever the legal and equitable estates are united in one owner, so long as his interest requires severance, he will be regarded as holding the titles separately; Jones, Mort. § 873. And equity will not permit a merger in the case of an easement as against the interest of a third party, with the interest of a mortgagee; Duval v. Becker, 81 Md. 537, 32 Atl. 308.

One equity will not swallow up another, hence several equitable claims may be acquired by one person without merger, which will take place when the legal title is acquired because the reason for their existence is then terminated; Chase v. Van Meter, 140 Ind. 321, 39 N. E. 455.

Merger will not be permitted, and it may be prevented, in equity, where it would operate to assist or accomplish the perpetration of a fraud; Miller v. Whelan, 158 Ill. 544, 42 N. E. 59; 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 794; and a merger brought about by a fraudulent deed is destroyed when the deed is set aside; Malloney v. Horan, 49 N. Y. 111, 10 Am. Rep. 335; First Nat. Bank of Lebanon v. Essex, 84 Ind. 144.

Where a greater and lesser estate unite in the same person, the lesser estate merges in the greater; Turk v. Skiles, 45 W. Va. 82, 30 S. E. 234. Where one having equitable claims against land acquires the legal title to the land, they are merged in the legal title if there be no reason for keeping them alive; Chase v. Van Meter, 140 Ind. 321, 39 N. E. 455. It is a question of intention; if, from all the circumstances, a merger would be disadvantageous to the party, then his intention against merger would be presumed; Swatts v. Bowen, 141 Ind. 322, 40 N. E. 1057. The intervention of another incumbrance or title that would prejudice the interest of the holder of the older equitable title will prevent a merger; Hayden v. Lauffenburger, 157 Mo. 88, 57 S. W. 721.

In Louisiana one who has once acquired ownership of a thing by one title cannot afterwards acquire it by another title, unless it be to supply a deficiency in the first title; Civ. Code 495; and in other states there are statutes designed to prevent or modify the effects of merger upon third parties. They are collected in 1 Stims. Am. Stat. L. § 1403.

See a note in 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 433 on the merger by the union of a life estate and a remote remainder in the same person.

Trusts. Where the same person is, under a will, both trustee and a beneficiary, such person takes the legal estate; Tuck v. Knapp, 42 Misc. 140, 85 N. Y. Supp. 1001; so where there was a gift of property to trustees to be conveyed to a city to maintain a public library, it was held that the city took a fee; Danforth v. Oshkosh, 119 Wis. 262, 97 N. W. 258; merger takes place only when the trustee is the sole beneficiary; Robb v. College, 185 N. Y. 485, 78 N. E. 359; where land was devised for the purpose of a sale and a division of the proceeds among the trustees and others, the trustees took a joint title and the trust was not merged; Burbach v. Burbach, 217 Ill. 547, 75 N. E. 519; where the will created a spendthrift trust for sons for life and the remainder came to them because a gift to a charity had failed, it was held there was no merger of the spendthrift trust; In re Moore's Estate, 198 Pa. 611, 48 Atl. 884.

Judgments. A judgment on a cause of action merges the cause of action and extinguishes it; Price v. Bank, 62 Kan. 735, 64 Pac. 637, 84 Am. St. Rep. 419; Ward v. Johnson, 13 Mass. 148; Davis v. Sanders, 25 App. D. C. 26. An action will not lie in a state on a cause of action which has been merged into a judgment in another state; Henderson v. Staniford, 105 Mass. 504, 7 Am. Rep. 551; Gray v. Richman Bicycle Co., 167 N. Y. 348, 60 N. E. 663, 82 Am. St. Rep. 720; Nelson v. R. Co., 88 Va. 971, 14 S. E. 838, 15 L. R. A. 583.

The lien of a judgment on land does not merge in the title thereto afterwards acquired by the judgment creditor under proceedings upon another judgment, unless such is the express intention of the purchaser, where his interests require such lien to be kept alive; Sellers v. Floyd, 24 Colo. 484, 52 Pac. 674; proceedings on a judgment brought in another state for the purpose of sharing with other creditors under a general assignment made there by the judgment later; Wells v. Bank, 23 Colo. 534, 48 Pac. 809; or for the purpose of sharing against a decedent's estate in another jurisdiction; In re Wiley's Estate, 138 Cal. 301, 71 Pac. 441; do not merge the rights of the original judgment creditor. The presentation and establishment of a judgment as a claim against a decedent's estate does not merge its lien on the decedent's land; Hardin v. Melton, 28 S. C. 38, 4 S. E. 805, 9 S. E. 423.

The mere recovery of a judgment in an action on a judgment in another state does not merge the first judgment; Armour Bros. Banking Co. v. Addington, 1 Ind. T. 304, 37 S. W. 100; but a second judgment on the same debt in the same jurisdiction, though for less than the first, extinguishes the first judgment; Price v. Bank, 62 Kan. 735, 64 Pac. 637, 84 Am. St. Rep. 419; and where two judgments of the same purport are rendered in the same case at the same time it will be presumed that the first merged in the second; Johnson v. Hesser, 61 Neb. 631, 85 N. W. 894.

Of Mortgages and Other Liens. The merger of liens is subject to the rule of intention as well as such other general principles, already stated, as are applicable. And it is also to be noted that while separate reference is here made to some classes of liens, the same rules are in the main applicable to all, though usually, for the sake of brevity, only once mentioned. Generally where a lien holder acquires the legal title to the land subject to his lien, and there is no contrary intention expressed or implied, or other circumstance requiring it to be kept alive, the latter is merged; Watson v. Gardner, 119 Ill. 312, 10 N. E. 192; Patterson v. Mills, 69 Ia. 755, 28 N. W. 53; Lynch v. Pfeiffer, 110 N. Y. 33, 17 N. E. 402; and the merger cannot be prevented by an assignment of the incumbrance directly to the owner or for his benefit; Crafts v. Crafts, 13 Gray (Mass.) 360; Swift v. Kraemer, 13 Cal. 526, 73 Am. Dec. 603; Robinson v. Urquhart, 12 N. J. Eq. 515; Com. of Virginia v. State, 32 Md. 501.

There is no merger where the mortgagee acquires an incomplete equitable title, or only to a portion of the land; Chase v. Van Meter, 140 Ind. 321, 39 N. E. 455; or where he purchases the equity of redemption and by consent of the mortgagor retains the mortgage to cut out subsequent liens by foreclosure; Gibbs v. Johnson, 104 Mich. 120, 62 N. W. 145. A purchase by a partner of partnership land sold under a mortgage assumed by the firm operates to satisfy the mortgage; Freeman v. Moffitt, 119 Mo. 280, 25 S. W. 87. A conveyance by a mortgagor to a mortgagee creates no merger as against the assignee of the mortgage; Curtis v. Moore, 152 N. Y. 159, 46 N. E. 168, 57 Am. St. Rep. 506.

See as to mortgages, Lawson, Rights & Rem. § 3052; 3 Sharsw. & Budd L. Cas. R. P. 245.

The merger of mortgage liens with a fee, both being united in the same person, is a question of intention and will not be implied where there is an intervening claim and when the mortgagee's interests require that the lien should be preserved; Anglo-Californian Bank v. Field, 146 Cal. 644, 80 Pac. 1080; whether there is a merger in equity, when a note and a trust deed securing it comes into the ownership of the owner of the fee of the lands, depends largely upon the intention of the parties and the circumstances; if the party does any act which clearly shows that he regards the lien as still subsisting, it is strong, even if not conclusive, evidence of an intent that there should be no merger; Security Title & Trust Co. v. Schlender, 190 Ill. 609, 60 N. E. 854.

Where a person owning land has a mortgage lien thereon, there must be an intention to prevent a merger and in the absence of such an intention a merger will be presumed; Hester v. Frary, 99 Ill. App. 51; and one purchasing land subsequent to the acquisition by the vendor of an outstanding mortgage thereon has the right to assume that the mortgage had merged; Artz v. Yeager, 30 Ind. App. 677, 66 N. E. 917. The owner of mortgaged land, selling subject to the mortgage, and remaining personally liable for the debt, may take an assignment of the mortgage and foreclose to protect himself; Pratt v. Buckley, 175 Mass. 115, 55 N. E. 889.

The purchase of a prior mortgage may work a satisfaction thereof and not an extinguishment of the debt, though the prior mortgage did not cover all the land covered by the junior mortgage; Moore v. Olive, 114 Ia. 650, 87 N. W. 720. Where the purchaser of mortgaged land pays a mortgage debt and takes an assignment to his wife for the purpose of protecting his title, the mortgage is not merged; Betts v. Betts, 9 App. Div. 210, 41 N. Y. Supp. 285, affirmed 159 N. Y. 547, 54 N. E. 1089. Where bonds and mortgages are executed by a husband and wife and afterwards bought in by the husband, they are a lien in the hands of his executors for only one-half the sum secured by them; Miller v. Miller, 22 Misc. 582, 49 N. Y. Supp. 407; and where the owner of a one-third interest in land takes up an incumbrance on the same, it is merged as to his third; Singleton v. Singleton, 60 S. C. 216, 38 S. E. 462.

The question of merger is one which arises frequently, especially in England, with respect to charges. There is a presumption that when the ownership of the fee and of the charge meet, the latter is merged; 18 Ves. 390; if it is of no advantage to the owner to have it kept alive; 10 Hare 79; 29 Beav. 203; or unless he is a limited owner; 7 id. 232; if a charge is paid off by a limited owner, with no expression of intention, he retains the benefit of it against the inheritance; 5 Ch. D. 645; a tenant in tail is not excepted because it is in his power to become absolute owner; 2 S. & S. 345. It results from the rule of intention that in case of an infant tenant in tail there is no merger, as a person not sui juris is not presumed to intend it; 24 Beav. 457; James v. Morey, 2 Cow. (N. Y.) 246, 14 Am. Dec. 475. A charge on land of a husband in favor of his wife and her heirs did not merge in the fee which she took by a devise from the husband, recognizing the charge, to her in trust for her son for life; Hasbrouck v. Angevine, 49 Hun 608, 1 N. Y. Supp. 789; nor did one created by a testatrix in favor of her children on land devised to their father merge on the fee inherited by the children from the father; Dodge v. Hogan, 19 R. I. 4, 31 Atl. 268, 1059.

A mechanic's lien is merged in a conveyance of the land to the lien holder; Simpson, Hartwell & Stopple v. Masterson (Tex.) 31 S. W. 419; but not in a judgment for the debt; Marean v. Stanley, 5 Colo. App. 335, 38 Pac. 395; Williamson v. Cline, 40 W. Va. 194, 20 S. E. 917; nor by purchase of the property under circumstances from which a contrary intention would be presumed; Blatchford v. Blanchard, 160 Ill. 115, 43 N. E. 794. Such merger discharges a guarantor of the lien which it destroys; McDonald v. Magirl, 97 Ia. 677, 66 N. W. 904; or a surety for its payment; 77 L. T. Rep. 168. A mechanic's lien assigned to one who took a mortgage on the property affected, the consideration of which was used in the purchase of the lien, did not merge, since it did not appear to be the intention of the parties or required by justice; Henry & Coatsworth Co. v. Fisherdict, 37 Neb. 207, 55 N. W. 643.

If two foreclosure decrees rendered in the same action on different obligations in favor of different persons, become the property of one person, neither will merge; Matless v. Sundin, 94 Ia. 111, 62 N. W. 662.

Of Negotiations in Contracts. Oral agreements, proposals, or negotiations by letter merge in a subsequent written contract respecting the same subject-matter; McKinley v. Williams, 74 Fed. 94, 20 C. C. A. 312, 36 U. S. App. 749; McCrary Bros. v. Trust Co., 97 Tenn. 469, 37 S. W. 543; Graham v. Sadlier, 165 Ill. 95, 46 N. E. 221; Megrath v. Gilmore, 10 Wash. 339, 39 Pac. 131; Hurst v. Coke Co., 86 Hun 189, 33 N. Y. Supp. 313; Hutchinson v. Holmes Sanitarium, 93 Wis. 23, 66 N. W. 700; so a written option to sell land is merged in the subsequent contract of sale; Copp v. Longstreet, 5 Colo. App. 282, 38 Pac. 601; and the seller of chattels is not liable for any breach of warranties not contained in the written contract; Wilson v. Cattle-Ranch Co., 73 Fed. 994, 20 C. C. A. 241; but this rule does not apply to a collateral agreement upon which the instrument is silent, not affecting its terms; Savings Bank of Southern California v. Asbury, 117 Cal. 96, 48 Pac. 1081. A bank check is a contract in the sense that it merges all previous transactions leading up to it; American Emigrant Co. v. Clark, 47 Ia. 671; so is a note; Miller v. Miller, 4 Pa. 317; a charter party; Renard v. Sampson, 12 N. Y. 561; a bond of one party to a joint contract debt; Settle v. Davidson & Saunders; 7 Mo. 604.

Generally the provisions of a contract of sale are merged in a deed made in execution thereof; West Boundary Real Estate Co. v. Bayles, 80 Md. 495, 31 Atl. 442; but not so as to prevent the enforcement in equity of a clause in the contract not inserted in the deed; Langdon v. People, 133 Ill. 385, 24 N. E. 874; or where the contract is for the sale of two distinct properties and the conveyance only of one; Lulay v. Barnes, 172 Pa. 331, 34 Atl. 52; see Clifton v. Iron Co., 74 Mich. 183, 41 N. W. 891, 16 Am. St. Rep. 621; but the mere absence from the deed of a provision contained in a contract does not necessarily operate to continue the latter; 26 Can. S. C. 181. A covenant in the contract to deliver possession to the purchaser is not merged in the covenants of title of the deed; German-American Real Estate Co. v. Starke, 84 Hun 430, 32 N. Y. Supp. 403. A parol agreement between father and son that the latter shall have the property after his parents' death, in consideration of help in carrying on the farm, does not merge as to the undivided half part not conveyed by a subsequent conveyance from the father to the son of an undivided half part of the property made in contemplation of the remarriage of the father; Pike v. Pike, 69 Vt. 535, 38 Atl. 265.

A specialty taken for a simple contract debt merges it; Williamson v. Cline, 40 W. Va. 194, 20 S. E. 917. A new contract with respect to the subject-matter of a former one, and which appears to be supplementary, does not merge the former; Uhlig v. Burnum, 43 Neb. 584, 61 N. W. 749. A note is not merged in a judgment note taken as additional security; Witz v. Fite, 91 Va. 446, 22 S. E. 171. See 7 Wait, Act. & Def. 320. As to merger of the original cause of action in a judgment recovered upon it, see JUDGMENT.

In Criminal Law. When a greater crime includes a lesser, the latter is merged in the former; 1 East, P. C. 411; State v. Durham, 72 N. C. 447; 1 Bish. N. Cr. L. § 786; People v. McKane, 7 Misc. 478, 28 N. Y. Supp. 397. Murder, when committed by blows, necessarily includes an assault and battery; a battery, an assault; a burglary, when accompanied with a felonious taking of personal property, a larceny: in all these and similar cases, the lesser crime is merged in the greater.

Merger of crimes exists only when a misdemeanor is an ingredient of a felony; formerly there was a distinct merger and the trial must be for the felony, but this is no longer, as a general rule; the misdemeanor and the felony must now be a constituent part of the same act in order that acquittal of the latter may be pleaded in bar of prosecution for the former; 1 Whart. Cr. L., 9th ed. §§ 270, 395; 1 Bish. N. Cr. L. § 804; the essential result is thus expressed: "The same act cannot be punishable both as a felony and as a misdemeanor;" 1 McClain, Cr. L. § 22. In many, probably most, of the states, under an indictment for certain felonies, which include a misdemeanor, there may be conviction of the latter. "When two crimes are of equal grade there can be no technical merger;" as, in the case of a conspiracy to commit a misdemeanor, and the subsequent commission of the misdemeanor in pursuance of the conspiracy; the two crimes being of equal degree, there can be no legal merger; People v. Mather, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 265, 21 Am. Dec. 122; Johnson v. State, 26 N. J. L. 313; State v. Mayberry, 48 Me. 218; Hamilton v. State, 36 Ind. 280, 10 Am. Rep. 22.

The most frequent application of the principle of merger of crimes is in the common law rule which was generally followed in this country (subject to the exception just stated) that a conspiracy to commit a felony is merged in the latter, if it be accomplished; Com. v. Kingsbury, 5 Mass. 106; 5 Am. St. Rep. 900, note; if the felony is not in fact committed, there is no merger, and there may be a conviction of the conspiracy; Elkin v. People, 28 N. Y. 177; but when the crime is a misdemeanor at common law and a felony by statute, there is still a merger; People v. Fish, 4 Park. Cr. Cas. (N. Y.) 206. It is said that "the weight of the more recent cases" is that the conspiracy is not merged even if the crime intended be a felony; 2 McClain, Cr. L. § 979; and this view is strongly supported; U. S. v. Gardner, 42 Fed. 829; People v. Petheram, 64 Mich. 252, 31 N. W. 188; State v. Wilson, 30 Conn. 500; State v. Grant, 86 Ia. 216, 53 N. W. 120; and is expressly held in England; 11 Q. B. 929; 12 Cox, C. C. 87.

It has been held that where one in an effort to commit a misdemeanor does some act which is itself a felony, he can be punished only for the latter; 2 Moo. & R. 469; 5 C. & P. 553; but in referring to a case which precisely illustrates this point, where one seeking to obtain goods by false pretences, which is a misdemeanor, commits a forgery, which is a felony, Lord Denman considered that an acquittal of the latter ought to be no bar to an indictment for the former; 11 Q. B. 946. See U. S. v. Rindskopf, 6 Biss. 259, Fed. Cas. No. 16,165.

Of Rights. Rights are said to be merged when the same person who is bound to pay is also entitled to receive. This is more properly called a confusion of rights, or extinguishment.

When there is a confusion of rights, and the debtor and creditor become the same person, as by marriage, there can be no right to put in execution; but there is an immediate merger; 2 Ves. 264.

Of Torts in Crimes. Where a person in committing a felony also commits a tort against a private person, in this case the wrong is sunk in the felony, at least until after the felon's conviction.

The old rule, that a trespass is merged in a felony, has sometimes been supposed to mean that there is no redress by civil action for an injury which amounts to a felony. But it is now established that the defendant is liable to the party injured either after his conviction; W. Jones 147; 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 546; or acquittal; 12 East 409; Smith v. Weaver, 1 N. C. 141. If the civil action be commenced before, the plaintiff will be nonsuited; Yelv. 90 a, n. See Ham. N. P. 63; Cas. temp. Hardw. 350; Lofft 88; Foster v. Tucker, 3 Greenl. (Me.) 458, 14 Am. Dec. 243. Buller, J., says this doctrine is not extended beyond actions of trespass or tort; 4 Term 333. See, also, 1 H. Bla. 583, 588, 594; Boston & W. R. Corp. v. Dana, 1 Gray (Mass.) 88, 100.

This doctrine doubtless had its origin in the English system of relying on private prosecutors and forfeiture of felons' goods; but it has been repudiated in this country, and the civil remedy and the criminal prosecution go side by side, and neither has any dependence upon the other; Williams v. Dickenson, 28 Fla. 96, 9 South. 847; Gray v. McDonald, 104 Mo. 303, 16 S. W. 398; Howk v. Minnick, 19 Ohio St. 462, 2 Am. Rep. 413; Newell v. Cowan, 30 Miss. 492; Pettingill v. Rideout, 6 N. H. 454, 25 Am. Dec. 473; Blassingame v. Graves, 6 B. Monr. (Ky.) 38; Heller v. City of Alvarado, 1 Tex. Civ. App. 409, 20 S. W. 1003. Even in England it is said that "so much doubt has been thrown upon the supposed rule in recent cases that it seems, if not altogether exploded, to be only awaiting a decisive abrogation." Poll. Torts 235. In Mairs v. R. Co., 175 N. Y. 409, 67 N. E. 901, it was held that where a statute constitutes a given act a felony and attaches a punishment thereto, an offense against the statute cannot be made the basis of a suit or action.

See, generally, as to this common law doctrine in the United States: Bell's Adm'r v. Troy, 35 Ala. 184; Boardman v. Gore, 15 Mass. 336; Hoffman v. Carow, 22 Wend. (N. Y.) 285; Patton v. Freeman, 1 N. J. L. 115;

Mitchell v. Mims, 8 Tex. 6; Manro v. Almeida, 10 Wheat. (U. S.) 473, 6 L. Ed. 369.

In some states, as New York, it is provided that the right of action of any person injured by any felony shall not, in any case, be merged in such felony, or be in any manner affected thereby.

Easements. To extinguish an easement by the unity of title and possession of both the dominant and servient tenements, the estates thus united must be respectively equal in duration and not liable to be again disjoined by the act of law; Curtis v. Francis, 9 Cush. (Mass.) 457.

All easements, whether of convenience or necessity, are extinguished by unity of possession, but, upon a subsequent severance, those of necessity are created anew; Grant v. Chase, 17 Mass. 443, 9 Am. Dec. 161.

Of Corporations. Actual corporate union is usually called consolidation in America and amalgamation in England. Railroad corporations are more commonly the subject of such consolidation.

Consolidation requires legislative authority or consent; Lauman v. R. Co., 30 Pa. 44, 72 Am. Dec. 685; Frazier v. Ry. Co., 88 Tenn. 138, 12 S. W. 537; State v. Bailey, 16 Ind. 46, 79 Am. Dec. 405. Statutes exist in most, if not all, of the states, for this purpose. Many of them are abstracted in 1 Thomp. Corp. § 305. The state has the same power to authorize a consolidation of two existing corporations as it has to authorize individuals to incorporate; State Treasurer v. Auditor General, 46 Mich. 224, 9 S. W. 258.

A permit given in a charter of a railroad company to connect or unite with other roads, refers merely to physical connection of the tracks and does not authorize the purchase or even the lease of such roads or any union of franchises; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Kentucky, 161 U. S. 677, 16 Sup. Ct. 714, 40 L. Ed. 849.

Where the charters of the constituent companies or some statute to which the charters are subject do not provide otherwise, the consent of all stockholders is required; Mowrey v. R. Co., 4 Biss. 78, Fed. Cas. No. 9,891; Blatchford v. Ross, 54 Barb. (N. Y.) 42; a state legislature cannot ordinarily compel a stockholder to transfer his stock because the majority have voted to consolidate; Clearwater v. Meredith, 1 Wall. (U. S.) 25, 17 L. Ed. 604; but it has been held that the legislature may, when public necessity requires it, grant authority to consolidate existing connected railways, if it provide just compensation for dissenting stockholders; Black v. Canal Co., 24 N. J. Eq. 455. Where statutes existed before a consolidating company was chartered, or one is passed which is binding upon it, provisions in such statutes authorizing consolidation by the vote of a certain proportion of stockholders are binding upon a dissenting minority; such statutes commonly provide for the purchase of dissenting stock by a sale or on an appraisal. If there be no such statute or charter provision, a stockholder is not bound to consent to consolidation, nor to surrender his interest in the original corporation; 1 Thomp. Corp. § 343.

Equity will enjoin a consolidation at the suit of a dissenting stockholder, in cases where he is not bound by the action of the majority; Mowrey v. R. Co., 4 Biss. 78, Fed. Cas. No. 9,891; it has been held that an injunction will be continued only till the dissenting stockholder's interest has been secured; Lauman v. R. Co., 30 Pa. 42, 72 Am. Dec. 685; State v. Bailey, 16 Ind. 46, 79 Am. Dec. 405, a dictum. These two cases are criticised in Mowrey v. R. Co., 4 Biss. 78, Fed. Cas. No. 9,891, and their doctrine disapproved in 1 Thomp. Corp. § 351. A stockholder's subscription in case of such a consolidation is held to be released; Mowrey v. R. Co., 4 Biss. 78, Fed. Cas. No. 9,891.

After consolidation has been effected and a de facto corporation formed, only the state can attack the charter; Chicago, K. & W. R. Co. v. Board of Com'rs of Stafford County, 36 Kan. 121, 12 Pac. 593; especially if the new company has acted as a corporation for a considerable time; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Board of Com'rs of Sumner County, 51 Kan. 617, 33 Pac. 312.

The legal effect of consolidation is to extinguish the constituent companies and create a new corporation, with all the property, liabilities, and stockholders of the old companies; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Berry, 41 Ark. 509; Meyer v. Johnston, 64 Ala. 603; State v. Bailey, 16 Ind. 46, 79 Am. Dec. 405; Ohio & M. R. Co. v. People, 123 Ill. 467, 14 N. E. 874; and all their franchises, ordinarily; id. It is said that in consolidation, both the companies go out of existence, and a new company is created; in merger one absorbs the other and remains in existence; Lee v. R. Co., 150 Fed. 775; to the same effect, see Vicksburg & Yazoo City Tel. Co. v. Telephone Co., 79 Miss. 341, 30 South. 725, 89 Am. St. Rep. 656; but this distinction is not always observed. When two companies agree to consolidate their stock, upon new certificates, take a new name, elect a new board, and the old companies cease their functions, it is a new corporation; Yazoo & M. V. Ry. Co. v. Adams, 180 U. S. 1, 21 Sup. Ct. 240, 45 L. Ed. 395. The general effect of consolidation is to create a new corporation; Atlantic & G. R. Co. v. Georgia, 98 U. S. 359, 25 L. Ed. 185.

When two or more corporations, created in different states, consolidated into one, the component parts bring to the new corporation the powers possessed by each and the consolidated company exercises in each state only those powers which the constituent part formerly exercised there; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Auditor General, 53 Mich. 79, 18 N. W. 586.

A new corporation formed by the consolidation of two railroad corporations whose existence is thereby extinguished comes into existence precisely as though it had been organized under a charter created at the date of consolidation; Adams v. R. Co., 77 Miss. 194, 24 South. 200, 317, 28 South. 956, 60 L. R. A. 33.

Consolidation is not sale, and when two companies are authorized to consolidate their roads, it is to be presumed that the franchises and privileges of each continue to exist in respect to the several roads so consolidated; Greene County v. Conness, 109 U. S. 106, 3 Sup. Ct. 69, 27 L. Ed. 872; Branch v. Charleston, 92 U. S. 677, 23 L. Ed. 750; the respective roads and properties of two railroad companies which have been consolidated, retain their respective status towards the public and the state; id. Some cases appear to hold that the old companies continue to exist. See Powell v. R. Co., 42 Mo. 63; Day v. R. Co., 151 Mass. 302, 23 N. E. 824 (where the statute so required). It is said in a leading case that "consolidation" has not acquired a recognized judicial construction; it may mean a union by which the old companies cease to exist, or the absorption of one by the other, the former thus securing enlarged powers. Where a statute merely authorizes consolidation upon terms to be agreed upon by the companies, the character of the consolidation is determined by the agreement; Meyer v. Johnston, 64 Ala. 603.

Where a railroad consolidated with a smaller road, it was held that the former preserved its legal, though not its actual, identity, and that the latter and all its members passed into the former and became members thereof; Lauman v. R. Co., 30 Pa. 45, 72 Am. Dec. 685. The old companies are not of necessity dissolved; it depends upon the language of the statute; Central R. & Banking Co. v. Georgia, 92 U. S. 665, 676, 23 L. Ed. 757.

Technically, the consolidated company is a new corporation, but as regards the business of the old companies and their respective creditors, it is a continuation of the old companies under a new name; Kinion v. Ry. Co., 39 Mo. App. 574. The new company is bound to perform the duties of the old companies; Peoria & Rock I. R. Co. v. Mining Co., 68 Ill. 489; it usually has the powers of both of its constituents; Robertson v. City of Rockford, 21 Ill. 451. "As a general rule, the new company succeeds to the rights, duties, obligations, and liabilities of each of the precedent companies, whether arising ex contractu or ex delicto. The charter powers, privileges, and immunities of the corporations pass to and become vested in the consolidated company," unless otherwise provided by law; 1 Thomp. Corp. § 365. See Thompson v. Abbott, 61 Mo. 176.

But it has been held that the powers, etc., of the new company are no greater than those of the constituent company having the fewest privileges; State v. R. Co., 66 Me. 488; a difficult rule to apply.

The new corporation as an incident of consolidation assumes the debts and liabilities of the constituent companies, and is not an innocent purchaser for value of the property of those companies so as to protect it from liability for taxation; Bloxham v. R. Co., 35 Fla. 625, 17 South. 902.

Where two railroads are consolidated, one of them having a right to exemption from taxes, and the old company being extinguished, its right of exemption does not pass to the new company; Keokuk & W. R. Co. v. Missouri, 152 U. S. 301, 14 Sup. Ct. 592, 38 L. Ed. 450; nor the right to any other governmental exemption; Rochester Ry. Co. v. Rochester, 205 U. S. 236, 254, 27 Sup. Ct. 469, 51 L. Ed. 784. Where a railroad company, possessing certain immunity from taxation not subject to repeal, merged with corporations whose charters were subject to alteration and repeal, the immunity of the former company is subject to such alteration; Northern Cent. Ry. Co. v. Maryland, 187 U. S. 258, 23 Sup. Ct. 62, 47 L. Ed. 167.

Upon the consolidation of water companies, the franchises of the consolidated corporations must be determined by the general law as it existed at the time of the consolidation; held in this case that a new company did not succeed to the right of the original company of excluding the city from erecting its own plant; Shaw v. City of Covington, 194 U. S. 593, 24 Sup. Ct. 754, 48 L. Ed. 1131. Special statutory exemptions do not pass to the new corporation in the absence of express direction to that effect in the statute; People's Gas Light & Coke Co. v. Chicago, 194 U. S. 1, 24 Sup. Ct. 520, 48 L. Ed. 851.

Although two corporations may be so united by one holding the stock and franchises of the other that the latter may continue to exist and also to hold an exemption under legislative contract, that is not the case where its stock is exchanged for that of the former by operation of law and it is left without stock, officers, property or franchises; but under such circumstances it is dissolved; Rochester Ry. Co. v. Rochester, 205 U. S. 236, 27 Sup. Ct. 469, 51 L. Ed. 784.

The legislature cannot increase the taxes of the exempt company after consolidation, but may tax that of the other precedent company; and where a taxable corporation is merged into an exempt company, the property of the former is taxable; Central R. & Banking Co. v. Georgia, 92 U. S. 665, 23 L. Ed. 757; Tennessee v. Whitworth, 117 U. S. 139, 6 Sup. Ct. 645, 29 L. Ed. 830. It is held that where an exempt company and a taxable company consolidate, the property of each will continue as it was before, in relation to taxation; State v. R. Co., 99 Mo.

30, 12 S. W. 290, 6 L. R. A. 222; State v. Commissioner of Railroad Taxation, 37 N. J. L. 240; Wilmington & W. R. Co. v. Alsbrough, 110 N. C. 137, 14 S. E. 652. As to betterments on a consolidated company, one of whose constituents was not taxable, see Branch v. City of Charleston, 92 U. S. 682, 23 L. Ed. 750.

Where two companies were exempt except on net earnings above ten per cent dividends and this was based upon conditions which could only be performed by the constituent companies while operating separate lines (keeping accounts and rendering certain reports to the state), and the new company mingled the assets and ran continuous trains over its lines and could not show the net profits of each road, it was held that the new company had no right to the former exemption; Maine C. R. Co. v. Maine, 96 U. S. 508, 24 L. Ed. 836.

Consolidation does not abate a suit pending against one of the companies; Evans v. Ry. Co., 106 Mo. 594, 17 S. W. 489; Baltimore & S. R. Co. v. Musselman, 2 Grant (Pa.) 348; Shackleford v. R. Co., 52 Miss. 159; contra, Kansas, O. & T. Ry. Co. v. Smith, 40 Kan. 192, 19 Pac. 636; Selma, R. & D. R. Co. v. Harbin, 40 Ga. 706. The new company may be substituted under the original process without the issue of process against it; Kinion v. R. Co., 39 Mo. App. 382.

A railroad company is not relieved from liability on the mortgage bonds of a constituent company by consolidation; Gale v. R. Co., 51 Hun 470, 4 N. Y. Supp. 295. A consolidated company may use a patent under which both of the precedent companies were licensed; Lightner v. R. Co., 1 Low. 338, Fed. Cas. No. 8,343; and may occupy the streets of a city, if the constituent companies had the power; Citizens' St. R. Co. v. Memphis, 53 Fed. 715. It may sue shareholders of either old company for calls; 18 C. B. 14; Mansfield, C. & L. M. R. Co. v. Brown, 26 Ohio St. 223. Non-assenting subscribers to stock are not released; Atchison, C. & P. R. Co. v. Board of Com'rs, 25 Kan. 261; contra, Booe v. R. Co., 10 Ind. 93. A consolidated company is entitled to a donation made by a town to one of the companies; Niantic Sav. Bank v. Town of Douglas, 5 Ill. App. 579; Scott v. Hansheer, 94 Ind. 1; but see Wagner v. Meety, 69 Mo. 150. The title to lands conveyed to a constituent company vests in the consolidated company; Cashman v. Brownlee, 128 Ind. 266, 27 N. E. 560; Terry v. R. Co., 67 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 439; and its mortgage, secured upon its consolidated property is paramount to the unsecured indebtedness of the constituent companies; Tysen v. R. Co., 15 Fed. 763.

But it is held that a consolidated company is liable for the debts of the constituent companies; Indianapolis, C. & L. R. Co. v. Jones, 29 Ind. 465, 95 Am. Dec. 654; and they can be enforced only against it; Indianola R. Co.

v. Fryer, 56 Tex. 609; see Evans v. R. Co., 106 Mo. 594, 17 S. W. 489; even in the absence of an express declaration to that effect; Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Boney, 117 Ind. 501, 20 N. E. 432, 3 L. R. A. 435. It is held to be liable in equity for such debts at least to the value of property received; Harrison v. R. Co., 13 Fed. 522; and the remedy at law is said to be complete; Arbuckle v. R. Co., 81 Ill. 429. It is liable on a judgment against a constituent company; St. Louis, A. & T. H. R. Co. v. Miller, 43 Ill. 199. Bonds that had no lien before consolidation do not acquire a lien by consolidation; Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Ham, 114 U. S. 587, 5 Sup. Ct. 1081, 29 L. Ed. 235; but see Compton v. R. Co., 45 Ohio St. 592, 16 N. E. 110, 18 N. E. 380. The liability of the new company extends to damages due by a constituent company to a riparian owner; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Moffitt, 75 Ill. 524; and damages due by a constituent company for breaking into a neighbor's mine; 47 L. J. Ch. 20; and for damages caused by its negligence; Warren v. R. Co., 49 Ala. 582; St. Louis & S. F. R. R. v. Marker, 41 Ark. 542; for the death of an employé; Varnum v. Thruston, 17 Md. 489. A cause of action on a constituent company's debt is against the consolidated company alone; Chase v. Vanderbilt, 62 N. Y. 307. The necessary facts to establish liability should be averred; Marquette, H. & O. R. Co. v. Langton, 32 Mich. 251.

A consolidated company is liable for the torts of its constituent companies, whether it is a new corporation or whether one of the old companies has absorbed the other; Duquesne Distributing Co. v. Greenbaum, 135 Ky. 182, 121 S. W. 1027, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 955, 21 Ann. Cas. 481.

A railroad corporation is a corporation under the laws of its state, although consolidated with a like corporation created under the laws of another state; Muller v. Dows, 94 U. S. 444, 24 L. Ed. 207; and a state can legislate for that part of a consolidated company which is within its limits, just as if no consolidation had taken place; Peik v. Ry. Co., 94 U. S. 164, 24 L. Ed. 97. A consolidated inter-state corporation has, in each state, all the powers which its constituent company had in that state, but not the powers which the constituent company of the other state had in such other state; Ohio & M. Ry. Co. v. People, 123 Ill. 467, 14 N. E. 874; it acts as a unit and may transact its corporate business in one state for both; Fitzgerald v. Ry. Co., 45 Fed. 812. So far as each state has control over the charter it grants, the corporations remain different and separate; Nashua & L. R. Corp. v. Corp., 19 Fed. 804; it dwells in both states and is a corporate entity in each; it has a citizenship identical with each; Fitzgerald v. Ry. Co., 45 Fed. 812. A constituent company consolidated with a corporation of another state remains a citizen of its own state for the purposes of federal jurisdiction; Nashua & L. R. Corp. v. R. Corp., 136 U. S. 356, 10 Sup. Ct. 1004, 34 L. Ed. 363. A railroad extending in several states is not a citizen of each for purposes of federal jurisdiction; St. Joseph & G. I. R. Co. v. Steele, 167 U. S. 659, 17 Sup. Ct. 925, 42 L. Ed. 315.

A practical merger of corporations is sometimes effected by the purchase by one company of the shares of another. This likewise requires legislative authority. See Williamson v. R. Co., 26 N. J. Eq. 398. Or a merger may be by the purchase of all the corporate property under a statute; Eaton & H. R. Co. v. Hunt, 20 Ind. 457. The right to consolidate with another railroad corporation includes the right to make a fair and lawful agreement with it for the interchange of traffic and for the joint use of terminal facilities, the right to buy one-half of its stock for the shareholders of the purchaser and to guarantee the payment of its bonds; Pearsall v. Ry. Co., 73 Fed. 933.

As to merger by lease of railroads, see LEASE. Many of the cases depend largely upon the language of statutes and of the consolidating agreement, or articles of consolidation, and should be read in connection therewith.

In many states the merger of parallel and competing lines is prohibited by the constitution. The prohibition has been held not to extend to street railways; Gyger v. Ry. Co., 136 Pa. 96, 20 Atl. 399. It includes a projected road in process of construction; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Com. (Pa.) 7 Atl. 368; and may extend to a case where the competition may arise from other lines owned or controlled by the lines proposing to consolidate; East Line & R. Ry. Co. v. State, 75 Tex. 434, 12 S. W. 690. In Missouri the act applies only to roads within the state and to cases where the competition would have an appreciable effect on rates; Kimball v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co., 46 Fed. 888.

The constitution prohibits a scheme by which the control of the competing road is to be placed in the hands of persons named by the other road, which agreed to guarantee bonds of the competing road; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Com. (Pa.) 7 Atl. 368; and one where the existing road attempted to purchase the control of a competing road; id. All contracts for leasing or controlling competing roads are held to be void; Manchester & L. R. v. Railroad, 66 N. H. 100, 20 Atl. 383, 9 L. R. A. 689, 49 Am. St. Rep. 582; and so is a pooling and traffic arrangement between two companies having two hundred miles of parallel tracks; Missouri Pac. Ry. Co. v. Ry. Co., 30 Fed. 2; and one where a company guarantees the bonds of a competing railroad, receiving half its stock in consideration thereof; Pearsall v. Ry. Co., 161 U. S. 646, 16 Sup. Ct. 705, 40 L. Ed. 838.

In Georgia any contract tending to defeat or lessen competition is void; Hamilton v. Ry. Co., 49 Fed. 412.

Two street railways are parallel when their directions are substantially the same for two and a half miles, though their termini and general direction are wide apart; St. Louis R. Co. v. Ry. Co., 69 Mo. 65.

Parallel lines are not necessarily competing lines as they may command the traffic of different territories; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Kentucky, 161 U. S. 698, 16 Sup. Ct. 714, 40 L. Ed. 849.

See RESTRAINT OF TRADE.

Constitutional prohibitions against the merger of competing railways do not interfere with the power of congress over interstate commerce; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Kentucky, 161 U. S. 677, 16 Sup. Ct. 714, 40 L. Ed. 849, affirming Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Com., 97 Ky. 675, 31 S. W. 476.

A merger wrought by fraud does not so extinguish the old corporations that they and their stockholders cannot maintain suits to avoid it; Jones v. Electric Co., 144 Fed. 765, 75 C. C. A. 631.

As to the merger of the interest of a lessee upon obtaining a fee in the land, see LANDLORD AND TENANT.

See, as to consolidation generally, 2 L. R. A. 564, n.; 13 L. R. A. 780, n.; 8 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 647; as to the effect of consolidation; 3 id. 572; 3 L. R. A. 435 n.; as to how far a new corporation is created; 15 L. R. A. 82, n.; as to effect on taxation; 17 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 436; 41 id. 702; as to aid bonds; 5 L. R. A. 728, n.; as to lands; 44 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 5; as to inter-state corporations; 16 id. 490; 15 L. R. A. 82, 84, n.; as to liability for rights and obligations of the constituent companies; 5 L. R. A. 726, n.; 13 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 138. See REORGANIZATION.

MERITORIOUS CONSIDERATION. One based upon natural love and affection. 5 Encyc. Laws of Eng. 505. See CONSIDERATION.

MERITS. The state of facts of deserving; intrinsic ground of consideration or reward. Cent. Dict. The word is used principally in matters of defence.

A defence upon the merits is one that rests upon the justice of the cause, and not upon technical grounds only; there is, therefore, a difference between a good defence, which may be technical or not, and a defence on the merits; 5 B. & Ald. 703; McCarney v. McCamp, 1 Ashm. (Pa.) 4.

In the New York Code of Procedure, it has been held to mean "the strict legal rights of the parties as contra-distinguished from those mere questions of practice which every court regulates for itself, and from all matters which depend upon the discretion or favor of the court." St. Johns v. West, 4 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 332.

The expression as to the determination of a case "upon its merits" as referred to in the federal Judiciary Act of 1891 was used in distinction to the review of a question of jurisdiction; Ayres v. Polsdorfer, 187 U. S. 595, 23 Sup. Ct. 196, 47 L. Ed. 314.

MERITS, AFFIDAVIT OF. Under the practice in some jurisdictions, an affidavit of merits is required to be filed by defendant in order to prevent the signing of judgment by default; Young v. Browning, 71 Ill. 44; Clark v. Dotter, 54 Pa. 215. The affidavit is usually required only in certain actions in contract, but statutes and rules of court differ in their wording as to the cases in which the affidavit is necessary; Hazle Tp. v. Markle, 175 Pa. 405, 34 Atl. 734; Myers v. Shoneman, 90 Ill. 80. See the statutes and rules of court in the several states.

The affidavit precedes or accompanies the plea, and cannot be substituted for it; and it is the plea and not the affidavit which answers plaintiff's pleading; Scammon v. McKee, 21 Ill. 554; it is, in fact, no part of the pleadings; Muir v. Ins. Co., 203 Pa. 338, 53 Atl. 158. It may be directed against the legal sufficiency of plaintiff's statement, and in such case it is deemed in the nature of a demurrer; Byrne v. Hayden, 124 Pa. 170, 16 Atl. 750.

Judgment for want of an affidavit of defense will not be sustained where plaintiff's statement of his cause of action is insufficient, or where he has waived the want of an affidavit; McKeone Soap Mfg. Co. v. Press Co., 115 Pa. 310, 8 Atl. 781. The affidavit should regularly be made by defendant; Marshall v. Witte, 1 Phila. (Pa.) 117; a third person fully acquainted with the circumstances may make it, when the defendant himself is unable to do so by reason of sickness or absence; Burkhart v. Parker, 6 W. & S. (Pa.) 480. The time when the affidavit must be filed is usually determined by statute or rule. In general, the affidavit should disclose the "nature and character of the defense"; Melvin & Son v. Conner, 5 Pennw. (Del.) 476, 62 Atl. 264. The party making the affidavit must swear to the facts stated therein from his own knowledge, and not from information; or information and belief; Cake v. Stidfole, 1 Walk. (Pa.) 95; Brown v. Cowee, 2 Dougl. (Mich.) 432. See AFFIDAVIT OF DEFENCE.

MERTON, STATUTE OF. An ancient English ordinance or statute, 20 Hen. III. (1235), which took its name from the place in the county of Surrey where parliament sat when it was enacted. Its provisions related chiefly to dower, usury, legitimacy of children, the right of freeman to make suit by attorney at the lord's or any county court, the inclosure of common lands, wardships. 2 Inst. 79; Barring. Stat. 41, 46; Hale, Hist. Com. Law 9, 10, 18.

MERX. Merchandise.

MESCROYANT. An unbeliever, as used in ancient books.

MESE. An ancient word used to signify house, probably from the French maison. It is said that by this word the buildings, curtilage, orchards, and gardens will pass; Co. Litt. 56.

MESMERISM. See HYPNOTISM.

MESNALTY, or MESNALITY. A manor held under a superior lord. The estate of a mesne. T. L.; Whart. Dict.; Brown v. Butler, 4 Phila. (Pa.) 71; 14 East 234.

MESNE. Intermediate; the middle between two extremes; that part between the commencement and the end, as it relates to time.

Hence the profits which a man receives between disseisin and recovery of lands are called mesne profits. Process which is issued in a suit between the original and final process is called mesne process.

An assignment made between the original grant and a subsequent assignment, is called a mesne assignment.

Mesne incumbrances are intermediate charges, or incumbrances which have attached property between two given periods; as, between the purchase and the conveyance of land.

In England, the word mesne also applies to a dignity; those persons who hold lordships or manors of some superior who is called lord paramount, and grant the same to inferior persons, are called mesne lords.

MESNE LORD. See MESNE.

MESNE PROCESS. See MESNE.

MESNE PROFITS. The value of the premises recovered in ejectment, during the time that the lessor of the plaintiff has been illegally kept out of the possession of his estate by the defendant: such are properly recovered by an action of trespass, quare clausum fregit, after a recovery in ejectment. Osbourne v. Osbourne, 11 S. & R. (Pa.) 55; Bacon, Abr. Ejectment (H); 3 Bla. Com. 205.

As a general rule, the plaintiff is entitled to recover for such time as he can prove the defendant to have been in possession, provided he does not go back beyond six years; for in that case the defendant may plead the statute of limitations; Hare v. Fury, 3 Yeates (Pa.) 13, 2 Am. Dec. 358; Bull. N. P. 88. The value of the use of land during the time it was unlawfully detained by a lessee is the proper measure of lessor's damages; Roach v. Heffernan, 65 Vt. 485, 27 Atl. 71. In an action to recover mesne profits, plaintiff may either prove the profits actually received, or the annual rental value of the land; Worthington v. Hiss, 70 Md. 172, 16 Atl. 534, 17 Atl. 1026. Defendant in ejectment cannot free himself from liability for mesne profits by permitting a third person to remain in actual possession; Vicksburg &

M. R. Co. v. Lewis, 68 Miss. 29, 10 South. 32. Exemplary damages are allowed in trespass for mesne profits, only when the defendant has acted maliciously or in bad faith; Hershoff v. Tripp, 15 R. I. 92, 23 Atl. 104.

The value of improvements made by the defendant may be set off against a claim for mesne profits; Wood. L. & T. 1390; but profits before the demise laid should be first deducted from the value of the improvements; Hylton v. Brown, 2 Wash. C. C. 165, Fed. Cas. No. 6983. See, generally, Wash. R. P.; Bacon, Abr. Ejectment (H); 2 Phill. Ev. 208; Adams, Ej. 13.

MESNE, WRIT OF. The name of an ancient and now obsolete writ, which lies when the lord paramount distrains on the tenant paravail: the latter shall have a writ of mesne against the lord who is mesne. Fitzh. N. B. 316.

MESS BRIEF. In Danish Law. A certificate of admeasurement granted by competent authority at the home-port of a vessel. Jacobsen, Sea-Laws 50.

MESSAGE. See TELEGRAPH.

MESSAGE FROM THE CROWN. The method of communicating between the sovereign and the house of parliament. A written message under the royal sign manual is brought by a member of the house, being a minister of the crown, or one of the royal household. Verbal messages are also sometimes delivered; May, Parl. Pr. ch. 17.

MESSAGE, PRESIDENT'S. The annual communication of the President of the United States to congress, pursuant to art. II. sec. 3, of the constitution. It is usually delivered at the commencement of the session, and embodies the president's views and suggestions concerning the general affairs of the nation. Since Jefferson's time, at least, it has been in writing. Special messages are sent to congress from time to time as the president may deem expedient.

President Wilson has followed an earlier practice of reading his messages to Congress in person.

MESSE THANE. One who said mass; a priest.

MESSENGER. A person appointed to perform certain duties, generally of a ministerial character, such as carriers of messages employed by a secretary of state, or officers of a court of justice, called, in Scotland, messengers at arms. Toml.; Paterson.

The officer who takes possession of an insolvent or bankrupt estate for the judge, commissioner, or other such officer.

The messenger of the English court of chancery has the duty of attending on the great seal, either in person or by deputy, and must be ready to execute all such orders as he shall receive from the lord chancellor, lord keeper, or lords commissioners. Brown.

MESSUAGE. A term used in conveyancing, and nearly synonymous with dwelling-house.

A dwelling-house with the adjacent building and curtilage. Marmet Co. v. Archibald, 37 W. Va. 778, 17 S. E. 299.

A grant of a messuage with the appurtenances will not only pass a house, but all the buildings attached or belonging to it, as also its curtilage, garden, and orchard, together with the close on which the house is built; Co. Litt. 5b; 2 Saund. 400; 4 Cruise, Dig. 321; 2 Term 502; Grimes v. Wilson, 4 Blackf. (Ind.) 331. But see the cases cited in 9 B. & C. 681. This term, it is said, includes a church; 11 Co. 26; 2 Esp. 528; 1 Salk. 256; 8 B. & C. 25. And see 3 Wils. 141; 2 W. Blackst. 726; 4 M. & W. 567; 2 Bingham. n. c. 617; 1 Saund. 6; 2 Washb. R. P.

MESTIZO. The offspring of a Spaniard or other white person and an American Indian. Worcester.

METAL. The word does not include precious metals. 2 B. & Ad. 597.

METAYER SYSTEM. A system under which land was divided into small farms among families, the landlord supplying the stock, and receiving in lieu of rent a fixed proportion of the produce. 1 Mill, Pol. Econ. 296, 363.

METEORITE. Mere evidence of a tradition that Indians worshipped a meteorite, and treated it as a medicine rock belonging to the medicine men of the tribe, held insufficient to justify an inference that they had severed the meteorite from the realty and thereafter abandoned it, entitling the defendant thereto, as the next finder; Oregon Iron Co. v. Hughes, 47 Or. 313, 81 Pac. 572, 8 Ann. Cas. 556.

METES AND BOUNDS. The boundary-lines of land, with their terminal points and angles. See MONUMENTS; BOUNDARY.

METHOD. The mode of operating, or the means of attaining an object.

It has been questioned whether the method of making a thing can be patented. But it has been considered that a method or mode may be the subject of a patent, because when the object of two patents or effects to be produced is, essentially the same, they may both be valid, if the modes of attaining the desired effect are essentially different. 2 B. & Ald. 350; 2 H. Blackst. 492; 8 Term 106; 4 Burr. 2397. See PATENT.

METRE (From the Greek). A measure. See MEASURE.

METRIC SYSTEM. A system of measures for length, surface, weight, values, and ca-capacity, founded on the metre as a unit. See MEASURE.

METROPOLITAN. One of the titles of an archbishop. In England the word is frequently used to designate statutes relating exclusively to the city of London.

METROPOLITAN BOARD OF WORKS. A board for the better sewerage, draining, lighting, etc., of the metropolis. 18 & 19 Vict. c. 120. See LOCAL GOVERNMENT BOARD.

METTESHEP, or METTENSCHAP. An acknowledgment paid in a certain measure of corn; or a fine or penalty imposed on tenants for default in not doing their customary service in cutting the lord's corn. Cowell.

METUS (Lat.). A reasonable fear of an intolerable evil, as of loss of life or limb, such as may fall upon a brave man (virum constantem). 1 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 131; Calvinus, Lex. And this kind of fear alone will invalidate a contract as entered into through duress. Calvinus, Lex.

In a more general sense, fear.

MEUBLES. In French Law. Movables. Things are meubles from either of two causes: (1) From their own nature, e. g. tables, chairs; or (2) from the determination of the law, e. g. obligations. Rap. & Law. Dict.

MEXICAN GRANTS. For a case considering such grants, see U. S. v. Chavez, 175 U. S. 509, 20 Sup. Ct. 159, 44 L. Ed. 255, where it was held that upon a long and uninterrupted possession of lands in Mexico, beginning long prior to the transfer of the territory in which they are situated to the United States, and continuing after that transfer, the law presumes in favor of the possessor.

Possession for six or seven years before the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo in 1848 of land by an alleged grantee is not sufficient to constitute a title which can be confirmed under the court of private land claims act; where a valid grant is not proved to have been made; Hays v. U. S., 175 U. S. 248, 20 Sup. Ct. 80, 44 L. Ed. 150.

MICHAELMAS TERM. See TERM.

MICHEL-GEMOT (spelled, also, micelgemote, mycel-gemot. Sax. great meeting or assembly). One of the names of the general council immemorially held in England. 1 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 147.

One of the great councils of king and noblemen in Saxon times.

These great councils were severally called witena-gemotes, afterwards micel synods and micel-gemotes. Cowell, edit. 1727; Cunningham, Law Dict. Micel-Gemotes. See WITEN-AGEMOT.

The Saxon kings usually called a synod, or mixed council, consisting both of ecclesiastics and the nobility, three times a year, which was not properly called a parliament till Henry III.'s time. Cowell, ed. 1727; Cunningham, Law Dict. Synod, Micel-Gemotes.

MICHEL-SYNOD (Sax. great council). See MICHEL-GEMOT.

MICHERY. Theft; cheating.

MICHIGAN. The name of one of the states of the United States of America.

It was admitted into the Union by act of congress of January 26, 1837.

The first constitution of the state was adopted June 24, 1835. This was superseded by the one at present in force, which was adopted August 15, 1850.

In 1913 an amendment gave the inhabitants of cities and villages power to frame, adopt and amend their charters. Minor amendments had been adopted in 1895, 1896 and 1906.

MIDDLE TEMPLE. See INNS OF COURT.

MIDDLE THREAD. See AD MEDIUM FILUM.

MIDDLEMAN. One who has been employed as an agent by a principal, and who has employed a sub-agent under him by authority of the principal, either express or implied. He is not, in general, liable for the wrongful acts of the sub-agent, the principal being alone responsible; 3 Campb. 4; 6 Term 411; 14 East 605.

A person who is employed both by the seller and purchaser of goods, or by the purchaser alone, to receive them into his possession, for the purpose of doing something in or about them: as, if goods be delivered from a ship by the seller to a wharfinger, to be by him forwarded to the purchaser, who has been appointed by the latter to receive them; or if goods be sent to a packer, for and by orders of the vendee, the packer is to be considered as a middleman.

The goods in both these cases will be considered in transitu, provided the purchaser has not used the wharfinger's or the packer's warehouse as his own, and have an ulterior place of delivery in view; 4 Esp. 82; 2 B. & P. 457; 3 id. 127, 469; 1 Campb. 282; 1 Atk. 245; 1 H. Blackst. 364; 3 East 93.

MIDSHIPMAN. A naval cadet on a ship of war whose business it is to second and transmit the orders of the superior officers and assist in the management of the ship and its armament. Webster. In this country applied to the youths who are being trained at the Naval Academy. See LONGEVITY PAY; NAVAL ACADEMY.

MIDWAY. See THALWEG.

MIDWIFE. In Medical Jurisprudence. A woman who practises midwifery; a woman who pursues the business of an accoucheuse.

A midwife is required to perform the business she undertakes with proper skill; and if she be guilty of any mala praxis she is liable to an action or an indictment for the misdemeanor. See Viner, Abr. Physician; Comyns, Dig. Physician; 8 East 348; 2 Wils. 259; 4 C. & P. 398, 407 a; 2 Russ. Cri. 388.

MILE. A length of seventeen hundred and sixty yards, or five thousand two hundred and eighty feet. It contains eight furlongs, every furlong being forty poles, and each pole sixteen feet six inches. 2 Stark. 89.

MILEAGE. A compensation allowed by law to officers for their trouble and expenses in travelling on public business.

It usually signifies an allowance for travelling, as so much by the mile. Power v. Board of Com'rs, 7 Mont. 82, 14 Pac. 658.

In computing mileage, the distance by the road usually travelled is that which must be allowed, whether in fact the officer travels a more or less distant way to suit his own convenience: Pierce v. Delesdernier, 17 Me. 431. The computation of 100 miles for witnesses in federal courts is over the ordinary shortest route, and not by the shortest line; Jennings v. Menaugh, 118 Fed. 612.

An allowance to a district attorney for mileage in the R. S. § 823, is simply a reimbursement for travelling expenses; U. S. v. Smith, 158 U. S. 346, 15 Sup. Ct. 846, 39 L. Ed. 1011; irrespective of the amount of his compensation under the law; id.; he is allowed mileage for travelling from his place of abode to the place of examination, though the latter is his official headquarters, if his abode is elsewhere; U. S. v. Perry, 50 Fed. 743, 1 C. C. A. 648, 4 U. S. App. 386; it should be computed for the most convenient and practicable route and not by the shortest; id.; and will not be allowed one who goes home every Saturday and returns on Monday during a continuous session of the court; U. S. v. Shields, 153 U. S. 88, 14 Sup. Ct. 735, 38 L. Ed. 645.

See INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION; TICKET.

MILES. In Civil Law. A soldier.

In Old English Law. A knight, because military service was part of the feudal tenure. Also, a tenant by military service, not a knight. 1 Bla. Com. 404; Seld. Tit. Hon. 334.

MILESTONES. Stones set up to mark the miles on a road or railway.

MILITARY. Anything pertaining to war or to the army.

MILITARY ACADEMY. The corps of cadets at the United States Military Academy at West Point consists of one from each congressional district, one from each territory, one from the District of Columbia, two from each state at large and not to exceed 40 from the United States at large; also one from Porto Rico. One Filipino in each class may receive instruction, who becomes eligible to a commission in the Philippine Scouts. Appointees are admitted only between the ages of 17 and 22. They may be admitted on March 1. They must sign articles to serve for eight years unless sooner discharged. They are appointed on graduation to fill vacancies as second lieutenants in the army.

The president appoints all cadets. The nominations to him by senators and members of congress of applicants rests on custom alone, but it has become an established executive practice and no change should be made with a statute; Dig. Op. J.-Adv. Gen. 800.

A cadet is not an officer of the United States and may be dismissed by the president without trial; Hartigan v. U. S., 196 U. S. 169, 25 Sup. Ct. 204, 49 L. Ed. 434.

Cadets are subject to trial by regimental or garrison courts-martial. They are not competent to sit on a court-martial. In respect of their selection as officers of the army on duty as such at the Academy they are subject to the Articles of War, but not in their relations to each other; Davis, Mil. L. 22.

Except for the statutory offence of hazing (Act of June 23, 1874), cadets are not triable by court-martial; 15 Opn. Sol.-Gen. 634; but the Judge-Advocate General has expressed the opinion that they are so triable for violations of the regulations of the Academy, as "conduct to the prejudice of good order and military discipline." Dig. 210, par. 8.

MILITARY BOUNTY LAND. Land granted by the United States to soldiers for services rendered in the army.

Under U. S. R. S. § 2418, each of the surviving, or the widow or minor children of deceased, commissioned or non-commissioned officers or privates, regulars, volunteers or militia who performed military services in the war of 1812 or in any other Indian war since 1790 and prior to March 3, 1850, and each of the commissioned officers in the war with Mexico, are entitled to grants of public lands. By Act of March 22, 1852, where the state militia or volunteers subsequent to June 18, 1812, and prior to March 22, 1852, were called into service, the officers and soldiers were entitled to the benefits of the preceding section. Where a party entitled, by Act of Sept. 28, 1850, had died without receiving bounty land, his widow was entitled in his place, in case the husband was killed in battle, etc. Her subsequent marriage would not impair her right, if she was a widow at the time of making her application. By Act of March 3, 1855, other classes of beneficiaries were brought under the system; the statutes are found in chapter 10 of Title 32 of the R. S., The Public Lands.

Claims for bounty land can be valid only on the following conditions: (1) The soldier must have been regularly mustered into the United States service; (2) That his services were paid for by the United States; (3) That he served with the armed forces of the United States, subject to the military orders of a United States officer.

MILITARY COURTS. See COURT-MARTIAL.

MILITARY EXPEDITION. See NEUTRALITY.

MILITARY FEUDS. The genuine or original feuds which were in the hands of military men, who performed military duty for their tenures.

MILITARY JURISDICTION. There are under the constitution three kinds of military jurisdiction; one to be exercised both in peace and war; another to be exercised in time of foreign war, without the boundaries of the United States, or in time of rebellion and civil war, within the states or districts occupied by rebels treated as belligerents; and a third to be exercised in time of invasion or insurrection within the limits of the United States, or during rebellion within the limits of states maintaining adhesion to the national government, when the public danger requires its exercise. The first of these may be called jurisdiction under military law, and is found in acts of congress prescribing rules and articles of war, or otherwise providing for the government of the national forces; the second may be distinguished as military government, superseding as far as may be deemed expedient, the local law, and exercised by the military commander under the direction of the president, with the express or implied sanction of congress; while the third may be denominated martial law proper, which title see; Ex parte Milligan, 4 Wall. (U. S.) 141, 18 L. Ed. 281.

MILITARY LAW. A system of regulations for the government of an army. 1 Kent 341, n.

That branch of the laws which respects military discipline and the government of persons employed in the military service. De Hart, Courts-Mart. 16.

Military law is to be distinguished from martial law. Martial law extends to all persons; military law to all military persons only, and not to those in a civil capacity. Martial law supersedes and suspends the civil law, but military law is superadded and subordinate to the civil law. Birk. Mil. G. & Mart. L. 1. See 2 Kent 10; MARTIAL LAW; COURT-MARTIAL; MILITARY JURISDICTION.

The law is found in the acts of congress, particularly the Articles of War, the Army Regulations and in the customary Military Law; Carter v. McClaughry, 183 U. S. 365, 22 Sup. Ct. 181, 46 L. Ed. 236.

The act of 1806 consists of three sections, the first section containing one hundred and one articles, which describe very minutely the various military offences, the punishments which may be inflicted, the manner of summoning and the organization of courts-martial. These articles are called the articles of war. Their provisions extend to the militia mustered into the United States service, and to marines when serving with the army. They have been changed from time to time. Reference must be had to the statutes and the Army Regulations.

The military law of England was contained in the Mutiny Act, which has been passed annually from April 12, 1689, to 1879, when the Mutiny Act was consolidated with the articles of war, and this act was amended in 1881 by the Army Act (see MUTINY ACT), and the additional articles of war made and established by the sovereign. 2 Steph. Com. 589.

In addition, there are in both countries various usages which constitute an unwritten military law, which applies to those cases where there are no express provisions. Martin v. Mott, 12 Wheat. (U. S.) 19, 6 L. Ed. 537; Benét, Mil. Law 3.

"Martial law [that is, military law] is the will of the general who commands the army. It can be indulged only in cases of necessity and ceases when the necessity ends. When called in question, the necessity must be affirmatively shown by the power seeking to exercise it." In re Eagan, 6 Parker, Cr. R. (N. Y.) 675, id., 5 Blatchf. 319, Fed. Cas. No. 4,303 (a case arising in 1865 in South Carolina).

When the territory of the states which were making war against the national government was in the military occupation of the United States, military tribunals under the statute and under the laws of war had exclusive jurisdiction to try and punish offences of every grade committed there by persons in the military service. Officers and soldiers of the army were not subject to the laws of the enemy nor amenable to its tribunals for offences committed by them during the war. They were answerable only to their own government, and only by its laws, as enforced by its armies, could they be punished; unless superseded by the commander of the forces of occupation, the laws of the state, as between the inhabitants, remain in force and the courts continue to exercise their jurisdiction; Coleman v. Tennessee, 97 U. S. 509, 24 L. Ed. 1118.

Where actual war is raging, acts done by the military authorities are not justiciable by the ordinary tribunals; the military tribunals are alone competent to deal with such questions. The fact that for some purposes some tribunals had been permitted to pursue their ordinary course is not conclusive that war is not raging. Neither an application for summary release from extraordinary arrest nor an action for anything done as an extraordinary act of necessity will be entertained by the ordinary courts during the continuance of a state of war in the jurisdiction, when the court is satisfied that a responsible officer acting in good faith is prepared to justify the act complained of; [1902] A. C. 109.

A soldier in time of peace is subject to the civil authority and may be arrested and detained for violation of municipal ordinances, and if his punishment tends to interfere with his military duties, any unfair discrimination against him, or departure from the strict requirements of the law, or any unusual punishment may justify his release on habeas corpus; Ex parte Schlaffer, 154 Fed. 921.

Where a soldier on a military reservation had been convicted of an offence, and attempted to escape and was killed by a sergeant, it was held that if the act was in compliance with his supposed duties as a soldier and in good faith, without malice, the sergeant was protected; U. S. v. Clark, 31 Fed. 710.

If a sergeant of the guard when he shoots a prisoner has reasonable ground to believe and does believe that the act was necessary to the suppression of a mutiny, he is justified; and he is not bound to weigh with scrupulous nicety the amount of force necessary to suppress disorder. The exercise of a reasonable discretion is all that is required; U. S. v. Carr, 1 Woods 480, Fed. Cas. No. 14,732.

See MILITIA; ARTICLES OF WAR; COURT-MARTIAL; MARTIAL LAW.

MILITARY OCCUPATION. This at most gives the invader certain partial and limited rights of sovereignty. Until conquest, the sovereign rights of the original owner remain intact. Conquest gives the conqueror full rights of sovereignty and, retroactively, legalizes all acts done by him during military occupation. Its only essential is actual and exclusive possession, which must be effective.

A conqueror may exercise governmental authority, but only when in actual possession of the enemy's country; and this will be exercised upon principles of international law; MacLeod v. U. S., 229 U. S. 416, 33 Sup. Ct. 955, 57 L. Ed. 1260.

The occupant administers the government and may, strictly speaking, change the municipal law, but it is considered the duty of the occupant to make as few changes in the ordinary administration of the laws as possible, though he may proclaim martial law if necessary. He may occupy public land and buildings; he cannot alienate them so as to pass a good title, but a subsequent conquest would probably complete the title. Ships of war, warlike stores and materials, treasure and like movable property belonging to the state vest in the occupant.

State archives and historical records, charitable, etc., institutions, public buildings, museums, monuments, works of art, etc., and public buildings of lesser political subdivisions are safe from seizure; so usually are public vessels engaged in scientific discovery.

Private lands and houses are usually exempt. Private movable property is exempt, though subject to contributions and requisitions. The former are payments of money, to be levied only by the commander-in-chief. The latter consist in the supply of food or transport, or articles for the immediate use of the troops, and may be exacted by the commander of any detached body of troops, with or without payment. This appears to be a modified species of pillage. Military necessity may require the destruction of private property, and hostile acts of communities or individuals may be punished in the same way. Property may be liable to seizure as booty on the field of battle, or when a town refuses to capitulate and is carried by assault. When military occupation ceases, the state of things which existed previously is restored under the fiction of postliminium (q. v.).

Territory acquired by war must, necessarily, be governed, in the first instance, by military power under the direction of the president, as commander-in-chief. Civil government can only be put in operation by the action of the appropriate political department of the government, at such time and in such degree as it may determine. It must take effect either by the action of the treaty-making power, or by that of congress. So long as congress has not incorporated the territory into the United States, neither military occupation nor cession by treaty makes it domestic territory, in the sense of the revenue laws. Congress may establish a temporary government, which is not subject to all the restrictions of the constitution. Downes v. Bidwell, 182 U. S. 244, 21 Sup. Ct. 770, 45 L. Ed. 1088, per Gray, J., concurring in the opinion of the court.

Where a civilian resident native of Porto Rico was, by a military tribunal of the United States in control of the island, convicted of a crime committed in that island in March, 1899, it was held that so long as a state of war existed between Spain and the United States (which was until after the commission of the crime) that tribunal had jurisdiction to try the offence; Ex parte Ortiz, 100 Fed. 955.

The government at Manila prior to the treaty with Spain was a military government and subject only to higher military authority; Ho Tung & Co. v. U. S., 42 Ct. Cl. 213.

The Convention Concerning the Laws and Customs of War on Land, adopted at The Hague in 1899, lays down (Arts. 42-56) definite rules concerning military authority over the territory of a hostile state. In addition to codifying the accepted law, it provides that the occupant must respect, unless absolutely prevented, the laws in force in the country; he must not compel the population of the occupied territory to take part in military operations against its own country, nor take the oath to the hostile power. Private property cannot be confiscated. State taxes, if collected, must be expended for the administration of the occupied territory. Receipts must be given for any contribution which may be levied for military necessities or the administration of the territory, as well as for requisitions, which must be in proportion to the resources of the country. See Risley, Law of War, 134; Spaight, War Rights on Land, 320-418; II Opp. §§ 166-172.

See MILITARY JURISDICTION.

MILITARY TENURE. Tenure in chivalry or knight service. See KNIGHT'S SERVICE.

MILITARY TESTAMENT. A nuncupative will, that is, one made by word of mouth, by which a soldier may dispose of his goods, pay, and other personal chattels, without the forms and solemnities which the law requires in other cases. 1 Vict. c. 12.

MILITES. Knights, and in Scotch law freeholders.

MILITIA. A part of the military force of the nation, consisting of citizens called forth to execute the laws of the Union, suppress insurrection, and repel invasion.

The militia is essentially the people's army and their defence and security in time of peace; City of Salina v. Blaksley, 72 Kan. 230, 83 Pac. 619, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 168, 115 Am. St. Rep. 196.

The constitution of the United States provides on this subject that congress shall have power to provide for calling forth the militia to execute the laws of the Union, suppress insurrections, and repel invasions; to provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining the militia, and for governing such part of it as may be employed in the service of the United States, reserving to the states respectively the appointment of the officers, and the authority of training the militia, according to the discipline prescribed by congress.

In accordance with the provisions of the constitution, congress, in 1792, act of May 8, passed an act relating to the militia. Under its provisions the militia could be used for the suppression of rebellion as well as of insurrection; R. S. § 1642; Texas v. White, 7 Wall. (U. S.) 700, 19 L. Ed. 227; Kneedler v. Lane, 45 Pa. 238. The president was to judge when the exigency had arisen which requires the militia to be called out; Martin v. Mott, 12 Wheat. (U. S.) 19, 6 L. Ed. 537. He may make his request directly to the executive of the state, or by an order directed to any subordinate officer of the state militia; Moore v. Houston, 3 S. & R. (Pa.) 169; as provided by R. S. § 1642; and see Martin v. Mott, 12 Wheat. (U. S.) 19, 6 L. Ed. 537.

Under the act of congress of January 21, 1903, the militia "shall consist of every able-bodied male citizen and every able-bodied male of foreign birth who has declared his intention to become a citizen, who is more than eighteen and less than forty-five years of age, and shall be divided into two classes: The organized militia, known at the "National Guard" of the state, etc., and the remainder, to be known as the "Reserve Militia."

The list of exemptions from service includes government officers and a large number of governmental employees, and also those who are exempt by state laws, and members of any "well-recognized" religious sect or organization whose religious convictions are opposed to war, etc.

Whenever the United States is invaded or in danger of invasion from any foreign nation, or of rebellion against its authority, or the president is unable, with the regular force, to execute the laws of the Union, he may call forth such number of the militia as he may deem necessary and issue his orders for that purpose through the governor of the respective state, etc., to such officers of the militia as he may think proper. (The act of May 27, 1908, limited the period of service to not exceeding nine months, and provided that the orders shall be issued through the governor of the state, etc.) The president may specify in his call the period of service and the militia shall continue to serve during such period, either within or without the United States, unless sooner relieved. In case of a call, the organized militia shall be called into service in advance of any volunteer forces it may be determined to raise. When the militia of more than one state is called into service, the president may, in his discretion, apportion them among the states, etc. When called into actual service, they are subject to the same rules and articles of war as the regular troops. They are entitled to the benefits of pension laws in existence at the time of service, and, in case of death, the same benefit is extended to widows and children.

The militia, until mustered into the United States service, is considered as a state force; Moore v. Houston, 3 S. & R. (Pa.) 169; Houston v. Moore, 5 Wheat. (U. S.) 1, 5 L. Ed. 19. See 1 Kent 262; Story, Const. §§ 1194-1210.

See generally Dunne v. People, 94 Ill. 123, 34 Am. Rep. 213; Presser v. Illinois, 116 U. S. 267, 6 Sup. Ct. 580, 29 L. Ed. 615; MILITARY LAW; MARTIAL LAW.

MILK. In England milk means, commercially speaking, skimmed milk. 14 Q. B. Div. 193, where it was held that the sale of milk which had been deprived of sixty per cent of its butter fat was not an offence under § 6, Sale of Food and other Drugs Act, although under § 9 of the same act the sale of skimmed milk as milk is an offence; 24 Q. B. Div. 353; 59 L. J. M. C. 45.

In many states the establishment of a standard founded on the quantity of milk solids and of fat has been adopted to prevent adulteration and secure a proper quality of milk; Com. v. Keenan, 139 Mass. 193, 29 N. E. 477; Com. v. Vieth, 155 Mass. 442, 29 N. E. 577; People v. Cipperly, 101 N. Y. 634, 4 N. E. 107; State v. Smyth, 14 R. I. 100, 51 Am. Rep. 344; State v. Creamery Co., 83 Minn. 284, 86 N. W. 107, 54 L. R. A. 466, 85 Am. St. Rep. 464.

Such legislation was held constitutional in the above cases. See also, Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U. S. 31, 5 Sup. Ct. 357, 28 L. Ed. 923. And it is not material that the milk was sold just as it came from the cow; State v. Campbell, 64 N. H. 402, 13 Atl. 585, 10 Am. St. Rep. 419; People v. Bosch, 129 App. Div. 660, 114 N. Y. Supp. 65.

A state may by statute authorize inspectors of milk to enter all carriages used for its conveyance, and wherever they have reason to believe the milk to be adulterated, to take specimens to be analyzed or tested; Com. v. Carter, 132 Mass. 12; and vendors of milk must furnish samples gratuitously; State v. Dupaquier, 15 South. 502, 26 L. R. A. 162, 49 Am. St. Rep. 334. If upon inspection milk is found to be adulterated, the vendor may be compelled to pour it upon the ground, or return it to the person who supplied it; State v. Newton, 45 N. J. L. 469; Blazier v. Miller, 10 Hun (N. Y.) 435. See POLICE POWER; HEALTH; FOOD AND DRUG ACTS.

MILL. A complicated engine or machine for grinding and reducing to fine particles grain, fruit, or other substance, or for performing other operations by means of wheels and a circular motion.

The building that contains the machinery for grinding, etc. Webster, Dict.

It has been held that the grant of a mill and its appurtenances, even without the land, carries the whole right of water enjoyed by the grantor, as necessary to its use, and as a necessary incident; Cro. Jac. 121. And a devise of a mill carries the land used with it, and the right to use the water; Washb. Easem. 52; Blaine's Lessee v. Chambers, 1 S. & R. (Pa.) 169. And see Wetmore v. White, 2 Caines, Cas. (N. Y.) 87, 2 Am. Dec. 323; New Ipswich W. L. Factory v. Batchelder, 3 N. H. 190, 14 Am. Dec. 346; Leonard v. White, 7 Mass. 6, 5 Am. Dec. 19.

The owner of a mill, whose dam and machinery are suited to the size and capacity of the stream, has a right to the reasonable use of the water to propel his machinery; but he must detain it no longer than is necessary for its profitable enjoyment, and must return it to its natural channel, before it passes upon the land of the proprietor below; Pool v. Lewis, 41 Ga. 162, 5 Am. Rep. 526. See DAM.

A mill means not merely the building in which the business is carried on, but includes the site, the dam, and other things annexed to the freehold, necessary for its beneficial enjoyment; Gould, Waters § 307; Whitney v. Olney, 3 Mas. 280, Fed. Cas. No. 17,595; and a water power also when applied to a mill becomes a part of the mill, and is to be included in the valuation; Bellows Falls Canal Co. v. Town of Rockingham, 37 Vt. 622.

Whether manufacturing machinery will pass under the grant of a mill must depend mainly on the circumstances of each case; 3 Washb. R. P. 415; 1 Brod. & B. 506; Ewell, Fixt. 94. As between mortgagor and mortgagee, a sawmill and its appointments are prima facie part of the realty, if no intent is shown to change their character; Robertson v. Corsett, 39 Mich. 777. When an estate for years was by a conveyance to the lessee merged in the fee, it was held that machinery by him firmly annexed to the premises, did not, by operation of law and without intent on his part, become a part of the realty; Globe Marble Mills Co. v. Quinn, 76 N. Y. 23, 32 Am. Rep. 259. See FIXTURES; DAM.

MILL. The tenth part of a cent in value.

MILLED MONEY. This term means merely coined money; and it is not necessary that it should be marked or rolled on the edges. Running's case, Leach, Cr. Cas. 708.

MIL-REIS. The name of a coin. The mil-reis of Portugal is taken as money of account, at the custom-house, to be of the value of one hundred and twelve cents. The mil-reis of Azores is deemed of the value of eighty-three and one-third cents. The mil-reis of Madeira is deemed of the value of one hundred cents; 5 Stat. at Large, 625.

MINA. A measure of corn or grain. Cowell.

MINAGE. A toll or duty paid for selling grain by the Mina. Cowell.

MINATOR, or MINERATOR. A miner.

MIND. In its legal sense it means only the ability to will, to direct, to permit or assent. McDermott v. Journal Ass'n, 43 N. J. L. 492, 39 Am. Rep. 606.

MIND AND MEMORY. A testator must have a sound and disposing mind and memory. In other words, he "ought to be capable of making his will with an understanding of the nature of the business in which he is engaged, a recollection of the property he means to dispose of, the persons who are the object of his bounty, and the manner in which it is to be distributed between them." Washington, J., Harrison v. Rowan, 3 Wash. C. C. 585, 586, Fed. Cas. No. 6,141; Lowe v. Williamson, 2 N. J. Eq. 82, 85; Stewart's Ex'r v. Lisperard, 26 Wend. (N. Y.) 255; Comstock v. Ecclesiastical Society, 8 Conn. 265, 20 Am. Dec. 100. Mind and memory are convertible terms; In re Forman's Will, 54 Barb. (N. Y.) 274.

MINERALS. All fossil bodies or matters dug out of mines or quarries, whence anything may be dug; such as beds of stone which may be quarried. 14 M. & W. 859, construing 55 Geo. III. c. 18; Broom, Leg. Max. 175.*

Any natural production, formed by the action of chemical affinities, and organized when becoming solid by the powers of crystallization. Webster, Dict. But see Gibson v. Tyson, 5 Watts (Pa.) 34; 1 Crabb, R. P. 95; OIL.

The term mineral has been defined as "every substance which can be got from underneath the surface of the earth, for the purpose of profit." L. R. 7 Ch. App. 699; and in another case it is said that the word does not include anything except that which is part of the natural soil; 33 Ch. D. 566. It has been held to include coal; Henry v. Lowe, 73 Mo. 96; paint-stone; Hartwell v. Camman, 10 N. J. Eq. 128, 136, 64 Am. Dec. 448; free-stone; L. R. 1 Ch. 303; and petroleum; Appeal of Stoughton, 88 Pa. 198; Gill v. Weston, 110 Pa. 313, 1 Atl. 921; stone for road making or paving; L. R. 4 Eq. 19; brick clay; L. R. 20 Ch. Div. 552; china clay, and every substance which may be obtained from underneath the surface of the earth for the purpose of profit; L. R. 7 Ch. 699; sandstone; 2 Drew. & S. 395; flint-stone; L. R. 8 App. Cas. 508; chromate of iron; Gibson v. Tyson, 5 Watts (Pa.) 34; natural gas; Westmoreland & Cambria Natural Gas Co. v. De Witt, 130 Pa. 235, 18 Atl. 724, 5 L. R. A. 731.

See OIL.

The words minerals and ores have been held to include only minerals obtained by underground working; Armstrong v. Granite Co., 147 N. Y. 495, 42 N. E. 186, 49 Am. St. Rep. 683.

The term mineral lands, as used in the statutes relating to the public domain, embraces coal lands; Mullan v. U. S., 118 U. S. 271, 6 Sup. Ct. 1041, 30 L. Ed. 170; granite; Northern P. Ry. Co. v. Soderberg, 188 U. S. 526, 23 Sup. Ct. 365, 47 L. Ed. 575; and mineral deposits are not only metals proper, but also salt, coal, and the like; Hartwell v. Camman, 10 N. J. Eq. 128, 64 Am. Dec. 448.

Minerals severed from the earth by artificial means are personal property and dealt with by the law as such; Barr. & Ad. Mines 5; being taxable as personalty; Forbes v. Gracey, 94 U. S. 762, 24 L. Ed. 313; the subject of larceny; People v. Williams, 35 Cal. 671; Com. v. Steimling, 156 Pa. 400, 27 Atl. 297; or recoverable in trover; Lyon v. Gormley, 53 Pa. 261; or replevin; Green v. Iron Co., 62 Pa. 97. This is not the case, however, where the severance results from natural causes or incidentally from excavation; id.; hence a nugget of gold found upon loose rocks was held to savor of the reality and was not the subject of larceny; State v. Burt, 64 N. C. 619. See MINES AND MINING.

MINES. In Naval War. A method of attack and defence first used by both parties in the Russo-Japanese war, during the blockade of Port Arthur in 1904, is the use of floating mechanical mines which do not require connection with a battery on shore. Their use has given rise to much discussion, and though it is possible in the open sea, the dangers to neutral shipping which would result therefrom will doubtless lead to an international rule forbidding it. In territorial waters of either party, they might be allowed if warning is given to neutrals to avoid those waters, and if they are properly moored. To leave them adrift would make them a source of danger far from the seat of war. 2 Opp. Int. L. § 182.

MINES AND MINING. A mine is an excavation in the earth for the purpose of obtaining minerals.

Mines of gold and silver belonged, at common law, to the sovereign; 1 Plowd. 310; 3 Kent 378, n.; Moore v. Smaw, 17 Cal. 222, 79 Am. Dec. 123; and it has been said that, though the king grant lands in which mines are, and all mines in them, yet royal mines (q. v.) will not pass by so general a description; Plowd. 336. In New York the state's right as sovereign was asserted at an early day, and reasserted by the legislature as late as 1828; 3 Kent 378, n. In Pennsylvania the Royal Charter to Penn reserved one-fifth of the precious metal as rent, and the patents granted by Penn usually reserved two-fifths of the gold and silver. An act passed in 1843 declared that all patents granted by the state pass the entire estate of the commonwealth. In California, after much discussion, it seems to be finally settled that minerals belong to the owner of the soil and not to the government as an incident of sovereignty; Moore v. Smaw, 17 Cal. 199, 79 Am. Dec. 123; Merced Min. Co. v. Boggs, 3 Wall. (U. S.) 304, 18 L. Ed. 245; Castillero v. U. S., 2 Black (U. S.) 17, 17 L. Ed. 360. In Moore v. Smaw, 17 Cal. 199, 79 Am. Dec. 123, Field, C. J., upon thorough examination of the subject, rejected the doctrine of sovereign title as an assertion of personal prerogative of the British crown, neither applicable to our institutions nor a necessary incident of sovereignty in the larger sense. The prerogative title of the sovereign was in Oregon treated as conceded; Gold Hill Quartz Min. Co. v. Ish, 5 Or. 104. It was held that in Maryland the mines passed by royal grant to Lord Baltimore, subject to a reservation of one-fifth of gold and silver found and that the entire title passed to the state, the interest of the proprietor by confiscation, and that of the king by conquest; Shoemaker v. U. S., 147 U. S. 282, 13 Sup. Ct. 361, 37 L. Ed. 170. The same prerogative right was very early asserted in New Jersey; Board of Chosen Freeholders of Middlesex County v. Bank, 30 N. J. Eq. 323, note. It is said that the question is not of practical importance since the title to mineral lands generally in the United States is derived from public grants, and the right to minerals therein is regulated by law; Barr. & Ad. Mines 179. As to mineral lands and claims and their location under the United

Minerals in the beds of navigable waters below low water mark are owned by the state against which an appropriator without a grant is a trespasser, although he has a good title against any one else; BARR. & AD. MINES 180. See State v. Phosphate Co., 32 Fla. 82, 13 South. 640, 21 L. R. A. 189; Coo-saw Mining Co. v. South Carolina, 144 U. S. 550, 12 Sup. Ct. 689, 36 L. Ed. 537; State v. Guano Co., 22 S. C. 50. The same rule applies to minerals found under highways; Smith v. City Council of Rome, 19 Ga. 89, 63 Am. Dec. 298; St. Anthony Falls Water Power Co. v. Bridge Co., 23 Minn. 186, 23 Am. Rep. 682; Matthiessen & Hegeler Zinc Co. v. City of La Salle, 117 Ill. 411, 2 N. E. 406, 8 N. E. 81; Lyman v. Arnold, 5 Mas. 195, Fed. Cas. No. 8,626. See 14 A. & E. Ry. Cas. 486.

Where lands are taken under the right of eminent domain, strictly only a right of way passes, but it is sometimes held that the appropriator may use minerals taken therefrom for making or repairing the road-bed; Stokely v. Bridge Co., 5 Watts (Pa.) 546; at least those above grade which must be excavated; Evans v. Haefner, 29 Mo. 141; but the better opinion is said to be that no such right exists and that minerals remain the property of the owner of the soil; BARR. & AD. MINES 186; Smith v. Holloway, 124 Ind. 329, 24 N. E. 886; Lyon v. Gormley, 53 Pa. 261. See 24 A. & E. Ry. Cas. 142.

All mineral lands of the general government, both surveyed and unsurveyed, are free and open to exploration and occupation, subject to such regulations as may be prescribed by law, and also to local customs or rules of miners when not in conflict with the laws of the United States. R. S. § 2319. See Forbes v. Gracey, 94 U. S. 763, 24 L. Ed. 313; LANDS, PUBLIC.

It is the policy of the government to favor the development of mines of gold, silver, and other metals, and every facility is afforded for that purpose; but it exacts a faithful compliance with the conditions required; U. S. v. Mining Co., 128 U. S. 673, 9 Sup. Ct. 195, 32 L. Ed. 571. A mineral lode or vein whose location is perfected under the law is the property of the locators or their assigns, and not subject to disposal by the government; Noyes v. Mantle, 127 U. S. 348, 8 Sup. Ct. 1132, 32 L. Ed. 168.

Subject to the rights of the public, growing out of its original ownership, or as provided by law in special cases, the right to minerals belongs to the owner of the soil, and passes by a grant thereof, unless separated; Lacustrine Fertilizer Co. v. Fertilizer Co., 82 N. Y. 476; but the owner may convey his mines by a separate and distinct grant, so as to create one freehold in the soil and another in the mines; Adam v. Iron Co., 7 Cush. (Mass.) 361; 5 M. & W. 50; Williams v. Gibson, 84 Ala. 228, 4 South. 350, 5 Am. St. Rep. 368; Manning v. Frazier, 96 Ill. 279; and after such severance of the mines from the soil each is entirely independent of the other, separately inheritable, and capable of conveyance; BARR. & AD. MINES 3.

In case of a separate ownership, the owner of the mine must support the superincumbent soil; 12 Q. B. 739; 12 Exch. 259; and ancient buildings or other erections; 2 H. & N. 828. But in California a miner will not be enjoined against disturbance of crops, unless the appropriation of the land was anterior to the mining location; Ensminger v. McIntire, 23 Cal. 593.

A lessee having the right to mine coal under land over which a railroad is operated, can only mine so much of the coal as can be removed without injury to the surface; Mickle v. Douglas, 75 Ia. 78, 39 N. W. 198. The lessor's measure of damages where there are sinks and depressions in the surface of the land due to lessee's negligence in operating a mine, is the depreciation in the value of the land; McGowan v. Bailey, 155 Pa. 256, 25 Atl. 648.

The estate in the minerals as distinguished from the soil, is created under what are known as mining leases. Where the minerals are undisturbed as a part of the soil they are said to be in place. The severance of the estate in the soil and in the minerals may be by conveyance, by whatever name designated, of all, or a clearly defined part, of the minerals, in which case there passes to the grantee an estate in fee in the minerals, with the privilege of using the land so far as may be necessary for the purpose stated; Adams v. Copper Co., 7 Fed. 634. This is the effect of a conveyance even if it be called a lease or limits a term of years within which the minerals are to be taken out; BARR. & AD. MINES 36. The effect of this is said to be the somewhat paradoxical result of the limitation of a fee-simple estate for a term of years, and the resulting difficulty is sought to be avoided by treating the limitation of the term as not upon the estate but upon the appurtenant rights, without which it would be valueless, and in case of failure to take out the mineral within the specified time it is forfeited to the grantor; Lillibridge v. Coal Co., 143 Pa. 293, 22 Atl. 1035, 13 L. R. A. 627, 24 Am. St. Rep. 544; Suffern v. Butler, 21 N. J. Eq. 410. A lease for mining purposes, the rent to be a certain part of the ore mined, is forfeited by failure to work the mines for a number of years; Maxwell v. Todd, 112 N. C. 677, 16 S. E. 926. Such instruments, even where the term license is employed, are held to be not a mere license, but to pass a property or to create an estate in the minerals; Hartford Iron Min. Co. v. Min. Co., 93 Mich. 90, 53 N. W. 4, 32 Am. St. Rep. 488; Knight v. Iron Co., 47

Ind. 105, 17 Am. Rep. 692; Consolidated Coal Co. v. Peers, 150 Ill. 344, 37 N. E. 937; Lee v. Bumgardner, 86 Va. 315, 10 S. E. 3. See Barr. & Ad. Mines 36, where the cases are collected and examined. A true leasehold interest in the land may be created with an appurtenant right to take minerals, in which case the lessee is a tenant for years, and his possession and property of the soil and the minerals are the same; Patton v. Axley, 50 N. C. 440; Brown v. Beecher, 120 Pa. 590, 15 Atl. 608; Baker v. Hart, 52 Hun 363, 5 N. Y. Supp. 345. Where the permission is to take all the coal and the term is indefinite, the lease expires when the latter is exhausted; Gartside v. Outley, 58 Ill. 210, 11 Am. Rep. 59. In New York this doctrine is limited, so as to apply only where "the whole body of the coal, considered as of cubical dimensions and capable of descriptive separation from the earth above and around it, and as it lies in its place, is absolutely and presently conveyed. The thing sold must be such that it can be identified as land severed, as land, from the estate of which it forms a part;" Genet v. Canal Co., 136 N. Y. 593, 32 N. E. 1078, 19 L. R. A. 127, where Finch, J., citing the Pennsylvania cases, says: "Every case upholding the doctrine, which I have been able to examine, has that marked characteristic." In this case which reversed 122 N. Y. 505, 25 N. E. 922, the "lease" of all the coal contained under a described contract designated it as including all the coal that could be economically mined or taken out.

There may be a license to take all of a certain mineral in a designated tract, which is an incorporeal right, of which the distinguishing character is that it does not carry with it a possession exclusive of the owner of the soil; Barr. & Ad. Mines 53. It must be created by deed; Kamphouse v. Gaffner, 73 Ill. 453; and it is not revocable except after breach of covenant; Boone v. Stover, 66 Mo. 430. It carries the right of property in the minerals only after they are severed; East Jersey Iron Co. v. Wright, 32 N. J. Eq. 248; it is termed a license irrevocable and the word "all" describes the extent to which it may be exercised, not its exclusiveness; Grubb v. Bayard, 2 Wall. Jr. 81, Fed. Cas. No. 5,849.

A mere parol license is a personal privilege, unassignable, concurrent with a right of the licensor to mine, revocable at will, and vests no title to the minerals until severed; Barr. & Ad. Mines 67; Williams v. Morrison, 32 Fed. 177; Huff v. McCauley, 53 Pa. 206, 91 Am. Dec. 203; Cahoon v. Bayaud, 123 N. Y. 298, 25 N. E. 376.

Opening new mines by a tenant is waste, unless the demise includes them; Co. Litt. 53 b; 2 Bla. Com. 282; but if the mines be already open, it is not waste to work them even to exhaustion; 1 Taunt. 410; Appeal of Eley, 103 Pa. 307; Crouch v. Puryear, 1

Rand. (Va.) 258, 10 Am. Dec. 528; Billings v. Taylor, 10 Pick. (Mass.) 460, 20 Am. Dec. 533; Coates v. Cheever, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 460. See Smith, Landl. & T. 192, 193, n. In a suit for redemption of a mortgage, the mortgagee was allowed for large sums expended in working a mine which he had a right to work; 25 L. J. Ch. 121; but in another case, expenses incurred in opening a mine were disallowed; 16 Sim. 445.

In California, the occupant of public lands, who holds them for agricultural purposes merely, holds them subject to the right of any person to dig for gold; Stoakes v. Barrett, 5 Cal. 36; but the miner must take them as he finds them, subject to prior rights of the same character; Mitchell v. Hagood, 6 Cal. 148; a miner cannot take private lands; Henshaw v. Clark, 14 Cal. 460.

An injunction lies for interference with mines; 6 Ves. 147.

Mineral deposits are usually divided into what are termed lode or vein and placer deposits. The terms lode and vein are generally used interchangeably (see LODE), but they are usually "found together in the statutes and both are intended to indicate the presence of metal in rock; yet a lode may, and often does, contain more than one vein; Field, J., in U. S. v. Mining Co., 128 U. S. 673, 9 Sup. Ct. 195, 32 L. Ed. 571.

A placer is a superficial deposit occupying the bed of an ancient river. Barr. & Ad. Mines 476. In federal legislation it is defined to include "all forms of deposit excepting veins and quartz or other rock in place." U. S. R. S. § 2329. These statutes divide all deposits into two classes, veins or lodes, and placers, and the former being well defined, the latter is made to include all others; Barr. & Ad. Mines 476. See LANDS, PUBLIC.

The dip of a vein is its downward course, and this the locator may follow indefinitely even though it take him beneath the ground of another and outside of his own vertical side lines; Barr. & Ad. Mines 441.

The strike of a vein is "its onward course, its direction or trend across and through the country"; id.

The apex of a vein is the highest point where it approaches nearest to the surface of the earth, and where it is broken at its edge so as to appear to be the beginning or end of a vein. Stevens v. Williams, 1 McCrary 480, Fed. Cas. No. 13,413. If a vein at its highest point turns over and pursues its course downward, then such point is merely a swell in the mineral matter and not a true apex; id. This is a term used in mining law in what is known as the apex rule, as to which see LANDS, PUBLIC, subtt. Mineral Lands.

Where two or more veins apex in a claim, the court must decide which is the principal vein, and fix the end lines of the claim by reference to that principal vein. (2) Those end lines as defined by the principal vein are the end lines for all other veins apexing in the claim. (3) The locator owns all the veins having any part of their apexes in his claim, from the apexes downward throughout the entire depth of the veins, within the vertical planes drawn through the ascertained end lines of the claim extended in their own direction; Walrath v. Mining Co., 171 U. S. 293, 18 Sup. Ct. 909, 43 L. Ed. 170.

A miner whose location is on the apex of a lode may follow it to any depth, although in its downward course it may enter the adjoining land; but no location made on the middle of a lode or otherwise than at the top or apex, will enable the locator to go beyond his line; Iron Silver Min. Co. v. Murphy, 3 Fed. 368. The apex is not necessarily a point, but often a line of great length and any portion of it, if found within the limits of a claim, is sufficient to entitle the locator to obtain title. He may follow his vein into the territory of another beyond his side lines, but not further than his own end lines, beyond which it is subject to further discovery and appropriation; Larkin v. Upton, 144 U. S. 19, 12 Sup. Ct. 614, 36 L. Ed. 330; Colorado Cent. Consol. Min. Co. v. Turck, 50 Fed. 888, 2 C. C. A. 67; but where the apex which intersects an end line passes out of the claim across one of the side lines, the owner may still follow so much of the lode on the dip as lies between the end line, through which the vein passed, and its point of divergence from the claim; Del Monte Mining & Milling Co. v. Mining Co., 66 Fed. 212. Where two claims are so located that to follow the dip beyond the side lines would cause a conflict, that having priority of location must prevail; Tyler Min. Co. v. Sweeney, 54 Fed. 284, 4 C. C. A. 329. See U. S. R. S. § 2336.

A mining claim is a parcel of land containing precious metal in its soil or rock. A location is the act of appropriating such parcel, according to certain established rules. If the miner has only one location that "location" is identical with "mining claim," and the two designations may be indiscriminately used to denote the same thing; St. Louis Smelting & Refining Co. v. Kemp, 104 U. S. 649, 26 L. Ed. 875; if he acquires an adjoining location his claim covers both; id. See Lindl. Mines § 327. A transfer of a mining claim must be in writing; Garthe v. Hart, 73 Cal. 541, 15 Pac. 93.

A mining claim is real estate; Carrhart v. Mining Co., 1 Mont. 245; and descends to the heir; Keeler v. Trueman, 15 Col. 143, 25 Pac. 311; it is property; Blake v. Mining Co., 2 Utah 54; subject to execution; McKeon v. Bisbee, 9 Cal. 137, 70 Am. Dec. 642; and taxation; State v. Moore, 12 Cal. 56; and a lien for unpaid taxes; Forbes v. Gracey, 94 U. S. 762, 24 L. Ed. 313. An owner out of possession may maintain an ejectment or corresponding action; Merced Min. Co. v.

Fremont, 7 Cal. 317, 68 Am. Dec. 262; Herbert v. King, 1 Mont. 475; Lentz v. Victor, 17 Cal. 271; Aurora Hill Con. Min. Co. v. Mining Co., 34 Fed. 515; Reynolds v. Mining Co., 116 U. S. 687, 6 Sup. Ct. 601, 29 L. Ed. 774; contra, Duffy v. Mix, 24 Or. 265, 33 Pac. 807. See as to claims, 14 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 152.

There is no right of dower in an unpatented mining claim; Black v. Mining Co., 163 U. S. 445, 16 Sup. Ct. 1101, 41 L. Ed. 221; but in some cases dower has been allowed in mines; In re Seager, 92 Mich. 186, 52 N. W. 299; Lenfers v. Henke, 73 Ill. 405, 24 Am. Rep. 263; Priddy v. Griffith, 150 Ill. 560, 37 N. E. 999, 41 Am. St. Rep. 397; Rockwell v. Morgan, 13 N. J. Eq. 389; Hendrix v. McBeth, 61 Ind. 473, 28 Am. Rep. 680; Coates v. Cheever, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 460. See, as to dower, Black v. Min. Co., 52 Fed. 859, 3 C. C. A. 312, 7 U. S. App. 393.

Of joint owners, either may mine without the consent of the others, using the common property for the purpose intended, and it is no objection that the use is consumption; McCord v. Min. Co., 64 Cal. 134, 27 Pac. 863, 49 Am. Rep. 686; it is not waste; but he must account to his co-owners for ore mined; Barnum v. Landon, 25 Conn. 137; and any act for the benefit of the property, as the purchase of a paramount title inures to the benefit of all; Franklin Min. Co. v. O'Brien, 22 Col. 129, 43 Pac. 1016, 55 Am. St. Rep. 118. The interest may be the subject of partition; Hughes v. Devlin, 23 Cal. 502; but the mere fact of joint ownership does not give an equitable right to a division; the question must be fairly considered by a chancellor upon all the circumstances; Aspen Min. & Smelting Co. v. Rucker, 28 Fed. 220.

Joint owners who co-operate in working, constitute a mining partnership without any specific contract or agreement; Barr. & Ad. Mines 753. There may be an ordinary commercial partnership in the working of a mine, but this will arise only from agreement. A mining partnership, properly so called, is a relation springing only by implication from actual co-operation in the work; Kahn v. Smelting Co., 102 U. S. 641, 26 L. Ed. 266; Judge v. Braswell, 13 Bush (Ky.) 67, 26 Am. Rep. 185; Snyder v. Burnham, 77 Mo. 52; Dougherty v. Creary, 30 Cal. 290, 89 Am. Dec. 116; Decker v. Howell, 42 Cal. 636; State Nat. Bank v. Butler, 149 Ill. 575, 36 N. E. 1000. A mining partnership is not dissolved by the death of a partner, nor by the sale of his interest to a stranger; in the latter case the purchaser becomes a partner; Taylor v. Castle, 42 Cal. 367; Nisbet v. Nash, 52 Cal. 540; Charles v. Eshleman, 5 Col. 107.

Mining partnerships are in some states effectually regulated by statute; Cal. C. C. §§ 2511-2520; Mont. C. C. §§ 3350-3359; Idaho, R. S. §§ 3301-3309. In the latter state it has been said that a mining partnership, by virtue of the statute, "in all its essential elements is precisely like a corporation;" Hawkins v. Min. Co., 3 Idaho 650, 33 Pac. 40, where the substance of the statute is given. See as to mining partnerships, 28 Am. St. Rep. 488, n.

In most states where mining is an important industry, there are statutory provisions for securing the safety of those engaged in the employment. For a citation of these statutes see Barr. & Ad. Mines 780, note 1, where it is said that a discussion of the cases arising under these statutes is impossible because they involve no general principle. Such statutes have been held constitutional; Northumberland County v. Zimmerman, 75 Pa. 26. They are an exercise of the police power, as to the propriety and validity of which there can be little question. In their relation to the law of negligence these statutes enlarge and define the obligation of the mine owner, and fix absolutely his responsibility for injuries resulting from failure to comply with the act, wherever that failure is the proximate cause of the injury. But the violation of the statute does not excuse contributory negligence or authorize the employee to neglect his own safety; Barr. & Ad. Mines 785, where the cases are collected.

Mining acts in some states provide for the appointment by the state of mine bosses or foremen, who are practically placed in charge of the operation of the mines. The following is a substantial synopsis of such acts:

No one shall act as mine foreman unless he shall have been granted a certificate, after having passed a satisfactory examination before a board, and has given evidence of at least five years' practical experience as a miner, and of good conduct, capability and sobriety. A mine shall not be operated without a mine foreman for a longer period generally than thirty days.

A mine boss has charge of all matters pertaining to ventilation. He is the inside overseer of the mine. Where mines generate gas, he must examine them every day. Also every other day he must visit and examine every working place in the mine. Where props and timber are wanted, the miners are required to notify the mine boss, and if timber cannot be supplied when needed, work must be stopped, except in cases of emergency, when the miner must attend to his own propping.

Mine owner is not responsible for negligence of mine boss employed in obedience to a mining act; Dempsey v. Coal Co., 227 Pa. 571, 76 Atl. 745.

MINGLING OF GOODS. See CONFUSION OF GOODS.

MINIMUM WAGE. Such an amount as will maintain a normal standard of living, including the preservation of the health and efficiency of the worker. The wage board for the fixing of legal minimum rates was originated in Victoria in 1896 and they have since been adopted in England and Massachusetts. Several other states, especially Minnesota and Wisconsin, have considered their adoption. A constitutional amendment authorizing minimum wage legislation was adopted in Ohio.

The English law enacted in 1909 was designed primarily to destroy "sweating" in industries carried on in the workers' homes. It is carried out through the medium of trade or wage boards. The boards fix the wages, and appeals may be taken from the trade boards to the board of trade. In 1912 the law, which had previously related to sweated home industry, was extended to the mining industry.

There has been strong opposition to such laws on constitutional grounds, because of the restriction in the 14th amendment and the doctrine of freedom of contract. In Massachusetts in 1911 a commission was appointed to establish a minimum wage board for the fixing of wages for women and children in any occupation in which the wages paid to a considerable number of workers is believed to be inadequate to maintain an American standard of living.

MINING PARTNERSHIP. See MINES AND MINING.

MINISTER. In Governmental Law. An officer who is placed near the sovereign, and is invested with the administration of the government. Ministers are responsible to the king or other supreme magistrate who has appointed them. Kibbe v. Antram, 4 Conn. 134.

In Ecclesiastical Law. One ordained by some church to preach the gospel. All clergymen of every denomination and faith. Haggin v. Haggin, 35 Neb. 375, 53 N. W. 209. A person elected by a Methodist society to be one of their local preachers, and ordained as a deacon of that church, is a minister of the gospel, within a statute exempting ministers from taxation. Baldwin v. McClinch, 1 Greenl. (Me.) 102. So is a person ordained as a Congregational minister and installed as such over a town. Gridley v. Clark, 2 Pick. (Mass.) 403. See L. R. 8 Q. B. 69.

Formerly the word was applied only to deacons, but it is now the most comprehensive ecclesiastical title. In the prayerbook it means the officiating clergyman, whether bishop, priest, or deacon. 14 P. D. 148.

Ministers are authorized in the United States, generally, to solemnize marriages, and are usually liable to fines and penalties for marrying minors contrary to the local regulations. As to the rights of ministers or parsons, see 3 Am. Jur. 268; Shepp. Touchst. Anthon ed. 564. Weston v. Hunt, 2 Mass. 500. See CLERGY; BENEFIT OF CLERGY; PARSON.

A name given to public functionaries who represent their country with foreign governments, including ambassadors, envoys, and residents.

A custom of modern origin has introduced a new kind of ministers, without any particular determination of character; these are simply called ministers, to indicate that they are invested with the general character of a sovereign's mandatories, without any particular assignment of rank, and without being invested with the representative character.

There are also ministers plenipotentiary, who, as they possess full powers, are of much greater distinction than simple ministers. These, also, are without any particular attribution of rank and character, but by custom are now placed immediately below the ambassador, or on a level with the envoy extraordinary; Vattel, liv. 4, c. 5, § 74; 1 Kent 48; Merlin, Répert.

Owing to frequent disputes between the several classes of diplomatic agents regarding precedence, the question was taken up by the Congress of Vienna and by the Congress of Aix-la-Chapelle, with the result that diplomatic agents are now divided into the following classes:

1. Ambassadors, and papal legates or nuncios.
2. Envoys, ministers, or others accredited to sovereigns (auprès des souverains).
3. Ministers resident, accredited to sovereigns.
4. Chargés d'affaires, accredited to the minister of foreign affairs. Public ministers take rank among themselves, in each class, according to the date of the official notification of the arrival at the court to which they are accredited. Recevez, du Congrès de Vienne, du 19 mars, 1815; Protocol du Congrès d'Aix-la-Chapelle, du Novembre, 1818; Wheaton, Int. Law § 211.

Consuls and other commercial agents are not, in general, considered as public ministers. See AMBASSADOR; CONSUL; RECALL.

MINISTERIAL. That which is done under the authority of a superior; opposed to judicial; as, the sheriff is a ministerial officer bound to obey the judicial commands of the court.

A ministerial act may be defined to be one which a person performs in a given state of facts, in a prescribed manner, in obedience to the mandate of legal authority without regard to or the exercise of his own judgment upon the propriety of the acts being done; American Casualty Insurance & Security Co. v. Flyler, 60 Conn. 448, 22 Atl. 494, 25 Am. St. Rep. 337; Rains v. Simpson, 50 Tex. 501, 32 Am. Rep. 609. Acts done out of court in bringing parties into court are, as a general proposition, ministerial acts; Pennington v. Streight, 54 Ind. 376. See South v. Maryland, 18 How. (U. S.) 396, 15 L. Ed. 433; State v. Doyle, 40 Wis. 175, 22 Am. Rep. 692; Diggs v. State, 49 Ala. 311.

When an officer acts in both a judicial and ministerial capacity, he may be compelled to perform ministerial acts in a particular way; but when he acts in a judicial capacity, he can only be required to proceed; the manner of doing so is left entirely to his judgment. See Cowan v. Adams, 10 Me. 377, 25 Am. Dec. 242; Bacon, Abr. Justices of the Peace (E); Fox v. Hills, 1 Conn. 295; Betts v. Dimon, 3 Conn. 107; Inhabitants of Town of Stratford v. Sanford, 9 Conn. 275; Crane v. Camp, 12 Conn. 464; MANDAMUS; OFFICE.

MINISTERIAL DUTY. One in respect to which nothing is left to discretion. A simple definite duty, arising under conditions admitted or proved to exist, and imposed by law, the performance of which may, in proper cases, be required of the head of a department by judicial process. Mississippi v. Johnson, 4 Wall. (U. S.) 498, 18 L. Ed. 437; State v. Staub, 61 Conn. 553, 23 Atl. 924.

MINISTERIAL TRUSTS (also called instrumental trusts). Those which demand no further exercise of reason or understanding than every intelligent agent must necessarily employ: as, to convey an estate. They are a species of special trusts, distinguished from discretionary trusts, which necessarily require much exercise of the understanding. 2 Bouvier, Inst. n. 1896.

MINISTRY. The term as used in England is wider than Cabinet and includes all the holders of public office who come in and go out with the Prime Minister. In this respect it may be contrasted with the Permanent Civil Service, whose tenure is independent of public changes. The first English Ministry as now understood was formed after the general election of 1696. Macaulay, Hist. Engl., ch. 24. See CABINET.

MINNESOTA. One of the states of the United States of America.

It was created a territory by act of congress, March 3, 1849, and admitted into the Union as a state, May 11, 1858, under a constitution framed and adopted by a convention at St. Paul, on the 29th day of August, 1857, pursuant to an act of congress of February 26, 1857, and submitted to and ratified by the people on the 13th of October, 1857.

MINOR (Lat. less; younger). One not a major, i. e. not twenty-one. Co. 2d Inst. 291; Co. Litt. 88, 128, 172 b; 6 Co. 67; Bracton, 340 b; Fleta, l. 2, c. 60, § 26.

Of less consideration; lower. Calvinus, Lex. Major and minor belong rather to civil law. The common-law terms are adult and infant. See AGE; CHILD.

MINORA REGALIA. The lesser prerogatives of the crown, relating to revenue. 1 Bla. Com. 241.

MINORITY. The state or condition of a minor; infancy. See AGE; INFANT.

The smaller number of votes of a deliberative assembly: opposed to majority.

The minority of a committee to which a corporate power has been delegated, cannot bind the majority, or do any valid act in the absence of any special provision otherwise; Brown v. District of Columbia, 127 U. S. 579, 8 Sup. Ct. 1314, 32 L. Ed. 262. See MINORITY REPRESENTATION.

MINT. The place designated by law where money is coined by authority of the government.

The mint was established by the act of April 2, 1792, and located at Philadelphia. There are mints of the United States now at Philadelphia, San Francisco, New Orleans, Carson, and Denver. R. S. § 3495. A failure by the director of the mint to observe a rule prescribing that he shall, at the annual settlement, require the weighing and counting of all bullion in the mints, does not relieve a superintendent of a mint of his responsibility for bullion in his custody; Bosbyshell v. U. S., 77 Fed. 944, 23 C. C. A. 581. His receipt for a certain quantity of bullion, and his admissions in reports and accounts that he holds it, are at least prima facie evidence that it came into his possession; id. He and his bondsmen are responsible for the loss of bullion which he has received, and which he cannot produce, though it has been lost or stolen without any negligence or fault on his part; id. When he has, on assuming office, receipted for a certain quantity of bullion, the same is thereafter in his custody, though accepted by him under lock and seal on the faith of a certificate as to its amount; id.

See COIN; FOREIGN COIN; MONEY; ANNUAL ASSAY.

MINT-MARK. The masters and workers of the mint, in the indentures made with them, agree to make a privy mark in the money they make, of gold and silver, so that they may know which moneys were of their own making; after every trial of the pix, having proved their moneys to be lawful, they are entitled to their quietus under the Great Seal, and to be thereanent discharged from all suits or actions; they then change the privy mark, so that the moneys from which they are not yet discharged may be distinguished from those for which they are; they use the new mark until another trial of the pix. Wharton.

MINTAGE. That which is coined or stamped.

MINUS. Less; less than.

MINUTE. Measures. In divisions of the circle or angular measures, a minute is equal to sixty seconds, or one-sixtieth part of a degree.

In the computation of time, a minute is equal to sixty seconds, or the sixtieth part of an hour. See MEASURE.

In Practice. A memorandum of what takes place in court, made by authority of the court. From these minutes the record is afterwards made up.

Toullier says they are so called because the writing in which they were originally was small: that the word is derived from the Latin minuta (scriptura), in opposition to copies which were delivered to the parties, and which were always written in a larger hand. 8 Toullier, n. 413.

Minutes are not considered as any part of the record; Harvey v. Brown, 1 Ohio 268. See Pruden v. Alden, 23 Pick. (Mass.) 184, 34 Am. Dec. 51. It is not the office of the clerk's minutes to indicate the legal questions raised upon a trial and determined by the court; Scott v. Morgan, 94 N. Y. 514; Johnson v. Com., 80 Ky. 377; State v. Howard, 34 La. Ann. 369.

OF CORPORATE MEETINGS. It is usual for boards of directors of corporations to keep a regular record in writing of their proceedings. It has been said that such a record is essential either to the proof or validity of their acts and contracts. Such may be the case if the charter makes the keeping of such a record essential to the validity of corporate acts. But in the absence of a provision directing the keeping of such records, there appears to be no reason for any distinction between recording in writing the acts of a board of agents of a corporation, and of the agents of a natural person. Provisions in charters directing that minutes be kept are merely directory; a failure to keep them does not affect the validity of corporate acts; Bank of U. S. v. Dandridge, 12 Wheat. (U. S.) 75, 6 L. Ed. 552; Ang. & A. Corp. 291 a; Green's Brice, Ultra Vires 522, n. b. See Lyndeborough Glass Co. v. Glass Co., 111 Mass. 315; Foot v. R. Co., 32 Vt. 633.

The failure to enter a vote of stockholders in the corporation records at the time when it was adopted does not affect its validity; Handley v. Stutz, 139 U. S. 417, 11 Sup. Ct. 530, 35 L. Ed. 227.

When such records are kept, they are the best evidence of the proceedings of a meeting; but if no minutes were kept, or if, in a suit against the corporation, and upon notice, the corporation neglects or refuses to produce its books, other evidence is admissible; Foot v. R. Co., 32 Vt. 633; Lyndeborough Glass Co. v. Glass Co., 111 Mass. 315; Ang. & A. Corp. 291 a.

A party may introduce in evidence relevant portions of corporate minutes, without being required to offer all that relates to the matter in question, the opposite party having the right to introduce such other portions as are relevant; Fouché v. Bank, 110 Ga. 827, 36 S. E. 256.

MINUTE-BOOK. A book kept by the clerk or prothonotary of a court, in which minutes of its proceedings are entered.

MINUTE TITHES. Small tithes, usually belonging to the vicar; e. g. eggs, honey, wax, etc. 3 Burn, Eccl. Law 680; 6 & 7 Will. IV. c. 71, §§ 17, 18, 27.

MIRROR DES JUSTICES. The Mirror of Justices, a legal treatise once supposed to have been written during the reign of Edward II. Andrew Horne is its reputed author. But it has been thought that the germ of it was written before the Conquest and that Horne only made additions to it; Marv. Leg. Bibl. 396. But F. W. Maitland holds to the contrary; and also that the evidence that Horne wrote it is not conclusive. It was first published in 1642, and in 1646 it was translated into English by William Hughes. It was first cited in court in 1550. Coke said (9 Rep. Pref.): "In this book in effect appeareth the whole frame of the common law." It was published by the Selden Society with an introduction by Prof. Maitland. Through Coke's use of it, it was long regarded as an important source of English legal history; but it is known now that it is no authority for the law of the 13th or any other century; 2 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 284. Palgrave (2 Engl. Commonw. exil) regarded it as apocryphal. See 13 L. Q. R. 85; 11 id. 395 (Sir F. Pollock).

Maitland's opinion of the work may be gathered in a few words from his introduction to the reprint of it in 1893, by the Selden Society: "Is he [its author] lawyer, antiquary, preacher, agitator, pedant, faddist, lunatic, romancer, liar? A little of all, perhaps, but the romancer seems to predominate."

MISADVENTURE. An accident by which an injury occurs to another.

When applied to homicide, misadventure is the act of a man who, in the performance of a lawful act, without any intention to do harm, and after using proper precaution to prevent danger, unfortunately kills another person. The act upon which the death ensues must be neither malum in se nor malum prohibitum. The usual examples under this head are: 1, when the death ensues from innocent recreations; 2, from moderate and lawful correction in foro domestico; 3, from acts lawful and indifferent in themselves, done with proper and ordinary caution; 4 Bla. Com. 182; 1 East, Pl. Cr. 221. It happens in consequence of a lawful act; involuntary manslaughter, in consequence of an unlawful act; Johnson v. State, 94 Ala. 41, 10 South. 667.

See HOMICIDE; MANSLAUGHTER; CORRECTION.

MISAPPLICATION. As used in 7 Hen. IV. s. 44, the misapplication of public funds only covers cases of corrupt practices or of showing illegal favor. 30 H. L. 752.

MISAPPROPRIATION. It is not a technical term of law, but it is sometimes applied to the misdemeanor which is committed by a banker, factor, agent, trustee, etc., who fraudulently deals with money, goods, securities, etc., entrusted to him, or by a director or public officer of a corporation or company who fraudulently misapplies any of its property. Sweet. L. Dict. See EMBEZZLEMENT.

MISBEHAVIOR. Improper or unlawful conduct. See State v. Bell, 2 Mart. La. (N. S.) 683.

A party guilty of misbehavior, as, for example, to threaten to do injury to another, may be bound to his good behavior, and thus restrained. As to misbehavior of juries, see NEW TRIAL.

MISCARRIAGE. In Medical Jurisprudence. The expulsion of the ovum or embryo from the uterus within the first six weeks after conception. Between that time, and before the expiration of the sixth month, when the child may possibly live, it is termed abortion. When the delivery takes place soon after the sixth month, it is denominated premature labor. But the criminal act of destroying the fœtus at any time before birth is termed, in law, procuring miscarriage. Chitty, Med. Jur. 410; 2 Dugl. Hum. Phys. 364. See ABORTION; FœTUS.

In Practice. A term used in the Statute of Frauds to denote that species of wrongful act for the consequences of which the wrongdoer would be responsible at law in a civil action. By the English Statute of Frauds, 29 Car. II. c. 3, § 4, it is enacted that "no action shall be brought to charge the defendant upon any special promise to answer for the debt, default, or miscarriage of another person, unless the agreement," etc., "shall be in writing," etc.

The wrongful riding the horse of another, without his leave or license, and thereby causing his death, is clearly an act for which the party is responsible in damages, and, therefore, falls within the meaning of the word miscarriage: 2 B. & Ald. 516; Burge, Sur. 21.

MISCASTING. An error in auditing and numbering. It does not include any pretended miscasting or misvaluing. 4 Bouvier, Inst. n. 4128.

MISCEGENATION (Lat. miscere, to mix, and genere, to beget). A mixture of races. The intermarriage of persons belonging to the white and black races. In many of the states this is prohibited by statute. The constitutionality of such statutes has been repeatedly affirmed; State v. Jackson, 80 Mo. 175, 50 Am. Rep. 499; McClain Cr. L. § 57; Frasher v. State, 3 Tex. App. 263, 30 Am. Rep. 131; Green v. State, 58 Ala. 190, 29 Am. Rep. 739; Kinney v. Com., 30 Gratt. (Va.) 858, 32 Am. Rep. 690; Lonas v. State, 3 Heisk. (Tenn.) 287. It has been further held that a statute denouncing a severer penalty on persons of the two races living together in adultery, than that prescribed for a like offence between persons of the same race, is constitutional; Green v. State, 58 Ala. 190, 29 Am. Rep. 739; Pace v. Alabama, 106 U. S. 583, 1 Sup. Ct. 637, 27 L. Ed. 207; 2 Whart. Cr. L. § 1754. See CIVIL RIGHTS.

MISCHIEF. A term used in the law of statutory construction to designate the evil or danger intended to be cured or avoided by the statute. See MALICIOUS MISCHIEF.

MISCOGNIZANT. Ignorant, or not knowing. Stat. 32 Hen. VIII. c. 9. Little used.

MISCONDUCT. Unlawful behavior by a person intrusted in any degree with the administration of justice, by which the rights of the parties and the justice of the case may have been affected.

A verdict will be set aside when any of the jury have been guilty of such misconduct; and a court will set aside an award if it has been obtained by the misconduct of an arbitrator; 2 Atk. 501, 504; 2 Chitt. Bail. 44; 1 Salk. 71; 3 P. Wms. 362; 1 Dick. 66. See Kansas City M. & B. R. Co. v. Phillips, 98 Ala. 159, 13 South. 65; Wood River Bank v. Dodge, 36 Neb. 708, 55 N. W. 234.

Under a statute having reference to a divorce dissolving the marriage contract because of the misconduct of the wife, it relates to adultery; Van Cleef v. Burns, 133 N. Y. 540, 30 N. E. 661, 15 L. R. A. 542.

See NEW TRIAL.

MISCONTINUANCE. In Practice. A continuance of a suit by undue process. Its effect is the same as a discontinuance. 2 Hawk. Pl. Cr. 299; Jenk. Cent. Cas. 57.

MISCREANT. An apostate; an unbeliever; one who totally renounces Christianity. 4 Bla. Comm. 44.

MISDELIVERY. The delivery of property by a carrier to a person not authorized by the owner or person to whom the carrier is bound by his contract to deliver it. Forbes v. R. Co., 133 Mass. 156.

MISDEMEANANT. A person guilty of a misdemeanor. See FIRST-CLASS MISDEMEANANT.

MISDEMEANOR. A term used to express every offence inferior to felony, punishable by indictment, or by particular prescribed proceedings. In its usual acceptance, it is applied to all those crimes and offences for which the law has not provided a particular name.

It has a common-law, a parliamentary, and a popular sense. In a parliamentary sense, as applied to officers, it means maladministration or misconduct, not necessarily indictable. Demeanor is conduct, and misdemeanor is misconduct, in the business of one's office. It must be in matters of importance, and be of a character to show a wilful disregard of duty; 6 Amer. Law Reg. (N. S.) 649; State v. Hastings, 37 Neb. 96, 55 N. W. 774.

The test whether or not a certain crime is a crime at common law, is, not whether precedents for so treating it can be found in the books, but whether it injuriously affects the public policy and economy; Com. v. McHale, 97 Pa. 397, 39 Am. Rep. 808, followed in Com. v. Randolph, 146 Pa. 83, 23 Atl. 388, 28 Am. St. Rep. 782, where it was held that a solicitation to commit murder meets this test.

The word is generally used in contradistinction to felony; misdemeanors comprehending all indictable offences which do not amount to felony, as perjury, battery, libels, conspiracies, and public nuisances, but not including a multitude of offences over which magistrates have an exclusive summary jurisdiction, for a brief designation of which our legal nomenclature is at fault. Misdemeanors have sometimes been called misprisions. See 1 Bish. Cr. L. § 624. See FELONY; CRIME; MERGER.

Military law makes no distinction between felony and misdemeanor.

MISDESCRIPTION. An erroneous or false description of a contract which is misleading in a material point.

MISDIRECTION. An error made by a judge in charging the jury in a special case.

It is a rule, subject to the qualifications hereafter stated, that when the judge at the trial misdirects the jury on matters of law material to the issue, whatever may be the nature of the case, the verdict will be set aside, and a new trial granted; 6 Mod. 242; 2 Wils. 269; Williams v. Cheesebrough, 4 Conn. 356; or, if such misdirection appear in the bill of exceptions, or otherwise upon the record, a judgment founded on a verdict thus obtained will be reversed. And although the charge of the court be not positively erroneous, yet, if it have a tendency to mislead the jury, and it be uncertain whether they would have found as they did if the instructions had been entirely correct, a new trial will be granted; West v. Anderson, 9 Conn. 107, 21 Am. Dec. 737. When the issue consists of a mixed question of law and fact, and there is a conceded state of facts, the rest is a question for the court; Divver v. McLaughlin, 2 Wend. (N. Y.) 596, 20 Am. Dec. 655; and a misdirection in this respect will avoid the verdict. In England, under the Judicature Act of 1875, a new trial will not be granted on the ground of misdirection or of the improper admission or rejection of evidence, unless in the opinion of the court, to which the application is made, some substantial wrong has been thereby occasioned; and, if it appear that such wrong or miscarriage affects part only of the matter in controversy, the court may give final judgment as to part thereof, and direct a new trial as to the other part only; 1 Sched. Ord. xxxix. v. 3; L. R. 10 Stat. 1875, 817.

Misdirection as to matters of fact will, in some cases, be sufficient to vitiate the proceedings. For example: misapprehension of the judge as to a material circumstance, and a direction to the jury accordingly; 1 Const. So. C. 200; or instructing them upon facts which are purely hypothetical, whereby they are misled; Griffin v. Witherspoon, 8 Ga. 114; or an instruction which assumes a material fact to have been proved; Jonas v. Field, 83 Ala. 445, 3 South. 893; Deeds v. Ry. Co., 74 Ia. 154, 37 N. W. 124; submitting as a contested point what has been admitted; Toby v. Reed, 9 Conn. 216; giving to the jury a peremptory direction to find in a given way, when there are facts in the case conducive to a different conclusion; Fitzgerald v. Alexander, 19 Wend. (N. Y.) 402; or where the evidence is so conflicting or rests so largely upon inference or circumstance, that a court could not rightfully sustain a demurrer to the evidence of the opposite party; Tabler v. Coal Co., 87 Ala. 305, 6 South. 196. See Nelson v. Ry. Co., 73 Ia. 576, 35 N. W. 611; Harris v. R. Co., 35 Fed. 116. There are, however, many cases in which the court may instruct the jury, upon the whole evidence, to find for one or the other party; and when a verdict formed under such instruction is conformable to the law, the evidence, and the justice of the case, it is rarely disturbed; Chiles v. Boothe, 3 Dana (Ky.) 566. But to warrant an unqualified direction to the jury in favor of a party, the evidence must either be undisputed or the preponderance so decided that a verdict against it would be set aside; Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Laack, 143 Ill. 242, 32 N. E. 285, 18 L. R. A. 215; Monroe v. Ins. Co., 52 Fed. 777, 3 C. C. A. 280, 5 U. S. App. 179; and where a special verdict is directed, the court is not bound to give any instructions as to the general rules of law governing the case; Johnson v. Culver, 116 Ind. 278, 19 N. E. 129; Cole v. Crawford, 69 Tex. 124, 5 S. W. 616. When the court delivers its opinion to the jury on a matter of fact, it should be as opinion, and not as direction; New York Firemen Ins. Co. v. Walden, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 513, 7 Am. Dec. 340. But it is, in general, allowed a very liberal discretion in this regard; 1 M'Cl. & Y. 286. Where the question is one of mere fact, no expressions of the judge, however strong or erroneous will amount to a misdirection, provided the question is fairly presented to the jury and left with them for their decision; 4 Moore & S. 295; Com. v. Child, 10 Pick. (Mass.) 252; Lovejoy v. U. S., 128 U. S. 171, 9 Sup. Ct. 57, 32 L. Ed. 389. The weight of evidence is solely for the jury; and an instruction thereupon is erroneous; Barnett v. State, 83 Ala. 40, 3 South. 612; People v. Gastro, 75 Mich. 127, 42 N. W. 937.

Unless the misdirection be excepted to, the party by his silence will be deemed to have waived it. But see Geer v. Archer, 2 Barb. (N. Y.) 420; see Krepps v. Carlisle, 157 Pa. 358, 27 Atl. 741; Stock Quotation Telegraph Co. v. Board of Trade, 144 Ill. 370, 33 N. E. 42.

As to its effects, the misdirection must be calculated to do injustice; for if it be entirely certain that justice has been done, and that a re-hearing would produce the same result, or if the amount in dispute be very trifling, so that the injury is scarcely appreciable, a new trial will not be granted; Thorn. Juries § 204; Depeyster v. Ins. Co., 2 Caines (N. Y.) 85; Arrington v. Cherry, 10 Ga. 429; 3 Grah. & W. New Tr. 705; Hill. New Tr. 96. See NEW TRIAL; CHARGE.

MISE (Lat. mittere, through the French mettre, to place). In Pleading. The issue in a writ of right. The tenant in a writ of right is said to join the mise on the merc right when he pleads that his title is better than the demandant's; 2 Wms. Saund. 45, h, i. It was equivalent to the general issue; and everything except collateral warranty might be given in evidence under it by the tenant; 3 Wils. 420; Green v. Watkins, 7 Wheat. (U. S.) 31, 5 L. Ed. 388; Inglis v. Sailor's Snug Harbor, 3 Pet. (U. S.) 133, 7 L. Ed. 617; Ten Eyck v. Waterbury, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 52; Bell's Heirs v. Snyder, 10 Gratt. (Va.) 350. The payee in aid, on coming into court, joined in the mise together with the tenant; 2 Wms. Saund. 45 d. It was a more common practice, however, for the demandant to traverse the tenant's plea, when the cause could be tried by a common jury instead of the grand assize.

In Practice. Expenses. It is so commonly used in the entries of judgments, in personal actions: as, when the plaintiff recovers, the judgment is quod recuperet damna sua (that he recover his damages), and pro misis et custagiis (for costs and charges) so much, etc.

MISE MONEY. Money paid by way of contract or composition to purchase any liberty, etc. Blount.

MISERABLE DEPOSITUM (Lat.). In Civil Law. The name of an involuntary deposit, made under pressing necessity; as, for instance, shipwreck, fire, or other inevitable calamity. Pothier, Proc. Civ. pt. 5, ch. 1, § 1; La. Code § 2935.

MISERERE. The first word and usual name of one of the penitential psalms, being that which was commonly used to be given by the ordinary to such condemned malefactors as were allowed the benefit of clergy (q. v.); whence it is also called the psalm of mercy. Wharton. See NECK VERSE.

MISERICORDIA (Lat.). An arbitrary or discretionary amendment.

To be in mercy is to be liable to such punishment as the judge may in his discretion inflict. According to Spelman, misericordia is so called because the party is in mercy, and to distinguish this fine from redemptions, or heavy fines. Spelman, Gloss. See Co. Litt. 126 b; Madox 14. See IN MISERICORDIA.

MISFEASANCE. The performance of an act which might lawfully be done, in an improper manner, by which another person receives an injury.

It differs from malfeasance or nonfeasance. Misfeasance is the wrongful and injurious exercise of lawful authority, or the doing of a lawful act in an unlawful manner, while malfeasance is doing an act which is positively unlawful or wrongful. 23 L. Mag. & Rev. 139. See, generally, 2 Viner, Abr. 35; 2 Kent 443; Doctrina Plac. 62; Story, Bailm. § 9.

It seems to be settled that there is a distinction between misfeasance and nonfeasance in the case of mandates. In cases of nonfeasance the mandatory is not generally liable, because, his undertaking being gratuitous, there is no consideration to support it; but in cases of misfeasance the common law gives a remedy for the injury done, and to the extent of that injury; 5 Term 143; Thompson v. Gregory, 4 Johns. (N. Y.) 81, 4 Am. Dec. 255; 2 Id. Raym. 909; Coite v. Lynes, 33 Conn. 109; Story, Bailm. § 165.

MISFORTUNE. It is equivalent to some adverse event not immediately dependent on the action or will of him who suffers from it, and of so improbable a character that no prudent man would take it into his calculations in reference to the interest of himself or of others. 20 Q. B. Div. 816.

MISJOINDER. In Pleading. The improper union of parties or causes of action in one suit at law or in equity.

Of Actions. The joining several demands which the law does not permit to be joined, to enforce by one proceeding several distinct, substantive rights of recovery. Gould, PL c. 4, § 98; Archb. Civ. Pl. 61; Dane, Abr.

In equity, it is the joinder of different and distinct claims against one defendant; Adams, Eq. 309; 7 Sim. 241; Newland v. Rogers, 3 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 432. The grounds of suit must be wholly distinct, and each ground must be sufficient, as stated, to sustain a bill; 5 Ired. Eq. 313. See Larkins v. Biddle, 21 Ala. 252; Nail v. Mobley, 9 Ga. 278; Dunn v. Cooper, 3 Md. Ch. Dec. 46; Robinson v. Cross, 22 Conn. 171.

It may arise from the joinder of plaintiffs who possess distinct claims; 2 Sim. 331; Yeaton v. Lenox, 8 Pet. (U. S.) 123, 8 L. Ed. 889; see [1893] 1 Q. B. 771; but see Brinkerhoff v. Brown, 6 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 150; More v. Smedburgh, 8 Paige Ch. (N. Y.) 605; or the joinder of distinct claims of the plaintiff in one bill; 2 S. & S. 79; Allegany & K. R. Co. v. Weidenfeld, 5 Misc. 43, 25 N. Y. Supp. 71. But it seems that where there is a common liability of the defendants and a common interest in the plaintiffs, different claims may be united in the same suit; 1 M. & C. 623; Nelson v. Hill, 5 How. (U. S.) 127, 12 L. Ed. 81; Robinson v. Guild, 12 Metc. (Mass.) 323. And see 2 Y. & C. 389; Story, Eq. Pl. § 536, n.; MULTIFARIOUSNESS.

At law, misjoinder vitiates the entire declaration, whether taken advantage of by general demurrer; 1 Maule & S. 355; motion in arrest of judgment, or writ of error; 2 B. & P. 424. It may be aided by verdict in some cases; 2 Lev. 110; 2 Maule & S. 533; 1 Chitty Pl. 188. Where a single count of a complaint contains one cause of action in tort and another in contract, and plaintiff is allowed over objections to introduce evidence to sustain both causes, the error is not cured by plaintiff's election after the trial, to recover in contract only, when the judgment rendered does not limit plaintiff's recovery of costs to those incurred in the action in contract; Wirth v. Bartell, 84 Wis. 209, 54 N. W. 399.

Of Parties. The joining, as plaintiffs or defendants, parties who have not a joint interest.

In England, under the Judicature Act, 1875, by order xvi. v. 13, no action is to be defeated by the misjoinder of the parties. Different causes of action which cannot be tried together conveniently may be ordered by the court or a judge to be tried separately. Mozl. & W. Dict.

In equity, the joinder of improper plaintiffs is a fatal defect; Cammeyer v. United German Lutheran Churches, 2 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 186; Clason v. Lawrence, 3 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 48; Bowie v. Minter, 2 Ala. 406. But the court may exercise a discretion whether to dismiss the bill; Murray v. Hay, 1 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 59, 43 Am. Dec. 773; Gilbert v. Sutliff, 3 Ohio St. 129. It may be dismissed wholly, or only as to a portion of the plaintiffs; Myers v. Farrington, 18 Ohio 72. The improper joinder of defendants is no cause of objection by a co-defendant; Toulmin v. Hamilton, 7 Ala. 362; Bugbee v. Sargent, 23 Me. 269. See North Hudson Mut. Bldg. & Loan Ass'n v. Childs, 86 Wis. 292, 56 N. W. 370.

The objection must be taken before the hearing; Livingston v. Woodworth, 15 How. (U. S.) 546, 14 L. Ed. 809; Trustees of Village of Watertown v. Cowen, 4 Paige Ch. (N. Y.) 510, 27 Am. Dec. 80; not, however, if it be vital; Winnipissiogee Lake Co. v. Worster, 29 N. H. 433; by demurrer, if apparent on the face of the bill; Talmage v. Pell, 9 Paige Ch. (N. Y.) 410; Toulmin v. Hamilton, 7 Ala. 362; McMillan v. Baxley, 112 N. C. 578, 16 S. E. 845; but see Spear v. Campbell, 4 Scam. (Ill.) 424; by plea and answer, or otherwise; Story v. Livingston, 13 Pet. (U. S.) 359, 10 L. Ed. 200; where the defect does not appear upon the face of the petition, objection must be raised by answer; Crenshaw v. Ullman, 113 Mo. 633, 20 S. W. 1077. A defendant who is improperly joined must plead or demur; Lyne v. Guardian, 1 Mo. 410, 13 Am. Dec. 509.

At law, see ABATEMENT; PLEADING.

An answer stating facts showing a misjoinder of plaintiffs, but not objecting to the action on that ground is not sufficient to save such an objection; Donahue v. Bragg, 49 Mo. App. 273; where no objection is made in the court below to a misjoinder of parties defendant, no advantage can be taken of it on appeal; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. City of Denver, 2 Colo. App. 436, 31 Pac. 240.

MISKENNING (Fr. mis, wrong, and Sax. cennan, summon). A wrongful citation to appear in court. A variance in a plea. 1 Mon. Angl. 237; Chart. Hen. II.; Jacob, Law Dict.; Du Cange.

MISNOMER. The use of a wrong name.

In contracts, a mistake in the name will not avoid the contract, in general, if the party can be ascertained; 11 Co. 20; Ld. Raym. 304; Hob. 125. So of contracts of corporations; Hoboken Building Ass'n v. Martin, 13 N. J. Eq. 427. See NAME. If a deed, note, etc., be made to a corporation under an erroneous name, the proper course is for the corporation to sue in its proper name and allege that the defendant made the deed, etc., to the corporation by the name mentioned in the instrument; Northwestern Distilling Co. v. Brant, 69 Ill. 658, 18 Am. Rep. 631. A contract entered into by a corporation under an assumed name may be enforced by either of the parties, and the identity of the company may be established by the ordinary methods of proof; Marmet Co. v. Archibald, 37 W. Va. 778, 17 S. E. 299.

A misnomer of a legatee will not, in general, avoid a legacy, when the context furnishes the means of correction; Schoul. Wills § 583; see 19 Ves. 381; 1 Rep. Leg. 131; LEGACY. A legacy given to a corporation, either by its corporate name, or by description, is good; in the latter case it must be so designated as to be distinguished from every other corporation; New York Inst. for the Blind v. How's Ex'rs, 10 N. Y. 84. See Preachers' Aid Soc. of Maine Conference of Methodist Episcopal Church v. Rich, 45 Me. 552; Burdine v. Grand Lodge of Alabama, 37 Ala. 478.

When a corporation is misnamed in a statute, the statute is not inoperative if there is enough to designate what corporation is meant; 10 Co. 44, 57 b.

Misnomer of one of the parties to a suit must be pleaded in abatement. It has been held that misnomer of one of the partners of a firm in a scire facias sur mortgage is unimportant, if the name of the firm is correct in the mortgage itself; Rushton v. Rowe, 64 Pa. 63. A slight variation in a corporate name will be disregarded unless the misnomer be taken advantage of by a plea in abatement; Hoereth v. Mill Co., 30 Ill. 151; Thatcher v. Bank, 19 Mich. 196. If a corporation, sued by an erroneous name, appears by that name without objection, the error is cured; Virginia & M. Steam Nav. Co. v. U. S., Taney 418, Fed. Cas. No. 16,973. See Merchants' & Planters' Bank v. Meyer, 56 Ark. 499, 20 S. W. 406. But a writ of mandamus issued against a corporation under an erroneous name is void; 2 Ld. Raym. 1238; and an error in the corporate name in an execution is fatal; Bradford v. Water Lot Co., 58 Ga. 280. The same is true when there is an error in the corporate name in a judgment; 1 Ld. Raym. 117; but see Sherman v. Proprietors of Bridge, 11 Mass. 338.

The names of third persons must be correctly laid; for the error will not be helped by pleading the general issue; but, if a sufficient description be given, it has been held, in a civil case, that the misnomer was immaterial. Example: in an action for medicines alleged to have been furnished to defendant's wife, Mary, and his wife was named Elizabeth, the misnomer was held to be immaterial, the word wife being the material word; 2 Marsh. 159. See Bigelow v. Chatterton, 51 Fed. 614, 2 C. C. A. 402, 10 U. S. App. 267. In indictments, the names of third persons must be correctly given; Rosc. Cr. Ev. 78. If a person is well known by the name in the indictment, the indictment is good; 7 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 445; the middle name of a defendant, if stated in an indictment, either in full or by the initial letter, must be correctly stated; 1 Am. L. Reg. 380. That a party is known by one name as well as another, is a good replication to a plea of misnomer; Parnelee v. Raymond, 43 Ill. App. 609. Accuracy is especially required in stating the correct name of a corporation in all criminal proceedings in which it may be concerned; 1 Leach 253; but see People v. Potter, 35 Cal. 110. See ARCHBOLD; CHITTY, Pleading; ABATEMENT; CONTRACT; PARTIES; LEGACY; NAME.

MISPLEADING. Pleading incorrectly, or omitting anything in pleading which is essential to the support or defence of an action, is so called.

Pleading not guilty to an action of debt is an example of the first; setting out a defective title is an example of the second. See 3 Salk. 365.

MISPRISION. In Criminal Law. A term used to signify every considerable misdemeanor which has not a certain name given to it by law. Co. 3d Inst. 36.

The concealment of a crime.

Negative misprision consists in the concealment of something which ought to be revealed.

Misprision of felony is the like concealment of felony, without giving any degree of maintenance to the felon; Act of Congress of April 30, 1790, s. 6, R. S. § 5390; for if any aid be given him, the party becomes an accessory after the fact.

Misprision of treason is the concealment of treason by being merely passive. Act of Congress of April 30, 1790, R. S. § 5333; 1 East, Pl. Cr. 139. If any assistance be given to the traitor, it makes the party a principal, as there are no accessories in treason.

Positive misprision consists in the commission of something which ought not to be done. 4 Bla. Com. c. 9.

It is the duty of every good citizen, knowing of a treason or felony having been committed, to inform a magistrate. Silently to observe the commission of a felony, without using any endeavors to apprehend the offender, is a misprision. 1 Russ. Cr. 43; 1 Bish. Cr. L. § 720; Hawk. Pl. Cr. c. 59, s. 6; 4 Bla. Com. 119.

In Coke's time the term had got an extended meaning; it was not merely a crime of omission, but a crime of commission (3 Inst. 139). In this latter sense it was a vague offence which covered many and various offences. 3 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 312. At present it is the passive omission to do one's duty—to stand by and make no attempt to apprehend the offender or give information to the police. The least degree of assent makes the person a principal in treason, or in felonies a principal or accessory. Odger C. L. 201.

Misprisings which are merely positive are denominated contempts or high misdemeanors: as, for example, dissuading a witness from giving evidence. 4 Bla. Com. 126.

MISREADING. When a deed is read falsely to an illiterate or blind man who is a party to it, such false reading amounts to a fraud, because the contract never had the assent of both parties; 5 Co. 19; 6 East 309. See SIGNATURE.

MISRECITAL. The incorrect recital of a matter of fact, either in an agreement or a plea: under the latter term is here understood the declaration and all the subsequent pleadings. See RECITAL.

MISREPRESENTATION. The statement made by a party that a thing is in fact in a particular way, when it is not so.

The misrepresentation must be both false and fraudulent in order to make the party making it responsible to the other for damages; Otis v. Raymond, 3 Conn. 413; Emerson v. Brigham, 10 Mass. 197, 6 Am. Dec. 109; Metc. Yelv. 21 a, n. 1. And see 5 Maule & S. 380; 3 B. & P. 370; Wachsmuth v. Martini, 45 Ill. App. 244. Misrepresentation as to a material part of the consideration will avoid an executory contract; Chatham Furnace Co. v. Moffatt, 147 Mass. 403, 18 N. E. 168, 9 Am. St. Rep. 727; Byrne v. Stewart, 124 Pa. 450, 17 Atl. 19; Angell v. Loomis, 97 Mich. 5, 55 N. W. 1008.

A misrepresentation, to constitute fraud, must be contrary to fact; the party making it must know it to be so; 2 Kent 471; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 142; 4 Price 135; Bradley

v. Chase, 22 Me. 511; Dale v. Roosevelt, 5 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 182; Barnard v. Iron Co., 85 Tenn. 139, 2 S. W. 21; King v. Investment Co., 76 Ia. 11, 39 N. W. 919; Stevens v. Allen, 51 Kan. 144, 32 Pac. 922; Childs v. Merrill, 63 Vt. 463, 22 Atl. 626, 14 L. R. A. 264; excluding cases of mere mistake; 5 Q. B. 804; 10 M. & W. 147; Hammatt v. Emerson, 27 Me. 309, 46 Am. Dec. 598; Lord v. Colley, 6 N. H. 99, 25 Am. Dec. 445; and including cases where he falsely asserts a personal knowledge; Lobdell v. Baker, 1 Metc. (Mass.) 193, 35 Am. Dec. 358; Hammatt v. Emerson, 27 Me. 309, 46 Am. Dec. 598; and one which was the inducement to the other party to enter into the contract; Concord Bank v. Gregg, 14 N. H. 331; 1 W. & M. 90, 342; English v. Benedict, 25 Miss. 167; Tindall v. Harkinson, 19 Ga. 448. See Sandford v. Handy, 23 Wend. (N. Y.) 260; Pollock, Cont. 542.

A contract is bad where a party is induced to enter into it by the innocent misstatement of facts by another; Mulvey v. King, 39 Ohio St. 491; Hunt v. Blanton, 89 Ind. 38; 2 Kent 471; but the misrepresentation must be the proximate and immediate cause of the transaction; Adams v. Schiffer, 11 Colo. 15, 17 Pac. 21, 7 Am. St. Rep. 202; and part of the same transaction; Barnett v. Barnett, 83 Va. 504, 2 S. E. 733; and the party seeking relief must have relied upon it; Fowler v. McCann, 86 Wis. 427, 56 N. W. 1085. In an action for misrepresentation of facts, it is not always necessary to prove that it was made with a fraudulent intent and with guilty knowledge; Montreal River Lumber Co. v. Mihills, 80 Wis. 540, 50 N. W. 507; but an innocent misrepresentation cannot be proved under a plea of fraud; 21 Can. S. C. R. 359.

To be material, the misrepresentation must be in respect to an ascertainable fact, as distinguished from a mere matter of opinion, judgment, probability, or expectation; if it is vague and indefinite in its nature and terms, or is merely a loose, conjectural, or exaggerated statement, it is not a material misrepresentation; Putman v. Bromwell, 73 Tex. 465, 11 S. W. 491; Finlayson v. Finlayson, 17 Or. 347, 21 Pac. 57, 3 L. R. A. 801, 11 Am. St. Rep. 836; Dawe v. Morris, 149 Mass. 188, 21 N. E. 313, 4 L. R. A. 158, 14 Am. St. Rep. 404.

A representation concerning a man's private rights, though it may involve matters of law, is as a whole deemed to be a statement of fact; 13 Q. B. D. 363; as is a representation that one has extraordinary and supernatural power in curing disease; Jules v. State, 85 Md. 305, 36 Atl. 1027. And representations from one bank to another that a business corporation is prosperous, well organized, doing a large business, and is a valued customer, and that an investigation has been made of its business and responsibility by a bank officer, are also representations of fact and not of opinion; Nevada Bank of San Francisco v. Bank, 59 Fed. 338. "A suppression of the truth may amount to a suggestion of falsehood;" Stewart v. Cattle Ranch Co., 128 U. S. 388, 9 Sup. Ct. 101, 32 L. Ed. 439; Nairn v. Ewalt, 51 Kan. 355, 32 Pac. 1110; and a false pretence need not be in regard to a fact which does in reality exist, but may be that a fact exists when it does not; 14 Crim. L. Mag. 1.

Mere honest expression of opinion will not, as a rule, be regarded as fraud, either as a basis for an action of deceit, or as ground for setting aside a contract, although the opinion may prove to be erroneous; Wise v. Fuller, 29 N. J. Eq. 257; Putman v. Brownwell, 73 Tex. 465, 11 S. W. 491; Max Meadows Land & Improvement Co. v. Brady, 92 Va. 71, 22 S. E. 845; Southern Development Co. v. Silva, 125 U. S. 247, 8 Sup. Ct. 881, 31 L. Ed. 678; L. R. 13 Q. B. D. 562. And this rule applies ordinarily to statements of the value of property to be bought or sold; Chrysler v. Canaday, 90 N. Y. 272, 43 Am. Rep. 166; Anderson v. McPike, 86 Mo. 293; Lion v. McClory, 106 Cal. 623, 40 Pac. 12; but it cannot be laid down as a matter of law that value is never a material fact; Picard v. McCormick, 11 Mich. 68; as where the defendant was employed to value real estate for an intended mortgagee, and gave a valuation which was in fact no valuation at all, it was held that the defendant owed a duty to the plaintiff which he had failed to discharge, and had made reckless statements on which plaintiff had acted, and therefore defendant was liable to plaintiff for the loss he had sustained; 39 Ch. D. 39.

So the mere puffing of articles to be sold is held not to amount to such a misrepresentation as will amount to fraud; Allen v. Hart, 72 Ill. 104; but this rule applies only when the purchaser has a full and fair opportunity to inspect the article and judge for himself, and not to things which are not the subject of any visible test or examination; Gaty v. Holcomb, 44 Ark. 216; and a vendor may be held guilty of deceit by reason of material untrue representations in respect to his own business or property, the truth of which representation he is bound and must be presumed to know; Lehigh Zinc & Iron Co. v. Bamford, 150 U. S. 673, 14 Sup. Ct. 219, 37 L. Ed. 1215. A person who makes representations of material facts, assuming or intending to convey the impression that he has adequate knowledge of the existence of such facts, when he is conscious that he has no such knowledge, is liable if he knew that they were false; id.

Statements as to future events are mere matters of opinion; Davidson v. Hobson, 59 Mo. App. 130; and however contrary to good faith and sound morals, they cannot form the basis of an action at law or in equity; Dugan v. Cureton, 1 Ark. 31, 31 Am. Dec.

727; but see Harvey v. Hadley, 87 Cal. 557, 26 Pac. 792, where although the question was not raised as to whether misrepresentations of prospects of property sold would entitle one to an action, yet as the measure of damages for such representations was decided, the court seem to have admitted that liability would arise therefrom.

Liability for Honest Misrepresentation. An affirmation of title, though made in good faith by a seller, renders him liable if the title is bad; 1 Ld. Raym. 593; and the law has taken the further step that even without such an affirmation an obligation will be implied, at least if the seller was in possession when the sale took place; 4 A. & E. 473. At the present day it is nearly universal law that any representation of fact as to the quality of the goods, made for the apparent purpose of inducing the buyer to purchase them, amounts to a warranty; Williston, Sales 201. Hence, a warranty of title and a warranty of quality must be a misrepresentation of an existing fact in precisely the same way that a fraudulent misrepresentation must now be, in order to furnish a basis for action. Iler v. Jennings, 87 S. C. 87, 68 S. E. 1041, furnishes an interesting comparison with the well-known case of Derry v. Peek, 14 App. Cas. 337. In the latter case the plaintiff was induced to take shares in a company by a misrepresentation of the directors in regard to a right which they stated had been given by special act of parliament to use steam or other mechanical motive power. In Iler v. Jennings the plaintiff was induced to buy shares of stock by representations of the seller as to the corporate assets and liabilities. In both cases the reasonable inference was that representations of fact were made for the purpose of inducing the plaintiff to purchase shares. In Iler v. Jennings it was held that a scienter need not be alleged or proved, but if the statement was made to induce the buyer to purchase, and he did purchase in reliance thereon, the defendant will be held liable. The English case held that the directors were not liable because a scienter was not proved.

An honest misrepresentation, then, made by a seller in regard to the goods sold in order to induce a sale, will render him liable.

Entirely analogous to the law of warranty in the sale of goods is the warranty which the law imposes upon an agent that he is authorized to act as such. The agent either expressly, or by necessary implication of fact, represents that he is an authorized agent, and it was decided in Collen v. Wright, 8 E. & B. 647, that the agent was liable as a warrantor. The case has been followed generally in this country; Mechem, Agency, § 545; and was followed in [1903] A. C. 114.

Liability by Estoppel in Pais. At the present day, though there are many expressions still made use of which seem to indicate that either fraud or culpable negligence is an essential element in estoppel, it is certain that positive statements of fact as to matters upon which the speaker should be correctly informed give rise to an estoppel, though there is neither fraud nor negligence. Thus Lord Esher says: "If a man by express terms or by conduct makes a representation to another of the existence of a certain state of facts which he intends to be acted upon in a certain way, and it be acted upon in that way, in the belief of the existence of such a state of facts, to the damage of him who so believes and acts, the first is estopped from denying the existence of such a state of facts; L. R. 10 C. P. 307, 317. See, also, Nickerson v. Insurance Co., 178 Mass. 308, 59 N. E. 814.

In England according to Derry v. Peek, an action for deceit will not lie for an honest misrepresentation. Many American courts go beyond the limits of the English rule, and hold a defendant liable in deceit, irrespective of good or bad faith, for making a positive false statement as to which he had special means of knowledge; Lehigh Zinc & Iron Co. v. Bamford, 150 U. S. 665, 14 Sup. Ct. 219, 37 L. Ed. 1215; Huntress v. Blodgett, 206 Mass. 318, 324, 92 N. E. 427; Hindman v. Bank, 112 Fed. 931, 50 C. C. A. 623, 57 L. R. A. 108; Prestwood v. Carlton, 162 Ala. 327, 50 South. 254; Tate v. Bates, 118 N. C. 287, 24 S. E. 482, 54 Am. St. Rep. 719; Ward v. Trimble, 103 Ky. 153, 44 S. W. 450.

The doctrine that one who positively states a fact as of his own knowledge is liable if the statement is false is not to be confused with the doctrine that if no reasonable ground existed for the statement it is evidence of fraud, or is evidence enough to make out a prima facie case of fraud.

In Michigan, the doctrine is settled that if there was in fact a misrepresentation, though made innocently, and its deceptive influence was effective, the plaintiff would have a right of action for damages caused thereby, either at law or in equity; Holcomb v. Noble, 69 Mich. 396, 37 N. W. 497.

Where a defendant makes a statement which is false if his words are given the natural meaning which his hearer would give them, but which are true if taken in some unnatural sense which he himself put upon them, there is no dishonesty in the defendant, even though he knew that the facts did not accord with the natural meaning of his words, provided that such natural meaning did not occur to him, it has been held that a defendant is not liable; Nash v. Trust Co., 163 Mass. 574, 40 N. E. 1039, 28 L. R. A. 753, 47 Am. St. Rep. 489; [1891] 2 Ch. 449.

The law of misrepresentation as laid down in Derry v. Peek is hopelessly inconsistent with the law governing misrepresentation where relied on as the basis of warranty or estoppel. See an article by Prof. Williston in 24 Harv. L. R. 451; DECEIT; FRAUD; ESTOPPEL; WARRANTY.

It is not necessary that the misrepresentations should have been made directly to the plaintiff; Pollock, Torts 282; 2 M. & W. 519; it may be published generally with the intention that they may be acted upon by any who choose; 3 B. & Ad. 114; as a time-table of a railway company announcing a train, which is not, in fact, running; 5 E. & B. 860; or a prospectus; L. R. 6 H. L. 377.

Where one states that he knows a thing to exist, when he does not know it to exist, he is guilty of fraud; this rule applies to facts susceptible of actual knowledge, and not matters of opinion, etc.; one who does not know a fact to exist must ordinarily be deemed to know that he does not know; Chatham Furnace Co. v. Moffatt, 147 Mass. 403, 18 N. E. 168, 9 Am. St. Rep. 727. "If persons take upon themselves to make assertions as to which they are ignorant, whether they are true or untrue, they must, in a civil point of view, be held as responsible as if they had asserted that which they knew to be untrue"; L. R. 4 H. L. 79; this ignorance is conscious ignorance; 14 App. Cas. 371. Where one has honestly made a representation and discovers that it is false before it is acted upon, he is deemed, if he has the means of communicating the truth and does not do so, to be making a false representation with knowledge of its untruth; see 1 D. G. M. & G. 660.

There may be a false pretence by conduct, as where one not a member of the university put on a cap and gown at Oxford and thereupon obtained goods on credit; 7 C. & P. 784; so where one having no money goes into a restaurant and orders a good dinner and cannot pay for it, it was held to be incurring a liability by fraud; 42 Sol. Journ. 78.

An action to recover for false representations made by the seller of personal property does not survive as against his estate, under a statute providing that actions "of trespass and trespass on the case for damages done to . . . personal estate shall survive"; Jones v. Ellis' Estate, 68 Vt. 544, 35 Atl. 488.

In the absence of any bad faith, a principal is not affected by a representation made by his agent, which the former knew to be untrue, as he would be by a fraudulent representation made either by himself or his agent; 2 Kent 621, n.; 1 H. L. C. 615; Cornfoot v. Fowke, 6 M. & W. 358; contra, Fitzsimmons v. Joslin, 21 Vt. 129, 52 Am. Dec. 46; 3 Q. B. 58. See Pollock, Torts 384; Benj. Sales § 445; Broom, Leg. Max. 707.

In the 1911 edition of Leake on Contracts, the editor says in the preface: "I think the time has now arrived when Cornfoot v. Fowke, 6 M. & W. 358, may be consigned to oblivion." Pollock (Contracts [1911] 609) seems to be in accord with this view. See also a discussion of the case in Pollock, Torts (1897 ed.) 291.

Where a purchaser has been induced to buy through the fraud of an agent, the vendor being innocent, he may rescind the contract or maintain an action of deceit against the agent personally, but against the principal he can maintain no action unless there was a warranty; Benj. Sales § 467, notes. See 3 Am. L. Rev. 430; Bigel. L. C. Torts 21; Coddington v. Goddard, 16 Gray (Mass.) 436.

If a principal knows the representation of his agent to be false and authorizes him to make it, the former is liable; if the agent makes the representation without specific authority, but not believing it to be true, the principal is liable (6 M. & W. 373); as to whether, in such case if the agent does believe the representation to be true, the principal is liable, is doubtful in England; Pollock, Torts 291. See AGENTS; see, generally, DECEIT; FRAUD.

MISSÆ PRESBYTER. A priest in orders. Blount; Cowell.

MISSILIA. In Roman Law. Gifts which officers were in the habit of throwing among the people. Inst. 2, 1, 45.

MISSING SHIP. A ship which has been at sea and unheard from for so long a time as to give rise to the presumption that she has perished with all on board.

There is no precise time fixed as to when the presumption is to arise; and this must depend upon the circumstances of each case; 2 Stra. 1199; Park. Ins. 63; Marsh. Ins. 488; Gordon v. Bowne, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 150; Holt 242.

MISSING WORD COMPETITIONS. See LOTTERY.

MISSIO. In Roman Law. Letting go or sending away.

MISSIO IN BONA. Execution against the property of a debtor by which a creditor was empowered to take possession of the entire estate of the debtor. Sohm, Rom. L. 211.

MISSIO IN POSSESSIONEM. A writ by which a creditor obtained actual control, or mere detention of a thing as security for his claim, without any right of sale or action. Sohm, Rom. L. 275.

MISSISSIPPI. The name of one of the United States of America.

The territory of Mississippi, embracing the present states of Alabama and Mississippi, was authorized to be organized by act of congress, of April 9, 1778, and organized on 22d January, 1779. Georgia, from which the territory was formed, ceded it to the United States on April 24, 1802.

The western part of the Mississippi territory was authorized to form a state government to be known as the state of Mississippi, by act of congress passed March 1, 1817, and the state was admitted into the Union December 10, 1817.

The first constitution of the state was adopted at Washington, August 15, 1817. The second at Jackson, October 26, 1832. This was amended in August, 1865, so as to strike out the word "white," and to abolish and to eliminate everything connected with the institution of slavery. The third, at Jackson, on May 15, 1868, ratified by the people on December 1, 1869, and went into operation in 1870, on the readmission of the state into the Union under the Reconstruction Acts of congress. The fourth was adopted in convention November 1, 1890, to take effect from that date.

MISSOURI. The name of one of the United States of America.

It was formed out of part of the territory ceded to the United States by the French Republic by treaty of April 30, 1803, and admitted into the Union by a resolution of congress approved March 2, 1821.

To this resolution there was a condition, which, having been performed, the admission of Missouri as a state was completed by the president's proclamation, dated August 10, 1821.

The convention which formed the constitution of this state met at St. Louis, on Monday, June 12, 1820, and continued by adjournment till July 19, 1820, when the constitution was adopted, establishing "an independent republic, by the name of the 'State of Missouri.'"

An amendment in 1912 provided for the erection of a new capitol building, and another was adopted relating to the ages of pupils in the public schools.

MISSURA. The ceremonies used in a Roman Catholic church to recommend and dismiss a dying person.

MISTAKE. Some unintentional act, omission, or error arising from ignorance, surprise, imposition, or misplaced confidence. Story, Eq. Jur. § 110; 46 Wis. 118.

That result of ignorance of law or fact which has misled a person to commit that which, if he had not been in error, he would not have done. Jeremy, Eq. Jur. 358.

A mistake exists when a person, under some erroneous conviction of law or fact does, or omits to do, some act which, but for the erroneous conviction, he would not have done or omitted. It may arise either from unconsciousness, ignorance, forgetfulness, imposition, or misplaced confidence. Bisp. Eq. § 185. The essential element of mistake is a mental condition or conception or deviation of the understanding either in a passive or active state; when passive, it may consist of unconsciousness, ignorance, or forgetfulness, and when active, it may be a belief. The first condition must always be a fact material to the transaction, while in the second, the belief may be that a matter or thing exists at the present time which really does not exist, or that it existed at some past time when it did not really exist. All particular errors which fall under either condition are mistakes of fact which are a ground of equitable relief. These mistakes may arise from ignorance; Briggs v. Vanderbilt, 19 Barb. (N. Y.) 222; in forgetfulness of a fact past; Durkin v. Cranston, 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 442; of a fact present; Huthmacher v. Harris' Adm'rs, 38 Pa. 491, 80 Am. Dec. 502; in unconsciousness; McDaniels v. Bank, 29 Vt. 238, 70 Am. Dec. 406; in belief of a thing which does not exist; Rheel v. Hicks, 25 N. Y. 289; of things which have not existed; Martin v. McCormick, 8 N. Y. 335. See 6 L. R. A. 835, n.

Mistake Generally. It is the general rule, subject to varying restrictions, that equity will relieve against instruments made under mistake; Rhode Island v. Massachusetts, 15 Pet. 233, 10 L. Ed. 721; Rosevelt v. Dale, 2 Cow. (N. Y.) 129; Bingham v. Bingham, 1 Ves. Sr. 126.

When a mistake in the expression of a written contract is so obvious, without extrinsic evidence, as to leave no doubt of the intention of the parties, the writing may be so construed as to correct the mistake; 5 H. L. C. 40; L. R. 9 Eq. 507.

The word which the parties intended to use in an instrument may be substituted for one which was actually used by a clerical error, in equity; Adams, Eq. 169; Canedy v. Marcy, 13 Gray (Mass.) 373; Stone v. Hale, 17 Ala. 562, 52 Am. Dec. 185; Providence Wash. Ins. Co. v. Brummelkamp, 58 Fed. 918. Equity will not correct a mistake in a voluntary deed by inserting the word "heirs" omitted by inadvertence of the draughtsman; but otherwise, when the deed is supported by a valuable or meritorious consideration; Powell v. Morisey, 98 N. C. 426, 4 S. E. 185, 2 Am. St. Rep. 343.

As to mistakes in wills, they are not rendered invalid merely because the testator had not correctly informed himself as to all the facts and circumstances surrounding him; In re Bethune's Will, 48 Hun 614; id., 15 N. Y. St. Rep. 294; or for a mere misconception of fact or law; Monroe v. Barclay, 17 Ohio St. 302, 93 Am. Dec. 620; or a mistake as to a fact which might have led to a different conclusion; In re Tousey's Will, 34 Misc. 363, 69 N. Y. Supp. 846; unless the mistake be such as to affect the testamentary intentions; Boell v. Schwartz, 4 Bradf. Sur. (N. Y.) 12; or in the nomination of an executor; In re Finn's Estate, 1 Misc. 280, 22 N. Y. Supp. 1066; or a mere mistake by the draftsman of the will; Whitlock v. Wardlaw, 7 Rich. (S. C.) 453; or the misspelling of testator's name; Succession of Crouzeilles, 106 La. 442, 31 South. 64. A will is not to be set aside on account of a mistake of law or fact as to the effect of testator's acts or dispositions, but only on account of a mistake as to the paper itself or its contents; Couch v. Eastham, 27 W. Va. 796, 55 Am. Rep. 346.

As to the rule for the correction of mistakes in wills, see Story, Eq. Jur. 179; 2 Ves. 216; 3 id. 321; 1 Bro. C. C. 85; 3 id. 446; 1 Keen 692; 2 K. & J. 740; [1893] Prob. 1.

As to the effect of a mistake in an award, see ARBITRATION AND AWARD.

A mistake sometimes prevents a forfeiture in cases of violation of revenue laws, as where the owner of property was ignorant of the illegal intention of the vessel on which it was shipped; U. S. v. Guillem, 11 How. 47, 13 L. Ed. 599; or where a mistake in the entry at the custom house is set up as an excuse; U. S. v. Nine Packages of Linen, 1 Paine 129, Fed. Cas. No. 15,884 (where it was held that the mistake need not be made out by an unusually clear case, but only by ordinary proof); in order to justify a forfeiture, there must not be mere mistake in valuation, but fraudulent intention and design; U. S. v. Fourteen Packages of Pins, 1 Gilpin 235, Fed. Cas. No. 15,151.

The mutual mistake of parties to a deed as to the extent of the grantor's title will frequently justify the rescission of the sale and cancellation of the deed by a court of equity. This relief has been granted to the vendor where the deed was executed under a mistaken theory of the law of descent; Lansdown v. Lansdown, Mosely 364; or as to the number of persons interested; Irick v. Fulton, 3 Grat. (Va.) 193; or as to the validity and extent of the vendor's title; McCormick v. Miller, 102 Ill. 208, 40 Am. Rep. 577; Kennedy v. Johnson, 2 Bibb. (Ky.) 12, 4 Am. Dec. 666 (where the grantee knew and would not inform the grantor of the truth); or as to the result of suit determining the title; Mason v. Pelletier, 82 N. C. 40; or as to the extent of the grantor's title and the mistake was mutual; Castleman v. Castleman, 184 Mo. 432, 83 S. W. 757; Burton v. Haden, 108 Va. 51, 60 S. E. 736, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1039, and note collecting the cases on the subject. Relief has also been afforded to the vendee where the vendor had no title and the conveyance contained no covenant of title; Hadlock v. Williams, 10 Vt. 570; and where there was a mutual mistake as to the vendor's title; Lawrence v. Beaubien, 2 Bail. L. (S. C.) 623, 23 Am. Dec. 155; Bingham v. Bingham, 1 Ves. Sr. 127. But relief has been refused in some cases upon the facts of the case although the doctrine was admitted, as where the title was in litigation and both parties knew of it; Allen v. Brooks, 88 Wis. 265, 60 N. W. 253; or when the vendor subsequently acquired the title he assumed to convey and it enured to the benefit of the vendee; Cochran v. Pascault, 54 Md. 1.

Mistake of Law. It is frequently said that as a general rule, both at law and in equity, mistakes of law do not furnish an excuse for wrongful acts or a ground of relief from the consequences of acts done in consequence of such a mistake; Mellish v. Robertson, 25 Vt. 603; Clapp v. Hoffman, 159 Pa. 531, 28 Atl. 362; Zenor v. Johnson, 107 Ind. 69, 7 N. E. 751; Norton v. Highleyman, 88 Mo. 621; Crosier v. Acer, 7 Paige Ch. (N. Y.) 137; Harner v. Price, 17 W. Va. 523; McMurray v. Oil Mfg. Co., 33 Mo. 377.

The rule was expressed by Chancellor Kent to the effect that the "court does not relieve parties from their acts and deeds fairly done, on a full knowledge of the facts, though under a mistake of the law; but every person is charged, at his peril, with a knowledge of the law"; Lyon v. Richmond, 2 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 51. It is true that this so-called rule has been declared by courts in general terms, and it is a popular derivative of the maxim that "ignorance of the law excuses no man"; but this application of the maxim is fallacious, and there is no such rule of exclusion from relief either at law or in equity of suitors who seek to have some legal act declared void upon the ground that it was done through mistake of law; King v. Doolittle, 38 Tenn. (1 Head) 77.

Perhaps the true rule cannot be better expressed than in the language of Mr. Justice Washington, in Sims v. Lyle, 4 Wash. C. C. 320, Fed. Cas. No. 12,892: "If the mistake be nothing more than a misconception of the law . . . I can only say that such a mistake is not a ground of relief. For ignorance is not mistake; and equity will not grant relief upon the mere supposition that the party was ignorant of the legal effect of his act, or of his omission to act." Mistake is capable of proof, ignorance is not; the former is action after reasoning, the latter without it; Lawrence v. Beaubien, 2 Bailey (S. C.) 623, 23 Am. Dec. 155.

As long ago as 1823, in Hunt v. Rousmarnier's Adm'r, 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 174, 215, it was said by Marshall, C. J., that, "although we do not find the naked principle, that relief may be granted on account of ignorance of law, asserted in the books, we find no case in which it has been decided that a plain acknowledged mistake in law is beyond the reach of equity." In U. S. v. Hodson, 10 Wall. 395, 409, 19 L. Ed. 937, where the question was of the validity of a bond under the revenue laws, the court said: "Every one is presumed to know the law. Ignorance standing alone can never be the basis of a legal right." This probably indicates the true rule, corresponding as it does with the language above quoted from Washington, J. It is said that a mistake of law standing absolutely alone is not a ground of relief, but when, as is usually the case, there are circumstances which enable the court to treat the mistake as based in some degree upon matter of fact as well as of law, they will do so; there must be other equitable elements; Lowndes v. Chisolm, 2 McCord Eq. (S. C.) 455, 16 Am. Dec. 667; Sandlin v. Ward, 94 N. C. 490; Green v. R. Co., 12 N. J. Eq. 165; Terry v. Moore, 12 Misc. 641, 33 N. Y. Supp. 846; Griswold v. Hazard, 141 U. S. 260, 11 Sup. Ct. 972, 999, 35 L. Ed. 678; Trigg v. Read, 5 Humph. (Tenn.) 529, 42 Am. Dec. 447. Such was the effect of Wheeler v. Smith, 9 How. (U. S.) 55, where a compromise of the claim of the heir to an estate bequeathed for a charitable use was held invalid because the heir was young, needy, and inexperienced, as well as pressed for money, and the executors, who were men of high character, had assured the heir that the bequest was considered to be good. In State

v. Paup, 13 Ark. 129, 56 Am. Dec. 303, a distinction is drawn between ignorance of the existence of a law and of its legal effect, and mistake as to the latter may be relieved, where such mistake is shared by each of the contracting parties; Dolvin v. American Harrow Co., 125 Ga. 699, 54 S. E. 706, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 785; Loss v. Obrey, 22 N. J. Eq. 52. A mistake of law, in the sense of this question, has been defined to be a wrong conclusion as to the legal effect or consequence of known facts; Mowatt v. Wright, 1 Wend. (N. Y.) 355, 19 Am. Dec. 508; Deseret Nat. Bank v. Dinwoodey, 17 Utah 43, 53 Pac. 215; Purvines v. Harrison, 151 Ill. 219, 37 N. E. 705; and this includes the construction of words; id. Where the terms used in writing the contract do not express the legal effect intended by the parties, relief will generally be given, otherwise when the real meaning of the parties is expressed and the mistake is as to its legal effect, without other equitable features; Richmond v. R. Co., 44 Or. 48, 74 Pac. 333; Wm. Cramp & Sons Ship & Engine Bldg. Co. v. Sloan, 21 Fed. 561; Showman v. Miller, 6 Md. 479. So also if a contracting party knows that the other party is proceeding upon a mistake in law, there might arise a consideration of fraud in his taking advantage of the other's mistake; Whelen's Appeal, 70 Pa. 410, 425; Mason v. Pelletier, 82 N. C. 40; Hardgree v. Mitchum, 51 Ala. 151; McCormick v. Miller, 102 Ill. 208, 40 Am. Rep. 577; particularly where there has been reliance upon the advice of, or misplaced confidence in, the other party; Tompkins v. Hollister, 60 Mich. 470, 27 N. W. 651; or where a mistake purely of law is accompanied by such circumstances as misrepresentation, undue influence or misplaced confidence; Carley v. Lewis, 24 Ind. 23; Burke & Williams v. Mackenzie, 124 Ga. 248, 52 S. E. 653.

In the leading case of Bilbie v. Lumley, 2 East 469, it was held by Lord Ellenborough that money paid by mistake of law could not be recovered back even though the circumstances made it inequitable for the defendant to retain it. It is stated that counsel for the plaintiff was asked whether he could state any case where money could be recovered back after payment in ignorance of the law. The counsel, described "as a most experienced advocate" (Brisbon v. Dacres, 5 Taunt. 144), appears to have made no reply, although several cases were said to have existed at that time; 5 Colum. L. Rev. 366, where the cases are cited with the comment that had they been properly urged upon the court the question would doubtless have been settled correctly, whereas the rule then established has been in the main consistently followed; Elliot v. Swartwout, 10 Pet. (U. S.) 137, 9 L. Ed. 373; Mowatt v. Wright, 1 Wend. (N. Y.) 355, 19 Am. Dec. 508; Brumagim v. Tillinghast, 18 Cal. 265, 79 Am. Dec. 176; and the rule applies to money paid by a county; Wayne County v. Randall, 43 Mich. 137, 5 N. W. 75. It has not been, however, without a struggle by the courts to escape from its rigor and apparent injustice; Northrop's Ex'rs v. Graves, 19 Conn. 548, 50 Am. Dec. 264, where the court said: "The mind no more assents to the payment made under a mistake of the law, than if made under a mistake of the facts; the delusion is the same in both cases; in both, alike, the mind is influenced by false motives." And in another state a similar view has been acted upon in a great variety of cases, money having been recovered back which had been paid under an invalid ordinance; Bruner v. Stanton, 102 Ky. 459, 43 S. W. 411; under an unconstitutional statute; Board of Trustees v. Board of Education, 75 S. W. 225, 25 Ky. L. R. 341; or taxes illegally assessed under a mistake of law; City of Louisville v. Henning, 1 Bush (Ky.) 381; money paid to a gas company as meter rent, though the payment was voluntary; Capital Gas & Elec. Light Co. v. Gaines, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 1464, 49 S. W. 462, where the court quoted its own language in City of Covington v. Powell, 2 Metc. (Ky.) 226: "Upon the whole, . . . whenever, by a clear and palpable mistake of law or fact, essentially bearing upon and affecting the contract, money has been paid, without cause or consideration, which, in law, honor, or conscience, ought not to be retained, it was, and ought to be recovered back." The same disposition to rebel against the rule is observed in some English cases; Rogers v. Ingam, L. R. 3 Ch. D. 351; Daniel v. Sinclair, L. R. 6 App. Cas. 181.

In some of the states the rule has been modified by statute. This subject is very effectively discussed and the cases examined by Frederick C. Woodward, 5 Colum. L. Rev. 366, where an abrogation of the rule is urged upon the courts and legislatures.

In many other cases a mistake in law has been held good ground for such relief; Northrop's Ex'rs v. Graves, 19 Conn. 548, 50 Am. Dec. 264; Culbreath v. Culbreath, 7 Ga. 64, 50 Am. Dec. 375; Covington v. Powell, 2 Metc. (Ky.) 226; contra, Nelson v. Davis, 40 Ind. 366; Smith v. MacDougall, 2 Cal. 586; and it is said that the weight of authority is with the affirmative; 13 Y. L. J. 201, where it is also said that in England it is well settled that a mistake either of law or fact is ground of equitable relief; Moses v. McFarland, 2 Burr. 1005; Farmer v. Arundel, 2 W. Bla. 824. The conclusion of the law journal cited is probably correct and it may be safely stated that the power of courts of equity to afford relief from the consequences of the mistakes of parties to written instruments is not strictly limited to mistakes of fact, but extends also to mistakes of law; Benson v. Markoe, 37 Minn. 30, 33 N. W. 38, 5 Am. St. Rep. 816; Whitmore v. Hay, 85

Wis. 240, 55 N. W. 708, 39 Am. St. Rep. 838; see Griswold v. Hazard, 141 U. S. 260, 11 Sup. Ct. 972, 999, 35 L. Ed. 678; it will correct an instrument where it is fully and clearly inconsistent with a prior agreement and with the purpose for which it was designated, or if it fails to express the intention of the parties; Kornegay v. Everett, 99 N. C. 30, 5 S. E. 418. So it is settled, both in England and the United States, that money paid under a mistake of fact can be recovered, and it is generally stated that in neither country can there be a recovery of money paid under a mistake of law; 21 Harv. L. Rev. 225; see 6 Harv. L. Cas. 798; 4 Ch. Div. 693; unless perhaps, when paid to an officer of the court; L. R. 9 Ch. 609. For an agreement that there can be a recovery in either case in England, see 7 Colum. L. Rev. 476. It was held that money paid under bona fide forgetfulness may be recovered back; Kelly v. Solari, 9 M. & W. 54.

It has been said that courts cannot relieve against ignorance of the law but will grant relief against a mistake of the law; Hopkins' Ex'rs v. Mazyck, 1 Hill Eq. (S. C.) 242.

When both parties are under a common mistake of law as to the application of their contract, it can be applied only according to their intention and not otherwise; 46 L. J. Q. B. 213. And, if parties contract under a common misapprehension as to their relative and respective rights, the contract may be liable to be set aside as inapplicable to the state of rights really existing; Cooper v. Fibbs, L. R. 2 H. L. 170, where Lord Westbury drew a distinction between a mistake of private rights and one of general law, and said that the word jus in the maxim ignorantia juris haud excusat, denotes general law and not private rights. The distinction was applied in Beauchamp v. Winn, L. R. 6 H. L. 223, where it was held that if the mistake arose from ignorance of a well-known rule of law, the court would not interfere, but if it was upon the construction of a document of doubtful meaning the maxim did not apply and relief would be granted; and also in Brock v. Weiss, 44 N. J. L. 241, where it was held that the maxim that ignorance of the law is no excuse, is not universally applicable, but only when damages have been inflicted or crimes committed; but it will not excuse in a civil case, a wrong done or a right withheld; Lawrence v. Beaubien, 2 Bail. (S. C.) 623, 23 Am. Dec. 155; Rochester & K. F. Land Co. v. Davis, 79 Hun 69, 29 N. Y. Supp. 1148; nor affect contracts, or excuse parties from the consequences of particular acts; Dailey v. Jessup, 72 Mo. 144; Rankin v. Mortimore, 7 Watts (Pa.) 372.

A mistake as to legal rights where they are of a doubtful character will be relieved in equity; Lammot's Heirs v. Bowly's Heirs, 6 Harr. & J. (Md.) 500.

A unilateral mistake of which the other party to a compact is ignorant is no ground for avoiding the contract; Tatum v. Lumber Co., 16 Idaho 471, 101 Pac. 957, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1109; otherwise if the vendee has knowledge that the vendor has made an error in computation; Everson v. Granite Co., 65 Vt. 658, 27 Atl. 320; or if the vendee who was an experienced buyer must have known that the low price named in a letter was a typographical error; Buckberg v. Washburn-Crosby Co., 115 Mo. App. 701, 92 S. W. 733.

An agreement made for the purpose of settling rights, with full knowledge of the doubts arising upon them, will be enforced, and parties will not be allowed to state that they were under a misapprehension as to the law; 1 S. & S. 555; Bell v. Lawrence's Adm'r, 51 Ala. 160; 3 Lead. Cas. Eq. 411; Good v. Herr, 7 W. & S. (Pa.) 253, 42 Am. Dec. 236. This is particularly the case in relation to family settlements; and where such agreements "have been fairly entered into without concealment or imposition on either side . . . a court of equity will not disturb the quiet which is the consequence of the agreement"; per Eldon, L. C., in Gordon v. Gordon, 3 Swanst. 463; and a family compromise may be binding even if entered into through mistake induced by a solicitor representing all parties, but not where the legal adviser has suppressed material facts; Stewart v. Stewart, 6 Cl. & Fin. 911; In re Roberts [1905] 1 Ch. 704; Shartel's Appeal, 64 Pa. 25. Inadvertence and mistake are, equally with fraud and wrong, grounds for judicial interference to divest a title acquired thereby; Williams v. U. S., 138 U. S. 514, 11 Sup. Ct. 457, 34 L. Ed. 1026. If parties enter into an agreement for the purpose of settling their rights with full knowledge of the doubts arising upon them, the courts will enforce such agreement even though they are erroneously advised as to the law, but being informed on what circumstances the question of law depends and how it may be tried, they may determine whether to press or abandon the question; Stone v. Godfrey, 5 De G. M. & G. 76. And this disposition of the courts to sustain such agreements extends generally to the compromise of doubtful rights or claims; Mills' Heirs v. Lee, 6 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 91, 17 Am. Dec. 118; Perkins v. Gay, 3 S. & R. (Pa.) 327, 8 Am. Dec. 653; Wells v. Neff, 14 Or. 66, 12 Pac. 88. For a full and analytical discussion of relief from mistakes of law and a collection and classification of the cases, see note to Dolvin v. Harrow Co., supra, in 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 785-933.

In a number of cases the question has been raised as to the right of one party to a construction contract to rescind on the ground of a mistake in computation in the bid and there is some conflict of decision. Relief was granted in such case in Neill v. Midland R. Co., 20 L. T. N. S. 864; Dunn v.

O'Mara, 70 Ill. App. 609; Board of School Com'rs of City of Indianapolis v. Bender, 36 Ind. App. 164, 72 N. E. 154 (where it was considered that the error was made without fault and the minds of the parties never met); Harran v. Foley, 62 Wis. 584, 22 N. W. 837 (where the grounds of the decision were similar); Long v. Inhabitants of Athol, 196 Mass. 497, 82 N. E. 665, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 96 (where the mistake was caused by an erroneous estimate of the public engineer).

Relief was refused in Crilly v. Board of Education, 54 Ill. App. 371 (where the mistake was due to the failure to exercise ordinary care); Moffett, H. & C. Co. v. Rochester, 178 U. S. 373, 20 Sup. Ct. 957, 44 L. Ed. 1108, reversing 91 Fed. 28, 33 C. C. A. 319, 62 U. S. App. 392, and affirming 82 Fed. 255 (where it was held that no contract was entered into and the court could not reform the proposal, but it enjoined the defendant from forfeiting the bond); Steinmeyer v. Schroepfel, 226 Ill. 9, 80 N. E. 564, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 114, and note, 117 Am. St. Rep. 224. There is also a conflict of decision as to whether money paid under a mistake of fact may be recovered back. Such recovery has been allowed in Wolf v. Beaird, 123 Ill. 585, 15 N. E. 161, 5 Am. St. Rep. 565; Mansfield v. Lynch, 59 Conn. 320, 22 Atl. 313, 12 L. R. A. 285; Tarplee v. Capp, 25 Ind. App. 56, 56 N. E. 270. On the other hand, recovery was refused in Lawson's Adm'rs v. Hansborough, 10 B. Mon. (Ky.) 147; Carson v. McFarland, 2 Rawle (Pa.) 118, 19 Am. Dec. 627.

Where a note was signed under a mistake as to its contents, the maker having negligently failed to read it, no fraud being shown, he was liable; Walton Guano Co. v. Copelan, 112 Ga. 319, 37 S. W. 411, 52 L. R. A. 268; but where there was fraudulent misrepresentation the liability of the maker turns upon the question of his negligence, which may estop him from denying liability to an innocent holder; Foster v. MacKinnon, L. R. 4 C. P. 704.

See "A Critical Analysis of the Law as to Mistake in Its Effect upon Contracts" by Truman Post Young, in 38 Am. L. Rev. 334.

Mistake of Fact. An act done or a contract made under a mutual mistake or ignorance of a material fact is voidable and relievable in equity; Pollock, Contr. 442; Story, Eq. Jur. § 140; Wiggins Ferry Co. v. Ry. Co., 142 U. S. 417, 12 Sup. Ct. 188, 35 L. Ed. 1055. The rule applies to cases where there has been a studied suppression of facts by one side, and to cases of mutual ignorance or mistake; 12 Sim. 465; Allen v. Hammond, 11 Pet. (U. S.) 71, 9 L. Ed. 633; Diman v. R. Co., 5 R. I. 130; McHarry v. Irvin's Ex'r, 85 Ky. 322, 3 S. W. 374, 4 S. E. 800; Martinsburg Bank v. Supply Co., 150 Pa. 36, 24 Atl. 754; Elwood v. Stewart, 5 Wash. 736, 32 Pac. 735, 1000; Christopher & T. St. R. Co. v. Ry. Co., 78 Hun 462, 29 N. Y. Supp. 233; Gould v. Emerson, 160 Mass. 438, 35 N. E. 1065, 39 Am. St. Rep. 501; Park Bros. & Co. v. Blodgett & Clapp Co., 64 Conn. 28, 29 Atl. 133. See U. S. v. Telephone Co., 128 U. S. 315, 9 Sup. Ct. 90, 32 L. Ed. 450; Lovell v. Wall, 31 Fla. 73, 12 South. 659; Deischer v. Price, 148 Ill. 383, 36 N. E. 105. But the fact must be material to the contract, i. e. essential to its character, and an efficient cause of its concoction; Bailey v. James, 11 Gratt. (Va.) 468, 62 Am. Dec. 659; Voorhees v. De Meyer, 2 Barb. (N. Y.) 37; McAninch v. Laughlin, 13 Pa. 371. See Dambmann v. Schulting, 75 N. Y. 55; Grymes v. Sanders, 93 U. S. 55, 23 L. Ed. 798. And as a ground for reforming an instrument the mistake must be mutual; Gano v. Palo Pinto County, 71 Tex. 99, 8 S. W. 634; Steinberg v. Ins. Co., 49 Mo. App. 255; German American Ins. Co. v. Davis, 131 Mass. 316; Roszell v. Roszell, 109 Ind. 354, 10 N. E. 114; Hallam v. Corlett, 71 Ia. 446, 32 N. W. 449. But equity will not afford relief in cases of mutual mistake of legal rights where it is impossible to restore both parties to the status quo; Fink v. Bank, 178 Pa. 154, 35 Atl. 636, 56 Am. St. Rep. 746. A mistake will not be relieved against if it was the result of the party's negligence; Lewis v. Lewis, 5 Or. 169; 12 Cl. & F. 248; Diman v. R. Co., 5 R. I. 130; Bonney v. Stoughton, 122 Ill. 536, 13 N. E. 833; Appeal of Weller, 103 Pa. 594; Massey v. Ins. Co., 70 Ga. 794. If the mistake, as to the expression of an agreement, is only on one side, there will be no relief. But if such a mistake on the part of one party be known to the other at the time, the contract can be avoided at common law, if not reduced to writing; L. R. 6 Q. B. 597. In equity, a mistake of one party known to the other may not only preclude the latter from obtaining specific performance, but may also be a ground for setting aside the contract altogether; Leake, Contr. 318; 30 Beav. 445. When a written contract contains a mistake common to both parties in expressing its terms, equity will give relief by restraining proceedings at law or by rectifying the writing or setting it aside; Leake, Contr. 319. An act done intentionally and with knowledge, cannot be treated as a mistake; Griffith v. U. S., 22 Ct. Cl. 165.

Where an attorney acting under general instructions of his client to compromise a litigation consents to a compromise under a misapprehension, neither the client nor the counsel are bound thereby and the court will set it aside on application; [1895] 2 Ch. 638.

MISTRIAL. A trial which is erroneous on account of some defect in the persons trying, as if the jury come from the wrong county, or because there was no issue formed, as if no plea be entered, or some other defect of jurisdiction. 3 Cro. 284; 2 Maule & S. 270.

Where a jury is discharged without a verdict, the proceeding is properly known as a mistrial; Fisk v. Henarie, 32 Fed. 427.

Consent of parties cannot help such a trial, when past; Hob. 5.

It is error to go to trial without a plea or an issue, in the absence of counsel and without his consent, although an affidavit of defence be filed in the case, containing the substance of a plea, and the court has ordered the case on the list for trial; Ensly v. Wright, 3 Pa. 501.

On an indictment for perjury, an infant under the age of twenty-one years, and not otherwise qualified, not having, in fact, been summoned, personated his father as a juror. Here was a mistrial, because the verdict in the case was the verdict of but eleven jurors. "To support a judgment," observed Justice Holroyd, "it must be founded on a verdict delivered by twelve competent jurors. This man was incompetent, and therefore there has been a mistrial." 7 D. & R. 684. See 4 B. & Ald. 430; Cancemi v. People, 18 N. Y. 128; NEW TRIAL.

MISUSER. An unlawful use of a right.

In cases of public offices and franchises, a misuser is sufficient to cause the right to be forfeited. 2 Bla. Com. 153; Comstock v. Van Deusen, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 163.

MITIGATION. Reduction; diminution; lessening of the amount of a penalty or punishment.

Circumstances which do not amount to a justification or excuse of the act committed may yet be properly considered in mitigation of the punishment: as, for example, the fact that one who stole a loaf of bread was starving.

In actions for the recovery of damages, matters may often be given in evidence in mitigation of damages which are no answer to the action itself. See DAMAGES; CHARACTER.

MITIOR SENSUS. See IN MITIORI SENSU.

MITTENDO MANUSCRIPTUM PEDIS FINIS. An abolished judicial writ, addressed to the treasurer and chamberlain of the exchequer to search for and transmit the foot of the fine acknowledged before justices in eyre into the common pleas. Reg. Orig. 14.

MITTER (L. Fr.). To put, to send, or to pass: as, mitter avant, to present to a court; mitter l'estate, to pass the estate; mitter le droit, to pass a right. 2 Bla. Com. 324; Bacon, Abr. Release (C); Co. Litt. 193, 273 b. Mitter a large, to put or set at large.

MITTIMUS. In Old English Law. A writ enclosing a record sent to be tried in a county palatine: it derives its name from the Latin word mittimus, "we send." It is the jury process of these counties, and commands the proper officer of the county palatine to command the sheriff to summon the jury for the trial of the cause, and to return the record, etc. Territory v. Hattick, 2 Mart. O. S. (La.) 88.

In Criminal Practice. A precept in writing, under the hand and seal of a justice of the peace, or other competent officer, directed to the jailer or keeper of a prison, commanding him to receive and safely keep a person charged with an offence therein named, until he shall be delivered by due course of law. Co. Litt. 590.

MIXED ACTION. See ACTION.

MIXED BLOOD. See INDIANS.

MIXED CONTRACT. See CONTRACT.

MIXED GOVERNMENT. A government established with some of the powers of a monarchical, aristocratical, and democratical government. See GOVERNMENT; MONARCHY.

MIXED JURY. A jury composed partly of white men and partly of negroes. See CIVIL RIGHTS.

One consisting partly of citizens and partly of aliens. See MEDIETAS LINGUÆ; JURY.

MIXED LARCENY. Compound larceny, which see.

MIXED MARRIAGE. A marriage between persons of different nationalities or of different races. See CIVIL RIGHTS.

MIXED POLICY. See POLICY.

MIXED PRESUMPTION. See PRESUMPTION.

MIXED PROPERTY. That kind of property which is not altogether real nor personal, but a compound of both. Heirlooms, tombstones, monuments in a church, and title-deeds to an estate, are of this nature. 2 Bla. Com. 428; 3 B. & Ad. 174; 4 Bingh. 106. See CONFUSION OF GOODS.

MIXED QUESTION. A question involving matters of law and of fact, or one arising from the conflict of foreign and domestic laws. See CONFLICT OF LAWS; LEX LOCI; JURY.

MIXED TITHES. In Ecclesiastical Law. "Those which arise not immediately from the ground, but from those things which are nourished by the ground:" e. g., colts, chickens, calves, milk, eggs, etc. 3 Burn, Eccl. L. 380; 2 Bla. Com. 24.

MIXED TRIBUNALS. A name given to an international jurisdiction introduced into Egypt in 1878, after negotiations with the various Christian Powers of Europe. This tribunal made the administration of civil justice quite independent of the government of Egypt. They have jurisdiction over cases between persons of different nationalities, whether native or European, but criminal charges against natives are heard in the native criminal courts and those against Europeans in the proper consular courts. There are three first instance courts, one at Alexandria with eighteen judges, of whom twelve are foreign, one at Cairo with nineteen judges, of whom thirteen are foreign, and one at Mansurah with nine judges, of whom six are foreign, and a Court of Appeal sitting at Alexandria, composed of fifteen judges.

The jurisdiction cannot be invoked unless one party is a foreigner, but it is said to be not uncommon for Egyptian merchants to assign their claims to foreigners, so as to get them into these courts. See Ann. Bull. of Comp. Law Bureau, 1911, p. 43.

The judges are subjects of various European states, and of the United States and Brazil. They are appointed by their respective governments; Milner, England in Egypt.

These courts were instituted for a period of five years only, and have been renewed at various times. Bonfils, Manual of Int. Law 460; 23 L. Q. R. 409; and see 8 Encyc. Laws of Eng. 445.

MIXTION. The putting of different goods or chattels together in such a manner that they can no longer be separated: as, putting the wines of two different persons into the same barrel, the grain of several persons into the same bag, and the like.

The intermixture may be occasioned by the wilful act of the party, or owner of one of the articles, by the wilful act of a stranger, by the negligence of the owner or a stranger, or by accident. See CONFUSION OF GOODS.

MOB (Lat. mobilis, movable). A tumultuous rout or rabble; a crowd excited to some violent or unlawful act. The word in legal use is practically synonymous with riot, but the latter is the more correct term.

At common law a municipal corporation is not liable for damage to property by a mob; County of Allegheny v. Gibson's Son & Co., 90 Pa. 397, 35 Am. Rep. 670; Dale County v. Gunter, 46 Ala. 118; Mayor, etc., of Baltimore v. Poultney, 25 Md. 107; nor for the failure of its officers to repress a mob; Campbell's Adm'x v. City Council of Montgomery, 53 Ala. 527, 25 Am. Rep. 656; Hart v. Bridgeport, 13 Blatchf. 282, Fed. Cas. No. 6,149. The legislature may, however, give a right of action against the corporation for damages caused by a mob, and provide the measure of damages; Atchison v. Twine, 9 Kan. 350; Solomon v. City of Kingston, 24 Hun (N. Y.) 562; Wing Chung v. Mayor, etc., of City of Los Angeles, 47 Cal. 531; Brightman v. Inhabitants of Bristol, 65 Me. 426, 20 Am. Rep. 711. Such a right of action has been provided by statute in Pennsylvania against the county in which the damage was caused. The right to sue a city for damages caused by a mob is purely statutory and can be taken away even after judgment obtained; Louisiana v. New Orleans, 109 U. S. 285, 3 Sup. Ct. 211, 27 L. Ed. 936.

An Illinois statute rendering municipalities liable for damages to property caused by mob violence is valid under the police power, and a classification in such act between cities and unincorporated sub-divisions of the county is not unreasonable; City of Chicago v. Sturges, 222 U. S. 313, 32 Sup. Ct. 92, 56 L. Ed. 215, citing Darlington v. Mayor, etc., of City of New York, 31 N. Y. 164, 88 Am. Dec. 248, and Fauvia v. City of New Orleans, 20 La. Ann. 410; County of Allegheny v. Gibson's Son & Co., 90 Pa. 397, 35 Am. Rep. 670; referring to the liability of the "hundred" and that created under statutes from 1285 to 8 George II.

A tumultuous gathering in the streets in connection with two newly married persons was held a mob for whose acts in injuring a child the municipality was held liable to the child in Cherryvale v. Hawman, 80 Kan. 170, 101 Pac. 994, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 645, 133 Am. St. Rep. 195, 18 Ann. Cas. 149.

Recovery under a state statute against a city or county must be against the one where the property destroyed was situated and not where the mob originated; Wells, Fargo & Co. v. Jersey City, 207 Fed. 871.

As all the parties in any way concerned with an unlawful killing by a mob are liable in solido, it is proper to join, as a party defendant with the individuals who participated in the killing, the city in which the act was committed, on the ground of its negligence in not preventing the killing; Comitez v. Parkerson, 50 Fed. 170; and independently of any misconduct on the part of the city or county to which the loss is attributed, a state may constitutionally compel such county or city to indemnify against losses of property from mobs and riots within their limits; Pennsylvania Co. v. City of Chicago, 81 Fed. 317. See LYNCH LAW; RIOT.

MOBILIA. See MOVABLES.

MOCK. To deride, to laugh at, to ridicule, to treat with scorn and contempt. State v. Warner, 34 Conn. 279.

MODE. The manner in which a thing is done; as the mode of proceeding, the mode of process. Anderson's L. Dict.

MODEL. A machine made on a small scale to show the manner in which it is to be worked or employed.

A copy or imitation of the thing intended to be represented. State v. Fox, 25 N. J. L. 602. See PATENT.

MODERAMEN INCULPATÆ TUTELÆ. In Roman Law. The regulation of justifiable defence. The term expresses that degree of force which a person might lawfully use in defence of his person or property, even though it should occasion the death of the aggressor. Bell, Dict.

MODERATA MISERICORDIA. A writ founded on Magna Carta, which lies for him who is amerced in a court, not of record, for any transgression beyond the quality or quantity of the offence; it is addressed to the lord of the court, or his bailiff, commanding him to take a moderate amercement of the parties. New Nat. Brev. 167; Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 76.

MODERATE CASTIGAVIT. The name of a plea in trespass by which the defendant justifies an assault and battery, because he moderately corrected the plaintiff, whom he had a right to correct. 2 Chitty, Pl. 576; 2 B. & P. 224. See CORRECTION; ASSAULT; Hannen v. Edes, 15 Mass. 347; 2 Phill. Ev. 147; Bacon, Abr. Assault (C).

This plea ought to disclose, in general terms, the cause which rendered the correction expedient; 3 Salk. 47.

MODERATE SPEED. The moderate speed of a steam vessel is such as will permit the steamer reasonably and effectually to avoid a collision by slackening speed, or by stopping and reversing within the distance at which an approaching vessel can be seen. The City of New York, 35 Fed. 609; The Allianca, 39 Fed. 480. Five knots is a moderate speed for a sailing vessel; 46 L. T. N. S. 840.

MODERATOR. A person appointed to preside at a popular meeting; sometimes he is called a chairman. The presiding officer of town meetings in New England is so called.

MODIATIO. A certain duty paid for every tierce of wine. Mon. Angl. t. ii. 144.

MODIUS. A measure, usually a bushel.

MODO ET FORMA (Lat. in manner and form). Technical words used to put in issue such concomitants of the principal matters as time, place, etc., where these circumstances were material. Their use when these circumstances were immaterial was purely formal. The words were translated literally, when pleadings began to be made in English, by "in manner and form." See Laves, Pl. 120; Gould, Pl. c. 6, § 22; Steph. Pl. 213; Dane, Abr. Index; Viner, Abr. Modo et Forma.

MODUS. In Civil Law. Manner; means; way. Ainsworth, Lat. Dict. A rhythmic song. Du Cange.

In Old Conveyancing. Manner; e. g., the manner in which an estate should be held, etc. A qualification, whether in restriction or enlargement of the terms of the instrument; especially with relation to the kind of grant called "donatio,"—the making those quasi heirs who were not in fact heirs according to the ordinary form of such conveyances. And this modus or qualification of the ordinary form became so common as to give rise to the maxim "modus et conventio vincunt legem." Co. Litt. 19a; Bracton, 17b; 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law 293.

A consideration. Bracton, 17, 18.

In Ecclesiastical Law. A peculiar manner of tithing, growing out of custom. See MODUS DECIMANDI.

MODUS DECIMANDI. In Ecclesiastical Law. A peculiar manner of tithing, arising from immemorial usage, and differing from the payment of one-tenth of the annual increase.

To be a good modus, the custom must be—first, certain and invariable; second, beneficial to the person; third, a custom to pay something different from the thing compounded for; fourth, of the same species; fifth, the thing substituted must be in its nature as durable as the tithes themselves; sixth, it must not be too large; that would be a rank modus. 2 Bla. Com. 30. See 13 M. & W. 822.

MODUS DE NON DECIMANDO. A custom or prescription not to pay tithes, which is not good, except in case of abbey-lands. 2 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 31.

MODUS LEVANDI FINES. See FINE.

MOERDA. The secret killing of another; murder. 4 Bla. Com. 194.

MOHAMMEDAN LAW. A system of native law prevailing among the Mohammedans in India, and administered there by the British government. See HINDU LAW. See Principles of Muhammadan Jurisprudence, etc., by Abdur Rahim.

MOHATRA. In French Law. The name of a fraudulent contract made to cover a usurious loan of money.

It takes place when an individual sells merchandise on credit at a high price and afterward buys it back at a much less price for cash. 16 Toullier, n. 44.

MOIETY. The half of anything: as, if a testator bequeath one moiety of his estate to A, and the other to B, each shall take an equal part. Joint tenants are said to hold by moieties. Littleton 125; 3 C. B. 274, 283.

MOLESTATION. In Scotch Law. The name of an action competent to the proprietor of a landed estate against those who disturb his possession. It is chiefly used in questions of commonry, or of controverted marches. Erskine, Inst. 4. 1. 48. See, generally, 12 Q. B. D. 539; 14 id. 792.

MOLITURA. Toll paid for grinding at a mill; multure.

MOLLITER MANUS IMPOSUIT (Lat.). He laid his hands on gently.

In Pleading. A plea in justification of a trespass to the person. It is a good plea when supported by the evidence; 12 Viner, Abr. 182; Hamm. N. P. 149; where an amount of violence proportioned to the circumstances; Gates v. Lounsbury, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 427; Scribner v. Beach, 4 Den. (N. Y.) 448, 47 Am. Dec. 265; Davis v. Whitridge, 2 Strobb. (S. C.) 232; Likes v. Van Dike, 17 Ohio 454; has been done to the person of another in defence of property; Com. v. Goodwin, 3 Cush. (Mass.) 154; Faris v. State, 3 Ohio St. 159; Newkirk v. Sabler, 9 Barb. (N. Y.) 652; Porter v. Seiler, 23 Pa. 424, 62 Am. Dec. 341; see Jewett v. Goodall, 19 N. H. 562; Thompson v. State, 25 Ala. 41; or the prevention of crime; 2 Chitty, Pl. 574; Bac. Abr. Assault and Battery (C. 8).

MOLMUTIAN LAWS. The laws of Dunvallo Molmutius, king of the Britons, who began his reign about 400 B. C. These laws were famous in the land till the conquest; Toml.; Moz. & W.

MONARCHY. That government which is ruled, really or theoretically, by one man, who is wholly set apart from all other members of the state.

According to the etymology of the word, monarchy is that government in which one person rules supreme—alone. In modern times the terms autocracy, autocrat, have come into use to indicate that monarchy of which the ruler desires to be exclusively considered the source of all power and authority. The Russian emperor styles himself Autocrat of all the Russias. Autocrat is the same with despot; but the latter term has fallen somewhat into disrepute. Monarchy is contradistinguished from republic. Although the etymology of the term monarchy is simple and clear, it is by no means easy to give a definition either of monarchy or of republic. The constitution of the United States guarantees a republican government to every state. What is a republic? In this case the meaning of the term must be gathered from the republics which existed at the time of the formation of our government, and which were habitually called republics. Lieber, in a paper on the question, "Shall Utah be admitted into the Union?" (in Putnam's Magazine), declared that the Mormons did not form a republic.

The fact that one man stands at the head of a government does not make it a monarchy. We have a president at the head. Nor is it necessary that the one person have an unlimited amount of power, to make a government a monarchy. The power of the king of England is limited by law and theory, and reduced to a small amount in reality; yet England is called a monarchy. Nor does hereditaryness furnish us with a distinction. The pope is elected by the cardinals, yet the States of the Church were a monarchy; and the stadtholder of several states of the Netherlands was hereditary, yet the states were republics. We cannot find any better definition of monarchy than this: a monarchy is that government which is ruled (really or theoretically) by one man, who is wholly set apart from all other members of the state (called his subjects); while we call republic that government in which not only there exists an organism by which the opinion of the people, or of a portion of the people (as in aristocracies), passes over into public will, that is, law, but in which also the supreme power, or the executive power, returns, either periodically or at stated times (where the chief magistracy is for life), to the people, or a portion of the people, to be given anew to another person; or else, that government in which the hereditary portion (if there be any) is not the chief and leading portion of the government, as was the case in the Netherlands.

Monarchy is the prevailing type of government. Whether it will remain so with our Caucasian race is a question not to be discussed in a law dictionary. The two types of monarchy as it exists in Europe are the limited or constitutional monarchy, developed in England, and centralized monarchy—to which was added the modern French type, which consisted in the adoption of Rousseau's idea of sovereignty, and applying it to a transfer of all the sovereign power of the people to one Cæsar, who thus became an unqualified and unmitigated autocrat or despot. It was a relapse into coarse absolutism.

Paley has endeavored to point out the advantages and disadvantages of the different classes of government—not successfully, we think. The great advantages of the monarchical element in a free government are: first, that there remains a stable and firm point in the unavoidable party struggle; and secondly, that supreme power, and it may be said the whole government, being represented by or symbolized in one living person, authority, respect, and, with regard to public money, even public morality, stand a better chance to be preserved.

The great disadvantages of a monarchy are that the personal interests or inclinations of the monarch or his house (of the dynasty) are substituted for the public interest; that to the chance of birth is left what with rational beings certainly ought to be the result of reason and wisdom; and that loyalty to the ruler comes easily to be substituted for real patriotism, and frequently passes over into undignified and pernicious man-worship. Monarchy is assuredly the best government for many nations at the present period, and the only government under which in this period they can obtain security and liberty; yet, unless we believe in a pre-existing divine right of the monarch, monarchy can never be anything but a substitute—acceptable, wise, even desirable, as the case may be—for something more dignified, which, unfortunately, the passions or derelictions of men prevent. The advantages and disadvantages of republics may be said to be the reverse of what has been stated regarding monarchy. A frequent mistake in modern times is this: that a state simply for the time without a king—a kingless government—is called a republic. But a monarchy does not change into a republic simply by expelling the king or the dynasty; as was seen in France in 1848. Few governments are less acceptable than an elective monarchy; for it has the disadvantages of the monarchy without its advantages, and the disadvantages of a republic without its advantages. See GOVERNMENT; ABSOLUTISM; REPUBLICAN FORM OF GOVERNMENT.

MONASTERIUM. A monastery; a church. Spel. Gloss.

MONASTICON. A book giving an account of monasteries, convents, and religious houses.

MONETAGIUM. An ancient tribute paid by tenants to their lord every third year, in consideration of the lord's not changing the money he had coined.

Mintage, or the right of coining money. Cowell.

MONETARY UNION. See LATIN MONETARY UNION.

MONEY. Gold and silver coins. The common medium of exchange in a civilized nation.

There is some difference of opinion as to the etymology of the word money; and writers do not agree as to its precise meaning. Some writers define it to be the common medium of exchange among civilized nations; but in the United States constitution there is a provision which has been supposed to make it synonymous with coins: "The congress shall have power to coin money." Art. 1, sect. 8. Again: "No state shall coin money, or make anything but gold and silver a legal tender in payment of debt." Art. 1, sect. 10. Hence the money of the United States consists of gold and silver coins. And so well has the congress maintained this point, that the copper coins heretofore struck, and the nickel cent of recent issues, although authorized to "pass current," are not money in an exact sense, because they are not made a legal tender beyond twenty-five cents. The question has been made whether a paper currency can be constitutionally authorized by congress and constituted a legal tender in the payment of private debts. Such a power has been exercised and adjudged valid by the highest tribunal of several of the states, as well as by congress in the legal-tender acts of 1862 and 1863. See LEGAL TENDER; 1 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 553; 11 id. 618; 12 id. 601; Klauber v. Biggerstaff, 47 Wis. 551, 3 N. W. 357, 32 Am. Rep. 773.

For many purposes, bank-notes; 1 Y. & J. 380; Floyd v. Day, 3 Mass. 405, 3 Am. Dec. 171; Willie v. Green, 2 N. H. 333; State v. Kube, 20 Wis. 217, 91 Am. Dec. 390; Ainslie v. Wilson, 7 Cow. (N. Dec. 171; securities; Hinckley v. Primm, 41 Ill. App. 579; and bonds; Smith's Estate, 19 Pa. C. C. R. 516; will be considered as money. But, ordinarily, standing alone, it means only that which passes current as money, including bank deposits; but in a bequest of money it has been held to include personal property; Sweet v. Burnett, 65 Hun 159, 20 N. Y. Supp. 24; see Gillen v. Kimball, 34 Ohio St. 352. But a charge that the defendant set up and kept a faro bank, at which money was bet, etc., is not sustained by proof that bank-notes were bet, etc.; Pryor v. Com., 2 Dana (Ky.) 298; or where there is an indictment for the larceny of lawful money of the United States, evidence of the larceny of national bank notes, does not warrant a conviction; Hamilton v. State, 60 Ind. 193, 28 Am. Rep. 653. To support a count for money had and received, the receipt by the defendant of bank-notes, promissory notes; Fairbanks v. Blackington, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 93; Buck v. Appleton, 14 Me. 285; Tuttle v. Mayo, 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 132; credit in account in the books of a third person; 3 Campb. 199; or any chattel, is sufficient; Mason v. Waite, 17 Mass. 560; and will be treated as money. See Morrison v. Berkey, 7 S. & R. (Pa.) 246; 3 B. & P. 559; Menear v. State, 30 Tex. App. 475, 17 S. W. 1082; Miller v. McKinney, 5 Lea (Tenn.) 96. The mutilation of coins is forbidden by law. U. S. R. S. 2 Supp. 579.

A worn five-cent piece is legal tender as long as it is not appreciably diminished in weight and retains the appearance of genuine coinage; Cincinnati Northern Traction Co. v. Rosnagle, 84 Ohio St. 310, 95 N. E. 884, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1030, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 639; Jersey City & B. R. Co. v. Morgan, 52 N. J. L. 60, 18 Atl. 904. If a silver coin is punched and mutilated, and an appreciable amount of silver removed from it, and the hole plugged up with base metal, it is an act of counterfeiting; but otherwise where all the silver is in the coin; U. S. v. Lissner, 12 Fed. 840.

The value of foreign coin depends upon the value of its pure metal; Act of Aug. 27, 1894, which directs a quarterly estimate of the value of foreign coins to be published by the secretary of the treasury. See U. S. v. Whitridge, 197 U. S. 141, 25 Sup. Ct. 406, 49 L. Ed. 696.

See LATIN UNION; GOLD; SILVER; COIN; LEGAL TENDER; TICKET.

MONEY BILLS. Bills or projects of laws providing for raising revenue, and for making grants or appropriations of the public money.

A bill for granting supplies to the crown. Such bills commence in the House of Commons and are rarely attempted to be materially altered in the Lords; May, Parl. L. ch. 22.

The first clause of the seventh section of the constitution of the United States declares, "All bills for raising revenue shall originate in the house of representatives; but the senate may propose or concur with amendments, as on other bills." See Story, Const. §§ 874-877; Perry County v. R. Co., 58 Ala. 546; Opinion of Justices, 126 Mass. 601; Cooley, Const. Lim. (4th Ed.) 160.

What bills are properly "bills for raising revenue," in the sense of the constitution, has been matter of some discussion. Tuck, Bla. Com. App. 261; Story, Const. § 880. In practice, the power has been confined to bills to levy taxes in the strict sense of the words, and has not been understood to extend to bills for other purposes which may incidentally create revenue; Story, Const. § 880; 2 Elliott, Deb. 283; Millard v. Roberts, 202 U. S. 429, 26 Sup. Ct. 674, 50 L. Ed. 1090.

And a privilege conferred by a state constitution, to originate "money bills," has been held to be limited to such as transfer money from the people to the state, and not to include such as appropriate money from the state treasury; Opinion of Justices, 126 Mass. 557; or an act imposing taxes on national bank notes; Twin City Bank v. Nebeker, 167 U. S. 196, 17 Sup. Ct. 768, 42 L. Ed. 134; that a revenue provision was added in the senate does not render it invalid; U. S. v. Billings, 190 Fed. 359.

See REVENUE; PARLIAMENTARY ACT.

MONEY BROKER. A money changer; one who lends to or raises money for others.

MONEY CLAIMS. Under the English Judicature Act of 1875, claims for the price of goods sold, for money lent, for arrears of rent, etc., and other claims where money is directly payable on a contract express or implied, as opposed to the cases where money is claimed by way of damages for some independent wrong, whether by breach of contract or otherwise. These "money claims" correspond very nearly to the "money counts" hitherto in use. Moz. & W. 410.

MONEY COUNTS. The common counts in an action of assumpsit.

They are so called because they are founded on express or implied promises to pay money in consideration of a precedent debt. They are of four descriptions; the indebitatus assumpsit; the quantum meruit; the quantum valebant; and the account stated. See these titles.

Although the plaintiff cannot resort to an implied promise when there is a general contract, yet he may, in many cases, recover on the common counts notwithstanding there was a special agreement, provided it has been executed; 12 East 1; Bank of Columbia v. Patterson, 7 Cra. (U. S.) 299, 3 L. Ed. 351; Keyes v. Stone, 5 Mass. 391; Tuttle v. Mayo, 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 132. It is, therefore, advisable to insert the money counts in an action of assumpsit, when suing on a special contract; 1 Chitty, Pl. 333.

MONEY DEMAND. A claim for a mixed amount of money, contradistinguished from damages.

MONEY HAD AND RECEIVED. The technical designation of a form of declaration in assumpsit, wherein the plaintiff declares that the defendant had and received certain money, etc.

An action of assumpsit will lie on a count for money had and received, to recover money to which the plaintiff is entitled, and which in justice and equity, when no rule of policy or strict law prevents it, the defendant ought to refund to the plaintiff, and which he cannot with a good conscience retain; Tevis v. Brown's Adm'r, 3 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 175; Rice v. Porter's Adm'r, 16 N. J. L. 447; Wiseman v. Lyman, 7 Mass. 288; see Mason v. Prendergast, 120 N. Y. 536, 24 N. E. 806; Wild v. Fry, 45 Ill. App. 276.

When the money has been received by the defendant in consequence of some tortious act to the plaintiff's property, as when he cut down the plaintiff's timber and sold it, the plaintiff may waive the tort and sue in assumpsit for money had and received; Whitwell v. Vincent, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 452, 16 Am. Dec. 355; Pritchard v. Ford, 1 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 543; Willet v. Willet, 3 Watts (Pa.) 277.

In general, the action for money had and received lies only where money has been received by the defendant; Doebler v. Fisher, 14 S. & R. (Pa.) 179; National Trust Co. of City of N. Y. v. Gleason, 77 N. Y. 400, 33 Am. Rep. 632. But bank-notes or any other property received as money will be considered for this purpose as money; Floyd v. Day, 3 Mass. 405, 3 Am. Dec. 171; Mason v. Waite, 17 Mass. 560; Vermont State Bank v. Stoddard, Brayt. (Vt.) 24. See Witherup v. Hill, 9 S. & R. (Pa.) 11. Money paid under an illegal contract which has been partially carried into effect cannot be recovered back; L. R. 24 Q. B. Div. 742.

No privity of contract between the parties is required in order to support this action, except that which results from the fact of one man's having the money of another which he cannot conscientiously retain; Mason v. Waite, 17 Mass. 563; Hall v. Marston, id. 579. See Rapalje v. Emory, 2 Dall. (U. S.) 54, 1 L. Ed. 285; Eagle Bank of New Haven v. Smith, 5 Conn. 71, 13 Am. Dec. 37; Moore v. Moore, 127 Mass. 22. See QUASI CONTRACTS.

MONEY IN HAND. There is no real difference between "money in hand" and "ready money." 12 L. J. Ch. 387.

MONEY JUDGMENT. One which adjudges the payment of a sum of money, as distinguished from one directing an act to be done or property to be restored or transferred.

MONEY LAND. A phrase sometimes applied to money held upon trust to be laid out in the purchase of land. See CONVERSION.

MONEY LENDERS ACT. An act in England of 1900, regulating loans on expectancies, to heirs, etc. See Bellot's Treatise on the Act; EXPECTANCY; [1906] A. C. 461.

MONEY LENT. The technical name of a declaration in an action of assumpsit for that the defendant promised to pay the plaintiff for money lent.

To recover, the plaintiff must prove that the defendant received his money, but it is not indispensable that it should be originally lent. If, for example, money has been advanced upon a special contract, which has been abandoned and rescinded, and which cannot be enforced, the law raises an implied promise from the person who holds the money to pay it back as money lent; 7 Bingh. 266; 8 M. & W. 434. See Tevis v. Brown's Adm'r, 3 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 175.

MONEY-ORDER. The act of June 8, 1872, c. 335, provided for the establishment of a uniform money-order system, at all suitable post-offices, which shall be called "money-order" offices. The applicant, upon depositing a sum, at one post-office, receives a certificate for that amount, which he mails to the payee, who can then obtain the money at the office designated in the order, upon presenting the latter and mentioning the name of his correspondent. R. S. §§ 4027-4048; Suppl. to R. S. p. 155. Under the law of March 3, 1883, it was provided that money-orders should not be issued for a larger sum than a hundred dollars; 1 Supp. R. S. 406; 2 id. 166.

MONEY PAID. The technical name of a declaration in assumpsit, in which the plaintiff declares for money paid for the use of the defendant.

When one advances money for the benefit of another with his consent, or at his express request, although he be not benefited by the transaction, the creditor may recover the money in an action of assumpsit declaring for money paid for the defendant; Hassinger v. Solms, 5 S. & R. (Pa.) 9. But one cannot by a voluntary payment of another's debt make himself creditor of that other; Jones v. Wilson, 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 434; Weakley v. Brahan, 2 Stew. (Ala.) 500; Town of Rumney v. Ellsworth, 4 N. H. 138; Appeal of Breneman, 121 Pa. 641, 15 Atl. 650. In order to enable one who has paid money to the use of another, to maintain an action for money paid, two things are essential: a legal liability on the part of the defendant to pay the original demand, and his antecedent request, or subsequent promise to pay; Beard v. Horton, 86 Ala. 202, 5 South. 207.

Assumpsit for money paid will not lie where property, not money, has been given or received; Morrison v. Berkey, 7 S. & R. (Pa.) 246; Greathouse v. Throckmorton, 7 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 18. But see Ainslie v. Wilson, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 662, 17 Am. Dec. 532. Nor will an action lie to recover back money paid voluntarily with a full knowledge of the facts and circumstances; Lewis v. Hughes, 12 Colo. 208, 20 Pac. 621; Gilliam v. Alford, 69 Tex. 267, 6 S. W. 757.

But where money has been paid to the defendant either for a just, legal, or equitable claim, although it could not have been enforced at law, it cannot be recovered as money paid. See MONEY HAD AND RECEIVED.

The form of declaring is for "money paid by the plaintiff for the use of the defendant and at his request"; 1 M. & W. 511.

MONEYED CAPITAL. In a statute with reference to taxation of national bank stock, it is held to mean money employed in a business whose object is to make profit by investing in securities by way of loan, discount or otherwise, which from time to time are reduced again to money and reinvested. Mercantile Nat. Bank of Cleveland v. Shields, 59 Fed. 952.

The term has a more limited meaning than the term personal property, and applies to such capital as is readily solvable in money; Mercantile Nat. Bank v. City of New York, 28 Fed. 777.

MONEYED CORPORATION. A corporation having the power to make loans upon pledges or deposits, or authorized by law to make insurance. 2 N. Y. Rev. Stat. 7th ed. 1371; Gillet v. Moody, 3 N. Y. 479; Osgood v. Laytin, 48 Barb. (N. Y.) 464; Bank Com'rs v. Bank, 6 Paige (N. Y.) 497.

MONGOLIAN. See CHINESE.

MONIERS. Ministers of the mint; also bankers. Cowell.

MONITION. In Practice. A process in the nature of a summons, which is used in the civil law, and in those courts which derive their practice from the civil law. In the English ecclesiastical courts it is used as a warning to a defendant not to repeat an offence of which he had been convicted. See Bened. Adm.; City of St. Louis v. Richeson, 76 Mo. 470.

A general monition is a citation or summons to all persons interested, or, as is commonly said, to the whole world, to appear and show cause why the libel filed in the case should not be sustained, and the prayer of relief granted. This is adopted in prize cases, admiralty suits for forfeitures, and other suits in rem, when no particular individuals are summoned to answer. In such cases the taking possession of the property libelled, and this general citation or monition served according to law, are considered constructive notice to the world of the pendency of the suit; and the judgment rendered thereupon is conclusive upon the title of the property which may be affected. In form, the monition is substantially a warrant of the court, in an admiralty cause, directed to the marshal or his deputy, commanding him, in the name of the president of the United States, to give public notice, by advertisements in such newspapers as the court may select, and by notifications to be posted in public places, that a libel has been filed in a certain admiralty cause pending, and of the time and place appointed for the trial. A brief statement of the allegations in the libel is usually contained in the monition. The monition is served in the manner directed in the warrant.

A mixed monition is one which contains directions for a general monition to all persons interested, and a special summons to particular persons named in the warrant. This is served by newspaper advertisements, by notifications posted in public places, and by delivery of a copy attested by the officer to each person specially named, or by leaving it at his usual place of residence.

A special monition, is a similar warrant, directed to the marshal or his deputy, requiring him to give special notice to certain persons, named in the warrant, of the pendency of the suit, the grounds of it, and the time and place of trial. It is served by delivery of a copy of the warrant, attested by the officer, to each one of the adverse parties, or by leaving the same at his usual place of residence; but the service should be personal, if possible. Clerke, Prax. tit. 21; Dunlap, Adm. Pr. 135. See Conkl. Adm.; Pars. Marit. Law.

MONITORY LETTER. In Ecclesiastical Law. The process of an official, a bishop, or other prelate having jurisdiction, issued to compel, by ecclesiastical censures, those who know of a crime, or other matter which requires to be explained, to come and reveal it. Merlin, Répert.

MONOCRACY. A government by one person only.

MONOCRAT. A monarch who governs alone; an absolute governor.

MONOGAMY. The state of having only one husband or one wife at a time.

A marriage contracted between one man and one woman, in exclusion of all the rest of mankind. The term is used in opposition to bigamy and polygamy. Wolff, Dr. de la Nat. § 857.

MONOGRAM. A character or cipher composed of one or more letters interwoven, being an abbreviation of a name.

A signature made by a monogram would perhaps be binding provided it could be proved to have been made and intended as a signature; Palmer v. Stephens, 1 Denio (N. Y.) 471.

There seems to be no reason why such a signature should not be as binding as one which is altogether illegible.

MONOMANIA. In Medical Jurisprudence. Insanity only upon a particular subject, and with a single delusion of the mind.

A perversion of the understanding in regard to a single object, or a small number of objects, with the predominance of mental excitement. In re Gannon's Will, 2 Misc. (N. Y.) 333, 21 N. Y. Supp. 960.

See DELUSION; INSANITY; MANIA; and other titles there referred to.

MONOPOLIUM. The sole power, right, or privilege of sale; monopoly; a monopoly. Calvin.

MONOPOLY. In Commercial Law. The abuse of free commerce by which one or more individuals have procured the advantage of selling alone all of a particular kind of merchandise, to the detriment of the public.

Any combination among merchants to raise the price of merchandise to the injury of the public.

An institution or allowance by a grant from the sovereign power of a state, by commission, letters-patent, or otherwise, to any person, or corporation, by which the exclusive right of buying, selling, making, working, or using anything is given; Bacon, Abr.; Co. 3d Inst. 181; whereby any person or persons, bodies politic or corporate, are sought to be restrained of any freedom or liberty they had before, or hindered in their lawful trade; Butchers' Union Slaughter-House & Live-Stock Landing Co. v. Slaughter House Co., 111 U. S. 754, 4 Sup. Ct. 652, 28 L. Ed. 585; Darcantel v. Refrigerating Co., 44 La. Ann. 632, 11 South. 239; U. S. v. Freight Ass'n, 53 Fed. 452. Monopolies were, by stat. 21 Jac. I. c. 3, declared illegal and void, subject to certain specified exceptions, such as patents in favor of the authors of new inventions; 4 Bla. Com. 159; 2 Steph. Com. 25. See Curtis, Robinson, Merwin, Walker; Patents.

A patent for a useful invention, under the United States laws, is not, in the old sense of the common law, a monopoly.

The constitutions of Maryland, North Carolina, and Tennessee declare that "monopolies are contrary to the genius of a free government, and ought not to be allowed."

The Sherman anti-trust act (July 2, 1890) is treated under RESTRAINT OF TRADE. See COPYRIGHT; PATENT.

MONROE DOCTRINE. A policy adopted by the United States according to which this government will consider any attempt on the part of a European power to colonize, or to extend its system of government to, any part of the Western Hemisphere as an act of unfriendliness to the United States. The policy was foreshadowed by Jefferson in 1793, and again in 1801, when the United States expressed to Great Britain its willingness that the Floridas should remain in the hands of Spain, but its unwillingness that they should be transferred to any other power. The doctrine was definitely stated in a message of President Monroe to congress on December 2, 1823, in which he says: "The American continents, by the free and independent condition which they have assumed and maintain, are henceforth not to be considered as subjects for future colonization by any European powers. . . . We owe it, therefore, to candor, and to the amicable relations existing between the United States and those powers, to declare that we should consider any attempt on their part to extend their system to any portion of this hemisphere as dangerous to our peace and safety. With the existing colonies or dependencies of any European power we have not interfered and shall not interfere. But with the governments who have declared their independence and maintained it, and whose independence we have, on great consideration and on just principles, acknowledged, we could not view any interposition for the purpose of oppressing them, or controlling in any other manner their destiny, by any European power, in any other light than as the manifestation of an unfriendly disposition toward the United States. . . ." In another part of the message it is declared that "the American continents, by the free and independent condition which they have assumed and maintain, are henceforth not to be considered as subjects for future colonization by any European powers."

This doctrine is now the settled policy of the United States, and while it has not been formally recognized by foreign powers, it has for the most part been generally acquiesced in. The policy with respect to the colonization of America by European powers was occasioned by discussions with Russia as to territorial rights on the northwest coast of America. Existing colonies of Great Britain and other countries were not, of course, affected by the declaration. In 1848 President Polk stated that a transfer of the sovereignty of Yucatan to either Spain, Great Britain or any other power could not be consented to by the United States. The same principle was reasserted in 1888 when there were rumors that Haiti might become a protectorate of France, and that the French government might take charge of the work of digging the Panama Canal.

The island of Cuba was for a long time a subject for the application of the Monroe Doctrine. As early as 1825 the United States felt that any change in the sovereignty of that island would be detrimental to its interests; again in 1848 the position was taken with regard to a possible control by Great Britain over the island. During the American civil war the emperor of France attempted to establish Prince Maximilian of Austria upon the throne of Mexico. The United States protested, and at the end of the war brought pressure to bear upon France to withdraw her troops, which were in Mexico in support of Maximilian. A boundary dispute between Great Britain and Venezuela gave occasion to President Cleveland to apply the Monroe Doctrine in a very positive way. As it appeared that Great Britain would be likely to press her claim by force, the United States recommended arbitration between the two countries, and then undertook itself to appoint a commission to determine what seemed to be the just boundary line. Finally a commission of arbitration was appointed under treaty between Great Britain and Venezuela, which rendered an award on October 3, 1899.

In his annual message of December 3, 1903, President Roosevelt said distinctly: "We do not guarantee any state against punishment if it misconducts itself, provided that punishment does not take the form of the acquisition of territory by any non-American power." In 1899 the American delegation at the Peace Conference at The Hague made with reference to the convention providing for the new Court of Arbitration the following declaration: "Nothing contained in this convention shall be so construed as to require the United States of America to depart from its traditional policy of not intruding upon, interfering with, or entangling itself in the political questions or policy or internal administration of any foreign state; nor shall anything contained in the said convention be construed to imply a relinquishment by the United States of America of its traditional attitude toward purely American questions." The convention was signed under a reservation in accordance with this declaration.

While the United States exercises a sort of wardship over the New World, it recognizes that circumstances may occur in which a foreign power may lawfully exact reparation from an American state; and so long as the reparation does not take the form of territorial occupation, the United States will not interfere. T. J. Lawrence, Int. Law, 4th ed., 282.

An international nuisance must be abated, and if European powers are not to be allowed to do so in the case of an American state, the United States must do so. This may lead to a form of intervention, as in the case of San Domingo in 1904-1905, when an American receiver-general was appointed to collect the Dominican customs in order to insure the payment of foreign creditors. It is by an extension of the Monroe Doctrine that the United States justifies its qualified intervention in the domestic affairs of Mexico. If foreign powers are not to be allowed to see to the protection of their citizens and their citizens' property, then the United States must itself undertake that duty. Moore, Int. Law Digest, VI, §§ 927-969.

See The Nicaragua Question, by L. M. Keasbey; Reddaway, The Monroe Doctrine; Wharton's Dig. Int. Law.

MONSTER. An animal which has a conformation contrary to the order of nature. 2 Dugl. Hum. Phys. 422.

It is said that a monster, although born of a woman in lawful wedlock, cannot inherit. Those who have, however, the essential parts of the human form, and have merely some defect of conformation, are capable of inheriting, if otherwise qualified; 2 Bla. Com. 246; 1 Beck, Med. Jur. 366; Co. Litt. 7, 8; Dig. 1. 5. 14; 1 Swift, Syst. 331; Fred. Code, pt. 1, b. 1, t. 4, § 4.

No living human birth, however much it may differ from human shape, can be lawfully destroyed. Traill, Med. Jur. 47. See Briand, Méd. Lég. pt. 1, c. 6, art. 2, § 3; 1 Foderé, Méd. Lég. § 402.

MONSTRANS DE DROIT (Fr. showing of right). A common-law process by which restitution of personal or real property is obtained from the crown by a subject. Chitty, Prerog. of Cr. 345; 3 Bla. Com. 256. By this process, when the facts of the title of the crown are already on record, the facts on which the plaintiff relies, not inconsistent with such record, are shown, and judgment of the court prayed thereon. The judgment, if against the crown, is that of ouster le main, which vests possession in the subject without execution. Bac. Abr. Prerogative (E); 1 And. 181; French v. Com., 5 Leigh (Va.) 512, 27 Am. Dec. 613; Fiott v. Com., 12 Gratt. (Va.) 564.

Monstrans de droit was preferred either on the common-law side of the court of chancery, or in the exchequer, and will not come before the corresponding divisions in the high court of justice. (Jud. Act, 1873, s. 34.)

MONSTRANS DE FAIT (Fr. showing of a deed). A profert. Bac. Abr. Pleas.

MONSTRAVERUNT, WRIT OF. In English Law. A writ which lies for the tenants of an ancient demesne who hold by free charter, and not for those tenants who hold by copy of court-roll, or by the rod, according to the custom of the manor. Fitzh. N. B. 31. For a form see 3 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 499.

MONTANA. One of the states of the United States.

Congress, by an act approved May 26, 1864 (R. S. § 1903), created the territory and defined its boundaries, providing also that the United States might divide the territory or change its boundaries in such manner as may be deemed expedient; and further, that the rights of person and property pertaining to the Indians in the territory shall not without their consent be included within the territorial limits of jurisdiction.

By act of congress approved March 1, 1872, a tract of land in the territories of Montana and Wyoming, lying near the headwaters of the Yellowstone River, is reserved and withdrawn from settlement under the laws of the United States and dedicated and set apart as a public park for the benefit and enjoyment of the people; R. S. § 2474; and by act of April 15, 1874, a tract of land at the northern boundary is set apart as a reservation for the Gros Ventre, Piegan, Blood, Blackfoot, River Crow, and such other Indians as the President may, from time to time, see fit to locate therein. 18 Stat. at L. 28.

The act providing for the admission of Montana into the Union as one of the states was passed February 22, 1889, and the proclamation announcing its admission was on November 8, 1889.

The constitution was adopted August 17, 1889 and ratified by the people October 1, 1889. An amendment of 1913 adopted woman suffrage.

MONTES PIETATIS, MONTS DE PIÉTÉ. Institutions established by public authority for lending money upon pledge of goods.

In these establishments a fund is provided, with suitable warehouses and all necessary accommodations. They are managed by directors. When the money for which goods are pledged is not returned in proper time, the goods are sold to reimburse the institutions. They are found principally on the continent of Europe. With us, private persons, called pawnbrokers, perform this office.

MONTH. A space of time variously computed, as the term is applied to astronomical, civil or solar, or lunar months.

The astronomical month contains one-twelfth part of the time employed by the sun in going through the zodiac. In law, when a month simply is mentioned, it is never understood to mean an astronomical month.

The civil or solar month is that which agrees with the Gregorian calendar; and these months are known by the names of January, February, March, etc. They are composed of unequal portions of time. There are seven of thirty-one days each, four of thirty, and one which is sometimes composed of twenty-eight days, and in leap-years, of twenty-nine.

The lunar month consists of twenty-eight days.

The Roman names of the months, as settled by Augustus, have been used in all Christian countries except Holland, where a set of characteristic names prevail, the remains of the ancient Gaulish title, which were also used by our Anglo-Saxon ancestors. The French convention, in October, 1793, adopted a set of names similar to that of Holland.

By the law of England, a month means ordinarily, in common contracts, as in leases, a lunar month; [1904] 1 Ch. 305. A contract, therefore, made for a lease of land for twelve months would mean a lease for forty-eight weeks only; 2 Bla. Com. 141; 6 Co. 62; 1 Maule & S. 111. A distinction has been made between "twelve months" and a "twelve-month;" the latter has been held to mean a year; 6 Co. 61. In a contract for the hire of furniture at a weekly rental for so many months, "months" was held to mean lunar month; 45 L. T. Rep. N. S. 343.

But in mercantile contracts a month simply signifies a calendar month; Sheets v. Selden, 2 Wall. (U. S.) 190, 17 L. Ed. 822; Union Bank of Georgetown v. Forrest, 3 Cra. C. C. 218, Fed. Cas. No. 14,356; Churchill v. Bank, 19 Pick. (Mass.) 532; Hosley v. Black, 28 N. Y. 444; a promissory note to pay money in twelve months would, therefore, mean a promise to pay in one year, or twelve calendar months; 1 M. & S. 111; Story, Bills, §§ 143, 330; Thomas v. Shoemaker, 6 W. & S. (Pa.) 179; Leffingwell v. White, 1 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 90, 1 Am. Dec. 97; 1 Q. B. 250; Benj. Sales § 684.

In general, when a statute speaks of a month, without adding "calendar," or other words showing a clear intention, it shall be intended a lunar month; Com. Dig. Anno (B); in England by statute (1850) it means a calendar month, as also in orders of court, sales and negotiable instruments. In all legal proceedings, as in commitments, pleadings, etc., a month means four weeks; 3 Burr. 1455; 1 W. Bla. 540; Dougl. 446, 463; Com. v. Stanley, 12 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 543; Stackhouse v. Halsey, 3 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 74.

That a month mentioned generally in a statute has been construed to mean a calendar month; see Brudenell v. Vaux, 2 Dall. (U. S.) 302, 1 L. Ed. 390; Avery v. Pixley, 4 Mass. 461; Hardin v. Major, 4 Bibb (Ky.) 105; Brown v. Williams, 34 Neb. 376, 51 N. W. 851; Guaranty Trust & Safe Deposit Co. v. Buddington, 27 Fla. 215, 9 South. 246, 12 L. R. A. 770; Baltimore & D. P. R. Co. v. Pumphrey, 74 Md. 86, 21 Atl. 559; Guaranty Trust & Safe Deposit Co. v. R. Co., 139 U. S. 137, 11 Sup. Ct. 512, 35 L. Ed. 116. In England in the ecclesiastical law, months are computed by the calendar; 3 Burr. 1455; 1 M. & S. 111; thirty days is not a month; State v. Upchurch, 72 N. C. 146.

In New York, it is enacted that whenever the term "month" or "months" is or shall be used in any statute, act, deed, verbal or written contract, or any public or private instrument whatever, it shall be construed to mean a calendar, and not a lunar, month, unless otherwise expressed. Rev. Stat. pt. 2, c. 19, tit. 1, § 4; Hosley v. Black, 28 N. Y. 444. But this has been modified as to computation of interest, so that a month shall be considered the twelfth part of a year, and as consisting of thirty days, and interest for any number of days less than a month shall be estimated by the proportion which such number of days bears to thirty; R. S. pt. 3, p. 2254, § 9.

MONUMENT. A thing intended to transmit to posterity the memory of some one. A tomb where a dead body has been deposited.

In this sense it differs from a cenotaph, which is an empty tomb. Dig. 11. 7. 2. 6; 11. 7. 2. 42.

Coke says that the erecting of monuments in church, chancel, common chapel, or churchyard in convenient manner is lawful; for it is the last work of charity that can be done for the deceased, who whilst he lived was a lively temple of the Holy Ghost, with a reverend regard and Christian hope of a joyful resurrection.

The defacing of monuments is punishable by the common law; Year B, 9 Edw. IV. c. 14; and trespass may be maintained; 10 F. Moore 494; 1 Cons. S. C. 172; 3 Bingh. 136. An heir may bring an action against one that injures the monument of his ancestor; Co. 3d Inst. 202; Gibs. 453. A gift for the perpetual repair of a tomb, if in a church, will be sustained; [1891] 3 Ch. 252; but see L. R.

4 Eq. 521; CHARITABLE USES. Although the fee of church or churchyard be in another, yet he cannot deface monuments; Co. 3d Inst. 202. The fabric of a church is not to be injured or deformed by the caprice of individuals; 1 Cons. S. C. 145; and a monument may be taken down if placed inconveniently; 1 Lec. Eccl. 640. A monument containing an improper inscription can be removed; 1 Curt. Eccl. 883.

As to inscriptions on monuments and their value as evidence, see INSCRIPTION.

MONUMENTS. Permanent landmarks established for the purpose of indicating boundaries.

Monuments may be either natural or artificial objects: as, rivers, known streams, springs, or marked trees; Preston v. Bowmar, 6 Wheat. (U. S.) 582, 5 L. Ed. 336; Rix v. Johnson, 5 N. H. 524, 22 Am. Dec. 472; Shepherd v. Nave, 125 Ind. 226, 25 N. E. 220. Even posts set up at the corners; Alshire's Lessee v. Hulse, 5 Ohio 534; and a clearing; Jackson v. Widger, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 723; are considered as monuments. But see Reed v. Shenck, 14 N. C. 75.

When monuments are established, they must govern, although neither courses nor distances nor computed contents correspond; Ely v. U. S., 171 U. S. 220, 18 Sup. Ct. 840, 43 L. Ed. 142; Preston v. Bowmar, 6 Wheat. (U. S.) 582, 5 L. Ed. 336; Watrous v. Morrison, 33 Fla. 261, 14 South. 805, 39 Am. St. Rep. 139; England v. Vandermark, 147 Ill. 76, 35 N. E. 465; Smith v. Improvement Co., 117 Mo. 438, 22 S. W. 1083; Anderson v. Richardson, 92 Cal. 623, 28 Pac. 679; Yanish v. Tarbox, 49 Minn. 268, 51 N. W. 1051; Whitehead v. Ragan, 106 Mo. 231, 17 S. W. 307; McCullough v. Improvement Co., 48 N. J. Eq. 170, 21 Atl. 481; 1 Washb. R. P. 406. Their location may be proved where lost; Resurrection Gold Min. Co. v. Mining Co., 129 Fed. 668, 64 C. C. A. 180.

A monument established by the government surveyors as the true corner of sections will control courses and distances; Brown v. Morrill, 91 Mich. 29, 51 N. W. 700; Ogilvie v. Copeland, 145 Ill. 98, 33 N. E. 1085. See BOUNDARY.

In Mexican grants, while monuments control courses and distances, and courses and distances control quantity, yet where there is uncertainty in specific description, the quantity named may be of decisive weight and necessarily is so if the intention to convey only so much and no more is plain; Ainsa v. U. S., 161 U. S. 208, 16 Sup. Ct. 544, 40 L. Ed. 673; Ely v. U. S., 171 U. S. 220, 18 Sup. Ct. 840, 43 L. Ed. 142.

See METES AND BOUNDS.

MOOE. An officer in the Isle of Man similar to the English bailiff.

MOORAGE. A sum due for fastening ships to a tree or post at the shore or to a wharf. 3 Bland 373.

MOORING. In Maritime Law. The securing of a vessel by a hawser or chain, or otherwise, to the shore, or to the bottom by a cable and anchor. The being "moored in safety," under a policy of insurance, is being moored in port, or at the usual place for landing and taking in cargo free from any immediate impending peril insured against; 1 Phil. Ins. 968; Speyer v. Ins. Co., 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 88; Bill v. Mason, 6 Mass. 313; Code de Comm. 152.

MOOT (from Saxon gemot, meeting together. Anc. Laws and Inst. of England). See FOLC GEMOTE; WITENA-GEMOT; FICTITIOUS ACTION; AMICABLE ACTION.

In English Law. A term used in the inns of court, signifying the exercise of arguing imaginary cases, which young barristers and students used to perform at certain times, the better to be enabled by this practice to defend their clients' cases. Orig. Jur. 212. Mooting was formerly the chief exercise of the students in the inns of court.

To plead a mock cause. (Also spelled meet, from Sax. motain, to meet; the sense of debate being from meeting, encountering. Webster, Dict.)

Any attempt, by a mere colorable dispute, to obtain the opinion of a court upon a question of law, when there is no real controversy, is an abuse which courts have always reprehended and treated as a punishable contempt of court; Taney, C. J., in Lord v. Veazie, 8 How. (U. S.) 251, 12 L. Ed. 1067; any agreement to practice such deceit is void; Connolly v. Cunningham, 2 Wash. Terr. 242, 5 Pac. 473; Van Horn v. Kittitas County, 112 Fed. 3. Courts do not adjudicate moot cases, and will not hear a case when the object sought is not attainable; Jones v. Montague, 194 U. S. 150, 24 Sup. Ct. 611, 48 L. Ed. 913. So also State v. Savage, 64 Neb. 684, 90 N. W. 898, 91 N. W. 557; State v. Lambert, 52 W. Va. 248, 43 S. E. 176.

On a bill to restrain the secretary of the treasury from paying certain sums, if they have been paid, the question of right is a moot question; Wilson v. Shaw, 204 U. S. 24, 27 Sup. Ct. 233, 51 L. Ed. 351; but a case is not moot where interests of a public character are asserted by the government under conditions that may be immediately repeated, merely because the particular order has expired; Southern Pac. Terminal Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 219 U. S. 498, 31 Sup. Ct. 279, 55 L. Ed. 310.

Where a question of jurisdiction has become a moot question on appeal from a judgment for nominal damages, it will not be considered; Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. v. Lyne, 193 Fed. 984, 113 C. C. A. 604; and a suit will not be retained to determine appellant's liability on bonds, when there is nothing in the record on which the rights of the parties may be adjudicated; Lewis Pub. Co. v. Wyman, 228 U. S. 610, 33 Sup. Ct. 599, 57 L. Ed. 989.

Courts will not construe contracts until actual questions have arisen from them; New Orleans & N. W. Ry. Co. v. Ferry Co., 104 La. 53, 28 South. 840. Action will not lie for the sole purpose of determining at law whether a city ordinance is void; Coykendall v. Hood, 36 App. Div. 558, 55 N. Y. Supp. 718. An action will not lie against a city hospital for injuries received therein merely to fix plaintiff's damages, in order that he may present his claim to the legislature; Maia's Adm'r v. Hospital, 97 Va. 507, 34 S. E. 617, 47 L. R. A. 577.

Where there is an actual bona fide contest as to a legal right, an agreement to put the case in such shape that the right can be readily determined by the court, especially when it concerns a matter of public moment, which should be speedily settled, is a common practice in every state in the Union. The legal tender cases are said to have been made up in that way. So also Ex parte Dement, 53 Ala. 397, 25 Am. Rep. 611.

A moot question is one which has not been decided.

MOOT COURT. A court where moot questions are argued. Webster, Dict.

In law schools this is one of the methods of instruction; an undecided point of law is argued by students appointed as counsel on either side of the cause, one or more of the professors sitting judicially in presence of the school. The argument is usually conducted as in cases reserved for hearing before the full bench.

MOOT HILL. Hill of meeting (gemot), on which the Britons used to hold their courts, the judge sitting on the eminence, the parties, etc., on an elevated platform below. Encyc. Lond.

MORA. A moor, barren or unprofitable ground; marsh; a heath; a watery bog or moor. Co. Litt. 5; Fleta, l. 2, c. 71. See IN MORA.

In Roman law, the nonperformance of an obligation was called "mora" (delay), for the debtor delays performance. Generally it is only after demand for performance had been properly made and refused. It did not exist if the obligation was in good faith disputed. In some cases interest became due, but only as a matter of judicial discretion. Mora threw on the debtor the whole loss arising from the destruction of the thing promised by accident without the fault of the creditor or debtor (periculum rei). If the creditor improperly refused to accept a discharge of the debt, the debtor was released from paying interest for the delay and must bear the loss of an accidental destruction of the thing promised. Hunter, Rom. Law 653.

MORAL ACTIONS. Actions only in which men have knowledge to guide them and a will to choose for themselves. Ruth. Inst. Nat. L. lib. 1, c. 1.

MORAL CERTAINTY. That degree of certainty which will justify a jury in grounding on it their verdict.

It is only probability; but it is called certainty, because every sane man assents to it necessarily from a habit produced by the necessity of acting. Beccaria on Crimes and Punishments, c. 14. Nothing else but a strong presumption grounded on probable reasons, and which very seldom fails and deceives us. Puffendorff, Law of Nature, b. 1. c. 2, § 11. A reasonable and moral certainty; a certainty that convinces and directs the understanding and satisfies the reason and judgment of those who are bound to act conscientiously upon it. A certainty beyond a reasonable doubt. Shaw, C. J., Commonwealth v. Webster, Bemis' Rep. of the Trial, 469; Com. v. Costley, 118 Mass. 1. Such a certainty "as convinces beyond all reasonable doubt." Parke, B., Best, Presumpt. 257, note; Lawrens v. Lucas, 6 Rich. Eq. (S. C.) 217. See DOUBT.

MORAL CONSIDERATION. See CONSIDERATION; MORAL OBLIGATION.

MORAL INSANITY. In Medical Jurisprudence. A morbid perversion of the moral feelings, affections, inclinations, temper, habits, and moral disposition, without any notable lesion of the intellect or knowing and reasoning faculties, and particularly without any maniacal hallucination. Prichard, art. Insanity, in Cyclopædia of Practical Medicine.

A disorder which affects the feelings and affections, or what are termed the moral powers in contradistinction to those of the understanding or intellect. 3 Witth. & B. 269.

For a discussion on this subject and its legal relations, see INSANITY; MANIA.

MORAL OBLIGATION. A duty which one owes, and which he ought to perform, but which he is not legally bound to fulfil.

These obligations are of two kinds: 1st, those founded on a natural right: as, the obligation to be charitable, which can never be enforced by law. 2d, those which are supported by a good or valuable antecedent consideration: as, where a man owes a debt barred by the act of limitations, or contracted during infancy; this cannot be recovered by law, though it subsists in morality and conscience. A doctrine prevailed for some time in the courts of England and this country that an express promise made in discharge of an antecedent moral obligation created a valid contract, and the contract was then said to be supported by the previous moral obligation; Cowp. 290; 5 Taunt. 36; Willing v. Peters, 12 S. & R. (Pa.) 177. This opinion appears to have been entertained by Lord Mansfield; 5 Taunt. 36. In a note to Wennall v. Adney, 3 B. & P. 249, this idea was controverted, and in Eastwood v. Kenyon, 11 Ad. & E. 438 (6 Eng. Rul. Cas. 41), the notion of the validity of a moral consideration was finally overruled. The rule existed, if it does not still exist, in Pennsylvania, as late as Hemphill v. McClimans, 24 Pa. 367, and see Holden v. Banes, 140 Pa. 63, 21 Atl. 239; Hollingsworth, Contr.

Promises by an infant, after coming of age, to pay a debt incurred during infancy, of a bankrupt to pay a debt discharged in bankruptcy, and of a debtor to pay a debt barred by the statute of limitations, are sometimes considered as instances of contracts supported by moral considerations; as is a note given as surety by wife for husband, renewed after his death; Rathfon v. Locher, 215 Pa. 574, 64 Atl. 790. But the promise of the infant is rather a ratification of a contract which was voidable, but not void. The promise of the bankrupt operates as a waiver of the defence given to the bankrupt by statute, the certificate of discharge not having extinguished the debt, but merely having protected the defendant from an action on it, by means of the statutory bar. In both of these cases the action is founded upon the original debt. The case of a promise to pay a debt barred by the statute of limitations is said to stand upon anomalous grounds. The true explanation of the doctrine seems to be that it was an ingenious device for evading the statute adopted at a time when the courts regarded it with disfavor. Here too the action is upon the old debt, and not upon the new promise; Ilsley v. Jewett, 3 Metc. (Mass.) 439. The subject is learnedly treated by Mr. Langdell (Contr. § 71). Some cases have held a feme bound by a promise after coverture to pay a debt contracted during coverture; Hemphill v. McClimans, 24 Pa. 371; see Ewell, L. C. Cov. 332.

Under the English Bankruptcy Act of 1869, debts discharged cannot be revived by a promise made after adjudication; and under the Infants' Relief Act of 1874, any promise made after full age to pay a debt contracted during infancy is void.

The discharge of a merely moral obligation of another will not create a debt, unless made in pursuance of an express request or actual agreement to that effect; Leake, Contr. 86.

MORAL TURPITUDE. An act of baseness, vileness or depravity in the private and social duties which a man owes to his fellow men or to society in general, contrary to the accepted and customary rule of right and duty between man and man. In re Henry, 15 Idaho 755, 99 Pac. 1054, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 207. It does not necessarily include publishing a defamatory libel of George V; U. S. v. Uhl, 210 Fed. 860. See DEPORTATION; IMMIGRATION.

MORATORIUM. A term designating a suspension of all, or of certain, legal remedies against debtors, sometimes authorized by law during times of financial distress.

MORATUR or DEMORATUR IN LEGE. He demurs in law. He rests on the pleadings of the case, and abides the judgment of the court.

MORE OR LESS. Words, in a conveyance of lands or contract to convey lands, importing that the quantity is uncertain and not warranted, and that no right of either party under the contract shall be affected by a deficiency or excess in the quantity. 17 Ves. 394. So in contracts of sale generally; 2 B. & Ad. 106. These words added to a specification of quantity in a conveyance show it to be a mere estimate, and by necessary inference subordinates the quantity to fixed calls or monuments; Borkenhagen v. Vianden, 82 Wis. 206, 52 N. W. 260.

In case of an executory contract, equity will enforce specific performance without changing the price, if the excess or deficiency is very small; 17 Ves. 394; Phipps v. Tarpley, 24 Miss. 597; Lawrence v. Simon-ton, 13 Tex. 223; but not if the excess or deficiency is great, even though the price reserved be per acre. In 2 B. & Ad. 106, it was held that an excess of fifty quarters over three hundred quarters of grain was not covered by the words "three hundred more or less," if it was not shown that so large an excess was in contemplation; 1 Esp. 229. See Libby v. Dickey, 85 Me. 362, 27 Atl. 253. But a deed adding the words more or less to a description of the property is not a sufficient fulfilment of a contract to convey the described property, when more or less was not in such original contract, if there is an actual deficiency. But after such a conveyance is made and a note given for the purchase-money, the note cannot be defended against on the ground of deficiency; Houghtaling v. Lewis, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 297. These words more or less have been held to cover a deficiency of 10 acres where the deed called for 96 acres; Faure v. Martin, 7 N. Y. 210, 57 Am. Dec. 515; a deficiency of 54 acres in a deed calling for 451 acres; King v. Brown, 54 Ind. 368; 50 feet from 220, where the true dimension was on record, in a purchase in gross; Noble v. Googins, 99 Mass. 231.

In case of an executed contract, equity will not disturb it, unless there be a great deficiency; 2 Russ. 570; Thomas v. Perry, 1 Pet. C. C. 49, Fed. Cas. No. 13,908; or excess; Mann v. Pearson, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 37; 1 V. & B. 375; or actual misrepresentation without fraud, and there be a material excess or deficiency; Belknap v. Sealey, 14 N. Y. 143, 67 Am. Dec. 120; see 11 Q. B. Div. 255.

Eighty-five feet, more or less, means eighty-five feet, unless the deed or situation of the land in some way controls it; Blaney v. Rice, 20 Pick. (Mass.) 62, 32 Am. Dec. 204.

The words more or less will not cover a distinct lot; McCune v. Hull, 24 Mo. 574. See CONSTRUCTION; ABOUT.

The purchaser is not precluded by a recital of "more or less" in the deed from showing by parol evidence, under an allegation of fraud or mistake, an agreement contemporaneous with the execution of the deed, making the transaction a sale by the acre; Franco-Texan Land Co. v. Simpson, 1 Tex. Civ. App. 600, 20 S. W. 953. See By Estimation.

MORGANATIC MARRIAGE. A lawful and inseparable conjunction of a single man of noble and illustrious birth with a single woman of an inferior or plebeian station, upon this condition, that neither the wife nor children should partake of the title, arms, or dignity of the husband, nor succeed to his inheritance, but should have a certain allowance assigned to them by the morganatic contract.

This relation was frequently contracted during the Middle Ages; the marriage ceremony was regularly performed, the union was for life and indissoluble, and the children were considered legitimate, though they could not inherit. Fred. Code, b. 2, art. 3; Poth. Du Mar. 1, c. 2, § 2; Shelf. Marr. & D. 10; Pruss. Code, art. 835. In Germany, it is now confined to the reigning houses and the higher nobility and mediatized princes. It is there called a "left hand marriage."

MORGUE. A place where the bodies of persons found dead are exposed for identification, or until they are claimed and removed by their relatives or friends. A dead house.

A place where the bodies of unidentified dead are kept and exposed to view for the purpose of identification or that they may be claimed by their friends. Koebler v. Pennewell, 75 Ohio St. 278, 79 N. E. 471.

This meaning of the word is a derived, and not its original, one. Its present use in cities is adopted from the Morgue in Paris and is quite general.

The word is derived from morguer to look at solemnly or sourly, and a morgue was formerly, "in the chastelet of Paris, a certain chair wherein a new-come prisoner is set, and must continue some hours, without stirring either head or hand, that the keeper's ordinary servants may the better take notice of his face and favour." Cotgrave.

A variation in this explanation is that the word originally meant the inner wicket of a prison, where prisoners were kept for some time, that the jailers and turnkeys might view them at their leisure, so as to be able to recognize them when occasion required. Int. Encyc.

The term morgue as used in a statute forbidding the establishment of one on a street on which there are dwelling houses, except under certain conditions of consent of the owners or occupants, does not make it unlawful to receive, care for and keep temporarily in an undertaking establishment in such location, in a private room and unexposed to public view, the bodies of known and identified dead taken there from time to time by relatives or friends in order that funeral services may be held and conducted at that place; Koebler v. Pennewell, 75 Ohio St. 278, 79 N. E. 471.

The position of morgue keeper, being one of public trust with fixed salary and continuous duties, not menial, is a public office within a rule requiring appointments to be in writing; People v. Keller, 30 Misc. 52, 61 N. Y. Supp. 746.

MORMONISM. The system of doctrines, practices (especially polygamy), ceremonies, and church government maintained by the Mormons. Cent. Dict. See MARRIAGE.

MORNING GIFT. A gift made by the bridegroom to the bride the day after marriage. 2 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 76. It was the purchase price or morgengifu of the heathen Germans; id. 77.

MORPHINOMANIA, or MORPHINISM. The opium habit. An excessive desire for morphia.

The irresistible desire for this drug, when acquired, resembles dipsomania (q. v.). The result of continued and excessive indulgence in the habit is apt to be a species of insanity (q. v.), and sudden deprivation of the drug results to the victim in extreme physical discomfort and insomnia, with the possibility of that form of insanity grouped as mania (q. v.).

The physical results of the habit include the demoralization of most of the functions of the body, while mentally the final results are those of dementia (q. v.), with lowering of the moral character, loss of judgment and of memory, special tendency to lying, neglect of family and business and not uncommonly forgery. While the inception of the habit is generally due to the legitimate use of the drug to relieve pain, its continuance and abuse are said "to depend on a neurotic state which is due to an inherited degenerative nervous organization" and that "rarely will this habit plant itself upon an otherwise sound organization." 3 With. & Beck. Jur. For. Med. & Tox. 258. An agreement to treat one for this habit until he was "fully and permanently cured" is to be construed as intending that he should be restored to a normal condition, with the same power to resist the habit as before he acquired it, and not to put him in a condition in which he could not take the drug; Wellman v. Jones, 124 Ala. 580, 27 South. 416. See a note in 39 L. R. A. 262.

MORT D'ANCESTOR. An ancient and now almost obsolete remedy in English law. An assize of mort d'ancestor was a writ which was sued out where, after the decease of a man's ancestor, a stranger abated, and entered into the estate. Co. Litt. 159. The remedy in such case is now to bring ejectment.

MORTALITY TABLES. See LIFE TABLES.

MORTGAGE. A conveyance of real estate or assignment of personal property, without parting with the possession in either case, by way of hypothecation as security for the performance of some act, usually the payment of money, and treated at law as a conveyance or assignment, but in equity as a lien.

The conveyance of an estate by way of pledge for the security of debt, and to become void on payment of it. 4 Kent 136.

An estate created by a conveyance absolute in its form, but intended to secure the performance of some act, such as the payment of money, and the like, by the grantor or some other person, and to become void if the act is performed agreeably to the terms prescribed at the time of making such conveyance. 2 Washb. R. P., 5th ed. *475.

A conditional conveyance of land designed as a security for the payment of money, the fulfillment of some contract, or the performance of some act, and to be void upon such payment, fulfillment or performance. Mitchell v. Burnham, 44 Me. 299.

A contract by which specific property is hypothecated for the performance of an act without the necessity of a change of possession. Sandmeyer v. Ins. Co., 2 S. Dak. 346, 50 N. W. 353. It is a mere security for a debt or obligation; Cook v. Bartholomew, 60 Conn. 24, 22 Atl. 444, 13 L. R. A. 452; Cleveland, P. & A. R. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 15 Wall. (U. S.) 322, 21 L. Ed. 179.

"A concise definition of mortgage which should embrace both its equitable and its legal character is virtually impossible. . . . These attempted definitions are all erroneous upon any theory of the instrument; they do not go beyond the literal import of the language in which a mortgage is usually expressed, and they utterly ignore all the equitable elements which are as much and as truly constituent parts of the mortgage as the legal elements. Any true definition based upon the original common law and equitable system must embody and express all the double features of the mortgage—that it is both a lien in equity and a conveyance at law." Pomeroy, Eq. Jur. § 1191.

The first definition, supra, is an attempt to do what Pomeroy here says is "virtually impossible." It is, however, to be noted that advantage has been taken of his criticism of the definitions generally, and an effort made to supply what he pointed out as their deficiencies.

Scientific legal writers reckon among proprietary rights "jura in re aliena," i. e. rights of dominion over tangible things of which the fundamental property right is in another. Of such rights the most important is Pledge, which, in this sense, covers those legal relations in which a right in rem is conferred by a debtor upon a creditor as security for a right in personam, i. e. for the debt or other personal obligation of the debtor; Holland, Jurispr. ch. xi. Practically we distinguish these securities as Mortgage, when the debtor transfers the title to the res to his creditor, retaining the possession of it, and Pledge, when he retains the title but transfers the possession. See PLEDGE.

Mortgage is the translation of vadium mortuum—dead pledge, so named because the land was turned over to the mortgagee or lender of the money, who received the profits or revenues of it without applying them in satisfaction of his debt, and the land thus became dead to the mortgagor or borrower who derived no benefit from it. This was regarded as in the nature of usury on the part of the lender and was looked upon with disfavor, in modern phrase as contrary to public policy. In contrast to this was vadium vivum, or live pledge, under which the borrower continued in possession of his property, receiving the profits or revenues of it. Another explanation of the words is that in the vadium mortuum the pledge was dead to the borrower if he failed to redeem, but in the other was alive to him until the lender secured possession of it on default; 1 Coote, Mortg., 4th ed. 6; Co. Litt. 205. (In the case of Welsh mortgages, now disused, the mortgagee entered into possession, taking the rents and profits, but applying them on account of the debt.) In attempting to avoid the difficulty lenders devised the plan of taking from the borrower a conveyance of the property to become absolute upon the failure of the borrower to redeem. Later, the plan was adopted of taking an absolute conveyance, with an agreement on the part of the lender to re-convey on payment of the debt, the transaction being in form an absolute sale of land with an option to buy it back by payment of the loan at a fixed time. Another form was to convey the land to a trustee who was to hold to the creditor's use, and on default was to sell it for the payment of the debt. All these devices were intended to protect the lender by enabling him to secure the land on his debtor's default. All of them were modified or softened by the courts refusing to allow the forfeiture or to treat the transaction as other than a method of pledging the land as security for the debt, the debtor retaining what came to be known as the equity of redemption, and being protected against the strict enforcement of his contract; H. W. Chaplin, in 4 Harv. L. Rev. 1. See EQUITY OF REDEMPTION.

In modern times although the old forms are still followed, it is everywhere recognized that the real owner of the land is the mortgagor, and the mortgage is a mere security for the debt or obligation, giving the mortgagee a chattel interest which passes to his personal representatives and not to his heirs. Some of the states have abrogated the old rule and declared by statute that the effect of a mortgage shall be merely to give a lien and not to pass an estate to the mortgagee. But in England and in most of the states the old rule remains nominally in force, and in courts of law the mortgage is recognized as conveying an estate, while equity treats it as merely conferring a lien. Originally this was burdensome, since there was an actual distinction between the rules applied in the different jurisdictions, and redress had to be sought in equity against the severities of the law, but the principle adopted in Pennsylvania in the eighteenth century, of administering equity through common law forms has been gradually making its way until it reached its most signal triumph in the adoption of the Judicature Act of 1873 in England providing that where "there is any conflict between the rules of equity and the rules of common law, the rules of equity shall prevail." To-day it may be safely said that the equitable doctrine has completely supplanted the legal, but as the form of the transaction is still the same, some confusion exists, and doubtless always will exist, in the definitions given of mortgage. Some of these have been quoted supra. See a discussion of the relations of mortgagor and mortgagee by Lord Selborne, in 6 Q. B. D. 345.

A mortgage on real estate in New York is merely a chose in action and gives the mortgagee merely a lien on the property; In re Kellogg, 113 Fed. 120; and it "is now almost universally regarded as a mere security for the payment of the debt"; Reasoner v. Edmundson, 5 Ind. 393; but, per contra,

It was said to be "a conveyance of an estate or property by way of pledge for the security of a debt, to become void on payment thereof"; Poarch v. Duncan, 41 Tex. Civ. App. 275, 91 S. W. 1110. Any transfer of property as security, regardless of the form of characterizing the same, creates the relation of mortgagor and mortgagee; Beebe v. Loan Co., 117 Wis. 328, 93 N. W. 1103.

What May be Mortgaged. Both real and personal property may be mortgaged, and in substantially the same manner, except that a mortgage being in its nature a transfer of title, the law respecting the necessity of possession in case of personal property and the nature of the instruments of transfer, require the transfer to be made differently in the two cases.

All kinds of property, real or personal, which are capable of an absolute sale, may be the subject of a mortgage; rights in remainder and reversion, franchises, and choses in action, may, therefore, be mortgaged. But a mere possibility or expectancy, as that of an heir, cannot; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 1012; 4 Kent 144; Wilson v. Wilson, 32 Barb. (N. Y.) 328; Low v. Pew, 108 Mass. 347, 11 Am. Rep. 357; Hosmer v. Carter, 68 Ill. 98 (see EXPECTANCY).

Where real estate is mortgaged, all acccessions thereto, subsequent to the mortgage, will be bound by it; Arques v. Wasson, 51 Cal. 620, 21 Am. Rep. 718; Broughton v. Powell, 52 Ala. 123; Butt v. Ellett, 19 Wall. (U. S.) 544, 22 L. Ed. 183; Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. v. Woelpper, 64 Pa. 366, 3 Am. Rep. 596; if specifically stated to bind after-acquired property, it will have that effect; Hoyle v. R. Co., 51 Barb. (N. Y.) 45; Rowan v. Rifle Mfg. Co., 29 Conn. 282.

It may now be considered as settled that a mortgage of after-acquired property is valid and equity will give effect to it, whether the title subsequently acquired by the mortgagor is legal or equitable; Bear Lake & River Waterworks & Irrig. Co. v. Garland, 164 U. S. 15, 17 Sup. Ct. 7, 41 L. Ed. 327; Brady v. Johnson, 75 Md. 445, 26 Atl. 49, 20 L. R. A. 737; Hickson Lumber Co. v. Lumber Co., 150 N. C. 282, 63 S. E. 1045, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 843, and note on the validity of such mortgages other than of railroads. But it was held in Loth v. Carty, 85 Ky. 591, 4 S. W. 314, that a mortgage of property to be acquired in futuro was constructively fraudulent as to the creditors of the mortgagee.

A mortgage to secure advances is valid; Seymour v. Darrow, 31 Vt. 122; Lawrence v. Tucker, 23 How. (U. S.) 14, 16 L. Ed. 474; Hyde v. Shank, 77 Mich. 517, 43 N. W. 890; Union Nat. Bank v. Moline, Wilbur & Stoddard Co., 7 N. D. 201, 73 N. W. 527; Citizens' Savings Bank v. Kock, 117 Mich. 225, 75 N. W. 458; Bunker v. Barron, 93 Me. 87, 44 Atl. 372; but if a second mortgage be executed of which the holder of the first mortgage have notice before he makes advances the latter will not be protected; Appeal of Bank of Montgomery County, 36 Pa. 170; 9 H. L. C. 514; but see, contra, McDaniels v. Colvin, 16 Vt. 300, 42 Am. Dec. 512; but he will be where the first mortgagee binds himself to make the advances, though they be made after the execution of the subsequent mortgage; Ladue v. R. Co., 13 Mich. 380, 87 Am. Dec. 759; Boswell v. Goodwin, 31 Conn. 74, 81 Am. Dec. 169; and in either case it is said the first mortgagee will be protected if the advances be made without notice of the subsequent mortgage; id.; the record of the second mortgage is constructive notice; Ladue v. R. Co., 13 Mich. 380, 87 Am. Dec. 759.

Land in one state may be mortgaged to a bank of another to secure a debt; Lathrop v. Commercial Bank, 8 Dana (Ky.) 114, 33 Am. Dec. 481. Rents and profits may be mortgaged; Ryan v. Bank, 100 Ill. App. 251, affirmed 199 Ill. 76, 64 N. E. 1085; and the mortgage of them does not interfere with the equity of redemption; Ortengren v. Rice, 104 Ill. App. 428; but nothing can be mortgaged except things which can be sold; Mendenhall v. R. Co., 36 Pa. 145.

As to the form, a mortgage must be in writing, when it is intended to convey the legal title; Porter v. Muller, 53 Cal. 677; but it need not be under seal; Woods v. Wallace, 22 Pa. 171; though at common law it must be by deed; Hebron v. Town of Centre Harbor, 11 N. H. 571; but no precise form of words is necessary; Baldwin v. Jenkins, 23 Miss. 206. It may be given to mortgagees in their firm name; Orr v. How, 55 Mo. 328. It may be written on more than one sheet of paper, if the testatum clause, signatures, seals and acknowledgment are on one sheet; Norman v. Shepherd, 38 Ohio St. 320. It is either in one single deed, which contains the whole contract, which is the usual form, or it is two separate instruments, the one containing an absolute conveyance and the other a defeasance; Dow v. Chamberlin, 5 McLean 281, Fed. Cas. No. 4,037; Payne's Adm'r v. Patterson's Adm'r, 77 Pa. 134; Moors v. Albro, 129 Mass. 9; Knowlton v. Walker, 13 Wis. 264; Robinson v. Willoughby, 65 N. C. 520; Poston v. Jones, 122 N. C. 536, 29 S. E. 951; Waters' Lessee v. Riggins, 19 Md. 536.

The true test, determining whether an instrument purporting to convey title in payment of a debt be a mortgage or not, is, Was the old debt at that time cancelled and absolutely paid? Peters Saddlery & Harness Co. v. Schoelkopf & Co., 71 Tex. 418, 9 S. W. 336. In law, the defeasance must be of as high a nature as the conveyance to be defeated; Lund v. Lund, 1 N. H. 39, 8 Am. Dec. 29; Dey v. Dunham, 2 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 182. See infra, subtitle Equitable Mortgage.

When the date of acknowledgment of a mortgage differs from the date of the mortgage, the mortgage, in the absence of any evidence upon the subject, will be presumed to have been delivered when it purports to be acknowledged; Guaranty Trust Co. v. R. Co., 107 Fed. 311.

What Law Governs. In some states the law of the state in which real estate is situated governs a transfer of the property by mortgage; Bowdle v. Jencks, 18 S. D. 80, 99 N. W. 98; Gault v. Trust Co., 100 Ky. 578, 38 S. W. 1065, 18 Ky. L. Rep. 1038; Bramblet v. Lumber Co., 83 S. W. 599, 26 Ky. L. Rep. 1176, judgment modified on rehearing 84 S. W. 545, 27 Ky. L. Rep. 156; Sinclair v. Gunzenhauser (Ind.) 98 N. E. 37. In others the law of the place of the execution of the note or bond and mortgage will be applied, although the property is located in another state in which the case was tried; Trower Bros. Co. v. Hamilton, 179 Mo. 205, 77 S. W. 1081; Conradt v. Lepper, 13 Wyo. 473, 81 Pac. 307, 82 Pac. 2 (where the question was in the determination of the validity of the consideration); Lamkin v. Lovell (Ala.) 58 South. 258 (where the debt was payable in the state where executed).

In at least one state there is a statute providing that mortgages of real estate within its limits shall be construed by its laws as to interest and in all other respects without regard to the place of performance, and this was held prospective and not to affect a mortgage executed before its passage; Mutual Aid Loan & Inv. Co. v. Logan, 55 S. C. 295, 33 S. E. 372; and so it was held as to a statute providing that a mortgage could be created, renewed or extended only with the formalities required in the case of a grant of real estate; Wilson v. Pickering, 28 Mont. 435, 72 Pac. 821. A statute making void all mortgages, deeds of trust, etc., of land in more than one county for the payment of a debt, means "void" and not "voidable"; Denny v. McCown, 34 Or. 47, 54 Pac. 952, where it was also held that the invalidity of a mortgage affected by the statute could not be cured by subsequent legislation or consolidation of the counties.

What is a Mortgage and Its Characteristics, and How it is Proved. The rule as to the admission of parol evidence to establish the character of a conveyance as a mortgage varies in the different states. It is safe to state that where the equitable principle admitting parol evidence to vary a writing on the ground of fraud, accident, or mistake can be invoked, it would universally be applied. In some states the rule is still more liberal, and the evidence is admitted more upon the principle of making the intention of the parties govern the transaction. It excluded in any state it would probably be for statutory reasons: Thus in New Hampshire no deed shall be defeated, nor any estate encumbered, unless by condition inserted in the conveyance; Benton v. Sumner, 57 N. H. 117. In Georgia a deed absolute in form and supported by possession shall not be shown by parol evidence to be a mortgage, unless fraud be the issue; Mitchell v. Fullington, 83 Ga. 303, 9 S. E. 1083; Davis v. Davis, 88 Ga. 191, 14 S. E. 194. In Pennsylvania no defeasance shall have the effect of reducing a deed absolute to a mortgage unless the defeasance is contemporaneous with the deed and is in writing, signed, sealed, acknowledged, and delivered, and is recorded within sixty days. See Sankey v. Hawley, 118 Pa. 30, 13 Atl. 208. In Colorado, on the other hand, it is provided that parol evidence may be admitted to convert a deed into a mortgage; Townsend v. Petersen, 12 Colo. 491, 21 Pac. 619. Where a conveyance is in form absolute, in order to change its character to that of a mortgage, the proof must clearly and satisfactorily show such intent; and evidence which leaves the mind in serious doubt is not sufficient; Strong v. Strong, 126 Ill. 301, 18 N. E. 665; Perdue v. Bell, 83 Ala. 396, 3 South. 698; Gassert v. Bogk, 7 Mont. 585, 19 Pac. 281, 1 L. R. A. 240; 20 Can. S. C. R. 548; Ganceart v. Henry, 98 Cal. 281, 33 Pac. 92; Hayward v. Mayse, 1 App. D. C. 133. See DEFEASANCE.

It is competent for either party to a conveyance to prove that it was in fact a mortgage; Kellogg v. Northrup, 115 Mich. 327, 73 N. W. 230. It is a question of intention, and if the mortgage was meant to be a security at the time of its execution, though absolute in its form, it is a mortgage; Cobb v. Day, 106 Mo. 278, 17 S. W. 323; Weisham v. Hocker, 7 Okl. 250, 54 Pac. 464; Howat v. Howat, 101 Ill. App. 158; and the intention of the parties, which is the infallible test, is to be gathered from all surrounding circumstances; Miller v. Miller, 101 Md. 600, 61 Atl. 210; Day v. Davis, 101 Md. 260, 61 Atl. 576; Reavis v. Reavis, 103 Fed. 813; Sanders v. Ayres, 63 Neb. 271, 88 N. W. 526. The right to treat a deed, intended as a mortgage, as such, is mutual, and the grantee cannot be compelled by other creditors to treat it as a deed; Andrus v. Burke, 61 N. J. Eq. 297, 48 Atl. 228.

A valid mortgage may be given by way of indemnity, as to secure a surety from liability; Simmons Hardware Co. v. Thomas, 147 Ind. 313, 46 N. E. 645; Harlan County v. Whitney, 65 Neb. 105, 90 N. W. 993, 101 Am. St. Rep. 610; or an indorser; Stavers v. Philbrick, 68 N. H. 379, 36 Atl. 16. An indebtedness of several creditors may be secured by a single mortgage; Rice Bros. v. Davis, McDonald & Davis, 99 Mo. App. 636, 74 S. W. 431; and a mortgage need not be made directly to the beneficiary, but may be made to a third person as well as to a creditor; Adams v. Niemann, 46 Mich. 135, 8 N. W. 719.

The mortgagor has, in law, technically speaking, a mere tenancy, subject to the right of the mortgagee to enter immediately, unless restrained by his agreement to the contrary; Clay v. Wren, 34 Me. 187; Mc-

Call v. Lenox, 9 S. & R. (Pa.) 302; Jackson v. Bronson, 19 Johns. (N. Y.) 325; 5 Bingh. 421. In equity, the mortgage is held a mere security for the debt, and is only a chattel interest; and until a decree of foreclosure, the mortgagor is regarded as the real owner; 2 J. & W. 190; Huntington v. Smith, 4 Conn. 235; Ford v. Philpot, 5 Harr. & J. (Md.) 312; Eaton v. Whiting, 3 Pick. (Mass.) 484. Both in law and equity a mortgage is held to be only a chattel interest; City of Davenport v. R. Co., 12 Ia. 539. It has been held frequently that the legal fee is in the mortgagee until default, and an absolute fee afterwards; Smith v. Johns, 3 Gray (Mass.) 517; City of Norwich v. Hubbard, 22 Conn. 587; Swartz's Ex'rs v. Leist, 13 Ohio St. 419; but it may be considered as the general rule, in modern practice, that the mortgagor, before entry, is the legal owner as to third persons and his conveyance is a transfer of the fee, if the mortgage is afterwards paid; Freeman v. McGaw, 15 Pick. (Mass.) 82.

The mortgagee, at law, is the owner of the land, subject, however, to a defeat of title by performance of the condition, with a right to enter at any time; Toby v. Reed, 9 Conn. 216; Gore v. Jenness, 19 Me. 53. He is, however, accountable for the profits before foreclosure, if in possession; Stevens v. Payne, 42 Ill. App. 202; Morgan v. Morgan, 48 N. J. Eq. 399, 22 Atl. 545.

The different states fluctuate somewhat between the rules of equity and those of law, or, rather, have engrafted the equitable rules upon the legal to an unequal extent; Wilson v. Shoenberger's Ex'rs, 31 Pa. 295; Ragland v. Justices of Inferior Court, 10 Ga. 65; Bryan v. Butts, 27 Barb. (N. Y.) 503; Dougherty v. Randall, 3 Mich. 581; State v. Laval, 4 McCord (S. C.) 336; McMillan v. Richards, 9 Cal. 365, 70 Am. Dec. 655.

If, after a mortgage of land in fee, the mortgagor remains in possession and grants a lease under the English Conveyancing Act of 1881, the mortgagee has the immediate freehold in reversion expectant on the term so granted by the lease, for it passed to him under the grant contained in the mortgage deed; the lease was good as against the mortgagee but he could enforce its provisions and collect the rent or recover it; 22 Q. B. D. 70; and in such case the mortgagor has no power to accept a surrender of the lease without the concurrence of the mortgagee; [1906] 1 K. B. 125. Section 18 of the Conveyancing Act of 1881, under which the two cases last cited arose, gives a mortgagor in possession the power to lease as against every incumbrancer, and a like power to a mortgagee in possession.

Case lies by a mortgagor for injuries done the mortgaged premises by a mortgagee not in possession; Morse v. Whitcher, 64 N. H. 591, 15 Atl. 207. A mortgagee cannot maintain trover for fixtures severed from the mortgaged premises prior to the foreclosure;

Rowland v. Sprouls, 66 Hun 635, 21 N. Y. Supp. 895; but he may maintain a bill to prevent injury to the mortgaged property; Clapp v. City of Spokane, 53 Fed. 515.

Mortgages Distinguished from Other Transactions. Mortgages are to be distinguished from sales with a contract for repurchase. The distinction is important and has been the subject of much litigation; Kelly v. Thompson, 7 Watts (Pa.) 401; but turns rather upon the evidence in each case than upon any general rule of distinction; Wallace v. Johnstone, 129 U. S. 58, 9 Sup. Ct. 243, 32 L. Ed. 619; and while the intention of the parties determines the question; Sadler v. Taylor, 49 W. Va. 104, 38 S. E. 583; in cases of doubt, equity inclines to construe the transaction to be a mortgage; Snavely v. Pickle, 29 Grat. (Va.) 27; Heath v. Williams, 30 Ind. 495; Bennet v. Holt, 2 Yerg. (Tenn.) 6, 24 Am. Dec. 455; Hughes v. Sheaff, 19 Ia. 335.

They are also to be distinguished from leases and the transaction is frequently held to be a mortgage where the form appears to be a lease; Lanfair v. Lanfair, 18 Pick. (Mass.) 299; Barroilhet v. Battelle, 7 Cal. 450; but in this also the intention of the parties will prevail; Stockton v. Dillon, 66 N. J. Eq. 100, 57 Atl. 487; and there must be evidence to show that the instrument was not intended to be a lease as it purported to be; Packard v. Corp. for Relief of Widows, 77 Md. 240, 26 Atl. 411; and where a lease is made for a price it will not be converted into a mortgage because the rent is to go in satisfaction of a debt; Halo v. Schick, 57 Pa. 320.

So they are distinguished from trusts, and a deed conveying land to creditors in trust to sell it and pay certain debts, including the grantee's in the deed, is in effect a mortgage; Morgan v. Glendy, 92 Va. 86, 22 S. E. 854; but not where the surplus after payment of the debt was to go to the grantor; Koch v. Briggs, 14 Cal. 256, 73 Am. Dec. 651. Deeds of trust to secure the payment of debts do not differ in legal effect from mortgages with power to sell; McLane v. Paschal, 47 Tex. 365; Thompson v. Marshall, 21 Or. 171, 27 Pac. 957.

A mortgage differs from a pledge: the general property passes by a mortgage, whilst by a pledge only the possession or, at most, a special property, passes. Possession is inseparable from the nature of a pledge, but is not necessary to a mortgage; Perry v. Craig, 3 Mo. 516; Barrow v. Paxton, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 258, 4 Am. Dec. 354; Ferguson v. Thomas, 26 Me. 499.

The essence of a pledge is that the grantee says to the grantor: I will lend you money if and when you deposit certain goods with me. It is not (as in a mortgage): I will lend you money on the security of an authority to take possession of certain goods; 17 Q. B. D. 690.

Assignment of Mortgages at common law, or under statutes merely providing for the registration of deeds for the purpose of notice, must be by deed only, in order to operate at law as an assignment of the mortgagee's interest in the land; Stanley v. Creelman, 14 Can. Sup. Ct. 33; Morrison v. Mendenhall, 18 Minn. 232 (Gil. 212); Den v. Dimon, 10 N. J. L. 156; Givan v. Doe, 7 Blackf. (Ind.) 210; Graham v. Newman, 21 Ala. 497; and in a previous Maine case it was held that a valid assignment must be in writing, signed by the party charged; Lyford v. Ross, 33 Me. 197. The difference between these two classes of cases doubtless arises merely from the point of view; those which require an assignment by deed dealing with the transaction as the conveyance of an interest in the land, and those which merely require that it be in writing having in view the satisfaction of the Statute of Frauds. The latter view is taken by Shepley, C. J., in the last cited Maine case; while in Young v. Miller, 6 Gray (Mass.) 152, Shaw, C. J., held that the endorsee of notes secured by a mortgage could not maintain a writ of entry without a formal assignment of the mortgage. Whether such assignment should be by deed, or in writing merely, was not suggested though the decision seems to require that it should be based upon the theory that an assignment was necessary for the transfer of the title of the mortgagee to the land and therefore would necessarily be by deed. In Barnes v. Boardman, 149 Mass. 106, 21 N. E. 308, 3 L. R. A. 785, it was held that an assignment of the mortgage and of the debt described therein, without words of inheritance, was sufficient to vest in the assignee the title of the mortgagee.

In Canada, as appears supra, a deed is required, and "assign, transfer, and set over" are said to be the proper technical words; Watt v. Feader, 12 U. C. C. P. 254; and in Austin v. Boulton, 16 U. C. C. P. 318, the words "bargained, sold, assigned and transferred" unto the assignee, "his heirs and assigns, the annexed mortgage, and all the right, title and interest therein," of the assignor, "to have and to hold the same unto the said . . . her heirs and assigns, to his and their sole use for ever," did not pass the interest in the land; and to the same effect; Wright v. Sperry, 21 Wis. 331, where it was held that an assignment "of the mortgage" did not convey the legal estate in the land; but an assignment of the mortgage passes the legal title and no suit can subsequently be maintained thereon in the name of the assignor; Pryor v. Wood, 31 Pa. 142; though where the granting part of the deed of assignment transferred the indenture simply, and the habendum the estate in the indenture, the estate passed; Doe dem. Wood v. Fox, 3 U. C. Q. B. 134; but where the language was "do hereby assign . . . all my right, title and interest in and to the within mortgage," the land did not pass; Moran v. Currie, 8 U. C. Q. B. 60.

As a result of the modern tendency of courts to regard a mortgage as a lien rather than a conveyance of the land, it is in many cases held to be merely a chattel interest that may be transferred by parol; Dougherty v. Randall, 3 Mich. 581; Rigney v. Lovejoy, 13 N. H. 247; Kamena v. Huelbig, 23 N. J. Eq. 78; Sims v. Hammond, 33 Ia. 368; and the assignee may foreclose in equity; Pease v. Warren, 29 Mich. 9, 18 Am. Rep. 58.

A transfer by mere delivery of the papers has been held valid; Daly v. R. Co., 55 N. J. Eq. 595, 38 Atl. 202, affirmed 57 N. J. Eq. 347, 45 Atl. 1092; John H. Mahnken Co. v. Pelletreau, 93 App. Div. 420, 87 N. Y. Supp. 737; McMillan v. Craft, 135 Ala. 148, 33 South. 26; Cutler v. Haven, 8 Pick. (Mass.) 490; but there must be an intention to transfer accompanying the delivery, and if the intention is to have a written assignment the manual delivery does not pass title; Strause v. Josephthal, 77 N. Y. 622. The transfer by delivery merely creates an equity, but does not at law transfer either the mortgage debt or an interest in the property; Dacus v. Streety, 59 Ala. 183; and while good between the parties, as to third persons it takes effect, either in law or in equity, only from the time it is duly recorded; Fosdick v. Barr, 3 Ohio St. 471.

The transfer of the note secured by the mortgage, by delivery merely, operates as an equitable transfer of the mortgage; O'Neal v. Seixas, 85 Ala. 80, 4 South. 745; and the transfer of the debt carries with it the security without assignment or delivery thereof; Stimpson v. Bishop, 82 Va. 190; Jenkins v. Wilkinson, 113 N. C. 532, 18 S. E. 696; but the assignee of an overdue note and mortgage takes them subject to all equities which could be enforced against the assignor; Owen v. Evans, 134 N. Y. 514, 31 N. E. 999.

A specific request or devise of a mortgage and deed or of the "real estate of which I now hold a mortgage" is sufficient to pass the interest of the testator; Clark v. Clark, 56 N. H. 105; Proctor v. Robinson, 35 Mich. 284; and where the executor was also residuary legatee, and there was no specific bequest of the mortgage, the executor took the property as executor, and not by assignment, and could foreclose the mortgage; Hayes v. Frey, 54 Wis. 503, 11 N. W. 695.

Assumption of Mortgage by Grantee. The question whether the acceptance by a grantee of a deed subject to a specified mortgage as part of the consideration, in the absence of an express promise to pay it implies such a promise on his part, has been the subject of conflicting decisions. But the more generally accepted view is, that the clause "under and subject" in a deed or conveyance, is a covenant of indemnity only as between grantor and grantee for the protection of the former; Moore's Appeal, 88 Pa. 450, 32 Am. Rep. 469; Freeman v. R. Co., 173 Pa. 275, 33 Atl. 1034; (but see Blood v. Crew Le- vick Co., 171 Pa. 328, 33 Atl. 344); Hamill v. Gillespie, 48 N. Y. 556; Tichenor v. Dodd, 4 N. J. Eq. 454; Fiske v. Tolman, 124 Mass. 254, 26 Am. Rep. 659; Meech v. Ensign, 49 Conn. 191, 44 Am. Rep. 225; Morris v. Mix, 4 Kan. App. 654, 46 Pac. 58.

A different view has been held in New York, based in the later cases on the doctrine that when one makes a promise for the benefit of a third person, the latter may maintain an action upon it; Burr v. Beers, 24 N. Y. 178, 80 Am. Dec. 327; Campbell v. Smith, 71 N. Y. 26, 27 Am. Rep. 5. But this doctrine is for the most part confined to New York; see 26 Am. Rep. 660, n.; Union Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Hanford, 143 U. S. 187, 12 Sup. Ct. 437, 36 L. Ed. 118; Solicitors' Loan & Trust Co. v. Robins, 14 Wash. 507, 45 Pac. 39; 1 Jones, Mort. § 758. In Pennsylvania, by statute, a grantee does not assume a liability for an incumbrance, unless by agreement in writing, and the words "under and subject" in his deed do not impose such liability.

As to the rights of a mortgagee holding more than one mortgage of the same mortgagor, see TACKING.

Where it is sought to give the lien of a junior mortgage precedence over the lien of a senior one, the claim must be based either on an agreement to that effect, or on the superior equity of the junior mortgage; Brown v. Baker, 22 Neb. 708, 36 N. W. 273. An agreement between mortgagor and mortgagee extending the time of payment of the mortgage debt, and providing for the compounding of interest, cannot be enforced to the prejudice of junior lienholders whose liens were created prior to such agreement; Johnson v. Finzer, 84 Ky. 411, 1 S. W. 674. The vested priority of a mortgagee is beyond the power of the mortgagor or the legislature thereafter to disturb; Toledo, D. & B. R. Co. v. Hamilton, 134 U. S. 296, 10 Sup. Ct. 546, 33 L. Ed. 905. Failure to show that a mortgage was recorded before a judgment, is fatal to the mortgagee's claim of priority; Holst v. Burrus, 79 Ga. 111, 4 S. E. 108. The redelivery of a mortgage which has been paid, upon an agreement that it shall secure another debt, does not create a lien; Thompson's Adm'r v. George, 86 Ky. 311, 5 S. W. 760. A mortgage cannot be continued in effect so as to cover a new indebtedness by an oral agreement; Thomas' Appeal, 30 Pa. 378; Sims v. Mead, 29 Kan. 124; but where money has been paid thereunder, the party making payments will be protected as against the mortgagor, or his vendee with knowledge of the facts; Stone v. Lane, 10 Allen (Mass.) 74; L. R. 12 Eq. 516.

A chattel mortgage is a transfer of personal property as security for the obligation of the mortgagor. In form it is usually a bill of sale with a clause of defeasance. In some states its form is prescribed by statute; in the greater number, however, this is not the case, and any form may be adopted. A mortgage is to be distinguished from a pledge, the former being a transfer of title, the latter a transfer of possession (see PLEDGE); also from a conditional sale, the test being that if after the transfer the mere relation of debtor and creditor exists the transaction is a mortgage, if not, a conditional sale. The courts lean toward construing the transaction as a mortgage.

The subject-matter of the transaction being a chattel, the law is in some respects simpler than the law as to mortgages of realty which is complicated by rules of conveyancing. The courts seek, in dealing with chattel mortgages, as in the case of other contracts, to arrive at the intention of the parties, and form is generally of little importance. But on the other hand the subject is complicated by the transitory nature of the subject-matter and the devices resorted to to secure the mortgage and at the same time protect from fraud the creditors of the mortgagor, in other words by the recording acts. These are the very life of the chattel mortgage, and without them it cannot exist. For example, it was held in Pennsylvania (where chattel mortgages formerly did not exist at all, and are now recognized only to a limited extent) that while such a mortgage between citizens of Maryland would be recognized and enforced, when the question arose between the mortgagee and a citizen of Pennsylvania who had in good faith purchased the mortgaged chattel from the mortgagor, the mortgage could not be regarded because in the absence of statutory provisions the common law rule prevails in Pennsylvania that a sale of personal property unaccompanied by delivery of possession is void as against the intervening rights of creditors and purchasers; McCabe v. Blymyre, 9 Phila. (Pa.) 615.

The problem is how to restrict a transaction by which the mortgagor, though retaining possession of his goods, gives a valid lien upon them as security for a debt, so that innocent parties shall not be injured by giving credit to the mortgagor on the strength of the apparent ownership of the goods. Manifestly the only way to secure this end is by requiring the transaction to be made a matter of record.

Accordingly, the statutes provide for recording the instrument, usually in the county or town in which the mortgagor resides, or, if he is a non-resident, in the county or town in which the chattels are situated. Commonly this is sufficient record while the mortgaged property remains within the state, but some of the acts require re-recording if the property be removed to another county.

The recording acts gave the mortgagee who recorded his mortgage a right good against any one who subsequently acquired any interest in the goods from the mortgagor. This result is generally accomplished by saying that the record gives constructive notice to all the world. All that was purposed and effected by the mortgage recording acts was to protect a mortgagee against subsequently acquired interests by placing knowledge within the reach of all. It has been held that a fire insurance company is not charged with notice of a recorded mortgage so as to raise a forfeiture clause for breach of condition against encumbering; Wicke v. Ins. Co., 90 Ia. 4, 57 N. W. 632. Where a commission merchant, ignorant of an existing mortgage on cattle, sold them and remitted the proceeds to the consignor, the mortgagee recovered, in an action against him on a count for money had and received; Greer v. Newland, 70 Kan. 310, 77 Pac. 98, 70 L. R. A. 554, 109 Am. St. Rep. 424, this decision being the result of employing the fiction of constructive notice, instead of recognizing that recording really dispenses with the necessity of notice. This distinction was recognized in Frizzell v. Rundle, 88 Tenn. 393, 12 S. W. 918, 17 Am. St. Rep. 908, with the consequence that a contrary decision was reached.

In some acts it is provided that the wife of the mortgagor must join. In many states are found provisions to punish any removal or disposition of the property by the mortgagor in prejudice of the rights of the mortgagee. See LEX REI SITÆ; CONFLICT OF LAWS.

The property must be described with such accuracy as the nature of it will admit, and the description should be sufficient to enable third parties to identify the property. As a general rule it may be said that any personal property may be mortgaged, but this with the reservation that in a number of states the right is restricted to classes of articles, more or less numerous. Naturally, a common subject of such a mortgage is a shopkeeper's stock of goods employed by him in regular course of business. As to this, every variety of rule from the absolute prohibition of such mortgages to their freest use will be found. In some cases they bind the stock at the time the mortgage is created, in others they bind the stock at the time of foreclosure, in others they bind what is left of the original stock, but not the accessions; in others they bind the accessions, provided no other specific lien has attached before the mortgagee secures possession of them.

Where animals are mortgaged, the natural increase will be covered by the mortgage, in the absence of a statutory provision to the contrary. A mortgage on an article in process of manufacture will cover it when completed if still capable of identification. Growing crops are frequently the subject of mortgage, and the mortgage is valid at any stage of their development, and even in anticipation of their planting. See LIENS. As to a mortgage in its terms covering after acquired property see supra, and also corporation mortgages infra.

The remedies upon a mortgage by the mortgagee on default of payment are various. In cases of real estate he may (1) bring ejectment on his legal title; (2) file a bill and obtain a decree of foreclosure, or a sale of the property mortgaged; 4 Kent *180; (3) exercise a power of sale, if such power be in the mortgage; (4) take possession of the land, if he can do so peaceably, his title becoming sure, and the equity of redemption being barred after the lapse of twenty years or a period equal to the lapse of time necessary to bar a writ of entry, or in some states for a less period provided by law; (5) by proceeding in accordance with statutory enactments which vary in the different states.

In cases of chattel mortgages, the mortgagee's remedy is either (1) to bring a bill in equity, obtain a decree of foreclosure and a sale; (2) if he have the thing mortgaged in his possession, to sell it after giving to the mortgagor notice of such sale, and also of the amount of the debt due.

A remedy by foreclosure is barred where the obligation secured by the mortgage is barred; Perkins v. Sterne, 23 Tex. 561, 76 Am. Dec. 72; Pollock v. Maison, 41 Ill. 516; contra, Mitchell v. Clark, 35 Vt. 104; Bush v. Cooper, 26 Miss. 599, 59 Am. Dec. 270.

In some cases a reconveyance by the mortgagee is necessary when the mortgage has been paid after default; L. R. 5 Ch. 227; Brobst v. Brock, 10 Wall. (U. S.) 536, 19 L. Ed. 1002; in other cases no reconveyance is necessary; Armitage v. Wickliffe, 12 B. Monr. (Ky.) 497.

A tender after default discharges the mortgage lien; Trim v. Marsh, 54 N. Y. 599, 13 Am. Rep. 623; Van Huse v. Kanouse, 13 Mich. 306; contra, Shields v. Lozeau, 34 N. J. L. 505, 3 Am. St. Rep. 256; Currier v. Gale, 9 Allen (Mass.) 522.

It is held in England that a mortgagee's purchase at a foreclosure sale, under a power of sale, by having another buy for him, does not pass a title free from the interest of the mortgagor unless the right to purchase is conferred by the mortgage; [1894] A. C. 150; Lovelace v. Hutchinson, 106 Ala. 417, 17 South. 623; if the power is conferred by the mortgage, the mortgagee may buy at his own sale; North Brookfield Savings Bank v. Flanders, 161 Mass. 335, 37 N. E. 307; Yount v. Morrison, 109 N. C. 520, 13 S. E. 892; Sanford v. Kane, 127 Ill. 591, 20 N. E. 810. A mere power to sell has been held to confer on the mortgagee the right to purchase; Palmer v. Young, 96 Ga. 246, 22 S. E. 928, 51 Am. St. Rep. 136. But in scire facias proceedings in Pennsylvania the mortgagee may buy at his own sale; and it is everywhere a familiar practice in the foreclosure of corporate mortgages for the bondholders to unite to buy in the property.

The bidding in of the property by one who has taken an assignment of a mortgage as collateral security, at his own foreclosure sale, gives him a good title to the property, and transfers the interest of his debtor to the proceeds, although such assignor, because not within the jurisdiction, was not made a party to the proceedings; Anderson v. Mesinger, 146 Fed. 929, 77 C. C. A. 179, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1094. Notwithstanding the statute provides that a mortgage of real estate shall not be deemed a conveyance, whatever its terms, so as to enable the owner of the mortgage to recover possession without a foreclosure, a court of equity may, pending foreclosure, impound the rents and profits to be applied in reduction of the debt, especially where the rents and profits were pledged in the mortgage to the payment of the debt, in consideration of the release by the mortgage of other security; id. Equity has power in a jurisdiction where a mortgage does not convey the title to impound rents and profits of mortgaged property; Moncrieff v. Hare, 38 Colo. 221, 87 Pac. 1082, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1001. The right of a mortgagee to have a receiver appointed, where there is a stipulation in the mortgage that he shall have a lien upon the rents and profits as well as upon the land, was recognized, although it was provided by law that a mortgage of real estate is not a conveyance of any estate whatever; Hardin v. Hardin, 34 S. C. 77, 12 S. E. 936, 27 Am. St. Rep. 786; such provision was held against public policy in Couper v. Shirley, 75 Fed. 168, 21 C. C. A. 288.

A strict foreclosure is the barring of the equity of redemption of the mortgagor, after default in payment, when such default continues after due notice to redeem; 4 Kent *180. It is by bill in equity, by which the lands became the absolute property of the mortgagee. This is a common English practice and obtains also in certain New England states, with a liberal period, by statute or by practice in equity, for redemption; 4 Kent *181. But it is common to decree a sale of the mortgaged premises and apply the proceeds to the payment of the incumbrances in their order of priority. A more common practice, both in England and here, is for the mortgagee, or a trustee appointed for the purpose, to sell the land under a power of sale inserted in the mortgage. This takes the place of a foreclosure. It is the usual practice in the foreclosure of corporation mortgages, except that the sale by the trustee named in the mortgage is usually made in the course of legal proceedings and under a decree of the court, the fund being distributed to the lienholders according to their respective priorities, and the surplus, if any, paid over to the mortgagor.

A mortgagee may proceed to judgment on his bond secured by the mortgage; and such judgment has a lien as of the date of the mortgage; McCall v. Lenox, 9 S. & R. (Pa.) 310; the purchaser at a sale under the judgment holds the land discharged of the lien of the mortgage; Berger v. Hlester, 6 Whart. (Pa.) 210.

The Equity of Redemption. The right to redeem mortgaged real estate may be kept open by the express agreement of the parties or by circumstances from which an agreement may be inferred, although it would be foreclosed except for such agreement, and so long as the right of redemption remains in existence the mortgagee may recover from the mortgagee, as money had and received, a surplus obtained by the latter from the sale of the mortgaged property; Dow v. Bradley, 110 Me. 249, 85 Atl. 896, 44 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1041, with note classifying the cases.

An agreement in a mortgage cutting off the right of redemption is void; Bayley v. Bailey, 5 Gray (Mass.) 505; Hazeltine v. Granger, 44 Mich. 503, 7 N. W. 74; Turpie v. Lowe, 114 Ind. 37, 15 N. E. 834. See EQUITY OF REDEMPTION.

Defects in the execution of the note or bond have been held not to invalidate the accompanying mortgage, as when the wife's name did not appear on the notes, although so recited in the mortgage; Baker v. Hutchinson, 147 Ala. 636, 41 South. 809; or where the note is void because of the wife's coverture, but she joins in a separate promise to pay the debt secured; Sperry v. Dickinson, 82 Ind. 132; or where the note never was delivered; Eacho v. Cosby, 26 Grat. (Va.) 112 (contra, Leader Pub. Co. v. Savings Co., 174 Ind. 192, 91 N. E. 498); or where the note was void by reason of non-compliance with a statute requiring mention in them of the mortgage security; Hogan v. Akin, 181 Ill. 448, 55 N. E. 137 (followed in several cases cited in note referred to infra); or where the bond was never executed or the note made; Baldwin v. Raplee, 4 Ben. 433, Fed. Cas. No. 801; Lee v. Fletcher, 46 Minn. 49, 48 N. W. 456, 12 L. R. A. 171; Swancey v. Parrish, 62 S. C. 240, 40 S. E. 554; McFadden v. State, 82 Ind. 558; Burger v. Hughes, 5 Hun (N. Y.) 180, affirmed 63 N. Y. 629; Morris v. Linton, 74 Neb. 411, 104 N. W. 927; Goodhue v. Berrien, 2 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 630 (in both of the last two cases there was a pre-existing debt); Lierman v. O'Hara, 153 Wis. 140, 140 N. W. 1057, 44 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1153, and note reviewing the cases and concluding that weight of authority sustains the rule here stated.

The general rule is that the mortgagee may pursue all his rights at the same time; 4 Kent *183; but it is said that there are difficulties attending the sale of equity of redemption by execution at law, and it has been forbidden by statute in New York; and is disapproved in Massachusetts, North Carolina, and Kentucky; 4 Kent *184.

The satisfaction of a mortgage on the record is only prima facie evidence of its discharge, and the owner may prove that the cancellation was done by fraud, accident, or mistake; and if he does this, his rights will not be affected by the improper cancellation of it; Crumlish v. R. Co., 32 W. Va. 244, 9 S. E. 180.

The cancellation of a mortgage through misapprehension or mistake of law, but for which it would not have been cancelled, is good ground for equity to grant relief and re-establish the mortgage; Swedesboro Loan & Bldg. Ass'n v. Gaus, 65 N. J. Eq. 132, 55 Atl. 82.

The object of recording a mortgage is to give notice to third persons; as between the parties thereto, a mortgage is just as effectual for all purposes without recording as with; Bacon v. Ins. Co., 131 U. S. 258, 9 Sup. Ct. 787, 33 L. Ed. 128.

The receipt of insurance money by a mortgagee in whose behalf the premises were insured, does not constitute a payment of the mortgage, where such is not the intent of the parties, and the money is delivered to the mortgagor for rebuilding; Johnson v. Marble Co., 64 Vt. 337, 25 Atl. 441.

One who has conveyed land in a foreign state as collateral security for the payment of money under a contract may, upon failure to make payment, be required to convey title to the property; Dickson v. Loehr, 126 Wis. 641, 106 N. W. 793, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 986. The right to the proceeds of insurance, where loss occurs after foreclosure sale, but during the period of redemption, is a point upon which the courts are not harmonious in the few reported decisions. Some cases hold that a trustee in a deed of trust who collects insurance money during that period must turn it over to the mortgagor, on the theory that his interest in the property has ceased; Rawson v. Bethesda Baptist Church, 221 Ill. 216, 77 N. E. 560, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 448; Carlson v. Board of Relief, 67 Minn. 436, 70 N. W. 3; Chipman v. Carroll, 53 Kan. 163, 35 Pac. 1109, 25 L. R. A. 305; contra, McLaren v. Fire Ins. Co., 5 N. Y. 151.

An honest mortgage is not affected by its proximity to an assignment for creditors; Root & Co. v. Harl, 62 Mich. 420, 29 N. W. 29; nor is it affected by the fact that it was given for a larger sum than is actually due, or in some particulars misdescribes the note in fact secured; Nazro v. Ware, 38 Minn. 443, 38 N. W. 359; and because it was given for a larger amount than the actual indebtedness, is not conclusive evidence of fraud; Connelly v. Edgerton, 22 Neb. 82, 34 N. W. 76.

To prevent an infringement of the equity of redemption it was early established that a mortgagee should not have a collateral advantage besides interest on the mortgage debt; 2 Vern. 520. The first marked departure from the spirit of the old cases in the direction of allowing freedom of contract was not until Biggs v. Hoddinott [1898] 2 Ch. D. 307. It was there stipulated that the mortgagee should for a term of years buy all the beer he used in his public house from the mortgagee. The court sustained the stipulation on the ground that it did not clog the equity of redemption, as damages for the breach of the covenant were not covered by the security. In [1899] 2 Ch. D. 474, the mortgagee of a lease stipulated, besides interest, for one-third of the net profits from any sub-leases, and that the relation of mortgagor and mortgagee should subsist for this purpose during the entire term of the lease, though the principal was to be paid off before its end. There being no evidence of fraud or over-reaching, the stipulation was held valid, thus abolishing the rule against collateral advantage. Hence a stipulation is invalid only when repugnant to the continuance of the instrument as a mortgage, and this rule has the advantage of simplicity and of conforming to the modern tendency to allow freedom of contract.

An equitable mortgage is one in which the mortgagor does not actually convey the property, but does some act, by which he manifests his determination to bind the same as a security. It may be created by an agreement in writing to give a mortgage, defectively executed, or an imperfect attempt to create a mortgage, or to appropriate specific property to the discharge of a particular debt; McQuie v. Peay, 58 Mo. 56; 1 Am. Lead. Eq. Cas. 510; Martin v. Nixon, 92 Mo. 26; De Racouillat v. Sansevain, 32 Cal. 376; the principle is that a court of equity will treat an agreement for a mortgage or pledge as binding and give it effect according to the intention of the parties; White Water Valley Canal Co. v. Vallette, 21 How. (U. S.) 414, 16 L. Ed. 154; such a mortgage was held to be created in favor of a partner for advances; Smith v. Rainey, 209 U. S. 53, 28 Sup. Ct. 474, 52 L. Ed. 679; or a conveyance of land in consideration of support for the grantor or payments to third persons; Stehle v. Stehle, 39 App. Div. 440, 57 N. Y. Supp. 201; Matheny v. Furguson, 55 W. Va. 656, 47 S. E. 886; Richards v. Reeves, 22 Ind. App. 648, 47 N. E. 232; contra, Ricks v. Pope, 129 N. C. 52, 39 S. E. 638; or where one of two purchasers of land took the deed in his own name to hold for the other until repaid his advances; Ratliff v. Groom, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 1998, 44 S. W. 308. An assignment of a lease, shown by parol to have been made as security for a debt, is a mortgage; Providence F. R. & N. Steamboat Co. v. Fall River, 187 Mass. 45, 72 N. E. 338.

An instrument executed to secure a subsisting debt is always treated as a mortgage; Love v. Blair, 72 Ind. 281; and, generally, whenever it is proved that a conveyance was made for the purpose of security, equity treats it as a mortgage, and attaches thereto its incidents; Stoeber v. Stoeber, 9 S. & R. (Pa.) 434; Hughes v. Edwards, 9 Wheat. (U. S.) 489, 6 L. Ed. 142; Kilgour v. Scott, 86 Fed. 39; Murphy v. Calley, 1 Allen, (Mass.)

107; Wells v. Scanlan, 124 Wis. 229, 102 N. W. 571; and the intention may be proved by parol; Cake v. Shull, 45 N. J. Eq. 208, 16 Atl. 434; but the mere fact of an agreement to reconvey will not always make an absolute conveyance a mortgage; Stahl v. Dehn, 72 Mich. 645, 40 N. W. 922; such conveyance may be executed with the intention that it shall become absolute after default; Luesenhop v. Einsfeld, 184 N. Y. 590, 77 N. E. 1191. But in doubtful cases courts of equity are inclined to construe a deed with a condition to be a mortgage; Swetland v. Swetland, 3 Mich. 482. But an absolute conveyance of property in partial satisfaction of a debt, with a parol agreement that, if the property value enhances within a certain time and to a certain extent, notes given for the remainder of the debt shall be delivered up and cancelled, is not an equitable mortgage; Pearson v. Dancer, 144 Ala. 427, 39 So. 474. But a paper made for a deed of trust to secure a debt, not executed so as to be effectual at law, is an equitable mortgage and when recorded is valid against subsequent purchasers and creditors; Atkinson v. Miller, 34 W. Va. 115, 11 S. E. 1007, 9 L. R. A. 544, with note on the nature of equitable mortgage.

A deed absolute, to secure a debt, does not transfer the legal title from the grantor; but it may be levied on under execution against him; Flynn v. Holmes, 145 Mich. 606, 108 N. W. 685, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 209. The weight of authority holds that the legal title passed with the deed to the grantee and the grantor only has an equitable right; Walcoy v. McKinney's Heirs, 10 Mo. 229; Calame v. Calame, 24 N. J. Eq. 446; Kerr v. Davidson, 32 N. C. 270; Muller v. Flavin, 13 S. D. 595, 83 N. W. 687.

Whether the intention that it was a security for money appears from the same instrument or from any other, it is always considered, in equity, a mortgage; Baldwin v. Crow, 86 Ky. 679, 7 S. W. 146; Marshall v. Thompson, 39 Minn. 137, 39 N. W. 309; Jackson v. Lynch, 129 Ill. 72, 21 N. E. 580, 22 N. E. 246.

A deed absolute on its face, with or without a contemporaneous defeasance showing that it was to secure the payment of money, is a mortgage; Booth v. Hoskins, 75 Cal. 271, 17 Pac. 225; Robinsons v. Bank, 85 Tenn. 363, 3 S. W. 656; but the evidence must be clear and satisfactory where it is sought to prove the fact by parol; Wright v. Mahaffey, 76 Ia. 96, 40 N. W. 112.

The English doctrine of the creation of an equitable mortgage by deposit of title deeds is not generally recognized in this country, being in conflict both with the Statute of Frauds and the system of recording in force. In some cases, however, there has been held to be an equitable lien where there was a written agreement accompanying the deposit and showing the intention; Higgins v. Manson, 126 Cal. 467, 58 Pac. 907, 77 Am. St. Rep. 192; Edwards's Ex'rs v. Trumbull, 50 Pa. 509; Rickert v. Madeira, 1 Rawle (Pa.) 325; In re Snyder, 138 Ia. 553, 114 N. W. 615, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 206, where the cases are collected and analyzed in a note. In a few cases an oral agreement was held sufficient; Foster Lumber Co. v. Bank, 71 Kan. 158, 80 Pac. 49, 114 Am. St. Rep. 470, 6 Ann. Cas. 44; Bullock v. Orgo, 57 N. J. Eq. 428, 41 Atl. 494.

See EQUITABLE MORTGAGE.

CORPORATION MORTGAGES OR DEEDS OF TRUST. The power to give a mortgage is said to be inherent, unless prohibited by statute, in all corporations except railway companies. In the case of the latter, the power does not exist unless conferred by charter or statute; Cook, Stock and Stockh. § 780. In practice, however, this power is usually—perhaps universally—possessed by railroad companies; Short, Rwy. Bonds, ch. viii.; Compton v. Jesup, 68 Fed. 263, 15 C. C. A. 397, 31 U. S. App. 486. See, generally, 7 Rul. Cas. 613.

A corporate mortgage should be executed with the same formalities as a deed. As it is incident to the general business of a corporation, unless restrained by statutory or charter provision, the directors can authorize a mortgage, though it is customary, and perhaps better practice, that authority should be given by the stockholders. In form it may correspond to the mortgage of an individual and be made directly to the holder of the bond which it secures; but as it is usually given to secure an issue of a number of bonds, it is ordinarily in form a deed of trust conveying the mortgaged property to a trustee for the bondholders, and this trustee is usually a corporation.

Corporate mortgages usually contain covenants or provisions which are not found in a mortgage given by an individual. Provisions common in such mortgages are (1) that until default the mortgagor may remain in possession of the property mortgaged; (2) an express covenant that the mortgagor will pay the principal and interest of the bonds secured, when due; (3) that all the bonds are entitled to equality of lien no matter when issued; (4) that the mortgagor shall have power to sell, free from lien of the mortgage, worn out or damaged material (usually accompanied by some provision for replacing the same); (5) provisions as to the payment of taxes and assessments upon the mortgaged property (which are usually assumed by the mortgagor) and providing against the suffering of liens to be established against it; (6) provisions as to the maturing of the principal of the mortgage debt in case of default in the covenants for payment of interest, or other covenants, by the mortgagor; (7) precluding any one from pursuing a separate remedy on his bond; (8) exemption of the trustee from liability except for gross negligence; (9) provision for the substitution of a trustee in case the trustee named should decline to act, or, usually, in case a substitution be desired by a majority or some larger number of the bondholders; (10) any other provisions, not illegal, which may be desired, such as provisions for the conversion of bonds into stock, provisions in regard to maintaining a sinking fund, etc. It is customary for the trustee to accept the trust expressly, or to become a party to the deed, and also to certify upon each bond that it is one of the issues secured under the mortgage. Where such certificate is forged the bond is void, though in the hands of an innocent purchaser for value; Maas v. Ry. Co., 83 N. Y. 223. But signature by vice-president is good though the bond calls for signature of the president; Conshohocken Tube Co. v. Equipment Co., 161 Pa. 391, 28 Atl. 1119. A trustee's certificate is a warranty of the facts recited therein (as that the bond is secured by a first mortgage duly recorded) on which the trustee is liable; Miles v. Roberts, 76 Fed. 919; Miles v. Vivian, 79 Fed. 848, 25 C. C. A. 208; Byers v. Trust Co., 175 Pa. 318, 34 Atl. 629.

The trustee in a railroad or corporation mortgage represents the bondholders; Bowling Green Trust Co. v. Power Co., 132 Fed. 921; Mayor, etc., of Baltimore v. Electric Co., 108 Md. 64, 69 Atl. 436, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1006, and note collecting cases on the extent of this representation.

The mortgage should be recorded in each county in which real estate covered by it is situated, and if it covers also personal property the provisions of the law in regard to chattel mortgages should ordinarily be complied with and the mortgage recorded as a chattel mortgage, at any rate in the county in which the principal office of the mortgagor is situated. These matters are frequently governed by statutes. See RECORDING.

A railroad mortgage is made with reference to the law of the state in which the subject-matter of the contract is, and in which the contract is made; and the law enters into and becomes a part of the contract as if it were there in express terms; Southern R. Co. v. Bouknight, 70 Fed. 442, 17 C. C. A. 181, 25 U. S. App. 415, 30 L. R. A. 823.

When a corporation mortgage is made for the general purposes of the corporation and bonds are issued in the ordinary course of business, the mortgage being recorded, all the bonds are to be taken as issued as of the date of the mortgage; Rauch v. Park Ass'n, 226 Pa. 178, 75 Atl. 202. The power given under the state law to a corporation to mortgage its franchises and privileges necessarily includes the power to bring them to sale and to make the mortgage effectual, and the purchaser acquires title thereto although the corporate right to exist may not be sold; Vicksburg v. Waterworks Co., 202 U. S. 453, 26 Sup. Ct. 660, 50 L. Ed. 1102, 6 Ann. Cas. 253.

In the absence of a provision to the contrary, all bonds secured by a mortgage have an equal lien irrespective of the time at which they were negotiated; Pittsburgh, C., C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Lynae, 55 Ohio St. 23, 44 N. E. 596; Appeal of Reed, 122 Pa. 565, 16 Atl. 100. First mortgage bonds are prior to second mortgage bonds, even if subsequently negotiated; Clafin v. R. Co., 8 Fed. 118. The invalidity of some of the bonds does not invalidate the mortgage; Graham v. R. Co., 118 U. S. 161, 6 Sup. Ct. 1009, 30 L. Ed. 196.

A stipulation in a mortgage for attorney's fee is lawful; Nelson v. Everett, 29 Ia. 184; Barry v. Snowden, 106 Fed. 571; Piasa Bluffs Imp. Co. v. Evers, 65 Ill. App. 205; contra, Kittermaster v. Brossard, 105 Mich. 219, 63 N. W. 75, 55 Am. St. Rep. 437; Turner v. Boger, 126 N. C. 300, 35 S. E. 592, 49 L. R. A. 590; Rilling v. Thompson, 12 Bush (Ky.) 310. It is a penalty and the court may reduce it; Daly v. Maitland, 88 Pa. 384, 32 Am. Rep. 457.

The negotiable character of the bonds extends also to the mortgage securing them, against which the mortgagor cannot defend on grounds which it cannot set up against bona fide holders of bonds; Chicago Ry. Equipment Co. v. Bank, 136 U. S. 268, 10 Sup. Ct. 999, 34 L. Ed. 349; Collins v. Bradbury, 64 Me. 37; Towne v. Rice, 122 Mass. 67; the rule in Ohio and Illinois is said to be different; Baily v. Smith, 14 Ohio St. 396, 84 Am. Dec. 385; Chicago, D. & V. Ry. Co. v. Loewenthal, 93 Ill. 433; see Spence v. Ry. Co., 79 Ala. 587. In case of default, an individual bondholder may sue the corporation, but after securing judgment cannot have execution on property covered by the mortgage, which is security for all the bondholders alike. As to the effect of recitals in bonds as notice, see RECITALS.

In the surrender of corporate bonds and the substitution of new bonds, the latter will retain the security of the mortgage, unless an extinguishment was intended; Traders Nat. Bank v. Mfg. Co., 96 N. C. 298, 3 S. E. 363 (where under a reorganization plan the old bonds were deposited and were to be held by a trustee as additional security for the old bonds); but not where the mortgage was satisfied of record; Traders' Nat. Bank v. Mfg. Co., 96 N. C. 298, 3 S. E. 363. A mere change in the form of the mortgage debt, such as substituting new bonds for the old, will not affect the lien; novation, especially when against the interest of the bondholders, must be clearly proved; Mowry v. Trust Co., 76 Fed. 38, 22 C. C. A. 52; and the funding of overdue interest and the issue of new evidence of indebtedness in place of the overdue coupons will not constitute a novation unless there be clear proof of an intention to waive the lien; Skiddy v. R. Co., 3 Hughes 320, Fed. Cas. No. 12,922; Gilbert v. R. Co., 33 Gratt. (Va.) 586.

A corporate mortgage may cover property acquired by the corporation after the mortgage is given. This has been sustained upon the theory that though ineffective as a conveyance, the mortgage operates as an executory agreement attaching to the property when acquired; Grape Creek Coal Co. v. Loan & Trust Co., 63 Fed. 891, 12 C. C. A. 350. This rule, though contrary to the common law, has been established from necessity in the case of railroads, public policy requiring that a railroad be preserved intact as quasi-public property. The rule will be applied only where the mortgage expressly covers the subsequently acquired property. As to after acquired property in other than corporation mortgages, see supra.

A railroad mortgage covers the road, although the route differs from that originally laid out. It covers, also, a right of way acquired subsequently to the mortgage, though here the mortgage would be strictly construed, and while held to apply to property used for railroad purposes, it would be held not to apply if not so used; Porter v. Steel Co., 122 U. S. 267, 7 Sup. Ct. 1206, 30 L. Ed. 1210. It covers terminal facilities upon a line of railroad constructed or to be constructed between the named termini, together with all stations, etc.; Central Trust Co. v. Kneeland, 138 U. S. 414, 11 Sup. Ct. 357, 34 L. Ed. 1014. See TERMINAL FACILITIES. It applies not only to legal titles but also to equitable rights and interests subsequently acquired either by or for the company; Wade v. R. Co., 149 U. S. 327, 13 Sup. Ct. 892, 37 L. Ed. 755; Bear Lake and River Water Works and Irrigation Co. v. Garland, 164 U. S. 1, 17 Sup. Ct. 7, 41 L. Ed. 327; it embraces the lease of a belt line around a city acquired after the execution of the mortgage; Columbia Finance & Trust Co. v. Ry. Co., 22 U. S. App. 54, 60 Fed. 794, 9 C. C. A. 264. It does not cover uncalled capital; [1897] 1 Ch. 406. Where the property acquired is at the time subject to existing liens, these liens are prior in right to the lien of the mortgage; U. S. v. New Orleans R. Co., 12 Wall. (U. S.) 362, 20 L. Ed. 434; Central Trust Co. of New York v. R. Co., 81 Fed. 772. See FUTURE ACQUIRED PROPERTY. And if property was fraudulently acquired, the vendor may rescind as against the mortgagee.

Another rule resting upon the quasi-public character of a railroad is that which prohibits creditors from levying an attachment or execution upon the railroad, or parts of it, even subject to the mortgage. To permit such action would be to permit the disintegration of the railroad and the destruction of the power to discharge the public obligation of the corporation.

Foreclosure. The mortgage deed of trust usually contains provisions for enforcing the rights of bondholders in case of default of the mortgagor. It usually provides for (1) Entry by the trustee. This is seldom now resorted to, since by operating the property, the trustee becomes liable as the mortgagor would have been, and as default implies that the property has been operated at a loss, the trustee will seldom consent to exercise this right, and never unless sufficiently indemnified by the bondholders. (2) Trustee's sale of the property after prescribed advertisement, which is seldom resorted to. (3) The usual method of procedure is by a bill of foreclosure, usually accompanied by a prayer for a receiver (see supra; RECEIVERS) and for the ascertainment of liens or claims against the property. No provision in the mortgage can exclude the right of a trustee to apply to a court of equity for foreclosure. The provision usually found that a majority, or a specified proportion, of the bondholders may by an instrument in writing waive the right to declare that a default has occurred, will be sustained by the court, though such provision is not favored, as being inimical to the rights of a minority. Provisions unreasonably limiting the right to foreclose are void. When a provision required the request of one-fourth of the bondholders to compel the trustee to begin foreclosure, the fact that three-fourths of the bonds were held by a company operating the mortgagor company was held to justify action by a single bondholder; Linder v. R. Co., 73 Fed. 320. In case the trustee refuses to act, a bondholder may bring suit for foreclosure on behalf of himself and such others as may join; New York Security & Trust Co. v. Ry. Co., 74 Fed. 67; id., 77 Fed. 525; in such case the refusal of the trustee must be set out and the trustee should be made a party defendant; General Electric Co. v. Electric Co., 79 Fed. 25; First Nat. Bank v. Trust Co., 80 Fed. 569, 26 C. C. A. 1.

Mortgage bondholders have no right to foreclose or to intervene in a suit by the trustee to foreclose the mortgage, he being the proper person to do it, unless negligence, incompetency, or improper conduct of the trustees injuriously affecting their interests, is established; Wiltzie, Mtg. Forecl. § 127, where the cases are collected.

If a single bondholder has the right to institute proceedings he is bound to act for all standing in a similar position; New Orleans P. Ry. Co. v. Parker, 143 U. S. 42, 12 Sup. Ct. 364, 36 L. Ed. 66. See PARTIES.

Railroad foreclosure suits are begun generally in the federal courts, thus securing the appointment of the same receiver or receivers for the entire property, and avoiding, to a certain extent, possible prejudice in a state court. For the latter reason, perhaps, the same jurisdiction is sought in many cases of corporations other than railroads. The jurisdiction of the federal courts in such cases depends on the citizenship of the parties. Federal courts sitting in equity cannot be ousted of jurisdiction to enforce a right of an equitable nature by a state statute which prescribes an action at law to enforce such right; Shethfield Furnace Co. v. Withersow, 149 U. S. 574, 13 Sup. Ct. 936, 37 L. Ed. 533. See JURISDICTION.

Where a federal court has jurisdiction and possession of the property of a railroad company, it acquires jurisdiction of a subsequent suit to foreclose a mortgage on the same property, irrespective of the citizenship of the parties thereto; Morgan's La. & T. R. & S. S. Co. v. Ry. Co., 137 U. S. 171, 11 Sup. Ct. 61, 34 L. Ed. 625; Carey v. Ry. Co., 52 Fed. 671.

The fact that by the terms of a railroad mortgage the trustees therein are not authorized to enter and take possession of the property until six months after a default does not preclude a court of equity from entertaining a bill of foreclosure before that time, and appointing receivers, when it is found necessary for the protection of the property, and to insure the due performance of the obligations which the mortgagor owes to the public; State Trust Co. v. R. Co., 120 Fed. 398.

The fact that there is a right of entry and sale, on default, provided for in the mortgage, does not exclude a judicial foreclosure; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Schmidt, 52 S. W. 835, 21 Ky. L. Rep. 556; and a provision requiring six months default before foreclosure proceedings, may be waived by the company and such waiver is not in fraud of creditors; Wells v. Trust Co., 195 Ill. 288, 63 N. E. 136.

Foreclosure proceedings on a railroad mortgage are not in rem so as to bind those who are not parties; Pardee v. Aldridge, 189 U. S. 429, 23 Sup. Ct. 514, 47 L. Ed. 883.

Demand for payment is not necessary if the mortgagor has no funds, before proceeding for foreclosure, though a corporation could of course show that payment would have been made if demanded; Shaw v. Bill, 95 U. S. 10, 24 L. Ed. 333.

The court having acquired jurisdiction takes control of the entire property of the corporation through its receiver, and usually in the case of a railroad, though exceptionally in the case of other corporations, operates the property through such receiver. See RECEIVERS.

After the receiver takes possession, supplies, even though not covered by the mortgage, cannot be taken in execution by creditors. Prior to such taking possession, such assets are ordinarily subject to execution, or can be reached by attachment or bill in equity. Income, such as earnings, or interest or accounts collected subsequently to the appointment of the receiver, are taken by him and administered for the benefit of all the creditors. See RECEIVERS; OPERATING EXPENSES.

Provision is then made for ascertaining the liens, or claims, against the property and determining the liabilities of the corporation and their several priorities. This is preliminary to a sale of the property, in order that parties interested may know what the incumbrances upon, or claims against, the property are, and may bid intelligently, or make provision to redeem the property without forcing it to a sale; Grape Creek Coal Co. v. Trust Co., 63 Fed. 891, 12 C. C. A. 350.

Decrees for the sale of mortgaged property usually provide that a part of the bid may be paid in bonds of the issue secured.

On the foreclosure sale of the property of a corporation, bonds should not be received in payment of a bid except for such proportion of the bid as the purchaser, on a distribution of the purchase money, is entitled to receive on account of his bonds, and the right to bid in bonds should be extended to all bondholders on the same terms; American Waterworks Co. of Illinois v. Trust Co., 73 Fed. 956, 20 C. C. A. 133.

The receivership usually terminates in a sale under order of court, either for the purpose of carrying out a plan of reorganization (see REORGANIZATION), or for the purpose of realizing upon the property of the corporation. For the form of a bill of foreclosure and decree, see Skiddy v. R. Co., 3 Hughes 320, Fed. Cas. No. 12,922.

A purchaser of real estate at a foreclosure sale is punishable as for contempt in refusing to obey an order of the court requiring him to complete the sale; see Burton v. Linn, 20 App. Div. 625, 47 N. Y. Supp. 835. Inability to pay the price will not relieve the party; Burton v. Linn, 20 App. Div. 625, 47 N. Y. Supp. 835; contra, Smith v. Smith, 92 N. C. 304.

In equity a decree may be entered on a mortgage foreclosure for any balance that may be due over and above the proceeds of the sale; White v. Ewing, 69 Fed. 454, 16 C. C. A. 296.

The purchaser of railroad property at a judicial sale succeeds to all the rights of the former owner and of the holders of the liens and claims foreclosed, as against an unenclosed lien, and may intervene in a suit to enforce such lien, and assert the equities and rights to which it has thus succeeded; Connor v. R. Co., 109 Fed. 931, 48 C. C. A. 730, 54 L. R. A. 687, where it was also held that the property of a public corporation, such as a railroad company, cannot be sold under process separately and apart from its franchise, where such property is so indissolubly linked to the franchise and to the public functions of the corporation that without it the franchise will be rendered inoperative.

If there is collusion to cut out unsecured creditors the sale will be set aside; Louisville Trust Co. v. Ry. Co., 174 U. S. 674, 19 Sup. Ct. 827, 43 L. Ed. 1130.

It is to be observed that in a foreclosure it is by no means certain that the lien of the mortgage will be determined to be the first lien upon the corporate property. In many cases it develops that claims subsequent to the mortgage in time are held to be prior liens, and while for many purposes the filing of a bill or appointment of a receiver fixes the liabilities, it may be that claims arising even subsequent to the receivership will be held to precede the claim of the mortgage bondholders.

The first payment out of the fund realized from the property is for the expenses of the litigation, always provided for from a fund under the control of a court. Included under this head are receivers' certificates, since these were issued by order of the court. See OPERATING EXPENSES; RECEIVERS.

Taxes are prior in lien to all other liens except judicial costs; Georgia v. R. Co., 3 Woods 434, Fed. Cas. No. 5,351; Central Trust Co. v. R. Co., 110 N. Y. 250, 18 N. E. 92, 1 L. R. A. 260; New Jersey Southern R. Co. v. Board of Railroad Com'rs, 41 N. J. L. 235.

In many states liens are given by statutes to certain favored creditors, who thus acquire priority over mortgage bonds prior to the inception of their claims. The ordinary mechanic's lien statute does not apply to railroads unless expressly declared to do so. The contractor who constructs a railroad has no lien thereon as a matter of right. The fact that he has possession does not give him a lien; Dunham v. Ry. Co., 1 Wall. (U. S.) 254, 17 L. Ed. 584; Galveston, H. & H. R. Co. v. Cowdrey, 11 Wall. (U. S.) 459, 20 L. Ed. 199. The courts construe such statutes strictly. Thus, a statute giving a lien for materials, supplies, and labor does not give a lien for money loaned to pay for them; Seventh Nat. Bank of Philadelphia v. Iron Co., 35 Fed. 436. And a lien for materials will be allowed only for such materials as pass into the permanent structure, and not for trucks, scales, etc.; Central Trust Co. v. Ry. Co., 27 Fed. 178. A contractor's lien for work done will be limited to the embankments and structures actually made by him, as distinguished from the land and right of way; Central Trust Co. v. Ry. Co., 83 Fed. 386. It has been held that a statute giving a lien to persons furnishing supplies necessary to the operation of a manufacturing company prior to the lien of an earlier mortgage is not unconstitutional as special or class legislation; Virginia Development Co. v. Iron Co., 90 Va. 126, 17 S. E. 806, 44 Am. St. Rep. 893. Such "supplies" are only such things as contribute directly to carrying on the work in which the company is engaged and not, e. g., goods supplied to a "company store" maintained by a furnace company; Fidelity Ins., Trust & Safe-Deposit Co. v. Iron Co., 81 Fed. 451. But, while the courts construe such statutes strictly in determining the kind of claims to be admitted under their provisions, they construe them liberally as remedial statutes in determining the formalities to be observed under their provisions; Seventh Nat. Bank of Philadelphia v. Iron Co., 35 Fed. 442.

A very common statutory lien of this class is the lien for labor, usually limited as to the duration of the labor for which a lien can be filed, and also as to the class of employes entitled to take advantage of the provisions of such a statute; Seventh Nat. Bank of Philadelphia v. Iron Co., 35 Fed. 436; Fidelity Insurance, Trust & Safe-Deposit Co. v. Iron Co., 81 Fed. 453.

The "six months' rule," or as it is usually called, from the case in which it was adopted by the supreme court of the United States (99 U. S. 235, 25 L. Ed. 339) the rule in Fosdick v. Schall, allows parties who have furnished labor or supplies within six months antecedent to the receivership priority, at least so far as income received during the receivership is concerned, over mortgage bondholders. It has been held that the rule applies only to railroads; Wood v. Trust & Safe Deposit Co., 128 U. S. 416, 9 Sup. Ct. 131, 32 L. Ed. 472; not to manufacturing corporations; Seventh Nat. Bank of Philadelphia v. Iron Co., 35 Fed. 436; Fidelity Insurance & Safe-Deposit Co. v. Iron Co., 42 Fed. 372; nor to steamship lines; Bound v. R. Co., 50 Fed. 312; nor to a hotel company; Raht v. Attrill, 106 N. Y. 423, 13 N. E. 282, 60 Am. Rep. 456. But see, contra, an Alabama case discussing the authorities and extending the rule to private corporations generally; 39 L. R. A. 623, n. See RECEIVERS.

In the Civil Law. Mortgages in the civil law are of two kinds, conventional and legal. A conventional mortgage results from the direct act or covenant of the parties. A legal mortgage arises by mere act of law.

A mortgage may be acquired in three ways.

First, with the consent of the debtor, by his agreement.

Second, without the owner's consent, by the quality and bare effect of the engagement, the nature of which is such that the law has annexed to it the security of a mortgage.

Third, where a mortgage is acquired by the authority of justice: as where a creditor who had no mortgage obtains a decree of condemnation in his favor.

When the creditor is put into possession of the thing, movable or immovable, he has a right to keep it until he is paid what is owing him; and the debtor cannot turn the creditor out of possession, nor make use of his own thing without the consent of the creditor.

Effect of a mortgage. First, the creditor has a right to sell the thing pledged, whether the creditor has it in his possession or not. Under the French law, it was a right to have it sold. Cushing's Domat, p. 647.

Second, a right on the part of the creditor to follow the property, into whosoever hands it has come, whether movable or immovable.

Third, a preference of the first creditor to whom the property is mortgaged, and a right on his part to follow the property into the hands of the other creditors.

Fourth, the mortgage is a security for all the consequences of the original debt, as damages, interest, expenses in preserving, etc.

With respect to mortgages under the modern civil law of France and Louisiana, the distinction between movables and immovables is important. Such a thing as a chattel mortgage is not recognized under either system. "But some things movable in their nature become immovable by destination under certain circumstances," as: animals intended for and used in the cultivation of a plantation and placed on it by the owner for that purpose; though the animal cannot be mortgaged by itself, a mortgage of a plantation will cover the animals so attached to it; Howe, Stud. Civ. L. 76; Moussier v. Zunts, 14 La. Ann. 15. See LIEN; PACT DE NON ALIENANDO.

See, generally, Domat, part i. lib. iii. tit. i.; Guyot, Rep. Univ. tit. Privilegium; Cushing's Domat.

MORTGAGEE. He to whom a mortgage is made. See MORTGAGE.

MORTGAGOR. He who makes a mortgage. See MORTGAGE.

MORTMAIN. A term applied to denote the possession of lands or tenements by any corporation, sole or aggregate, ecclesiastical or temporal. These purchases having been chiefly made by religious houses, in consequence of which lands became perpetually inherent in one dead hand, this has occasioned the general appellation of mortmain to be applied to such alienations. 2 Bla. Com. 268; Co. Litt. 2b; Barrington, Stat. 27, 97. See Story, Eq. Jur. 13th ed. § 1137 n. (4); Shelf. Mortm. In England the common-law right of every corporation to take and hold lands and tenements has been restrained by the statutes of mortmain, which subject the power to acquire lands to the discretion of the crown or parliament as to the grant of a license; 8 H. L. C. 712; McDonogh v. Murdoch, 15 How. (U. S.) 367, 405, 14 L. Ed. 732. These statutes have not been re-enacted or considered in force in this country except in Pennsylvania, where they are judicially recognized to the extent of prohibiting the dedication of property to superstitious uses, and grants to a corporation without a statutory license; Leazure v. Hillegas, 7 S. & R. (Pa.) 313; though the title is good till office found and may be conveyed subject to the right of the state to defeat it; id. See American & Foreign Christian Union v. Yount, 101 U. S. 352, 25 L. Ed. 888. The commonwealth only can object; Goundle v. Water Co., 7 Pa. 233.

Ordinarily, a corporation may take and hold such land as may be within the purposes of the charter, whether it acquires it by deed or devise; Clark, Corp. 129. Statutes sometimes restrict the amount that can be taken. Where a limit of value is specified it is ascertained as of the taking; Bogardus v. Rector, etc., of Trinity Church, 4 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 633.

In the United States the term mortmain acts is applied to statutes which exist in some states restricting the right of religious corporations to hold land and the power to make conveyances, devises, or bequests to religious societies or charitable uses. Such statutes are aimed at the same mischief which gave rise to the English statutes of mortmain, and either avoid the deed or will, quoad hoc, altogether, or when without valuable consideration, or when the real estate is above a specified valuation, or if made within a specified time before the death of the grantor or testator. See Stims. Am. Stat. L. §§ 403, 1446, 2618.

In England, by the Mortmain Act of 1736, 9 Geo. II. c. 36, the power of devising land by will to charitable purposes was absolutely destroyed; 6 Ch. D. 214. This act and various amending acts were repealed by the act of 1888, but practically the then existing law was re-enacted; Whitehead, Church Law 174.

The act of 1888 is in effect a codification of the law on the subject; 5 L. Quart. Rev. 387. It is in four distinct parts; I. Assurances in mortmain are void and the land liable to forfeiture, if made otherwise than under authority of a statute or of a license from the queen, who is empowered to grant it. II. Assurances for charitable uses are treated substantially on the basis of the statute 9 Geo. II., and charitable objects are enumerated in the language of the statute 43 Eliz. c. 4; they must take effect immediately, without any power of revocation, reservation, etc., except as to a nominal rent, mines and minerals, or easements, building contract, or the like; or, in case of bona fide sale, of a rent charge or annual payment to the vendor; they can never be made by will, but only by deed made with prescribed formalities. III. Exemptions are made of specified quantities of land for parks, museums, and schoolhouses, which may be made by will; also land for the two universities and other named colleges is excepted from the provisions in the second part of the act. IV. Scotland and Ireland are excluded, and existing charters, etc., are saved.

By the Mortmain and Charitable Uses Act of 1891, land may be assured by will to or for the benefit of any charitable use, but such land shall, notwithstanding anything in the will contained to the contrary, be sold within one year from the death of the testator unless the time is extended by the high court, or a judge at chambers, or the charity commissioners, who have power to sanction the retention or acquisition of such land where it is required for actual occupation for purposes of charity. Land under the mortmain acts, 1888 and 1891, is defined to include tenements and hereditaments, corporeal or incorporeal, of any tenure, but not any money, secured on land or any personal estate arising from or connected with land; 54 & 55 Vict. c. 73, § 3. See Bouchier & Chilcott, Mortmain; Tudor, Charities, etc. (1906 ed.).

Statutes of mortmain are local in their application and do not affect wills of persons domiciled in British colonies. A bequest by a testator, domiciled in a colony, of money, to his trustees for the purchase of land in England for a charitable object, is valid; 7 H. L. Cas. 124.

See Whitehead, Church Law 174; Tyssen, Char. Beq. 561; 1 Brett, Com. ch. xix.; CHARITABLE USE.

MORTUARY. A burial-place.

A kind of ecclesiastical heriot, being a customary gift of the second best living animal belonging to the deceased, claimed by and due to the minister in many parishes, on the death of his parishioners, whether buried in the churchyard or not. These mortuaries, like lay heriots, were originally voluntary bequests to the church in lieu of tithes or ecclesiastical dues neglected in lifetime. See Soul Scor. They were reduced to a certain amount by 21 Hen. VIII. c. 6. They were sometimes payable to the lord; Paroch. Antiq. 470. The mortuary seems to have been carried to church with the corpse, and was therefore sometimes called corpse-present. 2 Burn. Eccl. Law 563. Anciently, a parishioner could not make a valid will without an assignment of a sufficient mortuary or gift to the church. 2 Bla. Com. 427.

The crown of England was at one time entitled to certain perquisites in the nature of a mortuary on the death of a bishop; 2 Steph. Com. 726.

MORTUARY TABLES. See LIFE TABLES.

MORTUUM VADIUM. A mortgage.

MORTUUS (Lat.). Dead. Ainsworth, Lex. So in Sheriff's return mortuus est, he is dead. O. Bridgm. 469; Brooke, Abr. Retorne de Briefer, pl. 125; 19 Viner, Abr. Return, lib. 2, pl. 12.

MORTUUS CIVILITER. Civil death. This incident attended every attainder of treason or other felony, whereby in the language of Lord Coke the attainted person "is disabled to bring any action, for he is extra legem mortuus"; Co. Litt. 199. He could be heard in court only for the direct purpose of reversing the attainder, and not in prosecution of a civil right; 1 B. & A. 159. He could be grantor or grantee after attainder, and the grant would be good against all persons except the king; Shepard, Touch. 231.

MOSLEM LAW. One of the two great systems of customary law which the English found in India. See HINDU LAW. It regulated the life and relations of all Moslems, and parts of it, especially its penal provisions, were applied to both Moslems and Hindus. Bryce, Extension of the Law.

MOST FAVORED NATION CLAUSE. A clause found in most treaties providing that the citizens or subjects of the contracting states may enjoy the privileges accorded by either party to those of the most favored nations. It is said that the general design of such clauses is to establish the principle of equality of international treatment. The test of whether this principle is violated by the concession of advantages to a particular nation is, not the form in which such concession is made, but the condition on which it is granted; whether it is given for a price, or whether this price is in the nature of a substantial equivalent, and not of a mere evasion. The United States has always taken the stand that reciprocal commercial concessions are given for a valuable consideration and are not within the scope of this clause. Bartram v. Robertson, 122 U. S. 116, 7 Sup. Ct. 1115, 30 L. Ed. 1118; Whitney v. Robertson, 124 U. S. 190, 8 Sup. Ct. 456, 31 L. Ed. 386. Great Britain has taken the opposite position.

See Consular Treaty Rights and Comments on the "Most Favored Nation" Clause, by Ernest Ludwig.

Political relations between two states may be of a kind to afford a fair basis for commercial concessions which other states could not claim to enjoy under this clause; for instance, as between the United States and Cuba. The clause has been considered as not extending to extradition treaties, nor to the provisions of a pilot law excepting from pilotage American coastwise vessels. But it does cover a law providing for the levying of lower rates of tonnage dues on vessels sailing from certain foreign ports, as against the ports of a country outside of the specified area whose commerce is, by treaty, to be accorded the most favored nation treatment. 3 Amer. Journ. Int. L. 57.

A simple form of the clause is that "in all that concerns commerce and navigation, favors which either party has granted or may hereafter grant to any other state shall be granted to the other party"; sometimes followed by a promise that the other party "shall enjoy the same freely if the concession is freely made, and allowing the same compensation if the concession was conditional." The reciprocal civil rights of the subjects or citizens of the contracting powers are frequently covered by such a clause.

See Herod, Most Favored Nation Treatment; Moore's Dig. Int. Law; 3 Amer. Journ. Int. Law 395.

MOTEER. A customary service or payment at the moot or court of the lord from which some were exempted by charter or privilege. Cowell.

MOTHER. A woman who has borne a child. See PARENT AND CHILD; INFANT.

MOTHER-IN-LAW. The mother of one's wife or of one's husband.

MOTION. In Practice. An application to a court by one of the parties in a cause, or his counsel, in order to obtain some rule or order of court which he thinks becomes necessary in the progress of the cause, or to get relieved in a summary manner from some matter which would work injustice.

It is said to be a written application for an order: Dullard v. Phelan, 83 Ia. 471, 50 N. W. 204; but it is frequently made verbally.

Where the object of the motion may be granted merely on request, without a hearing, it is a motion of course; those requiring a hearing are special; such as may be heard on the application of one party alone, ex parte; those requiring notice to the other party, on notice.

When the motion is made on some matter of fact, it must be supported by an affidavit that such facts are true; and for this purpose the party's affidavit will be received, though it cannot be read on the hearing; Hoar v. Mulvey, 1 Binn. (Pa.) 145. See 3 Bla. Com. 305; 15 Viner, Abr. 495; Graham, Pr. 542; Smith, Ch. Pr. Index; Mitchell, Motions and Rules.

MOTION FOR JUDGMENT. In English Practice. A proceeding whereby a party to an action moves for the judgment of the court in his favor, which he may adopt under various circumstances enumerated under the Judicature Act, 1875.

MOTIVE. The inducement, cause, or reason why a thing is done.

It is an inducement, or that which leads or tempts the mind to indulge the criminal act; it is resorted to as a means of arriving at an ultimate fact, not for the purpose of explaining the reason of a criminal act which has been clearly proved, but from the important aid it may render in completing the proof of the commission of the act when it might otherwise remain in doubt; People v. Bennett, 49 N. Y. 148. It is not indispensable to conviction for murder that the particular motive for taking the life of a human being shall be established by proof to the satisfaction of the jury; Pointer v. U. S., 151 U. S. 396, 14 Sup. Ct. 410, 38 L. Ed. 208.

An act legal in itself, which violates no right, is not actionable on account of the motive which actuated it; Occum Co. v. Mfg. Co., 34 Conn. 529; Chatfield v. Wilson, 28 Vt. 49; [1898] 1 Ch. 274; [1898] A. C. 1. See a learned paper on the doctrine of the last cited case, Allen v. Flood, by L. C. Krauthoff, in Rep. Am. Bar Assoc. 1898.

See MALICE; INTENT; LIBEL; LUCRI CAUSA; CAUSE; CONSIDERATION; MENS REA; MISTAKE; WITNESS.

MOTOR BOAT. By act of Congress of June 9, 1910, defined to include "every vessel propelled by machinery and not more than 65 feet in length, except tug boats and tow boats propelled by steam." The measurement is "from end to end over the deck, excluding the sheer." The engine, boiler and operating machinery shall be subject to inspection by the local inspectors of steam vessels and to their approval of the design, on all said motor boats which are more than 40 feet in length and propelled by machinery driven by steam. The act classifies them as follows: Less than 26 feet; 26 feet or over, and less than 40 feet; 40 feet or over, and not more than 65 feet. They are required in all weathers from sunset to sunrise to carry certain specified lights, and no other lights which may be mistaken for the prescribed lights shall be exhibited. They shall be provided with a "whistle or other sound-producing appliance" as specified; also, for the latter two classes, an "efficient fog horn" and an "efficient bell"; also life preservers or life belts or buoyant cushions or ring buoys or other device, prescribed by the secretary of commerce, "sufficient to sustain afloat every person on board, and so placed as to be readily accessible."

Every motor boat and every vessel propelled by machinery other than steam, more than 65 feet in length, "shall carry ready for immediate use the means of promptly and effectually extinguishing burning gasoline." The secretary of commerce is required to make such regulations as may be necessary in executing the act. Nothing in the act shall be deemed to alter the acts of congress as to international rules for preventing collisions at sea.

MOTOR CYCLE. A motor cycle is within the meaning of a statute providing for the registering and identification of motor vehicles, which are defined to be all vehicles propelled by power other than muscular power, except traction engines and such motor vehicles as run upon rails or tracks; People v. Smith, 156 Mich. 173, 120 N. W. 581, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 41, 16 Ann. Cas. 607.

See AUTOMOBILES; BICYCLE.

MOURNING. The apparel worn at funerals, and for a time afterwards, in order to manifest grief for the death of some one, and to honor his memory.

It has been held, in England, that a demand for mourning furnished to the widow and family of the testator is not a funeral expense; 2 C. & P. 207. See 14 Ves. 346.

MOVABLES. Such subjects of property as attend a man's person wherever he goes, in contradistinction to things immovable.

Things movable by their nature are such as may be carried from one place to another, whether they move themselves, as cattle, or cannot be removed without an extraneous power, as inanimate things. So in the civil law mobilia; but this term did not properly include living movables, which were termed moventia. Calvinus, Lex. But these words mobilia and moventia are also used synonymously, and in the general sense of "movables." Ibid. Movables are further distinguished into such as are in possession, or which are in the power of the owner, as a horse in actual use, a piece of furniture in a man's own house; and such as are in the possession of another, and can only be recovered by action, which are therefore said to be in action, as a debt. But it has been held that movable property, in a legacy, strictly includes only such as is corporeal and tangible; not, therefore, rights in action, as judgment or bond debts; Strong v. White, 19 Conn. 238, 245; 1 Wm. Jones 225. But see Penniman v. French, 17 Pick. (Mass.) 404, 28 Am. Dec. 309. See PERSONAL PROPERTY; Pow. Mortg. Index; 2 Bla. Com. 384; 2 Steph. Com. 26; 1 P. Wms. 267.

In a will, "movables" is used in its largest sense, but will not pass growing crops, nor building materials on ground; nor, as stated above, rights in action; 2 Wms. Exec. 1014; Humble v. Humble, 3 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 123; Jackson v. Vandersprengle, 2 Dall. (U. S.) 142, 1 L. Ed. 323. See MORTGAGE.

MOVE. To apply to the court to take action in any matter. See MOTION. To propose a resolution, or recommend action in a deliberative body.

MOVING PAPERS. Such papers as are made the basis of some motion in court proceedings, e. g. a bill in equity with supporting affidavits.

MOVING PICTURES. A moving picture and vaudeville show, including comedy singers and dancers, etc., is not a theatrical entertainment; Com. v. Donnelly, 21 Pa. Dist. R. 21; moving picture shows are not theatrical performances; 15 Can. Cr. Cas. 241; nor public shows; Edwards v. McClellan, 118 N. Y. Supp. 181; State v. Chamberlain, 112 Minn. 52, 127 N. W. 444, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 335, 21 Ann. Cas. 679; exhibition of moving pictures in a hotel, with no charge for admission, is not the conducting a common show without a license; People v. Wacke, 77 Misc. 196, 137 N. Y. Supp. 652. An ordinance imposing a license fee on kinetoscopes, panoramas, etc., covers moving pictures; Laurelle v. Bush, 17 Cal. App. 409, 119 Pac. 953; but not one prohibiting the opening of billiard rooms, baseball grounds and other places of amusement on Sunday; Clinton v. Wilson, 257 Ill. 580, 101 N. E. 192.

The regulation of moving picture shows is a proper exercise of the police power; In re Whitten, 152 App. Div. 506, 137 N. Y. Supp. 360. An Ohio city cannot under the 1912 constitution, lay taxes to carry on the business; State v. Lynch (Ohio) 102 N. E. 670.

The registered trademark of a periodical ("Nick Carter") is not infringed by the use of "Nick Carter" as the name of a character in a moving picture; Atlas Mfg. Co. v. Street, 204 Fed. 398, 122 C. C. A. 568; but moving pictures and dramatization are cognate forms of reproduction and a copyright of the latter includes the former; id.

An exhibition of a series of photographs of persons and things arranged on films as moving pictures, and so depicting the principal scenes of an author's work as to tell the story, is a dramatization of such work and the person producing the films and offering them for sale for exhibitions, even if not himself exhibiting them, infringes the copyright of the author; Kalem Co. v. Harper Bros., 222 U. S. 55, 32 Sup. Ct. 20, 56 L. Ed. 92, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 1285.

MUHAMMADAN LAW. See MOHAMMEDAN LAW.

MULATTO. A person born of one white and one black parent. Medway v. Natick, 7 Mass. 88; State v. Scott, 1 Bailey (S. C.) 270; Thurman v. State, 18 Ala. 276. See NEGRO.

Properly a mulatto is a person one of whose parents is wholly black and the other wholly white; but the word does not always, though perhaps it does generally, require so exactly even a mixture of blood, nor is its signification alike in all the states. 1 Bish. Mar. & D. § 308.

MULCT. A fine imposed on the conviction of an offence.

An imposition laid on ships or goods by a company of trade for the maintenance of consuls and the like. It is obsolete in the latter sense, and but seldom used in the former.

MULE. A reward offered for the apprehension of a mare, horse, or gelding does not apply to a mule; Com. v. Davidson, 4 Pa. Dist. R. 172.

MULIER. Anciently mulier was taken for a wife, as it is commonly used for a woman, and sometimes for a widow; but it has been held that a virgin is included under the name mulier. Co. Litt. 170, 253; 2 Bla. Com. 248.

The term is used always in contradistinction to a bastard, mulier being always legitimate, Co. Litt. 243, and seems to be a word corrupted from melior, or the French meilleur, signifying lawful issue born in wedlock. But by Glanville, lawful issue are said to be mulier, not from melior, but because begotten e muliere, and not ex concubina, for he calls such issue filios mulieratos, opposing them to bastards. Glanville, lib. 7, c. 1. If the said lands "should, according to the queen's lawes, descend to the right heire, then in right it ought to descend to him, as next heire being mulierlie borne, and the other not so borne." Holinshed, Chron. of Ireland, an. 1558.

MULIER PUISNE. See BASTARD EIGNE; EIGNE.

MULTA. A fine imposed ex arbitrio by magistrates on the præsides provinciarum. Inst. 4. 1.

A fine given to the king that the bishop might have the power to make his will and to have the probate of other men's, and the granting administrations. Toml. Law Dict.

MULTIFARIOUSNESS. In Equity Pleading. The demand in one bill of several matters of a distinct and independent nature against several defendants. Cooper, Eq. Pl. 182; 18 Ves. 80; Fellows v. Fellows, 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 682, 15 Am. Dec. 412; White v. Curtis, 2 Gray (Mass.) 467. See Dan. Ch. Pr. 2093.

The uniting in one bill against a single defendant several matters perfectly distinct and unconnected. More commonly called misjoinder of claims. See MISJOINDER.

Multifariousness of the first kind is where the plaintiff joins several distinct claims against the same defendant and prays relief in respect to all; and of the second kind is where a plaintiff having a valid claim against one defendant joins another person as defendant in the same suit with a large part of which he is not connected.

The objection is discouraged where it might defeat the ends of justice; Marshall v. Means, 12 Ga. 61, 56 Am. Dec. 444; but joinder will be allowed unless it is apparent that the defence will be seriously embarrassed by confusing different issues and proofs in the same litigation; Nourse v. Allen, 4 Blatchf. 376, Fed. Cas. No. 10,367. A bill is multifarious where there is a misjoinder of distinct and independent causes of action. See Savage v. Benham, 17 Ala. 119. Thus, unconnected demands against different estates cannot be united in the same bill, though the defendant is executor in both; Daniel v. Morrison's Ex'r, 6 Dana (Ky.) 186; nor will a bill lie against two different partnerships, though one defendant is a partner in both; Griffin v. Merrill, 10 Md. 364; nor a bill combining individual claims with claims in a representative capacity; Carter v. Treadwell, 3 Story 25, Fed. Cas. No. 2,480; but a bill may be brought by several persons claiming under a common title but in different shares; Shields v. Thomas, 18 How. (U. S.) 253, 15 L. Ed. 368; and where there is a joinder of a legal and an equitable claim and a prayer for relief as to both, the bill is not multifarious; Carpenter v. Hall, 18 Ala. 439. To justify dismissal on this ground, it must appear that the interests are so diverse that they cannot be properly included in one decree; Michan v. Wyatt, 21 Ala. 813.

The vice of multifariousness is the union of causes of action which, or of parties whose claims, it is either impractical or inconvenient to adjudicate in a single suit. Where it is as practical and convenient for court and parties to deal with the claims and parties joined in one suit as in many, there is no multifariousness; Westinghouse A. B. Co. v. R. Co., 137 Fed. 26, 71 C. C. A. 1. It does not apply where all the defendants' acts are of like character, their effect on complainant is identical, and the same relief is sought against all, the defenses being the same; Bitterman v. R. Co., 207 U. S. 206, 28 Sup. Ct. 91, 52 L. Ed. 171, 12 Ann. Cas. 693.

The question is always largely within the discretion of the court; Horner-Gaylord Co. v. Miller, 147 Fed. 297; U. S. v. Telephone Co., 128 U. S. 315, 9 Sup. Ct. 90, 32 L. Ed. 450; Brown v. Deposit Co., 128 U. S. 403, 9 Sup. Ct. 127, 32 L. Ed. 468; Shafer v. O'Brien, 31 W. Va. 601, 8 S. E. 298.

A bill for infringement of a patent and for unfair trade is not; Onondaga I. W. Co. v. Mfg. Co., 182 Fed. 832; contra, Keasby & Mattison Co. v. Mfg. Co., 113 Fed. 432; nor is a bill by the equitable owner of a patent for its infringement and to compel a transfer; Prest-O-Lite Co. v. Lighting Co., 164 Fed. 60; nor for infringement of several patents with an averment that the inventions are capable of "conjoint use"; Southern Plow Co. v. Agr. Works, 165 Fed. 214; nor is a bill multifarious because it seeks to enforce two series of bonds, both owned by the complainant and issued by the same city; Burlington Sav. Bank v. Clinton, 106 Fed. 269.

A bill framed with a double aspect is not multifarious; Baines v. McGee, 1 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 208; Murphy v. Clark, id., 221.

There is no general rule by which to determine whether a bill is multifarious because it joins another person as defendant in a suit with a large part of which he is unconnected; it must be left to the discretion of the court; Oliver v. Piatt, 3 How. (U. S.) 333, 11 L. Ed. 622; Shields v. Thomas, 18 How. (U. S.) 259, 15 L. Ed. 368; the courts do not disregard previous decisions, but have a due regard to general convenience and the advancement of justice; Dunn v. Cooper, 3 Md. Ch. 47.

Defendants should not be put to the unnecessary trouble and expense of answering litigated matters in a bill in which they are not interested; Newland v. Rogers, 3 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 432; but where the interests of different parties are so complicated in different transactions that entire justice could not be conveniently done without uniting the whole, the bill is not multifarious; Oliver v. Piatt, 3 How. (U. S.) 333, 11 L. Ed. 622; Page v. Whidden, 59 N. H. 507. The objection is confined to cases where the cause of each defendant is entirely different in subject-matter from that of his co-defendants, but it does not apply to a case where a general right is claimed by the plaintiff, though the defendants may have separate and distinct rights; Heggie v. Hill, 95 N. C. 303; Donovan v. Dunning, 69 Mo. 436. To render a bill multifarious it must contain not only separate and distinct matters, but such that each entitles the complainant to separate equitable relief; Adams, Eq. 310.

The objection should be raised by demurrer; Grove v. Fresh, 9 Gill & J. (Md.) 280; filing an answer and taking the testimony on the merits waives the objection, and it cannot be made on appeal after a decree pro confesso; id.; Gilmore v. Sapp, 100 Ill. 297; or after a final decree on the merits of one part of the bill; Betts v. Betts, 18 Ala. 787. In Persch v. Quiggle, 57 Pa. 247, it was held that it was too late to object at the hearing. But in such case it has also been held that its allowance rests in the discretion of the court; Felder v. Davis, 17 Ala. 425. It may be taken by plea, answer, or demurrer, but not at the hearing; but the court may raise it at any time; Oliver v. Piatt, 3 How. (U. S.) 333, 11 L. Ed. 622.

One defendant cannot demur on the ground of the joinder of another defendant who does not object. See 38 N. J. Eq. 89, note.

A demurrer goes to the whole suit, and, if sustained, the bill should be dismissed; Dunn v. Cooper, 3 Md. Ch. 46; McIntosh v. Alexander, 16 Ala. 87. See MISJOINDER.

MULTIPLICITY OF ACTIONS, or SUITS. Numerous and unnecessary attempts to litigate the same right. For such cases equity provides a proceeding called a bill of peace, q. v., and a court of common law may grant a rule for the consolidation of different actions; L. R. 2 Ch. 8; Story, Eq. Pl. 234; Bisph. Eq. 415.

It is not a ground of equity jurisdiction where the right is disputed between two persons only and such right has not been established at law; Cleland v. Campbell, 78 Ill. App. 624; something more than a mere indebtedness to a great many different persons on disconnected causes of action, is necessary; Rosenbaum v. Kershaw, 40 Ill. App. 659; there must be different persons assailing the same right and a mere repetition of the same trespass on the same person; Taylor v. Pierce, 174 Ill. 9, 50 N. E. 1109. Equity can be invoked only when the suits will be against the same person; People's N. B. v. Marye, 191 U. S. 272, 24 Sup. Ct. 68, 48 L. Ed. 180.

Where the interests of all the parties may be well determined in one action, equity will uphold such action; Coleman v. Phelps, 57 How. Prac. (N. Y.) 393; equity may be invoked by either plaintiff or defendant; Smith v. Bank, 69 N. H. 254, 45 Atl. 1082; or where a large number of complainants have identical claims against a large number of common carriers, alleged to be in combination to inflict on each complainant a common wrong; Tift v. R. Co., 123 Fed. 789; or where 57 persons executed notes to induce a railroad to build through their town and the validity of the notes depended upon the same principles of law; Crawford v. R. Co., 83 Miss. 708, 36 South. 82, 102 Am. St. Rep. 476; or where a large number of persons claim rights to use the waters of a stream; Crawford Co. v. Hathaway, 67 Neb. 325, 93 N. W. 781, 60 L. R. A. 889, 108 Am. St. Rep. 647; or in case of a bill to maintain a right of way against the encroachments of several adjoining owners; Stockwell v. Fitzgerald, 70 Vt. 468, 41 Atl. 504; but not where several makers of a non-negotiable note procured by fraud could be independently sued; Johnson v. Swanke, 128 Wis. 68, 107 N. W. 481, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1048, 8 Ann. Cas. 544; or where sundry persons licensed to cut timber from certain parts of the public domain, cut and carried away timber from other land; U. S. v. Devel. Co., 200 U. S. 451, 26 Sup. Ct. 318, 50 L. Ed. 550.

Equity will take jurisdiction only where it appears from the bill that the rights of all the parties can be as fully determined in a single suit as they could be in several suits; Eureka & K. R. Co. v. R. Co., 109 Fed. 509, 48 C. C. A. 517. A bill to recover real estate will be dismissed where the defendants can be joined in one action at law; McGuire v. City Co., 105 Fed. 677, 44 C. C. A. 670.

An adequate remedy at law does not exist where a multiplicity of actions is required to obtain complete relief; Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Blair, 130 Fed. 971. Equity will not encourage the splitting of causes of action and needless litigation; German American Sem. v. Kiefer, 43 Mich. 105, 4 N. W. 636.

In order to make multiplicity of suits a ground for the interposition of equity, more than one suit must have been commenced, and the court should not interfere unless it is clearly necessary to protect complainant from continued and vexatious litigation; Boise Art. H. & C. W. Co. v. Boise, 213 U. S. 276, 29 Sup. Ct. 426, 53 L. Ed. 796.

MULTITUDE. The meaning of this word is not very certain. By some it is said that to make a multitude there must be ten persons at least, while others contend that the law has not fixed any number. Co. Litt. 257. That two cannot constitute a multitude, see Pike v. Witt, 104 Mass. 595.

MUMMIFICATION. In medical jurisprudence, the complete drying up of the body as the result of burial in a dry, hot soil, or the exposure of the body to a dry, cold atmosphere.

MUNERA. The name given to grants made in the early feudal ages, which were merely tenancies at will or during the pleasure of the grantor. Dalrymple, Feud. 198, 199; Wright, Ten. 19.

MUNICEPS (Lat. from munus, office, and capere, to take). In Roman Law. Eligible to office.

A freeman born in a municipality or town other than Rome, who had come to Rome, and though a Roman citizen, yet was looked down upon as a provincial, and not allowed to hold the higher offices (dignitates).

The inhabitants of a municipality entitled to hold municipal offices. Voc. Jur. Utr.; Calvinus, Lex.

MUNICIPAL. Strictly, this word applies only to what belongs to a city. It is used in this sense in the terms municipal court, municipal ordinance, municipal officer.

It has two meanings: (1) relating to cities, towns, and villages; (2) relating to the state or nation; Powder R. C. Co. v. Board, 3 Wyo. 597, 29 Pac. 361, 31 Pac. 278. See Horton v. Com'rs, 43 Ala. 598.

Among the Romans, cities were called municipia; these cities voluntarily joined the Roman republic in relation to their sovereignty only, retaining their laws, their liberties, and their magistrates, who were thence called municipal magistrates. With us this word has a more extensive meaning: for example, we call municipal law not the law of a city only, but the law of the state. 1 Bla. Com. 44. Municipal is used in contradistinction to international: thus, we say, an offence against the law of nations is an international offence, but one committed against a particular state or separate community is a municipal offence. See MUNICIPIUM.

MUNICIPAL BONDS. Evidences of indebtedness issued by a municipality.

In the ordinary commercial sense, they are negotiable bonds. Austin v. Nalle, 85 Tex. 520, 22 S. W. 668, 960.

This class of securities is issued for sale in the market, with the object of raising money, under the express authority of the legislature. As to the power of municipal corporations to issue and sell bonds and borrow money, see MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS. Notwithstanding they are under seal, they are clothed with all the attributes of negotiable or commercial paper, pass by delivery or indorsement, and are not subject to prior equities (where the power to issue them exists) in the hands of holders for value, who took before maturity and without notice. Payment of interest on such bonds for a number of years will estop the corporation from setting up a mere irregularity in their issue, as against bona fide holders for value; Dudley v. Board, 80 Fed. 672, 26 C. C. A. 82. The coupons usually attached to such bonds are likewise negotiable, and may be detached and held separately from the bond, and may be sued on by the holder in his own name without his being the owner of the bonds to which they were originally attached; 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 486; Thompson v. Lee Co., 3 Wall. (U. S.) 327, 18 L. Ed. 177; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Otoe Co., 1 Dill. 338, Fed. Cas. No. 2667; whether he has given consideration for them or not; Dudley v. Board, 80 Fed. 672, 26 C. C. A. 82.

Coupons when severed from the bonds cease to be incidents of the bonds, and become independent claims, and do not lose their validity, if for any cause the bonds are cancelled or paid before maturity; Clark v. Iowa City, 20 Wall. (U. S.) 583, 22 L. Ed. 427. See as to coupons as distinct and separate instruments, 6 L. R. A. 562, note; COUPONS.

The fact that such bonds are payable out of a special fund, known as a "sinking fund," does not prevent the holder from suing at law to enforce collection; Waite v. Santa Cruz, 75 Fed. 967.

As to the rule in Gelpcke v. Dubuque, 1 Wall. (U. S.) 175, 17 L. Ed. 520, that bonds valid under a state decision when issued will be sustained, although the state court had subsequently overruled its earlier decision, see IMPAIRING THE OBLIGATION OF CONTRACTS.

Purchasers of the bonds of a municipality issued to aid the building of a railway, which recite a compliance with the law authorizing their issue, are not required to ascertain conditions imposed by the proposition voted on, which do not appear in the bonds; Chilton v. Gratton, 82 Fed. 873; they have a right to assume that the conditions have been complied with; Evansville v. Dennett, 73 Fed. 966, 20 C. C. A. 142.

See as to power to subscribe; 12 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 689; 15 id. 621, 655; ratification; 12 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 651; effect of recitals; 12 id. 524; 15 id. 584, 675; 2 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 291, 320. See also an extended discussion of cases in the United States Supreme Court on municipal bonds in aid of railroads; 17 Am. L. Reg. N. s. 209, 609.

Cas. 356; as to an election for issue; 40 id. 543; negotiability; 5 id. 593; over issue; 40 id. 535; limit of indebtedness; id. 584; 26 id. 473; fraudulent circulation; 2 id. 263; estoppel to deny validity; 2 Am. Ry. Corp. Cas. 525; power to issue; 5 L. R. A. 728, note bona fide holder; 23 Am. L. Reg. N. s. 310; 29 id. N. s. 380; mandamus, to enforce subscription; 12 Am. & Eng. Ry. Cas. 609; or to enforce payment; 15 id. 629.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATION. A public corporation, created by government for political purposes, and having subordinate and local powers of legislation: e. g. a county, town, city, etc. 2 Kent 275; Ang. & A. Corp. 9, 29; Bonaparte v. R. Co., Baldw. 222, Fed. Cas. No. 1,617. An incorporation of persons, inhabitants of a particular place, or connected with a particular district, enabling them to conduct its local civil government. Glover, Mun. Corp. 1. Municipal corporations have until later days been created singly, each with its special or separate charter passed by the legislature of the state. These charters define the territorial boundaries; provide for a governing body, usually styled the town or city council, with representatives to be chosen from different wards of the city or town; fix the qualifications of voters; specify the mode of holding elections; provide for the election of a mayor; and contain a minute and detailed enumeration of the powers of the city council; 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 39.

A state is the proper party to impeach the validity of a municipal charter, and its corporate existence cannot be collaterally attacked; Shapleigh v. San Angelo, 167 U. S. 646, 17 Sup. Ct. 957, 42 L. Ed. 310. There must be both population and territory; Galesburg v. Hawkinson, 75 Ill. 156; People v. Bennett, 29 Mich. 451, 18 Am. Rep. 107; and there cannot be two municipal corporations, at the same time, over the same territory; State v. Winter Park, 25 Fla. 371, 5 South. 818.

There are territorial subdivisions, not incorporated, but which are, like municipal corporations, instrumentalities of local government for certain definite purposes. Such are in some states, the counties, or towns, or school districts where they are not incorporated. They are termed quasi-corporations, which title see. They are not included in the phrase "counties or municipal corporations" in a statute; Eaton v. Sup'rs, 44 Wis. 489.

The term municipal corporation has been held to include the District of Columbia; Stoutenburgh v. Hennick, 129 U. S. 141, 9 Sup. Ct. 256, 32 L. Ed. 637; a village; Wahoo v. Reeder, 27 Neb. 770, 43 N. W. 1145.

Where a municipal charter is repealed, and the same, or substantially the same, inhabitants are erected into a new corporation, whether with extended or restricted territorial limits, such new corporation is the successor of the old one and entitled to its property and subject to its liabilities; Shapleigh v. San Angelo, 167 U. S. 646, 17 Sup. Ct. 957, 42 L. Ed. 310.

Public duties are required of such corporations as counties and districts as a part of the machinery of the state government, and in order that they may properly perform these duties they are invested with certain corporate powers, but their functions are wholly of a public nature, and they are at all times subject to the will of the legislature, unless restrained by the constitution; Board v. Board, 30 W. Va. 424, 4 S. E. 640.

In England, the municipal corporation acts, 5 & 6 Will. IV. ch. 76, abolish all special charters, with enumerated exceptions, and enact general provisions for the incorporation, regulation, and government of municipal corporations. These acts have been followed in many of the United States. The usual scheme is to grade corporations into classes, according to their size, as into cities of the first class, second class, etc., and towns or villages, and to bestow on each class such powers as the legislature deems expedient; but the powers and mode of organization of corporations of each class are uniform; 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 41, n.

The scope of legislative authority over municipal corporations is limited only by the terms of the state and federal constitutions, and the necessary implications derived therefrom; People v. Hurlbut, 24 Mich. 44, 9 Am. Rep. 108; Doon Tp. v. Cummins, 142 U. S. 366, 12 Sup. Ct. 222, 35 L. Ed. 1044. Those matters which are of concern to the state at large, although exercised within defined limits, such as the administration of justice, the preservation of the public peace, and the like, are held to be under legislative control; while the enforcement of municipal by-laws proper, the establishment of gas works, of water works, the construction of sewers, and the like, are matters which pertain to the municipality as distinguished from the state at large; Chicago v. Wright, 69 Ill. 326; Britton v. Steber, 62 Mo. 370; People v. Lynch, 51 Cal. 15, 21 Am. Rep. 677; People v. Detroit, 28 Mich. 228, 15 Am. Rep. 202; Andrews v. Pipe Works, 61 Fed. 782, 10 C. C. A. 60.

As ordinarily constituted, municipal corporations have a dual character, the one governmental, legislative, or public; the other, proprietary or private. In their public capacity a responsibility exists in the performance of acts for the public benefit, and in this respect they are merely a part of the machinery of government of the sovereignty creating them, and the authority of the state is supreme. But in their proprietary or private character their powers are supposed to be conferred not from considerations of state, but for the private advantage of the particular corporation as a distinct legal personality.

"The functions of such municipalities are obviously two-fold: (1) political, discretionary, and legislative, being such public franchises as are conferred upon them for the government of their inhabitants and the ordering of their public officers, and to be exercised solely for the public good, rather than their special advantage; (2) those ministerial specified duties which are assumed in consideration of the privileges conferred by their charter." Richmond v. Long's Adm'rs, 17 Gratt. (Va.) 375, 94 Am. Dec. 461. And it was said by Folger, J., in Maxmillian v. New York, 62 N. Y. 160, 20 Am. Rep. 468: "There are two kinds of duties which are imposed upon a municipal corporation. One is of that kind which arises from the grant of a special power in the exercise of which the municipality is as a legal individual; the other is of that kind which arises or is implied from the use of political rights under the general law, in the exercise of which it is sovereign. The former power is private and is used for private purposes; the latter is public and is used for public purposes; the former is not held by the municipality as one of the political divisions of the state, the latter is." "The distinction is quite clear and well settled and the process of separation practicable. To this end regard should be had, not so much to the nature and character of the various powers conferred, as to the object and purpose of the legislature in conferring them. If granted for public purposes exclusively they belong to the corporate body in its public, political, or municipal character; but if the grant was for purposes of private advantage and emolument, though the public may derive a common benefit therefrom, the corporation quoad hoc is to be regarded as a private company." Batley v. New York, 3 Hill (N. Y.) 531, 85 Am. Dec. 669.

The absolute power of the state over municipal corporations has been upheld in Philadelphia v. Fox, 64 Pa. 180, and in U. S. v. R. Co., 17 Wall. (U. S.) 329, 21 L. Ed. 597, where it is said: "A municipal corporation like the city of Baltimore is a representative not only of the state, but is a portion of its governmental power. It is one of its creatures, made for a specific purpose to exercise within a limited sphere the powers of the state. The state may withdraw these local powers of government at pleasure, and may, through its legislature or other appointed channels, govern the local territory as it governs the state at large. It may enlarge or contract its powers or destroy its existence."

This doctrine has been followed in other states; Daniel v. Memphis, 11 Humphr. (Tenn.) 582; Montpelier v. East Montpelier, 29 Vt. 19, 67 Am. Dec. 748; People v. Draper, 25 Barb. (N. Y.) 344; Baltimore v. State, 15 Md. 376; Burch v. Hardwicke, 30 Gratt. (Va.) 24, 32 Am. Rep. 640; Coyne v. Gray, 7 Houst. (Del.) 44, 30 Atl. 728, 40 Am. St. Rep. 109; unless otherwise provided in the constitution; Com. v. Plaisted, 148 Mass. 386, 19 N. E. 224, 2 L. R. A. 142, 12 Am. St. Rep. 566; State v. Williams, 68 Conn. 131, 35 Atl. 24, 421, 48 L. R. A. 465; Com. v. Moir, 199 Pa. 543, 49 Atl. 351, 53 L. R. A. 837, 85 Am. St. Rep. 801; Pumphrey v. Baltimore, 47 Md. 145, 28 Am. Rep. 446.

Cooley, J., said in People v. Hurlbut, 24 Mich. 44, 9 Am. Rep. 103: "The state may mould local institutions according to its views of policy or expediency; but local government is a matter of absolute right, and the state cannot take it away."

Amasa M. Eaton, of Rhode Island, in an able paper (1902, Amer. Bar Assoc. 292) reviews at length the history of municipal corporations in England and comes to the conclusion "that towns and cities (or counties, etc., in some states) are the units of our system of government and have the right to govern themselves in all matters of local concern, free from the control of the legislature, except through general laws, applicable to all such units alike, or through particular laws, passed at the request and with the consent of such units, to enable them to do that which otherwise they would be powerless to accomplish."

According to some cases towns and cities have certain powers that the legislature cannot interfere with, even though the constitution be silent on the subject; People v. Albertson, 55 N. Y. 50; People v. Lynch, 51 Cal. 15, 21 Am. Rep. 677; State v. Denny, 118 Ind. 382, 21 N. E. 252, 4 L. R. A. 79.

It is contended that, although generally the state may have absolute control over towns and cities within its borders, the theory is inapplicable in Rhode Island and the other New England states and in New York. The original towns of Rhode Island existed before there was any colony or state, with well-defined, self-instituted powers, legislative, judicial and executive, that were not surrendered when they agreed to unite. The system of town government brought to this country has nowhere been so faithfully and insistently applied and developed as in Rhode Island. Among the powers that have always been reserved and exercised by the towns and cities of that state is the power to manage their own affairs. See 13 Harv. Law Rev. 441.

In some cases the doctrine has been established that municipal corporations cannot be deprived of the right of local self-government, this view resting either upon the ground of implied constitutional guarantee or implied reservation to that effect; People v. Hurlbut, 24 Mich. 44, 9 Am. Rep. 103; this right to self-government has, however, been confined to matters of purely local concern. The principle upon which the distinction is based is that the municipality acts in a dual capacity as an agent of the state with regard to certain matters and as the agent of its own inhabitants with regard to others; in respect to the former it is subject to the complete control of the state; People v. Detroit, 28 Mich. 228, 15 Am. Rep. 202. The management of the municipal water works and fire department is held a matter of purely municipal concern, and a statute transferring their control to a state board was held an unconstitutional interference with the right of municipal self-government; State v. Barker, 116 Iowa, 96, 89 N. W. 204, 57 L. R. A. 244, 93 Am. St. Rep. 222; State v. Fox, 158 Ind. 126, 63 N. E. 19, 56 L. R. A. 893; contra, David v. Water Committee, 14 Or. 98, 12 Pac. 174.

Such corporations are sometimes authorized to hold real property for the same purposes that such property is held by private corporations or individuals. The distinction between property owned by municipal corporations in their public and governmental capacity, and that owned by them in their private capacity, though difficult to define, has been approved by many of the state courts; Hunter v. Pittsburgh, 207 U. S. 179, 28 Sup. Ct. 40, 52 L. Ed. 151. It has been held that as to the latter class of property the legislature is not omnipotent. If the distinction is recognized, it suggests the question whether property of a municipal corporation owned in its private and proprietary capacity may be taken from it against its will and without compensation. Judge Dillon says correctly that the question has never arisen directly for adjudication in the supreme court of the United States, but it and the distinction upon which it is based has several times been noticed; Tippecanoe Co. v. Lucas, 93 U. S. 108, 23 L. Ed. 822; Meriwether v. Garrett, 102 U. S. 472, 26 L.

As to powers of the non-public nature and as to property acquired thereunder, and contracts made with reference thereto, they are to be considered as quoad hoc private corporations; Dill. Mun. Corp. § 66; Oliver v. Worcester, 102 Mass. 489, 3 Am. Rep. 485. And in like manner, as such corporations, they are liable for the misuser or nonuser of their powers of this nature. A city is liable for wrongfully permitting the accumulation of sewage in a cellar, thereby causing the death of a person who lived in the house over such cellar; Hughes v. Auburn, 21 App. Div. 311, 47 N. Y. Supp. 235. But counties, though by modern legislation frequently constituted municipal corporations, are permitted greater immunity from liability for negligence than cities. On this principle it was held that the act of 1892, declaring a county to be a municipal corporation, did not change the common-law rule as to its non-liability in such cases, and, consequently, it was not liable for personal injuries sustained by an individual by reason of a defective bridge which it was bound to maintain; Markey v. County of Queens, 154 N. Y. 675, 49 N. E. 71, 39 L. R. A. 46. If a municipal corporation becomes indebted, the rights of creditors cannot be impaired by any subsequent legislative enactment; Smith v. Appleton, 19 Wis. 468; but authority to a city to borrow money, and to tax all the property therein to pay the debt thus incurred, does not necessarily deprive the state of the power to modify taxation, if the rights of creditors be not thereby impaired; Goodale v. Fennell, 27 Ohio St. 426, 22 Am. Rep. 321. So, also, as trustee for the general public, the legislature has control over the public property and the subordinate rights of municipal corporations. It can authorize a railroad company to occupy the streets of a city without its consent and without payment; New Orleans, M. & C. R. Co. v. New Orleans, 28 La. Ann. 517. It can direct a municipal corporation to build a bridge over a navigable watercourse within its limits, or appoint agents of its own to build it, and empower them to create a loan for the purpose, payable by the corporation; Philadelphia v. Field, 58 Pa. 320; Carter v. Bridge Prop'rs, 104 Mass. 236; Pumphrey v. Baltimore, 47 Md. 145, 28 Am. Rep. 446. The legislature may compel a city to pay its bonds, by taxation, but not to pay an obligation for which no consideration had been received; New Orleans v. Clark, 95 U. S. 644, 24 L. Ed. 521. In the absence of constitutional restraint, it may extend the boundaries of an existing municipal corporation without the consent, or even against the remonstrance, of the majority or of all of the inhabitants of the existing corporation; Madry v. Cox, 73 Tex. 538, 11 S. W. 541. And in general the legislature may, by subsequent legislation, validate acts of a municipal corporation otherwise invalid; Cooley, Const. Lim. 371; Pompton v. Cooper Union, 101 U. S. 196, 25 L. Ed. 803. The legislature may also interfere with the administration of public charitable trusts by municipal corporations; Philadelphia v. Fox, 64 Pa. 169; but not with those of a private character where a contract has been constituted; New Gloucester School Fund v. Bradbury, 11 Me. 118, 26 Am. Dec. 515; Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 518, 4 L. Ed. 629. A contract made by a city with a water works company, so far as the city's rights are concerned, is subject to the will of the legislature, and a statute may authorize a change therein; New Orleans v. Water Works Co., 142 U. S. 79, 12 Sup. Ct. 142, 35 L. Ed. 943; and property acquired by it for the purpose of furnishing water is not held by it as a private corporation so as to prevent the legislature from modifying the management of it; Coyle v. McIntire, 7 Houst. (Del.) 44, 30 Atl. 728, 40 Am. St. Rep. 109.

See as to special legislation, as applied to corporate powers of municipal corporations, 35 Cent. L. J. 266; as to the power of the legislature over the streets of municipalities, 26 Am. L. Rev. 520; as to municipal power of taxation, 35 Cent. L. J. 227.

"A municipal corporation possesses and can exercise the following powers, and no others: first, those granted in express words; second, those necessarily or fairly implied in or incident to the powers expressly granted; third, those essential to the declared objects and purposes of the corporation, not simply convenient but indispensable." Smith v. Newbern, 70 N. C. 14, 16 Am. Rep. 766; Cook County v. McCrea, 93 Ill. 236; 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 89; Barnett v. Denison, 145 U. S. 135, 12 Sup. Ct. 819, 36 L. Ed. 652; Turner v. Forsyth, 78 Ga. 683, 3 S. E. 649; Crawfordsville v. Braden, 130 Ind. 149, 28 N. E. 849, 14 L. R. A. 268, 30 Am. St. Rep. 214. No powers can be implied except such as are essential to the purposes of the corporations as created; they can bind the people and property only to the extent of their powers; Ottawa v. Carey, 108 U. S. 110, 2 Sup. Ct. 361, 27 L. Ed. 669; Portland v. Schmidt, 13 Or. 17, 6 Pac. 221. Where discretionary powers are granted, the corporation thereby acquires a control and discretion as absolute as that originally possessed by the legislature; Covington v. East St. Louis, 78 Ill. 550; Howe v. Plainfield, 37 N. J. L. 146; a grant of express power carries with it the right to determine the mode of its execution; Poillon v. Brooklyn, 101 N. Y. 132, 4 N. E. 191; French v.

Dunn Co., 58 Wis. 408, 17 N. W. 1; and its discretion in that respect should not be interfered with by courts except where it is clearly abused; Torrent v. Muskegon, 47 Mich. 115, 10 N. W. 132, 41 Am. Rep. 715. Acts in excess of the express or implied powers are void; Mather v. Ottawa, 114 Ill. 659, 3 N. E. 216. See as to municipal powers, express and implied, Lucia v. Montpelier, 60 Vt. 537, 15 Atl. 321, 1 L. R. A. 169; Schneider v. Detroit, 72 Mich. 240, 40 N. W. 329, 2 L. R. A. 54.

A strict, rather than a liberal, construction of the powers of a municipal corporation is adopted; Logan v. Pyne, 43 Ia. 524, 22 Am. Rep. 261; and only such can be implied as are essential to the corporate objects and purposes; Ottawa v. Carey, 108 U. S. 110, 2 Sup. Ct. 361, 27 L. Ed. 669; Portland v. Schmidt, 13 Or. 17, 6 Pac. 221. Grants to municipal corporations, like grants to private corporations, are subject to the law of strict construction; Detroit Citizens' St. R. Co. v. R. Co., 171 U. S. 48, 18 Sup. Ct. 732, 43 L. Ed. 67. The grant of an exclusive privilege must be expressly made, or, if inferred from other powers, must be indispensable, and not merely convenient; Water, L. & G. Co. v. Hutchinson, 207 U. S. 385, 28 Sup. Ct. 135, 52 L. Ed. 257.

But, it is said to be also true that a municipal corporation may do many acts not expressly authorized by its charter, and it has been said that "it is a mistake to assume that municipal corporations should not keep abreast with the progress and improvements of the age;" Linn v. Borough, 160 Pa. 511, 28 Atl. 842, 25 L. R. A. 217. This fairly expresses the elasticity which characterizes the decisions with respect to their implied powers. The functions of such corporations are so well understood that there is usually little difficulty in deciding whether a particular power is essential to its purpose or necessarily implied.

These powers have been recognized: To grade and pave streets; Williamsport v. Com., 84 Pa. 487, 24 Am. Rep. 208; to establish and maintain a sewerage system; Cincinnati v. Penny, 21 Ohio St. 499, 8 Am. Rep. 73; provide for a water supply and an electric light plant; Ellinwood v. Reedsburg, 91 Wis. 131, 64 N. W. 885; erect public buildings; French v. Quincy, 3 Allen (Mass.) 9; prevent damage by fire; Robinson v. St. Louis, 28 Mo. 488; and to that end appropriate money to fire companies; Van Sicklen v. Burlington, 27 Vt. 70; to make pleasure drives around public squares; Com. v. Beaver Borough, 171 Pa. 542, 33 Atl. 112; regulate poles and electric wires; Allentown v. Tel. Co., 148 Pa. 117, 23 Atl. 1070, 33 Am. St. Rep. 820; even to the extent of requiring them to be placed underground; 6 Am. Elec. Cas. 64 (it is settled that this power may be exercised by the legislature in the exercise of the sovereign power of the state; New York v. Squire, 145 U. S. 175, 12 Sup. Ct. 880, 36 L. Ed. 666; People v. Squire, 107 N. Y. 593, 14 N. E. 820, 1 Am. St. Rep. 893; so it may make police regulations; Cranston v. Augusta, 61 Ga. 572; offer a reward for the detection of criminals; Crawshaw v. Roxbury, 7 Gray (Mass.) 374; Shuey v. U. S., 92 U. S. 73, 23 L. Ed. 697; contra, Gale v. South Berwick, 51 Me. 174; appropriate public money for a police pension fund; Com. v. Walton, 182 Pa. 373, 38 Atl. 790, 61 Am. St. Rep. 712; or, where it will promote the interests of the inhabitants generally, for a survey for a ship canal; Com. v. Pittsburg, 183 Pa. 202, 38 Atl. 628, 63 Am. St. Rep. 752; issue bonds in aid of a railway; see Bonds; and it was held that the city of Philadelphia had power to send the Liberty bell, owned by it absolutely, to the Atlanta Exposition; Morton v. Philadelphia, 4 Pa. Dist. Rep. 523 (where Mr. Hampton L. Carson in his reported argument imparted to the court much historical information on the history of that famous relic).

Power in municipal corporations is denied: To provide for fireworks on the fourth of July; Love v. Raleigh, 116 N. C. 296, 21 S. E. 503, 28 L. R. A. 192; or to prohibit screens in bar rooms; Steffy v. Monroe City, 133 Ind. 466, 35 N. E. 121, 41 Am. Rep. 436; or issue commercial paper; Bordeaux v. Coquard, 47 Ill. App. 254; Concord v. Robinson, 121 U. S. 165, 7 Sup. Ct. 937, 30 L. Ed. 885. The municipal authorities may provide not only for the immediate, but also for the prospective, needs of the city, and may make temporary appropriation, as by lease for private use of such public property as is not presently needed; Attorney General v. Eau Claire, 37 Wis. 400; The Maggie P., 25 Fed. 202; Worden v. New Bedford, 131 Mass. 23, 41 Am. Rep. 185.

A subject of the utmost importance is the power of a municipal corporation with respect to nuisances. Without legislative authority it cannot authorize a common nuisance; State v. Luce, 9 Houst. (Del.) 396, 32 Atl. 1076; nor for instance, prohibit the fencing by a railroad of its right of way; Grossman v. Oakland, 30 Or. 478, 41 Pac. 5, 36 L. R. A. 593, 60 Am. St. Rep. 832; but in the exercise of a granted power to suppress nuisances it may invoke the aid of a court of equity; Huron v. Bank, 8 S. D. 449, 66 N. W. 815, 59 Am. St. Rep. 769. In the Oregon case just cited, the subject was examined and the conclusion reached that even authority by charter to declare what shall constitute a nuisance does not authorize a city by ordinance to declare a particular use of property a nuisance, unless such use is such by common law or statute. See 36 L. R. A. 593, and 39 L. R. A. 520, 609, 649, for full annotations covering the entire ground of municipal power in regard to nuisances. See NUISANCE.

The power to borrow money and issue bonds therefor is not included among the implied powers of a municipal corporation, but when a debt has been lawfully incurred, it is not prohibited from issuing bonds for its payment; Williamsport v. Com., 84 Pa. 487, 24 Am. Rep. 208; but see Nashville v. Ray, 19 Wall. (U. S.) 468, 22 L. Ed. 164; Gause v. Clarksville, 5 Dill. 165, Fed. Cas. No. 5,276.

They possess the incidental or implied power to borrow money and issue bonds therefor in order to carry out their express powers, or any affecting their legitimate objects; Mills v. Gleason, 11 Wis. 470, 78 Am. Dec. 721.

The power to borrow money or to create a debt should not be implied against the spirit and policy clearly manifested by contemporaneous legislation as well as by the organic law in force when the legislation giving such power was enacted; Waxahachie v. Brown, 67 Tex. 519, 4 S. W. 207. It can only be implied from a special duty imposed, for the discharge of which it is necessary; the power to raise money does not include the power to borrow; Wells v. Salina, 119 N. Y. 289, 23 N. E. 870, 7 L. R. A. 759.

It was generally held that where express power is given to borrow money it includes the power to issue negotiable bonds or other securities to the lender; Galena v. Corwith, 48 Ill. 423, 95 Am. Dec. 557; Evansville, I. & C. S. L. R. Co. v. Evansville, 15 Ind. 395; Rogers v. Burlington, 3 Wall. (U. S.) 654, 18 L. Ed. 79. But, in cases very much discussed, it has been held by the United States supreme court that the power conferred upon a municipal corporation to borrow money or to incur indebtedness merely authorized it to issue the usual evidences of indebtedness but not "to issue for sale, in open market, a bond, as a commercial security, with immunity, in the hands of a bona fide holder for value, from equitable defences;" Merrill v. Monticello, 138 U. S. 673, 11 Sup. Ct. 441, 34 L. Ed. 1069. This case, it is claimed, was plainly at variance with Rogers v. Burlington, 3 Wall. (U. S.) 654, 18 L. Ed. 79, and Mitchell v. Burlington, 4 Wall. (U. S.) 270, 18 L. Ed. 350, though it did not in terms overrule them. But that they were considered overruled by the later cases was expressly stated in Brenham v. Bank, 144 U. S. 173, 12 Sup. Ct. 559, 36 L. Ed. 390, which was re-argued, before eight judges, by reason of the death of Bradley, J., pending its decision, and from the final decision in which Harlan, Brewer, and Brown, JJ., dissented. The decision was squarely to the effect that the power to borrow money did not authorize the issue of negotiable bonds, and that "even a bona fide holder of them cannot have a right to recover upon them or their coupons." See a review of these cases, 5 Harv. L. Rev. 157; 6 id. 53; BONDS; MUNICIPAL BONDS.

Where a statute confers power to borrow money and fixes the limit of the amount which can be borrowed, a municipality cannot exceed that amount under power conferred by a general provision to borrow money for any purpose within its discretion; Read v. Plattsmouth, 107 U. S. 568, 2 Sup. Ct. 208, 27 L. Ed. 414.

By constitutional provision in several states, the legislature is required to restrict municipal corporations in their power to borrow money, contract debts, or pledge their credit. These provisions vary, but are most commonly in the nature of a restriction of possible indebtedness to a certain percentage of the assessed value of property; see Sener v. Ephrata Borough, 176 Pa. 80, 34 Atl. 954, and for a note collecting authorities on the municipal power to borrow money, see Wells v. Salina, 119 N. Y. 280, 23 N. E. 870, 7 L. R. A. 759.

A creditor who had loaned to a municipal corporation in excess of the amount of the indebtedness authorized by the constitution money which had been used in part for the construction of public works, was not entitled to a decree in equity for the return of his money, because the municipality had parted with the specific money and it could not be identified, and further because a constitutional provision forbidding the municipality to borrow money operated equally to prevent moneys loaned to it in violation of this provision and used in the construction of a public work from becoming a lien upon the works constructed with it; Litchfield v. Ballou, 114 U. S. 190, 5 Sup. Ct. 820, 29 L. Ed. 132.

A municipal corporation can incur no indebtedness for an object not within the powers expressed or implied granted by its charter and a purchaser of its bonds is chargeable with notice of its charter powers and limitations when the purpose for which the bonds were issued is fully disclosed in their recitals; White River S. B. v. Superior, 148 Fed. 1, 78 C. C. A. 169. Constitutional limitations on state indebtedness apply to the state alone and not to her political or municipal subdivisions; Prettyman v. Tazewell Co., Sup'rs, 19 Ill. 406, 71 Am. Dec. 230; Cass v. Dillon, 2 Ohio St. 607. As to both constitutional and statutory limitations, see Beard v. Hopkinsville, 95 Ky. 239, 24 S. W. 872, 23 L. R. A. 402, 44 Am. St. Rep. 222.

There can be no union of public and private funds or credit, nor of that which is produced by such funds or credit; and a statute authorizing the union of public and private capital or credit in any enterprise whatever is unconstitutional; Taylor v. Ross Co., 23 Ohio St. 78; Wyscaver v. Atkinson, 37 Ohio St. 97; but a joinder of a city with a county in purchasing a building for a city hall has been upheld; De Witt v. San Fran- cisco, 2 Cal. 289, where it was held that they could take as tenants in common.

Such corporations have not the power of taxation, unless such is conferred by the legislature, and when it is so conferred the statute must be strictly construed; Green v. Ward, 82 Va. 324; Hare v. Kennerly, 83 Ala. 608, 3 South. 683; Winston v. Taylor, 99 N. C. 210, 6 S. E. 114. A grant of the power of taxation by the legislature to a municipal corporation is subject to revocation, modification, and control by the legislature of the state; Williamson v. New Jersey, 130 U. S. 189, 9 Sup. Ct. 453, 32 L. Ed. 915.

While the power to make laws cannot be delegated, the creation of municipalities exercising local self-government cannot be held to trench upon that rule; Stoutenburgh v. Hennick, 129 U. S. 141, 9 Sup. Ct. 256, 32 L. Ed. 637. See LEGISLATIVE POWER. So from necessity, these corporations exercise a large measure of police power. A city council may by ordinance authorize police officers to arrest without warrant persons engaged in a breach of the peace, and an officer who, from the outside of a house, hears a disturbance or disorderly conduct within it, may, acting in good faith under such authority, enter the house and arrest the person guilty thereof as being the inmate of a disorderly house; Hawkins v. Lutton, 95 Wis. 492, 70 N. W. 483, 60 Am. St. Rep. 131.

The delegation of power to municipal councils to determine between alternative methods for payment of assessments for municipal improvements is authorized by a constitutional provision directing the legislature to provide for municipal corporations; Hellman v. Shouters, 114 Cal. 136, 44 Pac. 915, 45 Pac. 1057.

Delegations of power to municipal corporations have been held valid to provide for the increase of justices in proportion to population, and authorizing the appointment of the additional justices by county commissioners; Board v. Smith, 22 Colo. 534, 45 Pac. 357; allowing existing municipal corporations to elect to continue under their old charter or adopt the general incorporation law; Lum v. Vicksburg, 72 Miss. 950, 18 South. 476; authorizing a township committee to determine what territory shall be included in a proposed city; Glen Ridge v. Stout, 58 N. J. L. 598, 33 Atl. 858; authorizing cities of a given class to make laws for their local self-government, subject to the general laws of the state; Nelson v. Troy, 11 Wash. 435, 39 Pac. 974.

A municipality may require a street railway company to sprinkle the streets to protect the public health; St. Paul v. Ry. Co., 114 Minn. 250, 130 N. W. 1108, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 235, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 1136; authorize the summary seizure and destruction of milk not conforming to the standard fixed by law; Nelson v. Minneapolis, 112 Minn. 16, 127 N. W. 445, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 260; or prohibit its sale except in bottles; Com. v. Drew, 208 Mass. 493, 94 N. E. 682, 33 L. R. A. (N. S.) 401; or prohibit the sale of food from cold storage unfit for human consumption; North American C. S. Co. v. Chicago, 211 U. S. 306, 29 Sup. Ct. 101, 53 L. Ed. 195, 15 Ann. Cas. 276; establish a standard weight for a loaf of bread; 2 Ont. Rep. 192; prohibit the sale of other sizes; Schmidinger v. Chicago, 226 U. S. 578, 33 Sup. Ct. 182, 57 L. Ed. 364; regulate the rates which a water company may collect from private consumers (which partakes of the nature of a governmental power and of a business power); Omaha W. Co. v. Omaha, 147 Fed. 1, 77 C. C. A. 267, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 736, 8 Ann. Cas. 614.

It has been held that the vesting in some body of men or in the hands of a single individual the power to grant permits in special cases to carry on some particular business is contrary to the spirit of American institutions; Chicago v. Trotter, 136 Ill. 430, 26 N. E. 359; In re Frazee, 63 Mich. 396, 30 N. W. 72, 6 Am. St. Rep. 310; State v. Fiske, 9 R. I. 94; Baltimore v. Radecke, 49 Md. 217, 33 Am. Rep. 239; Sioux Falls v. Kirby, 6 S. D. 62, 60 N. W. 156, 25 L. R. A. 621, citing State v. Tenant, 110 N. C. 609, 14 S. E. 387, 15 L. R. A. 423, 28 Am. St. Rep. 715, where an ordinance was held void because it prescribed no general rule for the exercise of discretion in granting permits, but allowed the granting of a permit to one and the refusal to another under the same conditions, with no reason therefor but the irresponsible and arbitrary will of the majority of the aldermen; and to the same effect, Newton v. Belger, 143 Mass. 598, 10 N. E. 464. Other cases have held that such authority cannot be delegated to adjoining lot owners; Ex parte Sing Lee, 96 Cal. 354, 31 Pac. 245, 24 L. R. A. 195, 31 Am. St. Rep. 218 (where their permission was required by municipal ordinance in order to carry on a laundry); St. Louis v. Russell, 116 Mo. 248, 22 S. W. 470, 20 L. R. A. 721 (where the ordinance delegated to the owners of one-half the ground in any block the power to determine whether a livery stable may be erected thereon, on the ground that they might discriminate). In Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356, 6 Sup. Ct. 1064, 30 L. Ed. 220, an ordinance was held invalid which conferred an arbitrary authority upon a board to give or withhold consent to the conduct of a certain business.

But the authority to delegate that discretion to a board appointed for that purpose is sustained by the great weight of authority; Fischer v. St. Louis, 194 U. S. 361, 24 Sup. Ct. 673, 48 L. Ed. 1018; Quincy v. Kennard, 151 Mass. 563, 24 N. E. 860; State v. White, 64 N. H. 48, 5 Atl. 828; St. Paul v. Smith, 27 Minn. 364, 7 N. W. 734, 38 Am. Rep. 296. Ordinances have been sustained prohibiting awnings without the consent of the mayor and aldermen; Pedrick v. Bailey, 12 Gray (Mass.) 161; forbidding orations, harangues, etc., in a park without consent; Com. v. Abrahams, 156 Mass. 57, 30 N. E. 79; or upon the Common or other grounds; Com. v. Davis, 140 Mass. 485, 4 N. E. 577; beating a drum, etc., or making any noise with any instrument for any purpose whatever, without written permission, on any street or sidewalk; Roderick v. Whitson, 51 Hun 620, 4 N. Y. Supp. 112; giving the right to manufacturers and others to ring bells and blow whistles in such manner and at such hours as the board of aldermen or selectmen may in writing designate; Sawyer v. Davis, 136 Mass. 239, 49 Am. Rep. 27; prohibiting the erecting or repairing of a wooden building without permission; Hine v. New Haven, 40 Conn. 478; authorizing harbor masters to station vessels and to assign to each its place; Vanderbilt v. Adams, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 349; forbidding the occupancy of a place on the street for a market stand without permission; In re Nightingale, 11 Pick. (Mass.) 168; forbidding the keeping of swine without a permit; Quincy v. Kennard, 151 Mass. 563, 24 N. E. 860; forbidding the erection of any kind of a building without a permit; Easton v. Covey, 74 Md. 262, 22 Atl. 266; forbidding any person from remaining within the limits of the market more than twenty minutes unless permitted; Com. v. Brooks, 109 Mass. 355; Wilson v. Eureka City, 173 U. S. 32, 19 Sup. Ct. 317, 43 L. Ed. 603; giving the mayor power to determine whether a person applying for a license to sell cigarettes has a good character and reputation and is a suitable person to be entrusted with their sale; Gundling v. Chicago, 177 U. S. 183, 20 Sup. Ct. 633, 44 L. Ed. 725, affirming 176 Ill. 340, 52 N. E. 44, 48 L. R. A. 230; forbidding the use of bicycles on a certain road without permission; State v. Yopp, 97 N. C. 477, 2 S. E. 458, 2 Am. St. Rep. 305; making the privilege of moving buildings on a street dependent upon permission; Eureka City v. Wilson, 15 Utah, 53, 48 Pac. 41; forbidding dairies within city limits without permission; Fischer v. St. Louis, 194 U. S. 361, 24 Sup. Ct. 673, 48 L. Ed. 1018; prescribing water meters in its own water works; Cooper v. Goodland, 80 Kan. 121, 102 Pac. 244, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 410.

It is held not to be within the constitutional powers of a municipality to prohibit the use of a cemetery which has never been and will never become a nuisance and is not dangerous to life or detrimental to the public health; Hume v. Cemetery, 142 Fed. 552; see Carpenter v. Yeadon, 158 Fed. 766, 86 C. C. A. 122.

The delegation, by the state to a city, of authority to act for it in granting franchises to build and operate street railways, does not include the power to institute and maintain actions for their forfeiture for misuse or abuse, and such forfeiture must be decreed in an action in the name of the state; Milwaukee E. R. & L. Co. v. Milwaukee, 95 Wis. 39, 69 N. W. 794, 36 L. R. A. 45, 60 Am. St. Rep. 81.

The delegated power of legislation involved in the authority of municipal corporations to enact ordinances springs naturally from the nature and functions of these corporations as an instrumentality of local government. Such ordinances, by the legislative body of the municipality, are the usual means of expressing the corporate will and enacting municipal laws and regulations. Such regulations may be by resolution as well as by ordinance where the charter is silent on the subject; Board of Education v. De Kay, 148 U. S. 591, 13 Sup. Ct. 706, 37 L. Ed. 573; Green Bay v. Brauns, 50 Wis. 204, 6 N. W. 503; Crawfordsville v. Braden, 130 Ind. 149, 28 N. E. 849, 14 L. R. A. 268, 30 Am. St. Rep. 214; State v. Board, 54 N. J. L. 325, 23 Atl. 949; if, however, the charter requires action by ordinance, a resolution is ineffective; Avis v. Vineland, 55 N. J. L. 285, 26 Atl. 149; Newman v. Emporia, 32 Kan. 456, 4 Pac. 815; and where an ordinance is required in a particular form it cannot be repealed by resolution; San Antonio v. Micklejohn, 89 Tex. 79, 33 S. W. 735; so even if an ordinance has been passed, where a resolution would have been sufficient, the latter is not sufficient to repeal it; Ryce v. Osage, 88 Ia. 558, 55 N. W. 532. Where the charter authorized action by ordinance, a resolution is sufficient if adopted and approved by the mayor with such formalities as an ordinance would require; Springfield v. Knott, 49 Mo. App. 612; but where an ordinance requires the approval of the mayor, a resolution not presented to him is unavailing; Eichenlaub v. St. Joseph, 113 Mo. 395, 21 S. W. 8, 18 L. R. A. 590. See ORDINANCE.

The principles upon which rest the right to enact penal ordinances are thus stated: (1) Unless forbidden by the constitution, the legislature can clothe municipal government with power to prohibit and punish any act made penal by the state laws, when done within the municipal limits. (2) Such an ordinance is not invalid, merely because it prescribes the same penalties as the state law for the commission or omission of the same act. (3) It is no valid objection to such an ordinance, that the offender may be tried and punished for the same act under both the ordinance and the state law. (4) A conviction or acquittal by the municipal courts, under such an ordinance, is no bar to a prosecution under the state law. (5) Such an ordinance is not invalid, merely because the trial thereunder is without a jury. (6) Nor is it invalid, because it excepts from its operation certain business pursuits that are not excepted from the operation of the state law on the same subject; Theisen v. McDavid, 34 Fla. 440, 16

It has been held that the state has a constitutional right to delegate to a municipality power to regulate by ordinance subjects which are already governed by the state law; Dill. Mun. Corp. § 633. The power of the legislature to confer special authority to pass local laws which shall exclude general laws of the state on particular subjects is questioned in Washington v. Hammond, 70 N. C. 34.

That a municipality may not prohibit by ordinance that which is already made penal by state statute is held in Penniston v. Newman, 117 Ga. 700, 45 S. E. 65; In re Sic, 73 Cal. 142, 14 Pac. 405; Foster v. Brown, 55 Ia. 686, 8 N. W. 654; Washington v. Hammond, 76 N. C. 34; in some cases ordinances on a subject governed by a state statute, though there is no expressed delegation of authority, are sustained; Van Buren v. Wells, 53 Ark. 368, 14 S. W. 38, 22 Am. St. Rep. 214; Theisen v. McDavid, 34 Fla. 440, 16 South. 321, 26 L. R. A. 234; St. Louis v. Schoenbusch, 95 Mo. 618, 8 S. W. 791. It is sometimes held that offenses against the proper police regulations of a municipality, which are also violations of the penal laws, may be prosecuted under either; Ex parte Freeland, 38 Tex. Cr. R. 321, 42 S. W. 295; State v. Wister, 62 Mo. 592; McInerney v. Denver, 17 Colo. 302, 29 Pac. 516.

Ordinances must not only not conflict with constitutional or general statute law, but they must be reasonable. It is, however, said that what may be reasonable under ordinary circumstances, as a prohibition against driving on the street at a greater speed than six miles an hour, would be unreasonable and void as applied to the members of a salvage corps or fire patrol responding to an alarm; State v. Sheppard, 64 Minn. 287, 67 N. W. 62, 36 L. R. A. 305. An ordinance providing that "no person shall on any street or public place, or on land adjacent thereto, sing or recite any profane or obscene song or ballad, or use any profane or obscene language," was held unreasonable and therefore invalid; [1896] 1 Q. B. 290. It is suggested that the real ground of objection in this case was that the words "or on land adjacent thereto," were too wide, and that the other objection alone ought to be untenable because the use of profane or obscene language necessarily implies annoyance; 35 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 327. But an ordinance which conforms to a definite statutory grant of power cannot be set aside as unreasonable; Raffetto v. Mott, 60 N. J. L. 413, 38 Atl. 857. A statutory power to make ordinances regulating trade does not warrant one making it unlawful to carry on a lawful trade in a lawful manner; [1896] A. C. 88.

Municipal ordinances may be valid in some of their provisions and invalid as to others; Ex parte Byrd, 84 Ala. 17, 4 South. 397, 5 Am. St. Rep. 328; but where the invalid provisions are inseparably connected with the valid ones, the ordinance is void; Landis v. Vineland, 54 N. J. L. 75, 23 Atl. 357; Lucas v. Macomb, 49 Ill. App. 60. When a city council is vested with full power over a subject, and the mode of exercising it is not limited by the charter, it may exercise it in any manner most convenient; Beers v. Dalles City, 16 Or. 334, 18 Pac. 835. A city ordinance in conflict with the general policy and laws of the state is void; State v. Burns, 45 La. Ann. 34, 11 South. 878. See ORDINANCE.

With respect to the liabilities of municipal corporations it may be said generally that as parties to a contract where they act qua private corporations, they are liable on their contract, and contracting parties are liable to them in the same manner as private persons and corporations are. A city can bind parties by such contracts only as it is authorized by its charter to make; Syracuse W. Co. v. Syracuse, 116 N. Y. 167, 22 N. E. 381, 5 L. R. A. 546. Those who contract with them are protected where their contracts are made according to law; Mackey v. Columbus, 71 Mich. 227, 38 N. W. 899; Sullivan v. Leadville, 11 Colo. 483, 18 Pac. 736; and those who deal with them must exercise reasonable diligence to ascertain whether there be legally provided the funds from which the obligation to be created may be met; and the public is not estopped from setting up the illegality of the obligation by the fact that the other party has acted in reliance upon its validity; Atlantic City W. Co. v. Read, 50 N. J. L. 665, 15 Atl. 10.

Where a municipality acts in the dual capacity of furnishing public utilities both for public and private use, it stands upon the same footing as a private corporation and is liable for its negligent or unlawful acts; Wagner v. Rock Island, 146 Ill. 154, 34 N. E. 545, 21 L. R. A. 519; Omaha W. Co. v. Omaha, 156 Fed. 922, 85 C. C. A. 54; id., 147 Fed. 1, 77 C. C. A. 267, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 736, 8 Ann. Cas. 614.

No common law duty rests upon a municipality to light its streets and highways; Randall v. R. Co., 106 Mass. 276, 8 Am. Rep. 327; contra, Prather v. Spokane, 29 Wash. 549, 70 Pac. 55, 59 L. R. A. 346, 92 Am. St. Rep. 923; the mere fact that it has charter authority to light its streets does not render it guilty of negligence for failure to do so; Thuis v. Vincennes, 35 Ind. App. 350, 73 N. E. 1098; nor does mere statutory authority impose upon it the obligation to light the streets; White v. Newberne, 146 N. C. 447, 59 S. E. 992, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1166, 125 Am. St. Rep. 476; nor will the fact that an ordinance of the municipality required a light to be placed where the injury occurred render the city liable for its failure to maintain such light; Lyon v. Cambridge, 136 Mass. 419; but when a city has once undertaken to light its streets and is then guilty of negligence in furnishing the light, or furnishes one insufficient to put the street in a reasonably safe condition for travel at night in the ordinary modes, it will be liable; Chicago v. Baker, 195 Ill. 54, 62 N. E. 892.

A municipality is not bound to furnish water for fire protection, and if it does so, it does not subject itself to greater liability; a majority of the American courts hold that a tax payer has no such right under an agreement between the municipality and a water company as to enable him to sue in contract or tort for a violation of the public duty thereby assumed; German A. Ins. Co. v. Water Supply Co., 226 U. S. 220, 33 Sup. Ct. 32, 57 L. Ed. 195, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1000.

Contracts may be entered into by the officers of a corporation binding upon it, without the use of the corporate seal; University v. Young Men's Soc., 12 Mich. 138. Without express legislative authority, a municipality cannot act as surety or guarantee; Clark v. Des Moines, 19 Ia. 199, 87 Am. Dec. 423. Where the statute provides that no city officer should be interested in a municipal contract, and that any such contract contrary to that provision should be void, a contract with a school director for street work was held void; Capron v. Hitchcock, 98 Cal. 427, 33 Pac. 431; and the same is true if the interest of the officer is indirect merely, as the member of a contracting firm or corporation; Stroud v. Water Co., 56 N. J. L. 422, 28 Atl. 578; such contract may be ratified by subsequent municipal action after the officer has ceased to be such, for it is a new contract; Fort Wayne v. R. Co., 132 Ind. 558, 32 N. E. 215, 18 L. R. A. 367, 32 Am. St. Rep. 277. Even if there be no penal statute prohibiting the execution of such contract, it is void on grounds of public policy, but so long as it is executory it is voidable merely, and if entered into in good faith for a proper purpose and the city has received the benefit, there may be a recovery on a quantum meruit; Concordia v. Hagaman, 1 Kan. App. 35, 41 Pac. 133. For cases on the general subject of the liability of municipal corporations on contracts, see 6 L. R. A. 318, note.

The liability of municipal corporations for the misfeasance, or negligent nonfeasance, of their officers, is affected primarily by the distinction between their public functions as an instrumentality of government, and their private relations as a corporation transacting ordinary business. See supra. Within the sphere of the former they are entitled to exemption from liability, inasmuch as they are a part of the government, and to that extent their officers are public officers, and as such, entitled to the protection of this principle; but within the sphere of the latter, they drop the badges of their governmental offices and stand forth as the delegates of a private corporation in the exercise of private franchises, and are amenable as such to the fundamental doctrine of liability for the acts of a servant; Richmond v. Long, 17 Gratt. (Va.) 375, 94 Am. Dec. 461. Although the difference between the two kinds of powers is plain and marked, yet, as they approximate each other, it is sometimes difficult to ascertain the exact line of distinction. All that can be done with safety is to determine, as each case arises, under which class it falls; Lloyd v. New York, 5 N. Y. 369, 55 Am. Dec. 347.

Where a city or town is exercising the judicial, discretionary, or legislative authority conferred by its charter, or is discharging a duty imposed solely for the benefit of the public, it incurs no liability for the negligence of its officers, though acting under color of office, unless some statute (expressly or by necessary implication) subjects the corporation to pecuniary responsibility for such negligence; Dill. Mun. Corp. § 965; but where such corporations are not in the exercise of their purely governmental functions, but are exercising, as corporations, private franchises, powers, and privileges which belong to them for their ordinary corporate benefit, or dealing with property held by them for their corporate advantage, gain, or emolument, though enuring ultimately to the benefit of the general public, then they become liable for the negligent exercise of such powers precisely as though they were individuals; Hill v. Boston, 122 Mass. 344, 23 Am. Rep. 332; Eastman v. Meredith, 36 N. H. 284, 72 Am. Dec. 302; Providence v. Clapp, 17 How. (U. S.) 161, 15 L. Ed. 72; Dill. Mun. Corp. § 966.

The obligation and duty of a municipal corporation in the construction of public work is only the exercise of reasonable care; it does not insure against damage; Jenney v. Brooklyn, 120 N. Y. 164, 24 N. E. 274. The inquiry must be whether the department or officer whose action or non-action is complained of is part of the machinery for carrying on the municipal government, and whether it was then engaged in discharging a duty resting upon it; Pettengill v. Yonkers, 116 N. Y. 558, 22 N. E. 1095, 15 Am. St. Rep. 442. To constitute negligence in such actions, there must be a duty imperfectly discharged; Carpenter v. Cohoes, 81 N. Y. 21, 37 Am. Rep. 468; 8 C. B. N. S. 568; and if the duty is owed to the public, there is no action by an individual to whom the duty was not specially owed; Griffin v. Sanbornton, 44 N. H. 246; Tomlinson v. Derby, 43 Conn. 562. As illustrating the effect of their two-fold character, municipal corporations have been held liable for injuries resulting from negligence in the management of a public building rented out for profit; Oliver v. Worcester, 102 Mass. 499, 3 Am. Rep. 485; otherwise, if let gratuitously; Larrabee v. Peabody, 128 Mass. 561. So they are liable for torts of their agents amounting to the negligent breach of municipal duty; Pittsburgh v. Grier, 22 Pa. 54, 60 Am. Dec. 65. Upon this theory rests the exception to the general rule of exemption from liability for negligence in performance of a public duty, recognized in many states, as to defective highways; Smoot v. Wetumpka, 24 Ala. 112; see Dundas v. Lansing, 75 Mich. 499, 42 N. W. 1011, 5 L. R. A. 143, 13 Am. St. Rep. 457; Goshen v. England, 119 Ind. 368, 21 N. E. 977, 5 L. R. A. 253; Thompson v. Quincy, 83 Mich. 173, 47 N. W. 114, 10 L. R. A. 734; as is also in many jurisdictions the liability for defective drains and sewers; Chope v. Eureka, 78 Cal. 588, 21 Pac. 364, 4 L. R. A. 325, 12 Am. St. Rep. 113; Chapman v. Rochester, 110 N. Y. 273, 18 N. E. 88, 1 L. R. A. 296, 6 Am. St. Rep. 366; Bates v. Westborough, 151 Mass. 174, 23 N. E. 1070, 7 L. R. A. 156 (contra, that there is no liability for typhoid fever caused by a defective sewer, see Metz v. Asheville, 150 N. C. 748, 64 S. E. 881, 22 L. R. A. [N. S.] 940); but it was held that there was no liability for damage by fire resulting from failure to keep fire plugs, etc., in order; Wright v. Augusta, 78 Ga. 241, 6 Am. St. Rep. 256; Lenzen v. New Braunfels, 13 Tex. Civ. App. 335, 35 S. W. 341; or from not preventing the erection of a wooden building within the fire limits; Hines v. Charlotte, 72 Mich. 278, 40 N. W. 333, 1 L. R. A. 844.

There is no liability for omission to exercise discretionary powers; Wilcox v. Chicago, 107 Ill. 334, 47 Am. Rep. 434; Welsh v. Rutland, 56 Vt. 228, 48 Am. Rep. 762; there must be a corporate duty imposed; Smith v. Rochester, 76 N. Y. 506; Cummins v. Seymour, 79 Ind. 491, 41 Am. Rep. 618; L. R. 2 Q. B. 534; as, for example, a city is not liable for failure of its police to prevent crime which is a public duty, as distinguished from a strictly corporate duty; Wilmington v. Vandegrift, 1 Marvel (Del.) 5, 29 Atl. 1047, 25 L. R. A. 538, 65 Am. St. Rep. 256. But if the corporation receives a benefit, it may be liable; Hand v. Brookline, 126 Mass. 324.

The municipality has been held not liable for injuries resulting from negligence of a physician in charge of a pest-house; Brown v. Vinalhaven, 65 Me. 402, 20 Am. Rep. 709; see Hines v. Charlotte, 72 Mich. 278, 40 N. W. 333, 1 L. R. A. 844; or for tortious acts of agents in their nature unlawful; Brown v. Cape Girardeau, 90 Mo. 377, 2 S. W. 302, 59 Am. Rep. 28; Seele v. Deering, 79 Me. 343, 10 Atl. 45, 1 Am. St. Rep. 314; as a constable making an unlawful sale; Everson v. Syracuse, 100 N. Y. 577, 3 N. E. 784; for negligence of an officer in whose selection there was no negligence; Dargan v. Mobile, 31 Ala. 469, 70 Am. Dec. 505; or of officers selected under a statute independently of municipal control; Symonds v. Board, 71 Ill. 357; Richmond v. Long, 17 Gratt. (Va.) 382, 94 Am. Dec. 461; see Hines v. Charlotte, 72 Mich. 278, 40 N. W. 333, 1 L. R. A. 844; for negligence of police; Boyd v. Insurance Patrol, 113 Pa. 269, 6 Atl. 536; unless there is statutory liability, express or implied; Carrington v. St. Louis, 89 Mo. 208, 1 S. W. 240, 58 Am. Rep. 108; or of firemen; Grube v. St. Paul, 34 Minn. 402, 26 N. W. 228; or of a civil engineer in establishing a grade for the benefit of an individual for whom he was bound to do it on payment of a fee; Waller v. Dubuque, 69 Ia. 541, 29 N. W. 456; for damages resulting from the firing of a cannon under a license from the mayor authorized by ordinance; Lincoln v. Boston, 148 Mass. 578, 20 N. E. 329, 3 L. R. A. 257, 12 Am. St. Rep. 601; for the publication of defamatory matter contained in an official report of an investigating committee duly selected; Howland v. Maynard, 159 Mass. 434, 34 N. E. 515, 21 L. R. A. 500, 38 Am. St. Rep. 445; for the wrongful act of its officers in closing an exhibition with intent to injure the owner thereof; Kansas City v. Lemen, 57 Fed. 905, 6 C. C. A. 627; for failure of its officers to provide by special tax a fund to pay street grade warrants; McEwan v. Spokane, 16 Wash. 212, 47 Pac. 433. See 3 L. R. A. 257, note; MANDAMUS; QUASI CORPORATIONS.

Municipal corporations may be dissolved in England; (1) by act of parliament; Co. Litt. 176, n.; (2) by the loss of an integral part; University v. Williams, 9 Gill & J. (Md.) 365, 31 Am. Dec. 72; (3) by a surrender of their franchises; 6 Term 277; (4) by forfeiture of their charter; 6 Beav. 220.

In the United States these modes of dissolution are not applicable, and there can be no dissolution, except by an act of the legislature which created the corporation. See Dodge v. People, 113 Ill. 491, 1 N. E. 826; Meriwether v. Garrett, 102 U. S. 472, 26 L. Ed. 197; Mobile v. Watson, 116 U. S. 289, 6 Sup. Ct. 398, 29 L. Ed. 620.

The change of name does not dissolve a municipal corporation; Girard v. Philadelphia, 7 Wall. (U. S.) 1, 19 L. Ed. 53; Broughton v. Pensacola, 93 U. S. 266, 23 L. Ed. 896; but the power of so changing exists only in the legislature.

Nor does the failure of the inhabitants of a municipality to elect officers operate as a dissolution of it; State v. Dunson, 71 Tex. 65, 9 S. W. 103; nor is a municipal charter forfeited by mere non-user for any period of time; Butler v. Walker, 98 Ala. 358, 13 South. 261, 39 Am. St. Rep. 61.

Upon the division of a municipal corporation into two separate towns, each is entitled to hold in severalty the public property within its limits; North Hempstead v. Hempstead, 2 Wend. 109. See Winona v. School Dist., 40 Minn. 13, 41 N. W. 539, 3 L. R. A. 46, 12 Am. St. Rep. 687.

A statute permitting the annexation of property belonging to women to municipalities without giving them an opportunity to make defenses to the proceedings does not deprive them of the equal protection of the laws; Carrithers v. Shelbyville, 126 Ky. 769, 104 S. W. 744, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 421. In Taggart v. Claypool, 145 Ind. 590, 44 N. E. 18, 32 L. R. A. 586, it was held that a provision in an annexation statute granting the right of appeal to resident freeholders only, to the exclusion of owners of property within the territory who were not resident therein, was not in conflict either with the provision of the state constitution or with the XIVth Amendment. The right of a non-resident owner of property within the territory affected was denied; State v. Dimond, 44 Neb. 154, 62 N. W. 498.

While it is generally held that a municipal corporation may delegate to the abutter a duty of clearing ice and snow from the sidewalk, it cannot discharge itself from liability for any injury resulting from a failure to perform a delegated duty; 8 Yale Law J. 344.

One who places an obstruction in a public street by special authority from the proper municipal officers, cannot be held liable in trespass for an injury resulting to one using the street on the ground that such obstruction was a nuisance, but only on the ground of negligence; Sanford v. White, 150 Fed. 724, 80 C. C. A. 390.

In actions generally, the original minutes or records of a corporation are competent evidence of its acts and proceedings; Denning v. Roome, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 651. It is competent for the legislature to delegate to municipal corporations the power to make by-laws and ordinances which have, when authorized, the force, in favor of the municipality and against the persons bound thereby, of laws passed by the legislature of the state; Des Moines G. Co. v. Des Moines, 44 Ia. 508, 24 Am. Rep. 756; but ordinances cannot enlarge or change the charter by enlarging, diminishing, or varying its powers; Thomas v. Richmond, 12 Wall. (U. S.) 349, 20 L. Ed. 453.

See DELEGATION; POLICE POWER; ASSESSMENT.

MUNICIPAL COURTS. At common law, municipal corporations frequently enjoyed the franchise of holding a court, and the franchise being a public right, could not be lost by non-user. A. & E. Encyc. L. See Dillon, Mun. Corp., 3d ed. § 424; 4 D. P. C. 562.

In the United States, in many of the larger cities, there are courts so designated, with statutory jurisdiction in criminal or civil cases, or both, usually limited not only in amount, but by the requirement that suits can only be instituted against residents, and crimes prosecuted which are committed within the city.

MUNICIPAL LAW. In contradistinction to international law, the system of law proper to any single nation or state. It is the rule or law by which a particular district, community, or nation is governed. 1 Bla. Com. 44.

Municipal law contrasts with international law, in that it is a system of law proper to a single nation, state, or community. In any one state the municipal law of another state is foreign law. See FOREIGN LAW. A conflict of laws arises where a case arising in one state involves foreign persons or interests, and the foreign and the domestic laws do not agree as to the proper rule to be applied. See CONFLICT OF LAWS.

The various provinces of municipal law are characterized according to the subjects with which they respectively treat: as, criminal or penal law, civil law, military law, and the like. Constitutional law, commercial law, parliamentary law, and the like, are departments of the general province of civil law, as distinguished from criminal and military law.

The term is now chiefly applied to laws relating to municipalities.

MUNICIPAL ORDINANCE. A statute or regulation enacted or adopted by a municipal corporation for the proper conduct of its affairs or the government of its inhabitants. See MUNICIPAL CORPORATION; ORDINANCE.

MUNICIPAL SECURITIES. The evidences of indebtedness issued by cities, towns, counties, townships, school districts, and other such territorial divisions of the state. There are two general classes: (1) municipal warrants, orders, or certificates; (2) municipal negotiable bonds. A. & E. Encyc. See MUNICIPAL CORPORATION.

MUNICIPALITY. The body of officers taken collectively, belonging to a city, who are appointed to manage its affairs and defend its interests.

MUNICIPIUM. In Roman Law. A free town which retained its original right of self-government, but whose inhabitants also acquired certain rights of Roman citizens. Morey, Rom. L. 51. See MUNICIPAL.

MUNIMENTS. The instruments of writing and written evidences which the owner of lands, possessions, or inheritances has, by which he is enabled to defend the title of his estate. Termes de la Ley; Co. 3d Inst. 170. Cathedrals, collegiate churches, etc., sometimes have a muniment house, where the seal, evidences, charter, etc., of such cathedral are kept. Cowell.

MUNUS. A gift; an office; a benefice, or feud. A gladiatorial show or spectacle. Calvinus, Lex.; Du Cange.

MURAGE. A toll formerly levied in England for repairing or building public walls.

MURAL MONUMENTS. Monuments made in walls.

Owing to the difficulty or impossibility of removing them, secondary evidence may be given of inscriptions on walls, fixed tables, gravestones, and the like. 2 Stark. 274.

MURDER. The wilful killing of any subject whatever, with malice aforethought, whether the person slain shall be an Englishman or a foreigner. Hawk. Pl. C. b. 1, c. 13, s. 3. The killing of any person under the king's peace, with malice prepense or aforethought, either express, or implied by law. 1 Russ. Cr. 421; Com. v. Webster, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 304, 52 Am. Dec. 711; Archb. Cr. Pr. & Pl. 727 note; Whart. Cr. L. 303. When a person of sound mind and discretion unlawfully killeth any reasonable creature in being, and under the king's peace, with malice aforethought, either express or implied. Co. 3d Inst. 47.

The latter definition, which has been adopted by Blackstone, 4 Com. 195; 2 Chitty, Cr. Law, 724, and others, has been severely criticised. What, it has been asked, are sound mind and discretion? What has soundness of memory to do with the act? be it ever so imperfect, how does it effect the guilt? If discretion is necessary, can the crime ever be committed? for is it not the highest indiscretion in a man to take the life of another, and thereby expose his own? If the person killed be an idiot or a newborn infant, is he a reasonable creature? Who is in the king's peace? What is malice aforethought? Can there be malice aforethought? Livingston, Pen. Law, 186. It is, however, apparent that some of the criticisms are merely verbal, and others are answered by the construction given in the various cases to the requirements of the definition. See, especially, Com. v. Webster, 5 Cush. Mass. 304, 52 Am. Dec. 711.

According to Coke's definition, there must be, first, sound mind and memory in the agent. By this is understood there must be a will and legal discretion. Second, an actual killing; but it is not necessary that it should be caused by direct violence; it is sufficient if the acts done apparently endanger life, and eventually prove fatal; Hawk. Pl. Cr. b. 1, c. 31, s. 4; 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 431; 9 C. & P. 356. Third, the party killed must have been a reasonable being, alive in the king's peace. To constitute a birth, so as to make the killing of a child murder, the whole body must be detached from that of the mother; but if it has come fully forth, but is still connected by the umbilical cord, such killing will be murder; 2 Bouvier, Inst. n. 1722, note. Fœticide would not be such a killing; he must have been in rerum natura. Fourth, malice, either express or implied. It is this circumstance which distinguishes murder from every description of homicide; Smith v. State, 83 Ala. 26, 3 South. 551. See MALICE.

Murder may be committed as the result of some illegal act, whether the design to take life is actually present or not; State v. Alexander, 30 S. C. 74, 8 S. E. 440, 14 Am. St. Rep. 879. Wilful omission of duty resulting in death is murder, where the exposure or neglect clearly shows danger to life; Territory v. Manton, 8 Mont. 95, 19 Pac. 387. It being contrary to the law of the land to commit suicide, if two persons meet together and agree so to do, and one of them dies, the other is guilty of murder; 10 Crim. L. Mag. 862. One who fires with deliberate purpose of killing A., and kills B., is as guilty as if he had killed A.; Com. v. Breyessee, 160 Pa. 451, 28 Atl. 824, 40 Am. St. Rep. 729; State v. Gilman, 69 Me. 163, 31 Am. Rep. 257; State v. Dugan, Houst. Cr. Cas. (Del.) 563; but see People v. Gordon, 100 Mich. 518, 59 N. W. 322; obstructing a railroad track, by which a human being is killed, is murder in the first degree; Presley v. State, 59 Ala. 98.

In some of the states, by legislative enactments, murder has been divided into degrees. In Pennsylvania, by the act of April 22, 1794, "all murder which shall be perpetrated by means of poison, or by lying in wait, or by any other kind of wilful, deliberate, and premeditated killing, or which shall be committed in the perpetration or attempt to perpetrate any arson, rape, robbery, or burglary, shall be deemed murder of the first degree; and all other kinds of murder shall be deemed murder of the second degree; and the jury before whom any person indicted for murder shall be tried shall, if they find the person guilty thereof, ascertain in their verdict whether it be murder of the first or second degree; but if such person shall be convicted by confession, the court shall proceed, by examination of witnesses, to determine the degree of the crime, and give sentence accordingly."

Similar enactments have been made in many other states; Fahnestock v. State, 23 Ind. 231; State v. Pike, 49 N. H. 399, 6 Am. Rep. 533; Territory v. Rowand, 8 Mont. 110, 19 Pac. 595; State v. Woods, 97 Mo. 31, 10 S. W. 157; State v. Smith, 73 Ia. 32, 34 N. W. 597; Trumble v. State, 25 Tex. App. 631, 8 S. W. 814; Marshall v. State, 32 Fla. 462, 14 South. 92; McDaniel v. Com., 77 Va. 284.

The power of a state to punish crimes is limited to such as are committed within its territory, and consequently it cannot provide for the punishment, as crimes, of acts committed beyond the state boundary; People v. Merrill, 2 Park. Cr. Rep. (N. Y.) 590; Watson v. State, 36 Miss. 593; Cooley, Const. Lim. [128]; but if the ultimate and injurious result of an unlawful act committed outside of a state is effected within it, the perpetrator may be punished by it as an offender; id.; and it was held constitutional to punish in Michigan a homicide committed by a mortal blow in Canada waters from which death resulted in the state; Tyler v. People, 8 Mich. 320. See Cooley, Const. Lim. [128]. See 35 U. C. 603. A murder committed on a United States battleship lying within territory ceded to the United States by New York, is triable in the United States court for the Southern District of New York; U. S. v. Carter, 84 Fed. 622. See JURISDICTION.

One who kills his ancestor will nevertheless take the estate which would come to him under the statutes of descent and distribution; Carpenter's Estate, 170 Pa. 203, 32 Atl. 637, 29 L. R. A. 145, 50 Am. St. Rep. 765; Owens v. Owens, 100 N. C. 240, 6 S. E. 794; Shellenberger v. Ransom, 41 Neb. 631, 59 N. W. 935, 25 L. R. A. 564 (reversing 31 Neb. 61, 47 N. W. 700, 10 L. R. A. 810, 28 Am. St. Rep. 500); McAllister v. Fair, 72 Kan. 533, 84 Pac. 112, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 726, 115 Am. St. Rep. 233, 7 Ann. Cas. 973 (where it was held that the court could not engraft an exception upon a plain provision of the statute of descent). In Iowa, however, there are statutory prohibitions against a murderer's inheriting from his victim either by descent or devise; In re Kuhn's Estate, 125 Ia. 449, 101 N. W. 151, 2 Ann. Cas. 657 (where however a widow was held entitled to her distributive share as a matter of contract and right even though she killed her husband); Gollnik v. Mengel, 112 Minn. 349, 128 N. W. 292; to the same effect [1892] 1 Q. B. 147 (an insurance case in which the insured [Maybrick] was killed by his wife, the beneficiary). It has been held that a murderer could not take the property of his ancestor by devise; Riggs v. Palmer, 115 N. Y. 506, 22 N. E. 188, 5 L. R. A. 340, 12 Am. St. Rep. 819; 24 Ont. Rep. 132, 24 Can. S. C. 650; or by descent; Box v. Lanier, 112 Tenn. 393, 79 S. W. 1042, 64 L. R. A. 458; it passes to the estate of the deceased; Ellerson v. Westcott, 148 N. Y. 149, 42 N. E. 540.

The proceeds of a policy were held to pass to the distributees of the decedent as though the murderer had never been in existence; Box v. Lanier, 112 Tenn. 393, 79 S. W. 1042, 64 L. R. A. 458. See McAllister v. Fair, 72 Kan. 533, 84 Pac. 112, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 726, 115 Am. St. Rep. 233, 7 Ann. Cas. 973.

In cases where the beneficiary in a policy of life insurance causes the death of the insured, it is usually held that the murderer cannot take the fruits of his crime, such a result being, it is said, equivalent to permitting recovery of insurance money on a building which the beneficiary in the policy had wilfully burned; Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Armstrong, 117 U. S. 591, 6 Sup. Ct. 877, 29 L. Ed. 997; [1892] 1 Q. B. 147; Schreiner v. Order of Forresters, 35 Ill. App. 576; Schmidt v. Life Ass'n, 112 Ia. 41, 83 N. W. 800, 51 L. R. A. 141, 84 Am. St. Rep. 323; 25 Beav. 605.

But the killing of an insured person by an insane beneficiary does not forfeit his rights under the policy; Holdom v. A. O. U. W., 159 Ill. 619, 43 N. E. 772, 31 L. R. A. 67, 50 Am. St. Rep. 183; nor is there a forfeiture if the killing was accidental; Schreiner v. Order of Forresters, 35 Ill. App. 576.

Prof. James Barr Ames (Lectures, 310; Am. L. Reg. & Rev. April, 1897) considers that at common law the murderer would take, but that equity should compel the criminal to surrender the fruits of his crime, and expresses his regret that the cases in Nebraska, North Carolina, Ohio and Pennsylvania did not apply the sound principle of equity that a murderer or other wrongdoer shall not enrich himself by his iniquity at the expense of an innocent person.

In Pleading. In an indictment for murder, it must be charged that the prisoner "did kill and murder" the deceased; and unless the word murder be introduced into the charge, the indictment will be taken to charge manslaughter only; Bish. Cr. Prac. § 548; Fost. Cr. Law 424; Yelv. 205; 1 Chitty, Cr. Law *243, and the authorities and cases there cited.

MURDRUM. During the times of the Danes, and afterwards till the reign of Edward III., murdrum was the killing of a man in a secret manner; and in that it differed from simple homicide.

When a man was thus killed, and he was unknown, by the laws of Canute he was presumed to be a Dane, and the vill was compelled to pay forty marks to the king for his death. After the conquest, a similar law was made in favor of Normans, which was abolished by 3 Edw. III.

See PROVING THE ENGLISHERY.

The fine formerly imposed in England upon a person who had committed homicide per infortunium or se defendendo. Prin. Pen. Law 219, note.

MURORUM OPERATIO. The service of work and labor done by inhabitants and adjoining tenants in building or repairing the walls of a city or castle. Cowell.

MUSICAL COMPOSITION. The copyright act of March 4, 1909, provides for protection to dramatic or dramatico-musical compositions. It grants the exclusive right in the case of a musical composition to perform the copyrighted work publicly for profit, and, for the purpose of printing, publishing and vending the work, to make any arrangement or setting of it or of the melody of it in any system of notation or any form of record in which the thought of the author may be recorded and from which it may be read or reproduced, provided that the act, so far as it secures copyright controlling the parts of instruments serving to reproduce mechanically the musical work, shall include only compositions published and copyrighted after the act goes into effect, and not the works of a foreign composer unless his nation grants to citizens of the United States similar rights, and provided that when the owner has used or permitted or knowingly acquiesced in the use of the work upon the parts of instruments serving to reproduce mechanically the work, any other person may make similar use of it upon paying a royalty of two cents on each such part manufactured, and provided that the owner, if he uses the composition himself for mechanical reproduction or licenses others, shall file notice thereof in the copyright office. The reproduction of such composition upon coin-operated machines shall not be deemed a public performance for profit unless a fee is charged for admission to the place of reproduction.

A musical composition as an idea or intellectual conception is not subject to copyright, but only its material embodiment in the form of writing or print may be copyrighted: White-Smith M. P. Co. v. Apollo Co., 200 U. S. 1, 28 Sup. Ct. 319, 52 L. Ed. 655, 14 Ann. Cas. 628.

Perforated rolls for mechanical piano players do not infringe; id.

Where one sings an entire copyrighted song with musical accompaniment, it is an infringement, though the singer purports merely to mimic another. But not singing of a single verse and chorus without musical accompaniment; Green v. Luby, 177 Fed. 287, nor where, in mimicking an actress and her postures and gestures, the singer used the verse of the song only as a vehicle; Bloom v. Nixon, 125 Fed. 977.

See COPYRIGHT.

MUSTER. To collect together and exhibit soldiers and their arms. To employ recruits, and put their names down in a book to enroll them. In the latter sense the term implies that the persons mustered are not already in the service; Tyler v. Pomeroy, 8 Allen (Mass.) 480. The same term is applied to a list of soldiers in the service of a government. Articles of War, R. S. § 1342.

MUSTER-ROLL. A written document containing the names, ages, quality, place of residence, and, above all, place of birth, of every person of the ship's company. It is of great use in ascertaining the ship's neutrality. Marsh. Ins. p. 407; Jacobsen, Sea Laws 161; Ketland v. Lebering, 2 Wash. C. C. 201, Fed. Cas. No. 7,744.

MUSTIZO. A name given in a South Carolina Act of 1740 to the issue of an Indian and a negro. Miller v. Dawson, Dudl. (S. C.) 174.

MUTATION OF LIBEL. An amendment allowed to a libel, by which there is an alteration of the substance of the libel, as by propounding a new cause of action, or asking one thing instead of another. Law, Eccl. Law 165-167; U. S. v. Four Part Pieces of Woollen Cloth, 1 Paine 435, Fed. Cas. No. 15,150; The Harmony, 1 Gall. 123, Fed. Cas. No. 6,081.

MUTATIS MUTANDIS (Lat.). The necessary changes. This is a phrase of frequent practical occurrence, meaning that matters or things are generally the same, but to be altered when necessary, as to names, offices, and the like.

MUTE. When a prisoner upon his arraignment totally refuses to answer, insists upon mere frivolous pretences, or refuses to put himself upon the country, after pleading not guilty, he is said to stand mute.

In the case of the United States v. Hare et al., Circuit Court, Maryland Dist., May sessions, 1818, the prisoner standing mute was considered as if he had pleaded not guilty. See U. S. v. Borger, 7 Fed. 193, 19 Blatch. 251; In re Smith, 13 Fed. 27; State v. Ward, 48 Ark. 39, 2 S. W. 191, 3 Am. St. Rep. 213. In consequence an act of congress of March 8, 1825, provided that if any person, in case of an offence not capital, shall stand mute, the trial shall proceed as upon a plea of not guilty. A similar provision is to be found in the laws of many states, and, in England, the same practice is adopted by the court.

In former times, in England, the terrible punishment or sentence of penance or peine (probably a corrupted abbreviation of prison) fort et dure was inflicted where a prisoner would not plead, and stood obstinately mute. See PEINE FORTE ET DURE. Prisoners sometimes suffered death in this way to save their property from forfeiture. In treason, petit felony, and misdemeanors, however, wilfully standing mute was equivalent to a conviction, and the same punishment might be imposed. Giles Corey, accused of witchcraft, was perhaps the only person pressed to death in America for refusing to plead. 3 Bancroft's Hist. U. S. 93. See DEAF AND DUMB.

MUTILATION. The depriving a man of the use of any of those limbs which may be useful to him in fight, the loss of which amounts to mayhem. 1 Bla. Com. 130. See MAYHEM.

MUTINY. In Criminal Law. The unlawful resistance of a superior officer, or the raising of commotions and disturbances on board of a ship against the authority of its commander, or in the army in opposition to the authority of the officers; a sedition; a revolt. See Whart. Cr. L. § 1876.

Art. 22 of the United States Articles of War provides: Any officer or soldier, who begins, excites, causes, or joins in any mutiny or sedition, in any troop, battery, company, party, post, detachment, or guard, shall suffer death, or such other punishment as a court-martial shall direct. Art. 23: Any officer or soldier who, being present at any mutiny or sedition, does not use his utmost endeavors to suppress the same, or, having knowledge of any intended mutiny or sedition does not without delay give information thereof to his commanding officer, shall suffer death, or such other punishment as a court-martial may direct.

Sedition is the raising of a commotion or disturbance with a view to create a mutiny or to incite revolt against military authority. Davis, Mil. L. 390. As to mutiny, see U. S. v. Smith, 1 Mas. 147, Fed. Cas. No. 16,337; U. S. v. Kelly, 4 Wash. C. C. 528, Fed. Cas. No. 15,516; U. S. v. Borden, 1 Spr. 376, Fed. Cas. No. 14,625.

Art. 4 of the navy provides the punishment of death, or such other punishment as a court-martial may adjudge, for any person in the naval service "who makes or attempts to make, or unite with any mutiny or mutinous assembly, or, being witness to or present at any mutiny, does not do his utmost to suppress it; or, knowing of any mutinous assembly or any intended mutiny, does not immediately communicate his knowledge to his superior or commanding officer."

Mutiny, revolt, and the endeavor to make a revolt or mutiny, on board merchant-vessels, are made criminal, and a punishment provided for them; R. S. § 4596 (amended 1898); U. S. v. Nye, 2 Curt. C. C. 225, Fed. Cas. No. 15,906; U. S. v. Peterson, 1 Woodb. & M. 306, Fed. Cas. No. 16,037; U. S. v. Cassidy, 2 Sumn. C. C. 582, Fed. Cas. No. 14,745.

MUTINY ACT. In English Law. A statute, annually passed, to punish mutiny and desertion, and for the better payment of the army and their quarters. It was first passed April 12, 1689, and was the only provision for the payment of the army. 1 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 416. In 1879, the army discipline act consolidated the provisions of the mutiny act with the articles of war. This was re-enacted (1881) as the Army Act, which is still in force. It is said that this act has of itself no force, but requires to be brought into operation annually by a short army act, thus maintaining the control of Parliament over the army. Clode, Mil. L. 38.

MUTUAL ACCOUNTS. Such as contain mutual credits between the parties; or an existing credit on one side which constitutes a ground for credit on the other, or where there is an understanding that mutual debts shall be a set-off pro tanto, between the parties. McNeil v. Garland, 27 Ark. 343. Such accounts, of however long standing, are not barring by the statute of limitations, if there be any items within the prescribed limit; 6 Term 189; Ang. Lim. 138. See MERCHANTS' ACCOUNTS; LIMITATIONS.

MUTUAL BENEFIT ASSOCIATIONS. See ASSOCIATION; BENEFICIAL SOCIETIES; INSURANCE.

MUTUAL CONSENT. Mutual consent is of the essence of every contract, and therefore it must always exist, in legal contemplation, at the moment when the contract is made. See Add. Contr. 13. It never, however, is the subject of direct allegation or proof, partly because it is generally incapable of direct proof, and partly because every contract is made by acts performed. Proof of the necessary acts carries with it presumptive proof of mutual consent. Thus, if two separate agreements be drawn up, signed and sealed, each of them purporting to be a contract between A. and B., and the parties, intending to deliver one of the instruments, deliver the other by mistake, there is no contract made; Langd. Contr. 193. Where the plaintiff's acceptance of the defendant's offer inadvertently made a slight change in a date, there was no contract, because there had not been mutual consent; 4 Bing. 653. Mutual consent must extend to the consideration as well as to the promise; Langd. Contr. 82.

MUTUAL CREDITS. Credits given by two persons mutually, i. e. each giving credit to the other. It is a more extensive phrase than mutual debts. Thus, the sum credited by one may be due at once, that by the other payable in futuro; yet the credits are mutual, though the transaction would not come within the meaning of mutual debts; 7 Term 378. And it is not necessary that there should be intent to trust each other: thus, where an acceptance of A. came into the hands of B, who bought goods of A, not knowing the acceptance to be in B's hands, it was held a mutual credit; 3 Ves. 65; 2 Sm. Lead. Cas. 179; Jones v. Robinson, 26 Barb. (N. Y.) 310; Aldrich v. Campbell, 4 Gray (Mass.) 284; King v. King, 9 N. J. Eq. 44.

MUTUAL INSURANCE. That form of insurance in which each person insured becomes a member of the company, and the members reciprocally engage to indemnify each other against losses, any loss being met by an assessment laid upon all the members. See INSURANCE.

MUTUAL PROMISES. Promises simultaneously made by two parties to each other, each promise being the consideration of the other. Ans. Contr. 72; 14 M. & W. 855; Add. Contr. 13. If one of the promises be voidable, it will yet be good consideration, but not if void; Story, Contr. § 81; 2 Steph. Com. 114.

MUTUALITY. Reciprocity; an acting in return. Webster, Dict.; Add. Contr. 622; 9th ed. 13, 14; Spear v. Orendorf, 26 Md. 37. See SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.

MUTUARY. A person who borrows personal chattels to be consumed by him and returned to the lender in kind; the person who receives the benefit arising from the contract of mutuum. Story, Bailm. § 47.

MUTUATUS. A loan of money. See Gilbert, Com. Pleas 5.

MUTUUM. A loan of personal chattels to be consumed by the borrower and to be returned to the lender in kind and quantity; as, a loan of corn, wine, or money which is to be used or consumed, and is to be replaced by other corn, wine, or money. Story, Bailm. § 228. See LOAN FOR USE.

MYSTERY (said to be derived from the French mestier, now written metier, a trade). A trade, art, or occupation. Co. 2d Inst. 668.

Masters frequently bind themselves in the indentures with their apprentices to teach them their art, trade, and mystery. See Hawk. Pl. Cr. c. 23, s. 11.

MYSTIC TESTAMENT. A will placed in a sealed envelope. La. Civ. Code, art. 1567; Broutin v. Vassant, 5 Mart. O. S. (La.) 182; Lewis' Heirs v. His Executors, 5 La. 396; Schoul. Wills, § 9.

NAAM. See NAMUM.

NABOB. Originally the governor of a province under the Mogul government of Hindostan, whence it became a mere title of any man of high rank, upon whom it was conferred without any office being attached. Wils. Gloss; Whart.

NAIF. See NEIF.

NAIL. A measure of length, equal to two inches and a quarter. See MEASURE.

NAIL COUSINS. See SIB-SHIP.

NAKED. This word is used in a metaphorical sense to denote that a thing is not complete, and for want of some quality it is either without power or it possesses a limited power. A naked contract is one made without consideration, and for that reason it is void. See CONSIDERATION. A naked authority is one given without any right in the agent, and wholly for the benefit of the principal. 2 Bouvier, Inst. n. 1302. See NUDUM FACTUM.

NAKED TRUST. A dry or passive trust; one which requires no action on the part of the trustee, beyond turning over money or property to the cestui que trust. See TRUST.

NAKED TRUSTEE. See TRUSTEE.

NAM. Distress; seizure. Anc. Inst. Eng. See NAMUM.

NAMATION. The act of distraining or taking a distress. Cowell. See NAMUM.

NAME. One or more words used to distinguish a particular individual: as Socrates, Benjamin Franklin.

Names are Christian, as Benjamin, or surnames, as Franklin. One Christian name only is recognized in law; 1 Ld. Raym. 562; Bacon, Abr. Misnomer (A); Boyd v. State, 7

Cold. (Tenn.) 69; Franklin v. Talmadge, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 84; though two or more names usually kept separate, as John and Peter, may undoubtedly be compounded, so as to form in contemplation of law but one; 5 Term 195. The cases on various points are conflicting, but some of them will be given, without attempt to harmonize them. An initial is no part of a name. See INITIAL. Nor is the title junior (q. v.); Teague v. State, 144 Ala. 42, 40 South. 312; Hunt v. Searcy, 167 Mo. 158, 67 S. W. 206; nor "Second," nor the numeral II; Cobb v. Lucas, 15 Pick. (Mass.) 7; nor the prefix Mrs.; State v. Richards, 42 N. J. L. 69; Schmidt v. Thomas, 33 Ill. App. 109. But it has been held that where Lewis R. instead of Lewis S. was inserted in a writ of sci. fa. to revive a judgment, the writ was not notice to purchaser for value in a chain of title, in which Lewis S. was the actual name; Massey v. Noon, 1 Pa. Super. Ct. 198.

It was early held in England that if father and son have the same name it refers prima facie to the father; 1 Salk. 7; 1 Stark. 106; Hob. 330 A.; and some early cases held that, if it was intended to indicate the son, Jr. must be added; State v. Vittum, 9 N. H. 522; and where father and son of the same name resided in the same town, it was held that a writ against the son would abate if Jr. were omitted; Zuill v. Bradley, Quincy (Mass.) 6.

The name of a corporation is said to be "the very being of the constitution"; Bac. Abr. Corp. (C); Smith v. Plank-Road Co., 30 Ala. 664; and in general a corporation must contract and sue and be sued in its corporate name; Porter v. Nekervis, 4 Rand. (Va.) 359.

In the name of a corporation, which frequently consists of several descriptive words, the transposition, omission, or alteration of some of them may make no essential difference in the sense; Newport M. Mfg. Co. v. Starbird, 10 N. H. 124, 34 Am. Dec. 145; 1 B. & Ald. 699; Medway C. M. v. Adams, 10 Mass. 360; if there is no possibility of mistaking the identity of the corporation; Mechanics' & T. Bk. v. Prescott, 12 La. 444. See State v. Mfg. Co., 20 Me. 41, 37 Am. Dec. 38; Com. v. Demuth, 12 S. & R. (Pa.) 389.

A corporation, like an individual, may take a name by reputation; Soc. for Propagating the Gospel v. Young, 2 N. H. 310; Medway C. M. v. Adams, 10 Mass. 360; or may acquire it by usage; it is not indispensable that the name should be given by the charter; Smith v. Plank-Road Co., 30 Ala. 664; see Falconer v. Campbell, 2 McLean, 195, Fed. Cas. No. 4,620; and after its name has been changed, it may continue under the old name and thus, by usage, regain the latter and sue thereunder; Alexander v. Berney, 28 N. J. Eq. 90.

Where parties transacted business and made a contract as the "Tow Boat Company," there being no corporation of that name, it was held that suit would lie in the names of the parties; The Nimrod, 141 Fed. 215.

The change of name of a private corporation is not material, but is mere business management, and does not require the unanimous consent of stockholders; Thomas & B. Co. v. Thomas, 165 Fed. 29, 91 C. C. A. 67. The omission of part of the corporate name in signing a mortgage and bond does not render them invalid, where proof is clear that they were in fact duly authorized and intended to be obligations of the corporation; In re Goldville Mfg. Co., 118 Fed. 892. Where "Company" is not part of a corporate name, and it is sued with the addition of "Company," it may be amended; Rosenbluth v. Reis Circuit Co., 36 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 332.

But it is held that a change of corporate name requires statutory authority, whether done directly or by user, though it may acquire a name by user when not given at incorporation; Sykes v. People, 132 Ill. 32, 23 N. E. 391; such change does not in any way affect its identity or rights; and an action against it by its former name cannot be defeated by showing the change, if the membership remains the same; Weldley v. Mfg. Co., 83 Va. 768, 3 S. E. 376. When a corporation is sued, a mistake in the name, in words and syllables, but not in substance, will not be regarded, unless pleaded in abatement; but if the mistake be in substance, the suit cannot be regarded as against the corporation; 1 B. & P. 39. Where the name in a contract in suit differed from the name in the declaration, but the identity was apparent, the variance was held not to constitute a defence; Dodge v. Barnes, 31 Me. 290. There is said to be a distinction between a misnomer which incorrectly names, but correctly describes, a corporation and the statement in the pleading of an entirely different party; the former is curable by amendment, the latter is not; Smith v. Plank-Road Co., 30 Ala. 650. A grant to a corporation by the wrong name is good if the corporation really intended be apparent; 2 Kent 292; 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 179; so of a contract; Berks v. Myers, 6 S. & R. (Pa.) 12, 9 Am. Dec. 402; and of a gift by will; 11 Eng. L. & Eq. 191. If a corporation conveys by the wrong name it cannot defeat its grant, if it has received the consideration; Sykes v. People, 132 Ill. 32, 23 N. E. 391.

As to the protection of a corporation in the use of its corporate name, see Moraw. Priv. Corp. § 355; TRADE-MARK.

See GOOD-WILL; PARTNERSHIP; PARTNERS; MISNOMER.

The real name of a party to be arrested must be inserted in the warrant, if known; 8 East 828; Gurnsey v. Lovell, 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 320; if unknown, some description must be given; 1 Chitty, Cr. Law 39; with the reason for the omission; 1 Mood. & M. 281.

Proof may be given that the maker of an instrument habitually applied a nickname or peculiar designation used therein to a particular person or thing; Boggs v. Taylor, 26 Ohio St. 604. As to mistakes in devises, see LEGACY. As to the use of names having the same sound, see IDEM SONANS. As to the effect of using a name having the same derivation, see 2 Rolle, Abr. 135; Gordon v. Holiday, 1 Wash. C. C. 285, Fed. Cas. No. 5,610. At common law one could change his name; Linton v. Bank, 10 Fed. 894; Com. v. Trainor, 123 Mass. 415; 3 B. & Ald. 544; Smith v. Casualty Co., 197 N. Y. 420, 90 N. E. 947, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1167, 18 Ann. Cas. 701 (where the origin and evolution of names is discussed at length); but not, perhaps, where one has obtained a name by judicial decree under a statute; id. Statutes in many states provide for a change of name. Jekyll, M. R., in 3 P. Wms. 65, declared that any one might take upon himself as many surnames as he chose; but this judgment was reversed in 4 Bro. P. C. 194 (H. of L.), where it was said that "the individual ought to have inherited or obtained an authority for using" a name. Fox-Davies and Carlyon-Britton on Names takes the view that no one can create a name for himself or change his name, but the power to do so is a prerogative of the crown.

The middle name is unimportant and the omission of it or its initial is of no legal effect; Cox v. Durham, 128 Fed. 870, 63 C. C. A. 338; Roosevelt v. Gardinier, 2 Cow. (N. Y.) 463; Bletch v. Johnson, 40 Ill. 116; contra, Parker v. Parker, 146 Mass. 320; if the middle initial is given, it need not be correct even in criminal cases; People v. Lockwood, 6 Cal. 205; Franklin v. Talmadge, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 84; Cox v. Durham, 128 Fed. 870, 63 C. C. A. 338; contra, King v. Clark, 7 Mo. 269; Cleveland, C., C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Pierce, 34 Ind. App. 188, 72 N. E. 604; the initial letter of the first name is sufficient in a warrant; Cox v. Durham, 128 Fed. 870, 63 C. C. A. 338.

The occasional use of a single letter as a name developed a strange contradiction. It was held that a vowel, being complete in itself, was sufficient, and a consonant, being part of a complete sound, was not; 6 C. B. 577; 7 C. B. 980. The supposed distinction was put an end to in 15 Jur. 657, by Lord Campbell. In this country the question has been raised and two initials were held to be a valid Christian name; Tweedy v. Jarvis, 27 Conn. 42; this has also been held in South Carolina; City Council v. King, 4 McCord (S. C.) 487; but the contrary was held in that state in one case; Norris v. Graves, 4 Strob. (S. C.) 32.

A mistake in the middle initial does not invalidate a process under which title to land is taken; Johnson v. Day, 2 N. D. 295; J. H. Burtis is taken as if J. Burtis, and is sufficient where the title was in J. F. Burtis; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Hasenwinkle, 232 Ill. 224, 83 N. E. 815, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 129. A mortgage executed by Henry M. Ward as Henry N. Ward was held good where there was only one Henry Ward in the county; Fincher v. Hanegan, 59 Ark. 151, 26 S. W. 821, 24 L. R. A. 543; but where there is a misnomer amounting to a substantial defect, the proceedings will give no jurisdiction; thus O. P. Buchanan in a notice intended for Pettor O. Buchanan was held bad; Buchanan v. Edmisten, 1 Neb. (Unof.) 429, 95 N. W. 620; as also was P. T. B. Hopkins in a notice intended for T. P. B. Hopkins; Fanning v. Krapf, 61 Ia. 417, 14 N. W. 727, 16 N. W. 293; and a publication of a summons to George H. Leslie confers no jurisdiction over George W. Leslie; D'Autremont v. Iron Co., 104 Minn. 165, 116 N. W. 357, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 236, 124 Am. St. Rep. 615, 15 Ann. Cas. 114.

It is held that since the use of initials instead of a given name before a surname has become a common practice, these initials must all be given and correctly given in court proceedings; Carney v. Bigham, 51 Wash. 452, 99 Pac. 21, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 905, where a certificate of tax delinquency reciting the name of the person assessed as J. G. Carney instead of J. E. Carney as it appeared on the assessment rolls was held insufficient to sustain a foreclosure.

Parties cannot in legal proceedings be designated by mere description; the words "and wife" following defendant's name do not make the wife a party; Sossman v. Price, 57 Ala. 204; nor "Mr. and Mrs." followed by the husband's initials and surname; Kauffman v. Sherbondy, 22 Pa. Dist. R. 114.

A mistake in the Christian name of a defendant duly served gives the court jurisdiction, if at the time of service he was duly apprised that he was the person intended to be named therein, where the statutes provide for correcting such mistakes; Stuyvesant v. Weil, 167 N. Y. 421, 60 N. E. 738, 53 L. R. A. 562. Misspelling is immaterial either of the Christian; Harrell v. Neef, 80 Kan. 348, 102 Pac. 838; or the surname; Phillips v. Palmer, 56 Tex. Civ. App. 91, 120 S. W. 911; particularly if they are idem sonans.

The omission of the Christian name by either plaintiff or defendant in legal process prevents the court from acquiring jurisdiction, there being no other description or identification and no appearance or waiver of process; Whitney v. Masemore, 75 Kan. 522, 89 Pac. 914, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 676, 121 Am. St. Rep. 442; Boynton v. Chamberlain, 38 Tex. 604; Thompson v. McCorkle, 136 Ind. 484, 34 N. E. 813, 36 N. E. 211, 43 Am. St. Rep. 334; but where the notice by publication was directed to Etta R. Fisher and ——— Fisher, her husband, it was held a sufficient description to indicate his identity; Cruzen v. Stephens, 123 Mo. 337, 27 S. W. 557, 45 Am. St. Rep. 549.

Nicknames are not sufficient in process or pleading. They are names given in contempt, derision or sportive familiarity; Ohlmann v. Sawmill Co., 222 Mo. 62, 120 S. W. 1155, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 432, 133 Am. St. Rep. 506, where process to recover taxes against land owned by Michael Ohlman, which described him as Mike Ohlman was held insufficient to give jurisdiction, Mike being held not a universally recognized abbreviation of Michael, but a mere diminutive or nickname. For a discussion of the origin of nicknames and their development in many cases into surnames, see Fox-Davies and Carlyon-Britton on Names, 20, 24, 25.

Identity of name raises the presumption of identity of person, where the name is an unusual one and when there is some similarity of business residence or the like, but not where the name is a common one and a number of persons bearing it live in the same place; Laws. Pres. Ev. 307; State v. Smith, 129 Ia. 709, 106 N. W. 187, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 539, 6 Ann. Cas. 1023. This presumption may be overcome by circumstances in the particular case; Garrett v. State, 76 Ala. 18, where the qualifications of the rule are discussed; where the similarity of circumstances is not present the presumption fails; People v. Cline, 44 Mich. 290, 6 N. W. 671. And in many cases the identity of name has been treated as prima facie evidence of identity of person without reference to qualifications; People v. Rolfe, 61 Cal. 540; Bayha v. Mumford, 58 Kan. 445, 49 Pac. 601; State v. McGuire, 87 Mo. 642; State v. Kelsoe, 76 Mo. 505; and in such case the identity of the person is a question for the jury; State v. Loser, 132 Ia. 419, 104 N. W. 337; and while it is not to be assumed as a matter of law; Shuler v. State, 125 Ga. 778, 54 S. E. 689; State v. Lashus, 79 Me. 504, 11 Atl. 180; yet it is not error to charge the jury that identity is presumed in the absence of evidence to the contrary; People v. Riley, 75 Cal. 98, 16 Pac. 544.

A person not having a fraudulent or criminal purpose in so doing may enter into a contract by any name he may choose to assume; Scanlan v. Grimmer, 71 Minn. 351, 74 N. W. 147, 70 Am. St. Rep. 326; Wakefield v. Brown, 38 Minn. 361, 37 N. W. 788, 8 Am. St. Rep. 671; Den v. Peterson, 31 N. C. 184; Thomas v. Wyatt, 31 Mo. 188, 77 Am. Dec. 640. Under this rule, legal proceedings against a married woman under an assumed name have been held good after judgment; Clark v. Clark, 19 Kan. 522; and obligations incurred by or with third parties under her maiden name are mutually binding; Lane v. Duchac, 73 Wis. 646, 41 N. W. 962; Bogart v. Woodruff, 96 Cal. 609, 31 Pac. 618; see Schoul. Dom. Rel. 40; until a decree in divorce giving a married woman leave to resume her maiden name goes into effect, or widowhood is succeeded by a new marriage, she keeps her former husband's surname; 2 P. D. 263.

A grant of land under an assumed name will pass title; and evidence is admissible to prove identity; Wakefield v. Brown, 38 Minn. 361, 37 N. W. 788, 8 Am. St. Rep. 671. The omission or mistake of a Christian name of the person to whom it is made (if he can be identified) will not avoid a patent; Northwestern F. E. Co. v. Fire Extinguisher Co., 1 Ban. & A. 177, Fed. Cas. No. 10,337; or a grant; 2 Co. Litt. 255; or a devise; 5 Co. 68; 2 Atk. 372. Apparently it was earlier held that an omission or mistake in the Christian name of the grantee rendered the grant void; Cro. Eliz. 328; Bac. Max. 107.

When a person uses a name in making a contract under seal, he will not be permitted to say that it is not his name: as, if he sign and seal a bond "A and B" (being his own and his partner's name), and he had no authority from his partner to make such a deed, he cannot deny that his name is A and B; 1 T. Raym. 2; 1 Salk. 214. And if a man describes himself in the body of a deed by the name of James, and signs it John, he cannot, on being sued by the latter name, plead that his name is James; 3 Taunt. 505; Cro. Eliz. 897, n. a. See 3 P. & D. 271; 11 Ad. & E. 594; Preiss v. Le Poidevin, 19 Abb. N. C. (N. Y.) 123. A man may sue by the name by which he has been known from childhood, instead of by that given him by his parents; Donaldson v. Donaldson, 31 Wkly. Law Bul. (Ohio) 102.

The right to the exclusive use of a name in connection with a trade or business is familiar to the law; and any person using that name, after a relative right of this description has been acquired by another, is considered guilty of a fraud, or at least an invasion of another's rights, and renders himself liable to an action, or he may be restrained from the use of the name by injunction. But the mere assumption of a name which is the patronymic of a family by a stranger who has never been called by that name is a grievance to the family for which the law affords no redress; L. R. 2 P. C. 441. See L. R. 2 Ch. 307. A name may be a trade-mark; L. R. 10 Ch. D. 436; 1 Eq. 518; 13 Beav. 209; Wolfe v. Barnett, 24 La. Ann. 97, 13 Am. Rep. 111. A person cannot, however, have an exclusive right of trade-mark in a name as against all others bearing the same name, and honestly using the name in competition, unless the defendant uses the same brand or stamp in connection with the name; Gilman v. Hunnewell, 122 Mass. 139; McLean v. Fleming, 96 U. S. 245, 24 L. Ed. 828; Howe v. Mach. Co., 50 Barb. (N. Y.) 236. But such exclusive right to a name may be acquired as against a corporation called by the same name.

"Dear Sir," at the commencement of a letter sent to one of the contracting parties which contains the terms of a contract, will be read as the name of that party so as to be a good note of the contract, if the letter is enclosed in an envelope addressed to that party; [1897] 1 Q. B. 688.

See an article on personal names by G. S. Arnold, 15 Y. L. J. 227; also an extensive note on names in 14 L. R. A. 690.

See ELECTION; IDENTITATE NOMINIS; TRADE-MARK; SIGNATURE; MISNOMER.

NAMED. Mentioned nominatim, if not by all their names, by some at least, either Christian or surnames. 22 L. J. Ch. 393.

It is sometimes used, but only in a secondary sense, as meaning mentioned or referred to. 34 S. J. 129.

NAMELY. A difference, in grammatical sense, in strictness exists between the words namely and including. Namely imports interpretation, i. e. indicates what is included in the previous term; but including imports addition, i. e. indicates something not included. 2 Jarm. Wills 222.

NAMIUUM. An old word which signifies the taking or distraining another person's movable goods. 2 Inst. 140; 3 Bla. Com. 149. A distress. Dalrymple, Feud. Pr. 113.

NAMIUUM VETITUM. The unjust taking of another person's cattle and driving them to an unlawful place, under pretence of damage having been done by them, in which case the owner may demand satisfaction for the injury. Cowell.

NANTISSEMENT. In French Law. The contract of pledge; if of a movable, it is called gage, and if of an immovable, anti-chrèse; Brown, Dict.

NARR. (an abbreviation of the word narratio). A declaration in a cause.

NARRATIO. A common-law name for the plaintiff's declaration or statement of claim as being a narrative of facts on which he relies.

NARRATOR. A pleader who drew narrs, or pleadings (in the time of William I).

See CONTEUR. Serviens narrator, a serjeant-at-law. Fleta, l. 2, c. 37. Obsolete.

NARROW SEAS. In English Law. Those seas which adjoin the coast of England. Bacon, Abr. Prerogative (B 3).

NASCITURUS. Not yet born. This term is applied in marriage settlements to the unborn children of a particular marriage. natus (born) being used to designate those already born.

NATALE. The state or condition of a man acquired by birth.

NATIO. A native place. Cowell.

NATION. An independent body politic. A society of men united together for the purpose of promoting their mutual safety and advantage by the joint efforts of their combined strength.

But every combination of men who govern themselves independently of all others will not be considered a nation; a body of pirates, for example, who govern themselves, is not a nation. To constitute a nation, another ingredient is required. The body thus formed must respect other nations in general, and each of its members in particular. Such a society has its affairs and interests; it deliberates and takes resolutions in common,—thus becoming a moral person, who possesses an understanding and will and is susceptible of obligations and rights. Vattel, Prelim. §§ 1, 2; Cherokee Nation v. Georgia, 5 Pet. (U. S.) 62, 8 L. Ed. 25.

It belongs to the government to declare whether they will consider a colony which has thrown off the yoke of the mother-country as an independent state; and until the government have decided on the question, courts of justice are bound to consider the ancient state of things as remaining unchanged; Hoyt v. Gelston, 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 141; Gelston v. Hoyt, id. 561. See Cherokee Nation v. Georgia, 5 Pet. (U. S.) 1, 8 L. Ed. 25; 1 Kent 22.

In American constitutional law the word state is applied to the several members of the Union, while the word nation is applied to the whole body of the people embraced within the jurisdiction of the federal government; Cooley, Const. Lim. See Texas v. White, 7 Wall. (U. S.) 720, 19 L. Ed. 227.

NATIONAL. A word commonly used in diplomatic language and in treaties to indicate a citizen or subject of a given country.

NATIONAL BANKS. Banks created and governed under the provisions of the "National Bank Act."

They are private corporations organized under a general law of congress, by individual stockholders, with their own capital, for private gain, and managed by officers, agents, and employes of their own selection. They constitute no part of any branch of the government of the United States, and whatever public benefit they contribute to the country in return for grants and privileges conferred upon them by statute, is of a general nature arising from their business relations to the people through individual citizens, and not as direct representatives of the state as a body politic in exercising its legal and constitutional functions; Branch v. U. S., 12 Ct. Cl. (U. S.) 281; but they are instruments designed to aid the government in an important branch of the public service; Farmers' & M. N. Bk. v. Dearing, 91 U. S. 29, 23 L. Ed. 196. Congress in the exercise of an undisputed constitutional power to provide a currency for the whole country, may constitutionally secure the benefit of it to the people by appropriate legislation, and to that end may restrain the circulation of any notes not issued under its authority; Veazie Bk. v. Fenno, 8 Wall. (U. S.) 548, 19 L. Ed. 482.

National banks are quasi public institutions and for the purpose for which they are instituted are national in their character, and within constitutional limits are subject to control of congress, and not to be interfered with by state legislative or judicial action except so far as congress permits; Van Reed v. Bank, 198 U. S. 554, 25 Sup. Ct. 775, 49 L. Ed. 1161, 3 Ann. Cas. 1154; whether solvent or insolvent, they are exempt from attachment before judgment in any state, etc., court; id.

The minimum capital allowed is $100,000, except that banks with a capital of not less than $50,000 may, with the approval of the secretary of the treasury, be organized in any place the population of which does not exceed 6,000 inhabitants, and with not less than $25,000, with like sanction, in any place the population of which does not exceed 3,000 inhabitants; no association shall be organized in a city of more than 50,000 population with a capital of less than $200,000.

A national bank may change its name, or place of business, to any place within the same state, not more than thirty miles distant, with the approval of the comptroller and by a vote of two-thirds of the stockholders.

The corporate existence is twenty years and a bank may at any time within two years next previous to the expiration of that period, with the approval of the comptroller, extend its existence for another period of twenty years.

A bank may provide in its articles of association for an increase of its capital, the maximum to be approved by the comptroller; no increase shall be valid until fully paid in and notice submitted to the comptroller. A bank may, by vote of shareholders owning two-thirds of its capital stock, and subject to the approval of the comptroller, reduce its capital, but not below the amount required by the act to authorize the formation of a bank, nor below the amount required for its outstanding circulation, nor until approved by the federal reserve board (infra).

Shareholders are entitled to one vote for each share of stock, and may vote by proxy in writing, but no "officer, clerk, teller or bookkeeper" of the bank shall act as proxy, and no shareholder, whose liability is past due and unpaid, shall be allowed to vote.

Not less than five directors are required; they hold office for one year or until their successors have been elected and qualified; every director must, during his whole term of service, be a citizen of the United States; at least three-fourths of the directors must have resided in the state, etc., in which the bank is located, for at least one year immediately preceding their election; every director must own in his own right at least ten shares of stock (only five shares in banks whose capital stock does not exceed $25,000); if a director becomes disqualified, his place is vacated (Act of February 8, 1905). Vacancies in the board are filled by the board, to hold until the next election. If an election of directors is not made at the time appointed, it may be held on a subsequent day, upon thirty days' notice given in a newspaper published in the city, etc., in which the bank is located, or, if none, published in the nearest city, etc. If the articles do not fix the day of election, or if no election is held on the day fixed, such day shall be designated by the directors in their by-laws or otherwise, and if they fail to do so, shareholders representing two-thirds of the shares may do so. The board chooses one of its members as president.

Shareholders are individually responsible equally and ratably for the debts of the bank, to the extent of the amount of their stock therein at par value, in addition to the amount invested therein. Persons holding stock as executors, administrators, guardians or trustees are not liable as stockholders, but the assets and funds in their hands are so liable.

State banking institutions may be organized as national banks. In such case, the articles of association may be accepted by a majority of the directors, who shall have the power to complete its organization; its shares may continue to be for the same amount as they were before, and the directors may continue until others are elected.

The total liability to a bank of any person, firm or corporation, for money borrowed, shall never exceed one-tenth of the capital stock of the association actually paid in and one-tenth of its unincumbered surplus capital, both unincumbered, and the total of such liabilities shall in no event exceed thirty per cent. of the capital; but the discounting of bills of exchange in good faith against actually existing values and the discount of commercial or business paper actually owned by the person negotiating the same, shall not be considered as money borrowed.

The act of May 30, 1908, providing for national currency associations, has been extended to June 30, 1915, by the act of Dec. 23, 1913 (infra).

The powers of national banks are to be measured by the act creating them; Fowler v. Scully, 72 Pa. 456, 13 Am. Rep. 699; Logan Co. N. Bk. v. Townsend, 139 U. S. 67, 11 Sup. Ct. 496, 35 L. Ed. 107; the words of the act "by discounting and negotiating promissory notes, etc.," are not to be read as limiting the mode of exercising the "incidental powers" necessary to carry on the business of banking, but as descriptive of the kind of business which is authorized; Shinkle v. Bank, 22 Ohio St. 516. A national bank may buy negotiable notes and bills of exchange; Merchants' N. Bk. v. Hanson, 33 Minn. 40, 21 N. W. 849, 53 Am. Rep. 5; Union N. Bk. v. Rowan, 23 S. C. 339, 55 Am. Rep. 26; Pape v. Bank, 20 Kan. 440, 27 Am. Rep. 183. This power, it has been held, simply implies an authority to realize upon such commercial paper as the bank may receive in the lawful conduct of its business, by negotiating, selling, and transferring it by means of a re-discount obtained or otherwise. It gives no implied authority to speculate or traffic in paper of this character or in financial securities of any description; First N. Bk. v. Pierson, 24 Minn. 140, 31 Am. Rep. 341; Lazear v. Bank, 52 Md. 78, 36 Am. Rep. 355. In the last case, by a divided court, the opinion was qualified by the remark that a national bank might invest its surplus capital in notes. The purchasing and discounting of paper has been held to be only a mode of loaning money; Smith v. Bank, 26 Ohio St. 141. It may collect notes; Mound City P. & C. Co. v. Bank, 4 Utah, 353, 9 Pac. 709; deal in national bonds; Leach v. Hale, 31 Ia. 69, 7 Am. Rep. 112; Yerkes v. Bank, 69 N. Y. 382, 25 Am. Rep. 208; and own coupons on state bonds; First N. Bk. v. Bennington, 16 Blatch. 53, Fed. Cas. No. 4,807; and it may deal in stocks; Williamson v. Mason, 12 Hun (N. Y.) 97; but the tendency of the decisions is contra; First N. Bk. v. Hoch, 89 Pa. 324, 33 Am. Rep. 769; Fowler v. Scully, 72 Pa. 456, 13 Am. Rep. 699; First N. Bk. v. Bank, 92 U. S. 122, 23 L. Ed. 679; Weckler v. Bank, 42 Md. 581, 20 Am. Rep. 95. It may lend on collateral security, including United States bonds; Third N. Bk. v. Boyd, 44 Md. 47, 22 Am. Rep. 35; or the stock of another national bank; Germania N. Bk. v. Case, 99 U. S. 628, 25 L. Ed. 448; or a warehouse receipt for merchandise; Cleveland v. Shoeman, 40 Ohio St. 176; or a locomotive; Shoemaker v. Bank, 1 Hughes 101, Fed. Cas. No. 12,801; but it may not lend its credit; Nat. Bk. of C. v. Atkinson, 55 Fed. 465. It may borrow money on its own notes, and pledge its assets for its repayment; 41 Bank. Mag. 131. It may, in a fair and bona fide compromise of a contested claim against it, growing out of a legitimate banking transaction, pay a larger sum than would have been exacted in satisfaction of a demand, so as to obtain by the arrangement a transfer of stocks, if done in the belief that by turning the stocks into money under more favorable circumstances a loss which would otherwise accrue from the transaction might be averted or diminished; First N. Bk. v. Bank, 92 U. S. 122, 23 L. Ed. 679, affirming 39 Md. 600.

It has authority to receive special deposits of securities, etc., and is responsible for their loss if occasioned by gross negligence; First N. Bk. v. Graham, 100 U. S. 699, 25 L. Ed. 750, affirming 79 Pa. 106, 21 Am. Rep. 49; Turner v. Bank, 26 Ia. 562; Smith v. Bank, 99 Mass. 605, 97 Am. Dec. 59; Chattahoochee N. Bk. v. Schley, 58 Ga. 369; Pattison v. Bank, 80 N. Y. 82, 36 Am. Rep. 582; Prather v. Kean, 29 Fed. 498; contra, Wiley v. Bank, 47 Vt. 546, 19 Am. Rep. 122; Whitney v. Bank, 50 Vt. 388, 28 Am. Rep. 503; or by want of ordinary care; Bank v. Zent, 39 Ohio St. 105; Launcester County N. Bk. v. Smith, 62 Pa. 47.

It may take legal proceedings to recover stolen property for itself or for depositors, and will be held responsible for lack of diligence, skill, and care in performing such an undertaking; Wylie v. Bank, 119 U. S. 361, 7 Sup. Ct. 268, 30 L. Ed. 455.

A national bank has no power to indorse a note for compensation; Nat. Bk. v. Burr, 27 Hun (N. Y.) 109; but, should it do so, only the government may object; id.; Nat. Bk. v. Whitney, 103 U. S. 99, 26 L. Ed. 443; but it may guarantee a note; People's Bk. v. Bank, 101 U. S. 183, 25 L. Ed. 907. It may not receive deposits when insolvent; Cragie v. Hadley, 99 N. Y. 131, 1 N. E. 537. It cannot be garnished for a deposit of a trust estate or pay out funds of a bankrupt except upon a warrant of an assignee in bankruptcy of the district or by the register in bankruptcy of the district; Havens v. Bank, 6 Thomp. & C. (N. Y.) 346.

National banks may purchase, hold, and convey real estate for the following purposes, and for no others: 1. Such as shall be necessary for its immediate accommodation in the transaction of its business. 2. Such as shall be mortgaged to it in good faith by way of security, for debts previously contracted. 3. Such as shall be conveyed to it in satisfaction of debts previously contracted in the course of its dealings. 4. Such as it shall purchase at sales under judgments, decrees, or mortgages held by the association, or shall purchase to secure debts due to it; title in the latter case, or under mortgage, to be held for no longer than five years. And see Union N. Bk. v. Matthews, 98 U. S. 621, 25 L. Ed. 188.

It is now settled that a bank may lawfully take a mortgage to secure future indebtedness; Simons v. Bank, 93 N. Y. 269; Thornton v. Bank, 71 Mo. 228; Winton v. Little, 94 Pa. 64; Turner v. Bank, 78 Ind. 19; Oldham v. Bank, 85 N. C. 240. Such a loan of money on real estate security by a national bank is valid between the parties;

Union Nat. Bk. v. Matthews, 98 U. S. 621, 25 L. Ed. 188, reversing Matthews v. Skinker, 62 Mo. 329, 21 Am. Rep. 425; contra, Fowler v. Scully, 72 Pa. 456, 13 Am. Rep. 699; Fridley v. Bowen, 87 Ill. 151; and that it had so loaned money in violation of the prohibition of the national banking law does not give the debtor a right to object; the United States alone can complain; Fortier v. Bank, 112 U. S. 439, 5 Sup. Ct. 234, 28 L. Ed. 764; Schuyler N. Bk. v. Gadsden, 191 U. S. 451, 24 Sup. Ct. 129, 48 L. Ed. 258. It may take a purchase-money mortgage on real estate sold by it; New Orleans N. Bk. v. Raymond, 29 La. Ann. 355, 29 Am. Rep. 335; and it may purchase real estate at a judgment sale; Heath v. Bank, 70 Ind. 106; Reynolds v. Bank, 112 U. S. 405, 5 Sup. Ct. 213, 28 L. Ed. 733; Upton v. Bank, 120 Mass. 153; Mapes v. Scott, 88 Ill. 352; and a prior mortgage if needful to protect the interest of the bank; Holmes v. Boyd, 90 Ind. 332. It may take real estate in payment of a debt due it, and may pay the excess value thereof over the debt; Libby v. Bank, 99 Ill. 622; and may buy in outstanding interests in such real estate, or encumbrances thereon, if necessary, to enable it better to handle or dispose of it; Cockrill v. Abeles, 86 Fed. 505, 30 C. C. A. 223; Holmes v. Boyd, 90 Ind. 332. If holding a second mortgage, it may buy the property at a foreclosure sale under the first mortgage; Heath v. Bank, 70 Ind. 106.

A converted bank may take real estate belonging to it whilst it was a state bank; Scofield v. Bank, 9 Neb. 316, 2 N. W. 888, 31 Am. Rep. 412; it may accept personal property in payment upon the sale of real estate belonging to it; First N. Bk. v. Reno, 73 Ia. 145, 34 N. W. 796; and the assignment of a mortgage on land to secure a loan made at the time of the assignment; First N. Bk. v. Andrews, 7 Wash. 261, 34 Pac. 913, 38 Am. St. Rep. 885.

A transfer of stock in a national bank which is insolvent at the time, made with an intent to avoid liability, where the transferee has reason to believe that the bank is insolvent, will not relieve the transferor from the residuary liability to pay the debt of the bank, and such a transfer may be treated by the receiver as inoperative without regard to the financial condition of the transferee; but if the bank is solvent at the time of the transfer the motive with which it is made is immaterial; Stuart v. Hayden, 169 U. S. 1, 18 Sup. Ct. 274, 42 L. Ed. 639.

When not defined by a board of directors the duties of the president and cashier are only such as may be incident to their offices respectively in their very nature, in the absence of anything to the contrary in the act of incorporation; Hodge's Ex'r v. Bank, 22 Gratt. (Va.) 58. Neither of these officers, nor both acting together, can give up a debt or liability to the bank, nor make any admissions which would release the maker of a note due to the bank from his legal responsibility; id.; Bank of U. S. v. Dunn, 6 Pet. (U. S.) 51, 8 L. Ed. 316. The president has no power to sell or surrender securities and receive others of an inferior value; First N. Bk. v. Benuett, 33 Mich. 520. Ordinarily his authority is very limited; he may bring actions at law and employ counsel for the purpose of protecting the rights of the bank, but he is not its executive officer nor has he charge of its money operations. He has no more power of management nor disposal of the property of the corporation than any other member of the board of directors unless further powers are conferred upon him by the charter of the bank or by the action of the managing board; First N. Bk. v. Lucas, 21 Neb. 280, 31 N. W. 805. He may not make an agreement binding on the bank and embodying a transaction not within the usual course of business of the bank; First N. Bk. v. Hoch, 89 Pa. 324, 33 Am. Rep. 769; but see Burton v. Burley, 13 Fed. 811, 9 Biss. 253.

A bank is liable upon notes, executed by it through its cashier, for loans made by another bank in an amount not so great as to create suspicion, where the actual management of the bank was left entirely to such cashier, and the negotiation and all the correspondence were such as might lead the officers of the lending bank to believe that he was acting on authority and in good faith and honest intention, though the money was used by him for his own individual purposes, and the signature of the president was forged; City N. Bk. v. Bank, 80 Fed. 859, 26 C. C. A. 195; but where the affairs of a national bank were managed entirely by the cashier, who was universally believed to be honest and capable, but whose dishonesty and reckless management resulted in wrecking the bank, the president and directors, most of whom were farmers knowing little of banking, were not guilty of negligence so as to be liable for losses to creditors because they failed to examine the books, the statements being prepared and furnished them by the cashier, and reporting the bank to be in a prosperous condition, and there being no grounds of suspicion known to them; Warner v. Penoyer, 82 Fed. 181, following Briggs v. Spaulding, 141 U. S. 132, 11 Sup. Ct. 924, 35 L. Ed. 662.

The United States district court has jurisdiction of suits against national banks, brought by the United States or by direction of any officer thereof, and of cases for winding up their affairs, and of all suits brought by any bank to enjoin the comptroller, or a receiver acting under his direction. Banks are "declared citizens of the states in which they are located," for the purposes of all other suits by or against them, real, personal or mixed. Judiciary Act of March 3, 1911.

A national bank may bring suit in the circuit court out of its district, against a citizen of the district where the court sits; Manufacturers' N. Bk. v. Baack, 8 Blatchf. 137, Fed. Cas. No. 9,052; Davis v. Cook, 9 Nev. 134; and state courts have jurisdiction of suits brought by national banks; First N. Bk. v. Hubbard, 49 Vt. 1, 24 Am. Rep. 97; but this must be a state court of its locality; Bank v. Bank, 14 Wall. (U. S.) 383, 20 L. Ed. 840; Crocker v. Bank, 101 Mass. 240, 3 Am. Rep. 336.

Mortgages held by national banks are not subject to taxation by a state; First N. Bk. v. Kreig, 21 Nev. 404, 32 Pac. 641; nor can the stock in a national bank be taxed in any state other than that in which the bank is located; De Baun v. Smith, 55 N. J. L. 110, 25 Atl. 277.

A national bank may go into liquidation and be closed by a vote of the shareholders of two-thirds of its stock; R. S. § 5220; although it be contrary to the wishes and against the interests of the owners of the minority of the stock; Watkins v. Bank, 51 Kan. 254, 32 Pac. 914. In case of a failure to pay its circulating notes, the comptroller may appoint a receiver to wind up national banks; R. S. § 5234.

State banks may be changed into national banks; the change when made is a transit, and not a creation; see Coffey v. Bank, 46 Mo. 140, 2 Am. Rep. 488; and does not affect its identity or its right to sue upon obligations or liabilities incurred to it by its former name; Michigan Ins. Bk. v. Eldred, 143 U. S. 293, 12 Sup. Ct. 450, 36 L. Ed. 162.

Federal Reserve Banks. The act of December 23, 1913, is entitled an act "to provide for the establishment of federal reserve banks, to furnish an elastic currency, to afford means of rediscounting commercial paper, to establish a more effective supervision of banking in the United States, and for other purposes."

Federal Reserve Districts. It provides that the secretary of the treasury, the secretary of agriculture and the comptroller of the currency, acting as "the reserve bank organization committee," shall designate not less than eight nor more than twelve cities as federal reserve cities, and divide the continent of the United States, exclusive of Alaska, into districts, each to contain only one such city. Only the federal reserve board, when organized, shall review their action, and may readjust the districts and create new ones, not exceeding twelve in all.

The committee shall supervise the organization in each of the cities of a federal reserve bank, entitled, e. g., "Federal Reserve Bank of Chicago."

Every national bank is required, and every eligible bank in the United States and every trust company within the District of Columbia is authorized, to signify in writing within sixty days after the passage of the act its acceptance of its terms.

Every national bank within the district is required within thirty days after notice to subscribe to the stock of such reserve bank in a sum equal to six per cent. of its paid-up capital and surplus. The shareholders of every reserve bank are individually responsible, but not one for another, for the engagements of the reserve bank to the extent of the amount of their subscriptions at par in addition to the amount subscribed.

Any national bank failing to signify its acceptance of the act within sixty days shall cease to act as a reserve agent, upon thirty days' notice within its discretion from the committee or the reserve board.

Should any national bank fail within one year after the passage of the act to become a member bank, or to comply with the act, its franchises under the national banking act or under this act shall be forfeited, but only upon suit in a United States court of competent jurisdiction, brought where the bank is located, under the direction of the reserve board, by the comptroller of the currency. In case of any such noncompliance, other than the failure to become a member bank, every participating or assenting director is held personally liable for all damages such bank, its shareholders, or any other person shall have sustained. If the subscription by banks to the federal reserve banks or any one or more of them be, in the judgment of the committee, insufficient to provide the necessary capital, the committee may offer to public subscription at par such amount of reserve bank stock as the committee may determine. No individual, partnership or corporation, other than a member bank of its district, can subscribe for or hold at any time more than $25,000 par value of reserve bank stock. Such stock is to be known as public stock and may be transferred on the books of the reserve bank by the chairman of its board of directors. If the total bank and public subscriptions to the stock of the reserve banks or one or more of them be insufficient to provide the necessary capital, the committee shall allot to the United States such amount of stock as it shall determine, to be paid for by the United States at par out of any money in the treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Stock not held by member banks shall not be entitled to voting power.

No reserve bank shall commence business with less than $4,000,000 subscribed capital.

The organization of the reserve districts and reserve cities shall not change the present status of reserve cities and central reserve cities, except in so far as the act changes the amount of reserves that may be carried with approved reserve agents located therein.

Branch Offices. Each reserve bank shall establish branch banks within the district, to be operated by directors under the rules of the reserve board. Branch bank directors shall possess the same qualifications as directors of the reserve banks. Four of said directors shall be selected by the reserve bank and three by the federal reserve board, and they shall hold office during the pleasure, respectively, of the parent bank and the federal reserve board. The reserve bank shall designate one of the directors as manager.

Federal Reserve Banks. When the minimum amount of stock prescribed by this act for the organization of any reserve bank shall have been subscribed and allotted, the committee shall designate any five banks of those whose applications have been received, to organize a reserve bank. When the organization certificate has been filed with the comptroller, the reserve bank shall become a body corporate with the ordinary powers, for a period of twenty years, and may appoint by its board of directors such officers and employees not otherwise provided for in the act and dismiss them at pleasure. It may deposit with the United States treasurer bonds of the United States as provided by existing laws and receive circulating notes equal to the par value of the bonds; but the issue thereof shall not be limited to the capital stock of such reserve bank.

Reserve banks shall be conducted under control of directors with the usual powers and those prescribed by law; they shall administer their affairs "fairly and impartially and without discrimination in favor of or against any member bank or banks and shall, subject to the provisions of law and the orders of the reserve board, extend to each member bank such discounts, advancements and accommodations as may be safely and reasonably made, with due regard for the claims and demands of other member banks."

The board of directors shall consist of nine members, holding office for three years, and divided in classes, of three each, designated as classes A, B, and C. Class A shall be chosen by the stockholding banks. Class B shall be persons actively engaged in their district in commerce, agriculture or some other industrial pursuit. Class C shall be designated by the reserve board, which shall designate one of them as chairman. No senator or representative in congress shall be a member of the reserve board or an officer or director of a reserve bank.

No director of class B shall be an officer, director or employee of any bank. No director of class C shall be an officer, director, employee, or stockholder of any bank.

An elaborate plan for the choice of directors of classes A and B is provided, for which see the act.

Class C directors shall be appointed by the reserve board; they shall have been at least two years residents of the district. One of them shall be appointed chairman of the board and as "federal reserve agent"; he shall be a person of "tested banking experience." Another member of class C, of like experience, shall be deputy chairman and deputy reserve agent.

Stock Issues. Reserve banks may increase their capital stock and surplus as member banks increase their capital stock, or additional banks become members or decrease it as member banks decrease their capital stock or surplus or cease to be members. Such stock owned by member banks shall not be transferred or hypothecated. When a member bank increases its capital stock or surplus, it must subscribe for an additional amount of capital stock equal to six per cent. of the increase, and may upon a reduction of its capital surrender a proportionate amount, or upon liquidation surrender all its holdings, receiving back its cash-paid subscriptions and one-half of one per cent. a month from the period of the last dividend, not to exceed the book value thereof, less any liability to the reserve bank.

Division of Earnings. Stockholders of reserve banks are entitled to annual cumulative dividends of six per cent. after the payment of which the remaining net earnings shall be paid to the United States as a franchise tax, except that one-half thereof shall be paid into a surplus fund until it shall amount to forty per cent. of the paid-in capital of such bank.

Reserve banks, including the stock, surplus and income, shall be exempt from all taxation except on real estate.

R. S. § 5154, is amended to provide that any bank incorporated under special or general law of any state or of the United States and having an unimpaired capital sufficient to entitle it to become a national bank may, by a vote of not less than fifty-one per cent. of the capital stock and the approval of the Comptroller, become a national bank, if such conversion shall not be in contravention of the state law.

State Banks as Members. Any bank incorporated by special law of any state or organized under the general laws of any state or of the United States may apply to the committee or to the reserve board for the right to subscribe for reserve bank stock within its district, but the applying bank must have a paid-up unimpaired capital sufficient to entitle it to become a national bank.

Power is given in certain cases to the reserve board to require member banks to surrender their stock in the reserve bank upon repayment of the cash-paid subscriptions as aforesaid, less any liability to the reserve bank except for subscriptions not previously called. The reserve board may in a proper case restore the membership.

A federal reserve board is created, which shall consist of the secretary of the treasury, the comptroller of the currency, ex officio, and five members appointed by the president by and with the advice and consent of the senate. Not more than one of such five appointive members shall be selected from any reserve district, and the president shall have due regard to a fair representation of the different commercial, industrial and geographical divisions of the country. The five appointive members shall receive salaries of $12,000, and the comptroller shall receive $7,000 for his services as a member of the board. At least two of such five members shall be "persons experienced in banking or finance." One shall be designated by the president to serve for two years, one for four years, one for six years, one for eight years and one for ten years. Thereafter the terms shall be ten years, unless sooner removed for cause by the president. One of the persons shall be designated by the president as governor and one as vice-governor of the board.

Nothing in the act shall take away any powers heretofore vested in the secretary of the treasury in regard to the treasury department, and wherever any power vested by this act in the reserve board or the reserve agent appears to conflict with the powers of the secretary of the treasury, such powers shall be exercised subject to the supervision and control of the secretary.

A bureau in the treasury department is created, charged with the execution of all laws relating to the issue and regulation of national currency, etc.; the comptroller of the currency is to be chief of such bureau.

The reserve board is empowered to examine the accounts, books and affairs of each federal reserve bank and each member bank and to require such statements and reports as it may deem necessary; it shall publish once a week a statement showing the condition of each reserve bank and a consolidated statement of all reserve banks. It may permit or, on the affirmative vote of at least five of its members, require reserve banks to rediscount the discounted paper of other reserve banks, at rates of interest to be fixed by it.

It may suspend for a period not exceeding thirty days, and from time to time renew such suspension for periods not exceeding fifteen days, "any reserve requirement specified in this act," but with certain provisos.

It may add to the number of reserve cities or central reserve cities or reclassify them.

It may remove or suspend any officer or director of any reserve bank. It may require the writing off of doubtful or worthless assets by any reserve bank; for any violation of the act suspend the operations of any reserve bank, take possession thereof, administer the same, and liquidate or reorganize it. It has general supervision over reserve banks. It may grant by special permit to national banks applying therefor, when not in contravention of state or local law, the right to act as trustee, executor, administrator, or registrar of stocks and bonds.

Federal Advisory Council. A "federal advisory council" is created to consist of as many members as there are federal reserve districts. Each federal reserve bank appoints one member thereof. The council meets at Washington at least four times a year and oftener if called by the reserve board, and it may meet there or elsewhere as they may deem necessary. It has power to confer directly with the reserve board on general business conditions, to make oral or written representations concerning matters within the jurisdiction of the board, to call for information and to make recommendations in regard to discount rates, rediscount business, note issues, reserve conditions in the various districts, the purchase and sale of gold or securities by reserve banks, open-market operations by said banks and the general affairs of the reserve banking system.

Powers of Federal Reserve Banks. Such bank may receive from any of its member banks and the United States deposits of current funds in lawful money, national-bank notes, federal reserve notes, or checks and drafts upon solvent member banks or other federal reserve banks, payable upon presentation; or, solely for exchange purposes, may receive from other reserve banks deposits of current funds in lawful money, national-bank notes, etc. Upon the indorsement of any of its member banks, with a waiver of demand, notice and protest, a reserve bank may discount notes, drafts and bills of exchange arising out of actual commercial transactions, that is, issued or drawn for agricultural, industrial or commercial purposes, or the proceeds of which have been used, or are to be used, for such purposes. This shall not include notes, etc., covering merely investments or issued or drawn for the purpose of carrying or trading in stocks, bonds or other investment securities, except government bonds and notes. Such notes, drafts and bills discounted must have a maturity at the time of discount of not more than ninety days, except that if drawn or issued for agricultural purposes or based on live stock and having a maturity not exceeding six months, they may be discounted in an amount to be limited to a percentage of the capital of the reserve bank, to be ascertained and fixed by the reserve board.

A reserve bank may discount acceptances based on importation or exportation of goods and having a maturity at the time of discount of not more than three months and endorsed by at least one member bank, but the amount thereof shall at no time exceed more than one-half of the paid-up capital and surplus of the bank for which the discounts are made. The aggregate of such notes and bills bearing the signature and endorsement of any one person, firm or corporation, rediscounted for any one bank, shall at no time exceed ten per cent. of the unimpaired capital and surplus of such bank; but this restriction shall not apply to the discount of bills of exchange drawn in good faith against actually existing values.

A member bank may accept drafts and bills of exchange drawn on it and growing out of transactions involving the importation and exportation of goods having not more than six months sight to run; but no bank shall accept such bills to an amount equal at any time in the aggregate to more than one-half its paid-up capital stock and surplus.

R. S. § 5202, is amended so as to provide that no national bank shall at any time be indebted to an amount exceeding its unimpaired capital stock except on account of demands of the following nature: Notes of circulation; moneys deposited with or collected by it; bills of exchange or drafts drawn against money actually on deposit or due thereto; liabilities to its stockholders for dividends and reserve profits; and liabilities incurred under the act.

The rediscount by any reserve bank of bills receivable and of domestic and foreign bills of exchange and acceptances shall be subject to the regulations of the reserve board.

Open-Market Operations. Any reserve bank may, under the rules of the reserve board, purchase and sell in the open market either from or to domestic or foreign banks, etc., cable transfers and bankers' acceptances and bills of exchange of the kind and maturities as by this act made eligible for rediscount with or without the endorsement of a member bank. It shall have power to deal in gold coin and bullion and make loans thereon; to buy and sell bonds and notes of the United States and bills, notes, revenue bonds and warrants with maturity from date of purchase of not exceeding six months issued in anticipation of the collection of taxes or of the assured revenue of any state, county, district, political subdivision or municipality in the continental United States, including irrigation, drainage and reclamation districts, but under the rules of the reserve board. It may purchase from member banks and sell, with or without endorsement, bills of exchange arising out of business transactions as thereinbefore defined. It may establish from time to time, subject to review by the reserve board, rates of discount for each class of paper, which shall be fixed with a view of accommodating commerce and business.

It may establish accounts with other reserve banks for exchange purposes and with the consent of the reserve board open and maintain banking accounts in foreign countries.

Note Issues. Federal reserve notes to be issued at the discretion of the reserve board for the purpose of making advances to federal reserve banks are authorized. They are notes of the United States and "shall be receivable by all national and member banks and federal reserve banks and for all taxes, customs and other public dues. They shall be redeemed in gold on demand at the treasury department of the United States or in gold or lawful money at any federal reserve bank."

The federal reserve bank, in applying to the federal reserve agent for federal reserve notes, shall tender to such agent collateral in amount equal to the sum of the notes thus applied for, which shall consist of notes and bills accepted for rediscount under the act. The reserve board may at any time call upon the reserve bank for additional security to protect the reserve notes issued to it.

Every reserve bank shall maintain a reserve in gold or lawful money of not less than thirty-five per cent. against its deposits and reserves in gold of not less than forty per cent. against its reserve notes in actual circulation and not offset by gold or lawful money deposited with the federal reserve agent.

The reserve board shall require each reserve bank to maintain on deposit in the United States treasury a sum in gold sufficient in the judgment of the secretary for the redemption of federal reserve notes and in no event less than five per cent., but such deposit shall be included as part of the forty per cent. reserve above required. Any reserve bank may reduce its liability for outstanding reserve notes by depositing with the federal reserve agent, its federal reserve notes, gold, gold certificates or lawful money of the United States.

Bank Reserves. Demand deposits within the act shall comprise all deposits payable within thirty days, and time deposits shall comprise all deposits payable after thirty days, and all savings accounts and certificates of deposit which are subject to not less than thirty days' notice before payment.

After a federal reserve bank is established in any district, every subscribing member bank shall maintain reserves according to an elaborate scheme, as to which reference must be made to the act.

Bank Examinations. The comptroller, with the approval of the secretary of the treasury, shall appoint examiners, who shall examine every member bank at least twice a year and oftener if necessary; the reserve board may authorize examination by the state authorities to be accepted in the case of state banks or trust companies and may at any time direct the special examination of state banks or trust companies that are stockholders of a reserve bank.

The reserve board shall at least once a year order an examination of each reserve bank and upon joint application of ten member banks shall order a special examination of and a report upon any such bank.

Loans on Farm Lands. Any national bank not situated in a central reserve city may make loans secured by improved and uncumbered farm land situate within its reserve district, but not for more than five years nor exceeding one-half of the actual value of the property offered as security. Such loans may be made in an aggregate sum not exceeding twenty-five per cent. of its capital and surplus and one-third of its time deposits. The reserve board shall have power from time to time to add to its list of cities from which its members shall not be permitted to make loans on real estate.

Foreign Branches. Any national bank with a capital and surplus of $1,000,000 or more may apply to the reserve board for authority to establish branches in foreign countries or dependencies of the United States and to act as fiscal agents of the United States.

National banks having circulating notes secured otherwise than by United States bonds shall pay for the first three months a tax at the rate of three per cent. per annum upon the average amount of such of their notes in circulation as are based on the deposit of such securities, and afterwards an additional tax rate of one-half of one per cent. per annum for each month until a tax of six per cent. per annum is reached, and thereafter a tax of six per cent. per annum upon the average amount of such notes.

Certain changes are made in the national banking act, as to which attention is called to the act.

Finally, if any part of the act shall be adjudged invalid, it shall not affect the remainder of the act; the right to alter, amend or repeal the act is expressly reserved.

See DEPOSIT; INTEREST; PROXY; RESERVE; BANK.

NATIONAL CHURCH. A church established by law in a country or nation. See CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

NATIONAL CURRENCY. Notes issued by national banks and by the government. Dull v. Com., 25 Gratt. (Va.) 965. See CURRENT MONEY; MONEY; LEGAL TENDER.

NATIONAL DEBT. A sum owing by the government to individuals who have advanced money to it for public purposes, either in anticipation of the produce of the particular branches of the revenue, or on credit of the general power which the government possesses of levying the amount necessary to pay interest for the money borrowed or to repay the principal. See FUNDING SYSTEM.

NATIONAL DOMAIN. See LANDS, PUBLIC.

NATIONAL DOMICIL. See DOMICIL.

NATIONAL ENSIGN. The national flag. See FLAG.

NATIONAL GOVERNMENT. A government of the people of a single state or nation, united as a community by what is termed the social compact, and possessing complete and perfect supremacy over persons and things so far as they can be made the lawful objects of civil government. A federal government is distinguished from a national government by its being the government of a community of independent and sovereign states united by compact. Piqua Branch Bank v. Knoup, 6 Ohio St. 393.

NATIONAL GUARD. A name given to the organized militia in some parts of the United States. See MILITIA.

NATIONALITY. Character, status, or condition with reference to the rights and duties of a person as a member of some one state or nation rather than another.

Nationality may be determined from origin, naturalization, domicile, residence, trade, or other circumstances; 1 Halleck, Int. L. 403.

The term is in frequent use with regard to ships. Nationality determined by one's birthplace or parentage is called nationality of origin; that which results from naturalization, is by acquisition. In feudal times, nationality was determined exclusively by the place of birth, jure soli; but under the laws of Athens and Rome the child followed that of the parents, jure sanguinis. "Of these two tests, the place of birth and the nationality of the father, neither is at present adopted without qualification by British, French, or American law. The laws of these countries exhibit, in fact, different combinations of the two, Great Britain and the United States laying chief stress on the place of birth, while in France the father's nationality determines, though not absolutely and in all cases, that of the child; and this latter theory has found acceptance among other European nations," as Belgium, Bavaria, Prussia, and Spain. Morse, Citizenship 10. The subject is usually regulated by treaty. See EXPATRIATION.

NATIONS, LAW OF. See INTERNATIONAL LAW.

NATIVE, NATIVE CITIZEN. A natural-born subject. 1 Bla. Com. 366. Those born in a country, of parents who are citizens. Morse, Citizenship 12. See CITIZEN. There is no distinction between native born as used in the French Extradition treaty and natural born as used in the extradition act; 37 W. R. 269.

NATIVO HABENDO. A writ which lay for a lord when his villein had run away from him. Termes de la Ley.

NATIVUS. See NEIF.

NATURA BREVIVM. See OLD NATURA BREVIVM.

NATURAL AFFECTION. The affection which one naturally feels towards those who are nearly allied to him. It sometimes supplies the place of a valuable consideration in contracts; and natural affection is a good consideration in a deed. 2 Steph. Com. 68. See BARGAIN AND SALE; COVENANT TO STAND SEIZED; CONSIDERATION.

NATURAL ALLEGIANCE. See ALLEGIANCE.

NATURAL AND REASONABLE WEAR AND TEAR. Wear and tear by use. Damage by operation of nature, as by freshets, is not included therein. 20 N. J. L. 544.

NATURAL-BORN. See NATURALIZATION.

NATURAL-BORN SUBJECT. See NATURALIZATION.

NATURAL CHILDREN. Bastards; children born out of lawful wedlock. But in a statute declaring that adopted children shall have all the rights of "natural" children, the word "natural" was used in the sense of legitimate; 9 Am. L. Reg. 747.

In Civil Law. Children by procreation, as distinguished from those by adoption.

In Louisiana. Illegitimate children who have been adopted by the father. La. Civ. Code, art. 220.

NATURAL DAY. That space of time included between the rising and the setting of the sun. See DAY.

NATURAL DEATH. See DEATH.

NATURAL EQUITY. That which is founded in natural justice, in honesty and right, and which arises ex æquo et bono.

It corresponds precisely with the definition of justice or natural law, which is a constant and perpetual will to give to every man what is his. This kind of equity embraces so wide a range that human tribunals have never attempted to enforce it. Every code of laws has left many matters of natural justice or equity wholly unprovided for, from the difficulty of framing general rules to meet them, from the almost impossibility of enforcing them, and from the doubtful nature of the policy of attempting to give a legal sanction to duties of imperfect obligation, such as charity, gratitude, or kindness. 4 Bouvier, Inst. n. 3720. See EQUITY.

NATURAL FOOL. An idiot; one born without the reasoning powers or a capacity to acquire them.

NATURAL FRUITS. The natural production of trees, bushes, and other plants, for the use of men and animals, and for the reproduction of such trees, bushes, or plants.

This expression is used in contradistinction to artificial or figurative fruits: for example, apples, peaches, and pears, are natural fruits; interest is the fruit of money, and this is artificial.

NATURAL GAS. See GAS.

NATURAL HEIRS. As used in a will and by way of executory devise, they are considered as of the same legal import as "heirs of the body." Smith v. Pendell, 19 Conn. 112, 48 Am. Dec. 146.

NATURAL INFANCY. A period of non-responsible life, which ends with the seventh year. Whart. Dict.

NATURAL LAW. See LAW OF NATURE.

NATURAL LIBERTY. See LIBERTY.

NATURAL LIFE. The period between birth and natural death. The use of the word natural before life in a sentence of solitary confinement in a state prison for life, is a surplusage and does not affect the sentence; People v. Wright, 89 Mich. 70, 50 N. W. 792. See DEATH.

NATURAL OBLIGATION. One which in honor and conscience binds the person who has contracted it, but which cannot be enforced in a court of justice. Pothier, nn. 173, 191. See OBLIGATION; MORAL OBLIGATION.

NATURAL PERSONS. See PERSON.

NATURAL PRESUMPTIONS. Presumptions of fact; those which depend upon their own form and efficacy in generating belief or conviction in the mind, as derived from those connections which are pointed out by experience.

NATURAL RESOURCES, CONSERVATION OF. See LANDS.

NATURAL WATERCOURSE. A natural stream flowing in a defined bed or channel, with banks and sides, and having permanent sources of supply. Barkley v. Wilcox, 86 N. Y. 140, 40 Am. Rep. 519; Hinkle v. Avery, 88 Ia. 47, 55 N. W. 78, 45 Am. St. Rep. 224. See WATERCOURSE.

NATURALEZA. In Spanish Law. The state of a natural-born subject. White, New Recop. b. 1, t. 5, c. 2.

NATURALIZATION. The act by which an alien is made a citizen of the United States of America.

The act of adopting a foreigner and clothing him with all the privileges of a native-born citizen. Osborn v. Bank, 9 Wheat. (U. S.) 827, 6 L. Ed. 204; 9 Op. Atty.-Gen. 359.

A nation, or the sovereign who represents it, may grant to a stranger the quality of a citizen, by admitting him into the body of the political society. This is called naturalization. Vattel, Laws of Nat., bk. 1, ch. xix. §§ 212-214.

It is believed that every state in Christendom accords to foreigners, with more or less restrictions, the right of naturalization, and that each has some positive law or mode of its own for naturalizing the native-born subjects of other states, without reference to the consent of the latter for the release of the transfer of the allegiance of such subjects. See Morse, Citizenship, 66.

Naturalization, of itself, conveys no right of suffrage; Pars. Rights, Amer. Citizen 190; though by it a foreigner becomes, to all intents and purposes, a citizen of the United States, with no disability except that he cannot become president or vice-president. It does not operate as a bar against prosecution in one's native country for prior offences; 2 Whart. Dig. Int. L. § 180. The provision of the constitution applies to persons of foreign birth only; Scott v. Sandford, 19 How. (U. S.) 419, 15 L. Ed. 691; but not to Mongolians, or American Indians; In re Ah Yup, 5 Sawy. 155, Fed. Cas. No. 104; 7 Op. Atty. Gen. 746; In re Buntaro Kumagai, 163 Fed. 922; In re Knight, 171 Fed. 299; In re Takuji Yamashita, 30 Wash. 234, 70 Pac. 482, 59 L. R. A. 671; and not, formerly, to a freeman of color, born in the United States; Smith v. Moody, 26 Ind. 299. Indians may be naturalized by act of congress; Scott v. Sandford, 19 How. (U. S.) 393, 15 L. Ed. 691.

The term "white" in the naturalization acts has been generally construed to mean only the Caucasian race, and Chinese, Hawaiians, Burmese and Canadian Indians have been refused naturalization; In re Ah Yup, 5 Sawy. 155, Fed. Cas. No. 104; In re Kanaka Nian, 6 Utah, 259, 21 Pac. 993, 4 L. R. A. 726; Matter of Po, 7 Misc. 471, 28 N. Y. Supp. 383; In re Camille, 6 Fed. 256; as was a half breed whose father was of English birth and parentage and whose mother was half Chinese and half Japanese, though the applicant had served in the United States navy; In re Knight, 171 Fed. 299; and a Japanese is held ineligible to citizenship; In re Takuji Yamashita, 30 Wash. 234, 70 Pac. 482, 59 L. R. A. 671. A Mexican of aboriginal descent was admitted because of treaties with Mexico; In re Rodriguez, 81 Fed. 337; a Parsee, though with considerable doubt; In re Balsara, 171 Fed. 294; Syrians in Rhode Island and Georgia, but not in Nebraska; In re Najour, 174 Fed. 735; and an Armenian born in Asiatic Turkey; id., where "white" is said to be a catch-all word and, to include all persons not otherwise classified. The son of a German father and a Japanese mother was held ineligible to naturalization; In re Young, 198 Fed. 715.

See WHITE PERSONS.

Entire communities have been naturalized by a single act of national sovereignty; Boyd v. Nebraska, 143 U. S. 135, 12 Sup. Ct. 375, 36 L. Ed. 103. The act of July 14, 1870, extended the naturalization laws to persons of African descent. Under R. S. § 1994, providing that "any woman who is now or hereafter may be married to a citizen of the United States, and who might herself be lawfully naturalized, shall be deemed a citizen," applies to women of African blood; Broadis v. Broadis, 86 Fed. 951.

An alien over twenty-one years who has enlisted in the United States army may, without previous declaration of intention, be naturalized on one year's residence, good moral character and honorable discharge; Act of July 17, 1862, § 21. An alien seaman may become a citizen by declaring his intention and serving three years on a merchant vessel of the United States; R. S. § 2174.

An alien enemy cannot be naturalized; R. S. § 2171.

Minor children, though born out of the United States, if living within the United States at the time of the naturalization of the parents, become citizens by virtue of the naturalization of the parents; Gumm v. Hubbard, 97 Mo. 311, 11 S. W. 61, 10 Am. St. Rep. 312; but not so if they came after the father had been naturalized; Behrensmeier v. Kreitz, 135 Ill. 591, 26 N. E. 704.

A married woman was naturalized in Ex parte Pic, 1 Cra. C. C. 372, Fed. Cas. No. 11,118; she may be naturalized without the concurrence of her husband; Priest v. Cummings, 16 Wend. (N. Y.) 617; and an alien woman becomes a citizen when her husband is naturalized, even if she is not of age at the time; Renner v. Muller, 44 N. Y. Sup. Ct. 535; and though she may have lived in a foreign country for years and has never come to the United States until after his death; 14 Op. Atty.-Gen. 402.

The federal constitution, art. 1, § 8, vests in congress the power to establish a uniform rule of naturalization. "It follows from the very nature of the power that to be useful it must be exclusive, for a concurrent power in the states would bring back all the evils and embarrassments which the constitution was designed to remedy, and accordingly, though there was a momentary hesitation when the constitution first went into operation as to whether the power might not still be exercised by the states subject only to the control of congress so far as the legislation of the latter extended as the supreme law, yet the power is now firmly established to be exclusive;" 2 Story, Const. § 1104; Smith v. Turner, 7 How. (U. S.) 556, 12 L. Ed. 702; Ex parte Knowles, 5 Cal. 300; Minneapolis v. Reum, 56 Fed. 576, 6 C. C. A. 31; and no state can pass a law which contravenes the acts of congress on the subject; Barzizas v. Hopkins, 2 Rand. (Va.) 276. A state may confer such rights of citizenship as it pleases so far as relates to itself only; Scott v. Sandford, 19 How. (U. S.) 393, 15 L. Ed. 691; In re Wehlitz, 16 Wis. 443, 84 Am. Dec. 700; but this is not to be confounded with the right of citizenship of the United States; Boyd v. Nebraska, 143 U. S. 160, 12 Sup. Ct. 375, 26 L. Ed. 103; and no state can make a citizen of the United States; Lanz v. Randall, 4 Dill. 425, Fed. Cas. No. 8,080.

By act of April 14, 1802, congress conferred power to naturalize upon state courts having common-law jurisdiction and a seal and clerk; the subject has since been regulated by the act of 1906, infra.

Congress may invest state courts with jurisdiction to naturalize; In re Beavins, 33 N. H. 89; but it is held that it cannot impose the duty of naturalization upon state courts; Lab's Petition, 3 Pa. Dist. R. 728; nor require them to act upon applications for naturalization; Rushworth v. Judges, 58 N. J. L. 97, 32 Atl. 743, 30 L. R. A. 761. See State v. Norris, 37 Neb. 299, 55 N. W. 1086. "Whether the state courts are bound to exercise concurrent jurisdiction, permitted to be retained by them even when enjoined upon them by act of congress, is not altogether well settled. Some strong intimations to the contrary have been given by the judges of the supreme court of the United States, and in some instances the courts of the particular states have refused to exercise this jurisdiction." State v. Penney, 10 Ark. 621. No state can confer jurisdiction on any court, which does not come within the terms of the act of congress; State v. Whittemore, 50 N. H. 245, 9 Am. Rep. 196.

Courts of record, in naturalizing foreigners, act judicially, ascertaining the facts and applying the law to them; Spratt v. Spratt, 4 Pet. (U. S.) 407, 7 L. Ed. 897; the certificate of naturalization issued by a court of competent jurisdiction is conclusive proof of the citizenship of the person named therein; Ackerman v. Haenck, 147 Ill. 514, 35 N. E. 381; though not the only proof. The judgment of the court, like every judgment, has been decided to be complete evidence of its own validity; id.

When no record can be produced showing the naturalization of a foreigner, naturalization may be inferred from the fact that for a long time he voted, held office, and exercised all the rights and privileges of a citizen; Boyd v. Nebraska, 143 U. S. 135, 12 Sup. Ct. 375, 36 L. Ed. 103.

The act of congress of June 29, 1906, "to establish a bureau of immigration and naturalization, and to provide for a uniform rule for the naturalization of aliens throughout the United States," provides: Exclusive jurisdiction to naturalize aliens is conferred upon the United States district courts in any state or territory, the District of Columbia, etc., also on "all courts of record in any state or territory, * * * having a seal, a clerk, and jurisdiction in actions at law or equity, or law and equity, in which the amount in controversy is unlimited." The jurisdiction of the courts specified extends only to aliens resident within the respective judicial districts of such courts. An alien shall declare on oath before the clerk of any such court two years prior to his admission, and after he has reached the age of eighteen years, that it is his intention to become a citizen of the United States. Not less than two years or more than seven years after the declaration, he shall file a petition in writing signed by him, setting forth certain specified facts. The petition shall be verified by at least two credible witnesses, who shall state that they have personally known the applicant to be a resident of the United States for a period of at least five years continuously, and of the state or district for at least one year immediately preceding the date of the filing of the petition and that he is in every way qualified to become a citizen. Applicant shall declare on oath in open court that he will support the Constitution of the United States, and renounce allegiance to any foreign prince, and any title or order of nobility.

In addition to the applicant's oath, the testimony of at least two witnesses as to the facts of residence, moral character and attachment to the principles of the constitution shall be required.

If the alien who has declared his intention dies before he is naturalized, his widow and minor children may be naturalized without making any declaration. No person shall be naturalized or any certificate of naturalization be issued within thirty days preceding any general election within the district. The court may in its discretion, at the time of naturalization, make a decree changing the name of the alien and issue his certificate in the new name.

No person who disbelieves in organized government or is a member of or affiliated with any organization entertaining and teaching such disbelief, or advocates or teaches the duty, etc., of assaulting or killing of any officer or officers, or who is a polygamist, shall be naturalized. Nor shall any one who cannot speak the English language, but this does not apply to those who are physically unable to do so, if they are otherwise qualified.

Final hearing shall be in open court before a judge.

The act provides that any person belonging to the class qualified to become citizens, who has resided constantly in the United States for five years preceding May 1, 1910, and who, on account of misinformation as to the naturalization laws, has acted under a wrong impression, may, by showing such facts to a court having jurisdiction, receive a certificate of naturalization without requiring proof of filing a declaration of intention.

The act provides for cancelling naturalizations illegally procured. In Johannessen v. U. S., 225 U. S. 227, 32 Sup. Ct. 613, 56 L. Ed. 1066, it was held that this act was constitutional, and that certificates of naturalization, like patents for lands and inventions, can, when issued ex parte, be annulled for fraud. As to the result, if the government had exercised the power expressly given under this act to appear and cross-examine, was not decided.

Aliens may be naturalized in one dominion of the British Empire, but do not thereby become citizens of the empire or of any other dominion.

See ALIEN; CHINESE; CITIZEN; ALLEGIANCE; EXPATRIATION; WHITE PERSONS.

NATURALIZED CITIZEN. One who, being born an alien, has lawfully become a citizen of the United States. See NATURALIZATION.

NATURALLY. According to the usual course of things. Mitchell v. Clarke, 71 Cal. 164, 11 Pac. 882, 60 Am. Rep. 529.

NATURRECHT (German). The law of nature. See JURISPRUDENCE.

NAUCLERUS (Lat.). The master or owner of a vessel. Vicat. Voc. Jur.; Calvinus, Lex.

NAUFRAGE. In French Maritime Law. When, by the violent agitation of the waves, the impetuosity of the winds, the storm, or the lightning, a vessel is swallowed up, or so shattered that there remain only the pieces, the accident is called naufnage.

It differs from échouement, which is when the vessel remains whole, but is grounded; or from bris, which is when it strikes against a rock or a coast; or from sombrer, which is the sinking of the vessel in the sea when it is swallowed up, and which may be caused by any accident whatever. Pardessus, n. 643. See WRECK.

NAUGHT. Bad; defective.

NAULAGE. See NAULUM.

NAULUM (Lat.). Freight or passage money. 1 Pars. Mar. Law 124, n.; Bened. Adm. § 288; Dig. l. 6, § 1, qui potiores in pignore.

NAUTA (Lat.). One who charters (exercet) a ship. L. 1, § 1, ff. nautæ, campo; Calvinus, Lex. Any one who is on board a vessel for the purpose of navigating her. U. S. v. Winn, 3 Sumn. 213, Fed. Cas. No. 16,740. Vicat, Voc. Jur.; 2 Emerigon 448; Pothier, Pand. lib. 4, tit. 9, n. 2; lib. 47, tit. 5, nn. 1, 2, 3, 8, 10. A carrier by water. 2 Ld. Raym. 917.

NAUTICA PECUNIA. A loan to a shipowner, to be repaid only upon the successful termination of the voyage, and therefore allowed to be made at an extraordinary rate of interest (nauticum fœnus). Holland, Jurispr. 250. See TRAJECTITIA PECUNIA.

NAUTICAL ASSESSORS. Experienced shipmasters or other persons having special knowledge of navigation and nautical affairs, who are called to the assistance of a court of admiralty in difficult cases involving questions of negligence, and who sit with the judge during the argument and give their advice upon questions of seamanship or the weight of testimony. The Empire, 19 Fed. 559.

NAUTICUM FÆNUS. See FÆNUS NAUTICUM.

NAVAGIUM. A duty on certain tenants to carry their lord's goods in a ship. 1 Mon. Ang. 922.

NAVAL ACADEMY. A school at Annapolis, Maryland, for the education of officers for the navy. By act of Congress of July 9, 1913, after June 30, 1913, and until June 30, 1919, each senator and each representative and delegate may appoint two midshipmen; there shall be one from Porto Rico, two from the District of Columbia, and ten at large. Upon graduation, they are to be commissioned ensigns in the navy, or may be assigned to the lowest commissioned grade in the marine corps or the staff corps of the navy. Appointments upon the recommendation of senators, representatives or delegates must be made by March 4th following notice of the vacancy; otherwise the secretary of the navy may appoint. All candidates must at the time of their examination be between the ages of 16 and 20 years.

Midshipmen are officers of the line in a qualified sense. Navy Reg. ch. II, 18, (3).

NAVAL CADET. Midshipmen at the Naval Academy were so called until the act of July 1, 1902, changed the name to midshipman.

NAVAL COURTS. Courts held abroad in certain cases to inquire into complaints by the master or seamen of a British ship, or as to the wreck or abandonment of such ship.

NAVAL COURTS MARTIAL. See COURT MARTIAL.

NAVAL LAW. A system of regulations for the government of the navy. 1 Kent 377, n. Homans, Nav. Laws; De Hart, Courts-Martial.

NAVAL OFFICER. An officer of the customs of the United States.

His office relates to the estimating duties, countersigning permits, clearances, etc., certifying the collectors' returns, and similar duties. Act of March, 2, 1799.

NAVAL PRIZE ACT. The act of 27 & 28 Vict. c. 25, which regulates questions of prize. See PRIZE.

NAVARCHUS, NAVICULARIUS (Lat.). In Civil Law. The master of an armed ship. Navicularius also denotes the master of a ship (patronus) generally. Cic. Ver. 4, 55; also, a carrier by water (exercitor navis). Calvinus, Lex.

NAVIGABLE WATERS. Those waters which afford a channel for useful commerce. The Montello, 20 Wall. (U. S.) 430, 22 L. Ed. 391.

The test by which the character of a stream as public or private is determined, is its navigability in fact; Fulmer v. Williams, 122 Pa. 191, 15 Atl. 726, 1 L. R. A. 603, 9 Am. St. Rep. 88; State v. Club, 100 N. C. 477, 5 S. E. 411, 6 Am. St. Rep. 618.

In its technical sense, the term navigable, at common law, is only applied to the sea, to arms of the sea, and to rivers which flow and reflow with the tide,—in other words, to tide-waters, the bed or soil of which is the property of the crown. All other waters are, in this sense of the word, unnavigable, and are, prima facie, strictly private property; but in England even such waters, if navigable in the popular sense of the term, are, either of common right or by dedication, subject to the use of the public as navigable highways, the fee or soil remaining in the riparian proprietors; 20 C. B. N. S. 1; Com. v. Charlestown, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 180, 11 Am. Dec. 161.

The rule of the common law, by which the ebb and flow of the tide has been made the criterion of navigability, has never been adopted in any of the United States, or, if adopted, it has been in a form modified and improved to fit the condition of the country and the wants of its inhabitants. According to the rule administered in the courts of this country, all rivers which are found "of sufficient capacity to float the products of the mines, the forests, or the tillage of the country through which they flow, to market;" Browne v. Scofield, 8 Barb. (N. Y.) 239; Harrison v. Fite, 148 Fed. 781, 78 C. C. A. 447; or which are capable of use "for the floating of vessels, boats, rafts, or logs"; Brown v. Chadbourne, 31 Me. 9, 50 Am. Dec. 641; Smart v. Lumber Co., 103 Me. 37, 68 Atl. 527, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1083; Hot Springs L. & Mfg. Co., 106 Va. 176, 55 S. E. 580, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 894 (but see American River W. Co. v. Amsden, 6 Cal. 443; Haines v. Hall, 17 Or. 165, 20 Pac. 831, 3 L. R. A. 609; Spokane Mill Co. v. Post, 50 Fed. 429; Falls Mfg. Co. v. Imp. Co., 87 Wis. 134, 58 N. W. 257; are subject to the free and unobstructed navigation of the public, independent of usage or of legislation; Treat v. Lord, 42 Me. 552, 66 Am. Dec. 298; Morgan v. King, 18 Barb. (N. Y.) 277; Homochitto River Com'rs v. Withers, 29 Miss. 21, 64 Am. Dec. 126. See Gerrish v. Brown, 51 Me. 256, 81 Am. Dec. 569; Olson v. Merrill, 42 Wis. 203; Escanaba Co. v. Chicago, 107 U. S. 682, 2 Sup. Ct. 185, 27 L. Ed. 442. Water navigable for pleasure boating must be regarded as navigable; Attorney General v. Woods, 108 Mass. 436, 11 Am. Rep. 380; but the mere capacity to pass in a boat of any size, however small, from one stream or rivulet to another, is not sufficient to constitute a navigable river of the United States; Leovy v. U. S., 177 U. S. 621, 20 Sup. Ct. 797, 44 L. Ed. 914. To make a stream a highway it must at least be navigable or floatable in its natural state at ordinary recurring winter freshets long enough to make it useful for some purpose of trade or agriculture; Banks v. Frazier, 111 Ky. 909, 64 S. W. 983; Harrison v. Fite, 148 Fed. 781, 78 C. C. A. 447; People v. Lumber Co., 107 Cal. 221, 40 Pac. 531, 48 Am. St. Rep. 125; Kamm v. Normand, 50 Or. 9, 91 Pac. 448, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 290, 126 Am. St. Rep. 698; mere ability to catch fish in a body of water does not make it navigable; Bolsa Land Co. v. Burdick, 151 Cal. 254, 90 Pac. 532, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 275.

Navigable streams are highways; Attorney General v. Woods, 108 Mass. 436, 11 Am. Rep. 380; Lamprey v. State, 52 Minn. 181, 53 N. W. 1139, 18 L. R. A. 670, 38 Am. St. Rep. 541; Grand Rapids v. Powers, 89 Mich. 94, 50 N. W. 661, 14 L. R. A. 498, 28 Am. St. Rep. 276; a navigable stream is not a highway in the sense that that word is used in the constitution of South Carolina, forbidding the enactment of local or special laws to lay out, open, alter or work roads or highways; Manigault v. Springs, 199 U. S. 473, 26 Sup. Ct. 127, 50 L. Ed. 274.

The navigable waters of the United States are such as are navigable in fact; Scranton v. Wheeler, 57 Fed. 803, 6 C. C. A. 585, 16 U. S. App. 152; and which by themselves, or in connection with other waters, form a continuous channel for commerce with foreign countries or among the states; Miller v. New York, 109 U. S. 385, 3 Sup. Ct. 228, 27 L. Ed. 971.

A river may be navigable below the ebb and flow of the tide in the sense of the common law, and, in fact, navigable above; and the question of boundary in respect to lands adjoining it will be determined by one principle above, and by another below tide-water; Attorney General v. R. Co., 27 N. J. Eq. 1. It is not necessary that the stream should be navigable all the year round; Thunder Bay R. B. Co. v. Speechly, 31 Mich. 336, 18 Am. Rep. 184; Bucki v. Cone, 25 Fla. 1, 6 South. 160. There can be no prescriptive right to maintain or continue an obstruction to the navigation of a public stream; Olive v. State, 86 Ala. 88, 5 South. 653, 4 L. R. A. 33.

"The term 'navigable waters,' as commonly used in the law, has three distinct meanings: first, as synonymous with 'tide-waters,' being waters whether fresh or salt wherever the ebb and flow of the sea is felt; or second, as limited to tide-waters which are capable of being navigated for some useful purpose; or third, as including all waters, whether within or beyond the ebb and flow of the tide which can be used for navigation." Com. v. Vincent, 108 Mass. 447. See 19 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 147. In North Carolina the test of navigability is not whether the stream is subject to the ebb and flow of the tide, but whether it is navigable for sea-going vessels; State v. Eason, 114 N. C. 787, 19 S. E. 88, 23 L. R. A. 520, 41 Am. St. Rep. 811; while in South Carolina the test is its navigable capacity, without regard to the character of the craft; Heyward v. Min. Co., 42 S. C. 138, 19 S. E. 963, 20 S. E. 64, 28 L. R. A. 42, 46 Am. St. Rep. 702.

In New York, it seems that courts are bound to take judicial notice of what streams are, and what are not, highways, at common law; Browne v. Scofield, 8 Barb. (N. Y.) 239; but it has been held that what is a navigable stream is a mixed question of law and fact; if a stream is not navigable the legislature cannot declare it to be so, because the legislature cannot appropriate it to public use without provision for compensation; Morgan v. King, 35 N. Y. 454, 91 Am. Dec. 58.

The technical title to the beds of navigable rivers of the United States is either in the states in which the rivers are situated or in the riparian owners, depending on the local law. It is a qualified one, and subordinate to the public right of navigation and subject to the absolute power of congress over the improvement of navigable rivers. Under the constitution, congress can adopt any means for the improvement of navigation that are not prohibited by that instrument itself. The judgment of congress as to whether a construction in or over a navigable river is or is not an obstruction to navigation is an exercise of legislative power and wholly within its control and beyond judicial review. The flow of the stream of a navigable river is in no sense private property, and there is no room for judicial review, at the instance of a private owner of the banks of the stream, of a determination of congress that such flow is needed for the improvement of navigation. One placing obstructions in a navigable stream under a revocable permit of the secretary of war does not acquire any right to maintain them longer than the government continues the license. Private right to running water in a great navigable stream is inconceivable. Every structure in the water of a navigable river is subordinate to the right of navigation and must be removed, even if the owners sustain a loss thereby, if congress, in assertion of its power over navigation so determines; U. S. v. Chandler-Dunbar Co., 229 U. S. 54, 33 Sup. Ct. 667, 57 L. Ed. 1063.

Such waters entirely within the limits of a state are subject to the same control by the federal government as those extending through or reaching beyond the limits of the state; Minnesota C. & P. Co. v. Pratt, 101 Minn. 197, 112 N. W. 395, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 105.

The use and control of waters lying within the geographical boundaries of the United States is not restrained by international comity; Minnesota Canal & P. Co. v. Pratt, 101 Minn. 197, 112 N. W. 395, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 105. Express authority is necessary to authorize the laying out of a highway into a navigable body of water for the purpose of a wharf or landing place; Com'r. of Highways v. Ludwick, 151 Mich. 498, 115 N. W. 419, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1170, 14 Ann. Cas. 287; Chase v. Cochran, 102 Me. 431, 67 Atl. 320; an act giving a city the right to project or extend streets over tide lands is authorized only for the extension of the existing streets; Seattle & M. Ry. Co. v. State, 7 Wash. 150, 34 Pac. 551, 22 L. R. A. 217, 38 Am. St. Rep. 836; it has been held that a lake may be filled in along the shore to accommodate a street; People v. Kirk, 162 Ill. 138, 45 N. E. 830, 53 Am. St. Rep. 277; that a town has jurisdiction to lay out a highway over land that is above mean high water mark although it is covered by the sea during the highest tides; Hunt v. Com., 183 Mass. 307, 67 N. E. 966. It has been held in England that the metropolitan board of works has no power to erect any works on the bed or soil of the Thames without the consent of the admiralty and the conservators of the river; 13 C. B. N. S. 768; 8 Jur. N. S. 891; 6 L. T. N. S. 187; the fact that the extension of a railroad across an arm of the sea would interfere with plaintiff's rights to navigate such waters does not inflict on him an injury different from that done to the public at large so as to entitle him to an injunction; O'Brien v. R. Co., 17 Conn. 372.

The act of congress of March 3, 1899, provides that no bridge, dam, dike or causeway shall be built over any harbor, river, canal or other navigable water until the consent of congress shall have been obtained and the plans approved by the chief of engineers and the secretary of war. The consent of congress is not required if a bridge is built by authority of a state legislature across rivers and waterways the navigable portions of which be wholly within the limits of a single state.

This act does not extend to an existing bridge but does cover the rebuilding of such; Rogers Sand Co. v. R. Co., 139 Fed. 7, 71 C. C. A. 419 (the earlier act of a like character of September 19, 1890, was held not to apply to a bridge the construction of which had been authorized by law prior to the act; Adams v. Ulmer, 91 Me. 47, 39 Atl. 347).

In the absence of congressional action, a state may authorize a construction over navigable waters; Depew v. Board, 5 Ind. 8; Highway Com'rs v. Chaffee, 1 Mich. N. P. 147; Kansas City M. & B. R. Co. v. Wiygul, 82 Miss. 223, 33 South. 965, 61 L. R. A. 578; though it more or less obstructs navigation; Fall River I. W. Co. v. R. Co., 5 Allen (Mass.) 221.

See DAM; BRIDGE; WATERS; WATER-COURSE; RIVERS; LAKE; RIPARIAN PROPRIETORS; TIDE-WATER.

NAVIGATING. A vessel which, though touching bottom, forces her way by her own screw through the soft mud is navigating. Western Union Tel. Co. v. S. S. Co., 59 Fed. 365, 8 C. C. A. 152.

NAVIGATION ACT. The stat. 12 Car. II. c. 78. It was repealed by 6 Geo. IV. cc. 109, 110, 114. See 16 & 17 Vict. c. 107; 17 & 18 Vict. cc. 5 and 120; 3 Steph. Com. 145.

NAVIGATION, RULES OF. Rules and regulations which govern the motions of ships or vessels when approaching each other under such circumstances that a collision may possibly ensue.

These rules are firmly maintained in the United States courts. A federal question is presented by a ruling of a state court which substantially ignores the obligatory force of rules of navigation; Belden v. Chase, 150 U. S. 674, 14 Sup. Ct. 264, 37 L. Ed. 1218.

The rules of navigation which prevailed under the general maritime law, in the absence of statutory enactments, will be referred to, although, as hereinafter stated, they have been superseded by express enactment in most of the commercial countries of the world.

These rules were derived mainly from the decisions of the high court of admiralty in England, and of the superior courts of the United States, and they are based upon the rules promulgated by the corporation of the Trinity House on the 30th of October, 1840, and which may be found in full in 1 W. Rob. 488. Though now codified, see infra, they are here continued as in the former edition as a matter of historical interest.

For sailing-vessels about to meet. 1. Those having the wind fair shall give way to those on a wind [or close-hauled].

2. When both are going by the wind, the vessel on the starboard tack shall keep her wind, and the one on the larboard tack bear up, thereby passing each other on the larboard hand.

3. When both vessels have the wind large or abeam, and meet, they shall pass each other in the same way, on the larboard hand; to effect which two last-mentioned objects the helm must be put to port.

For a sailing and a steam vessel about to meet. 1. Steam-vessels are to be considered in the light of vessels navigating with a fair wind, and should give way to sailing-vessels on a wind on either tack.

2. A steam-vessel and a sailing-vessel going large, when about to meet, should each port her helm and pass on the larboard side of the other; 1 W. Rob. 478; 2 id. 515.

But in the United States courts it has been almost uniformly held, and the rule is now firmly established, that when a sailing-vessel and a steamer are about to meet, the sailing-vessel must, under ordinary circumstances, and whether going large, or before the wind, or close-hauled by the wind, keep her course, and the steamer must take all the measures necessary to avoid a collision; St. John v. Paine, 10 How. (U. S.) 557, 13 L. Ed. 537; The R. R. Kirkland, 48 Fed. 760; The Havana, 54 Fed. 411; The Blue Jacket, 144 U. S. 371, 12 Sup. Ct. 711, 36 L. Ed. 469.

For steam-vessels about to meet. 1. When steam-vessels on different courses are about to meet under such circumstances as to involve the risk of collision, each vessel must put her helm to port, so as always to pass on the larboard side of the other.

2. A steam-vessel passing another in a narrow channel must always leave the vessel she is passing on the larboard hand.

The following abstract of authorities may also be referred to as furnishing rules of decision (in addition to the general rules of navigation) in the particular cases alluded to; and they will be found generally applicable in cases of collision arising under the new regulations, as well as in cases arising under the general maritime law.

When a steamer or other vessel is about to pass another vessel proceeding in the same general direction, she must allow the foremost boat to keep her way and course, and must take the necessary measures to avoid a collision; Whitridge v. Dill, 23 How. (U. S.) 448, 16 L. Ed. 581; Abb. Adm. Pr. 108; The Rhode Island, 1 Blatchf. 363, Fed. Cas. No. 11,743.

A vessel under sail or steam is bound to keep clear of a vessel stationary or at anchor, provided the latter is in a proper place, and exhibits a proper light,—the presumption in such cases being that the vessel in motion is at fault; 3 Kent 231; 3 W. Rob. 49.

A vessel entering a harbor is bound to keep the most vigilant watch to avoid a collision; Culbertson v. The Southern Belle, 18 How. (U. S.) 584, 15 L. Ed. 493; and in the night-time she ought generally to have her whole crew on deck; The Scioto, 2 Ware (Dav. 359) 360, Fed. Cas. No. 12,508. And see 3 Kent 231; 1 Dods. 467.

By the general maritime law, vessels upon the high seas were not ordinarily required constantly to exhibit a light; 2 W. Rob. 4; The Delaware v. The Osprey, 2 Wall. Jr. 268, Fed. Cas. No. 3,763; but the subject is now regulated by statute in the various maritime countries.

Regulations made by various governments are binding upon all vessels within the jurisdiction of that government; Story, Conf. Laws, ch. 14; 1 Swab. 38, 63, 96; Smith v. Condry, 1 How. (U. S.) 28, 11 L. Ed. 35; but it is beyond the power of the legislature to make rules applicable to foreign vessels when beyond their jurisdiction; that is, more than a marine league from their shores; 1 Swab. 96. And see The New York v. Rae, 18 How. (U. S.) 223, 15 L. Ed. 359. It has, accordingly, been held that an English rule is not applicable in a case of collision on the high seas between a British and a foreign vessel, and that the latter could not set up in its defence a violation of the English statute by the British vessel; 1 Swab. 63, 96; and it was declared that in such a case the general maritime law must be the rule of the court. See The City of Washington, 92 U. S. 31, 23 L. Ed. 600.

The British Government, by an Order in Council, in 1863, promulgated certain regulations for preventing collisions at sea. An Order in Council, in 1879, promulgated new regulations, to take effect on September 1, 1880. These were adopted in pursuance of the recommendation of representatives of different nations, and are stated in the last-mentioned Order to have been very generally adopted by commercial nations. They were adapted to the United States with regard to vessels on the high seas and in coast waters, in 1864 (R. S. § 4233). A revised code was adopted by England in 1884, and then was adopted by the United States with reference to vessels on the high seas in 1885. (England by Orders in Council in 1896, 1897 and 1906, amended the Code of 1884.)

In 1890 under an international agreement congress adopted a complete system of rules of the road governing vessels both on the ocean and on our own inland waters. These rules consist of: 1. The International Rules agreed upon by all nations, which went into effect July 1, 1897; 1 R. S. Sup. 781. 2. Rules for the navigation of rivers, harbors, and inland waters of the United States, navigable by sea-going vessels, which went into effect October 7, 1897; 2 R. S. Sup. 620. 3. Rules to regulate the navigation on the Great Lakes and their connecting and tributary waters as far east as Montreal, which went into effect March 1, 1895; 2 R. S. Sup. 320. 4. Rules for the navigation of the Red River of the North and rivers entering into the Gulf of Mexico and its tributaries, which are the same as were formerly in use, and are to be found in R. S. § 4233 and its amendments, and rules made pursuant to R. S. § 4412 by the Board of Supervising Inspectors of steam-vessels. Copies of all these rules are furnished on application by the Commissioner of Navigation. These various codes of rules are too long to be set forth here. An act of January 19, 1907 (supplementary to the act of August 19, 1890), made rules for fishing vessels and boats, and repealed article 10 of the act of March 3, 1885, and also the act of August 30, 1894.

It is evident that these rules and regulations were intended to supersede all other rules of navigation, and every other system of vessels' lights, wherever they may be adopted. They establish a well-devised and complete system of vessels' lights, and furnish plain and simple rules of navigation applicable to all the ordinary cases of vessels approaching each other under such circumstances as to involve the risk of collision,—leaving extraordinary cases, such as the meeting of vessels in extremely narrow or other very difficult channels (in respect to which no safe general rule can be devised), to the practical good sense and professional skill of those in charge of such vessels. Under all ordinary circumstances a vessel discharges her full duty to another vessel by a faithful and literal observance of the international rules; The Oregon, 158 U. S. 187, 15 Sup. Ct. 804, 39 L. Ed. 943. Where there were no positive rules of navigation on a foreign river, but there was a certain practice, it was held that a vessel which disregarded the practice was responsible for a collision occurring thereby; L. R. 15 P. D. 194. A departure from the rules, to be justifiable, must be necessary in order to avoid immediate danger. But that necessity must not have been caused by the negligence or fault of the party disobeying the rule; and courts of admiralty lean against the exceptions; Crockett v. The Isaac Newton, 18 How. (U. S.) 581, 583, 15 L. Ed. 492; 1 W. Rob. 157, 478. And see Belden v. Chase, 150 U. S. 674, 14 Sup. Ct. 264, 37 L. Ed. 1218; The Maggie J. Smith, 123 U. S. 349, 8 Sup. Ct. 159, 31 L. Ed. 175. It is no excuse for a vessel, in departing from the navigation rules, when rounding the Battery at New York, that vessels often agree with each other to do so, when it appears that the vessel in question took upon herself the responsibility of departing from the rules for her own convenience; The E. A. Packer, 58 Fed. 251, 7 C. C. A. 216, 14 U. S. App. 684.

Exceptions are admitted with reluctance and only where adherence to the rules must necessarily result in a collision; The Albert Dumois, 177 U. S. 240, 20 Sup. Ct. 595, 44 L. Ed. 751.

The maritime law, however, requires that in collision cases every violation of a rule of navigation, and every other act or omission alleged to be a fault, shall be considered in connection with all the attending circumstances; and when by inevitable accident, or the fault of one of two colliding vessels, a vessel free from fault is suddenly brought into such circumstances of imminent danger as probably to render the deliberate or proper exercise of the judgment and skill of an experienced seaman impossible, an error of judgment, or other mistake, is not regarded as a legal fault; The Northern Indiana, 3 Blatch. 92, Fed. Cas. No. 10,320; The Havana, 54 Fed. 411; The Maggie J. Smith, 123 U. S. 349, 8 Sup. Ct. 159, 31 L. Ed. 175.

The proper and continual exhibition of the bright and colored lights which these rules and regulations prescribe, and their careful observance by the officer of the deck and the lookout of every vessel, constitute the very foundation of the system of navigation established by such rules and regulations. The exhibition of such lights, and the strict compliance with the rules in respect to stationing and keeping a competent and careful person in the proper place and exclusively devoted to the discharge of the duties of a lookout, are of the utmost importance.

The stringent requirements of our maritime courts in respect to lookouts may be learned by consulting the following authorities; St. John v. Paine, 10 How. (U. S.) 585, 13 L. Ed. 537; The Northern Indiana, 3 Blatch. 92, Fed. Cas. No. 10,320; The Clara, 55 Fed. 1021, 5 C. C. A. 390; The Charles H. Senff, 53 Fed. 669; The John T. Pratt, 60 Fed. 1022. This rule admits of no exception on account of size, in favor of any craft capable of committing injuries; The Marion, 56 Fed. 271. A sailing-vessel is entitled to assume that a steam-vessel, approaching her, is being navigated with a proper lookout and with reasonable attention to the obligations laid upon her; The Coe F. Young, 49 Fed. 167, 1 C. C. A. 219, 1 U. S. App. 11. The absence of a lookout is not material where the presence of one would not have availed to prevent a collision; The Blue Jacket, 144 U. S. 371, 12 Sup. Ct. 711, 36 L. Ed. 469.

The neglect to carry or display the lights prescribed by these rules and regulations will always be held, prima facie, a fault, in a collision case; Waring v. Clarke, 5 How. (U. S.) 441, 465, 12 L. Ed. 226; 3 W. Rob. 191; Swab, 120, 245, 253, 519; 1 Lush. 382; The Ann Caroline, 2 Wall. (U. S.) 538, 17 L. Ed. 833. And, upon the same principles, the neglect, in a fog, to use the prescribed fog-signals will also be considered, prima facie, a fault; Desty, Adm. § 360. See Fog.

It will be observed that the duty of slackening speed, in all cases when risk of collision is involved, is absolutely and imperatively imposed upon every steam-vessel, by these regulations, and that they require that every steam-vessel shall stop and reverse her engine when necessary to avoid a collision.

The duty of slackening speed in order to avoid a collision had been frequently declared by the maritime courts before the adoption of these regulations; 3 Hagg. Adm. 414; The Northern Indiana, 3 Blatch. 92, Fed. Cas. No. 10,320; 2 W. Rob. 1; 3 id. 95, 270, 377; St. John v. Paine, 10 How. (U. S.) 557, 13 L. Ed. 537; but there was no inflexible rule requiring a steamer to slacken speed in all cases when there was risk of collision; and the neglect to do it was held to be a fault only in those cases where its necessity was shown by the proofs. This left the question open to be determined by the courts in each particular case, and perhaps upon vague and unreliable estimates of time and distance and bearings, or upon conflicting and unsatisfactory testimony; but the legislature, in view of the great power and speed of the steamers now in general use, and the very disastrous consequences of a collision of such vessels when running at their ordinary speed, has wisely made the duty imperative; The Illinois, 5 Blatch. 256, Fed. Cas. No. 7,002. Newton v. Stebbins, 10 How. (U. S.) 586, 13 L. Ed. 551; The Free State, 91 U. S. 200, 23 L. Ed. 299; The State of California, 49 Fed. 172, 1 C. C. A. 224, 7 U. S. App. 20. See COLLISION; MARITIME LAW.

NAVIRE. In French Law. A ship. Emerig. Traite des Assur. c. 6, § 1.

NAVY. The whole shipping, taken collectively, belonging to the government of an independent nation, and appropriated for the purposes of naval warfare. It does not include ships belonging to private individuals nor (in the United States, at least) revenue vessels or transports in the service of the war department.

Under the constitution, congress has power to provide, and maintain a navy. This power authorizes the government to buy and build vessels of war, to establish a naval academy, and to provide for the punishment of desertion and other crimes, and to make all needful rules for the government of the navy. See U. S. v. Bevans, 3 Wheat. (U. S.) 337, 4 L. Ed. 404; Dynes v. Hoover, 20 How. (U. S.) 65, 15 L. Ed. 838; U. S. v. Bevans, 3 Wheat. (U. S.) 370, 4 L. Ed. 404.

See COURT-MARTIAL; NAVY PERSONNEL ACT; NAVAL ACADEMY.

NAVY BILLS. Bills drawn by officers of the British navy for their pay, etc.

A bill of exchange drawn by the paymaster of a United States vessel, while abroad, to procure money for the expenses of his ship or fleet.

NAVY DEPARTMENT. See DEPARTMENT.

NAVY PERSONNEL ACT. The act of March 3, 1899, to reorganize and increase the efficiency of the navy and marine corps. It transferred engineer officers to the line and fixed their corresponding rank. It put officers of corresponding rank in the army and navy on the same general footing with respect to their general pay. See U. S. v. Thomas, 195 U. S. 418, 25 Sup. Ct. 102, 49 L. Ed. 259. As to their corresponding rank, see RANK.

NAVY REGISTER. An official list published semi-annually of the officers of the United States navy, their stations, rates of pay, etc., with a list of the ships.

NAVY REGULATIONS. Regulations of the navy established by the secretary of the navy with the approval of the president. They have the force of law; Ex parte Reed, 100 U. S. 13, 25 L. Ed. 538.

NE ADMITTAS (Lat.). The name of a writ now practically obsolete, so called from the first words of the Latin form, by which the bishop is forbidden to admit to a benefice the other party's clerk during the pendency of a quare impedit. Fitzh. N. B. 37; Reg. Orig. 31; 3 Bla. Com. 248; 1 Burn. Eccl. Law 31.

NE BAILA PAS (he did not deliver). A plea in detinue, by which the defendant denies the delivery to him of the thing sued for.

NE DISTURBA PAS. In Pleading. The general issue in quare impedit. Hob. 162.

See Rast. Entr. 517; Winch, Entr. 703. Andr. Steph. Pl. 230.

NE DONA PAS, NON DEDIT. In Pleading. The general issue in formedon. It is in the following formula: "And the said C D, by J K, his attorney, comes and defends the right, when, etc., and says that the said E F did not give the said manor, with the appurtenances, or any part thereof, to the said G B, and the heirs of his body issuing, in manner and form as the said A B hath in his count above alleged. And of this the said C D puts himself upon the country." 10 Wentw. Pl. 182; Andr. Steph. Pl. 230.

NE EXEAT REPUBLICA, NE EXEAT REGNO (Lat. That he do not depart from the state, or kingdom). The name of a writ originally employed in England as a high prerogative process, for political purposes. Story, Eq. Jur. § 1467; Samuel v. Wiley, 50 N. H. 353; but now applied in civil matters only, issued by a court of chancery, directed to the sheriff, reciting that the defendant in the case is indebted to the complainant, and that he designs going quickly into parts without the state, to the damage of the complainant, and then commanding him to cause the defendant to give bail in a certain sum that he will not leave the state without leave of the court, and for want of such bail that he, the sheriff, do commit the defendant to prison.

This writ is a part of the English chancery practice and is usually a part of that practice in states where it is in force. It may be issued by the United States District Courts; Lewis v. Shainwald, 48 Fed. 492.

This writ has been expressly abolished in very many of the states. Yet its place has been filled by other methods of procedure, similar in effect. The constitutions of Vermont, Pennsylvania, Kentucky, Mississippi, and Louisiana prohibit any restraint upon emigration. In Arkansas the writ is abolished, and in the code of New York a system of arrest and bail is substituted. In Ohio and California it is abolished; Cable v. Alvord, 27 Ohio St. 654; Ex parte Harker, 49 Cal. 465. In those jurisdictions where ne exeat is still recognized, the circumstances under which the writ will be granted, and the requisites to its issuance, are largely regulated by statute; but certain general principles govern in nearly every case. These will be found set forth in Rhodes v. Cousins, 6 Rand. (Va.) 191, 18 Am. Dec. 715. See 14 Am. Dec. 560, note.

This writ is issued to prevent debtors from escaping from their creditors. It amounts, in ordinary civil cases, to nothing more than process to hold to bail, or to compel a party to give security to abide the decree to be made in his case; Bisph. Eq. § 36; 2 Kent 32; Beames, Ne Exeat; 13 Vintr. Abr. 537; 1 Suppl. to Ves. Jr. 33, 352, 467; 1 Bla. Com. 138; 19 V. & B. 312; Smedberg v. Mark, 6 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 138; Cable v. Alvord, 27 Ohio St. 666; Adams v. Whitcomb, 46 Vt. 708; Clowes v. Judge, 1 Del. Ch. 295.

Arrest under this writ is not in violation of a constitutional provision that a person shall not be imprisoned for debt, unless in cases of tort, or where there is a strong presumption of fraud; People v. Barton, 16 Colo. 75, 26 Pac. 149.

The writ may be issued against foreigners subject to the jurisdiction of the court, citizens of the same state, or of another state, when it appears by a positive affidavit that the defendant is about to leave the state, or has threatened to do so, and that the debt would be lost or endangered by his departure; Mattocks v. Tremain, 3 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 75; Woodward v. Schatzell, id. 412. On the same principle which has been adopted in the courts of law that a defendant could not be held to bail twice for the same cause of action, it has been decided that a writ of ne exeat was not properly issued against a defendant who had been held to bail in an action at law; 8 Ves. 594.

This writ can be issued only for equitable demands; Nixon v. Richardson, 4 Des. Eq. (S. C.) 108; Smedberg v. Mark, 6 Johns. Ch. 138; and not where the plaintiff by process of law may hold the defendant to bail; 3 Bro. C. C. 218; 8 Ves. Jr. 593; Orme v. McPherson, 36 Ga. 573; MacDonough v. Gaynor, 18 N. J. Eq. 249; Bonesteel v. Bonesteel, 28 Wis. 245; and where there is an adequate remedy at law, the writ will be dissolved; Hawthorn v. Kelly, 30 Ga. 965. It may be allowed in a case to prevent the failure of justice; Porter v. Spencer, 2 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 169. When the demand is strictly legal, it cannot be issued, because the court has no jurisdiction. When the court has concurrent jurisdiction with the courts of common law, the writ may, in such case, issue, unless the party has been already arrested at law; Porter v. Spencer, 2 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 170. In all cases when a writ of ne exeat is claimed, the plaintiff's equity must appear on the face of the bill; Woodward v. Schatzell, 3 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 414.

It was granted only after bill filed; 3 P. Wms. 312; so by act of congress of March 2, 1893; contra, 5 Ves. 92.

The writ may be provided for in the final decree and will continue in force until dissolved by the court or until the decree is satisfied; Lewis v. Shainwald, 48 Fed. 492. It is not superseded by a subsequent bond for the performance of final decree; Elliott v. Elliott (N. J.) 36 Atl. 951. It may be granted on motion founded on affidavit, but where the facts charged in the bill are such as to entitle the complainant to the writ, it is sufficient to refer to them as showing the ground of the complainant's demand without restating them in the affidavit; Clayton v. Mitchell, 1 Del. Ch. 32.

The amount of bail is fixed by the court itself; and a sum is usually directed sufficient to cover the existing debt and a reasonable amount of future interest, having regard to the probable duration of the suit; Gibert v. Colt, 1 Hopk. Ch. (N. Y.) 501, 14 Am. Dec. 557.

The defendant arrested upon a writ of ne exeat may obtain a discharge of the writ upon giving bond, with surety, to answer and be amenable to the process of the court; Griswold v. Hazard, 141 U. S. 260, 11 Sup. Ct. 972, 999, 35 L. Ed. 678.

It is a breach of the bond if the party leaves the jurisdiction, although he has returned; In re Appel, 163 Fed. 1002, 90 C. C. A. 172, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 76.

A writ of ne exeat provincia issued in colonial Pennsylvania only in cases of equitable debts; William Henry Rawle, Equity in Pennsylvania.

NE INIUSTE VEXES (Lat.). In Old English Law. The name of a writ which issued to relieve a tenant upon whom his lord had distrained for more services than he was bound to perform.

It was a prohibition to the lord, not unjustly to distrain or vex his tenant. Fitzh. N. B. Having been long obsolete, it was abolished in 1833.

NE LUMINIBUS OFFICIATUR (Lat.). In Civil Law. The name of a servitude which restrains the owner of a house from making such erections as obstruct the light of the adjoining house. Dig. 8. 4. 15. 17; SERVITUDE.

NE RECIPIATUR (Lat.). That it be not received. A caveat or words of caution given to a law officer, by a party in a cause, not to receive the next proceedings of his opponent. 1 Sell. Fr. 8.

NE RELESSA PAS (Law Fr.). The name of a replication to a plea of release, by which the plaintiff insists he did not release. 2 Bulstr. 55.

NE UNQUES ACCOUPLE (Law Fr.). A plea by which the party denies that he ever was lawfully married to the person to whom it refers. See the form, 2 Wils. 118; 10 Wentw. Pl. 158; 2 H. Bla. 145; 3 Chitty, Pl. 599.

NE UNQUES EXECUTOR. A plea by which the party who uses it denies that the plaintiff is an executor, as he claims to be; or that the defendant is executor, as the plaintiff in his declaration charges him to be. 1 Chitty, Pl. 484; 1 Saund. 274, n. 3; Comyns, Dig. Pleader (2 D 2); 2 Chitty, Pl. 498.

NE UNQUES SEISIE QUE DOWER. A plea by which a defendant denies the right of a widow who sues for and demands her dower in lands, etc., late of her husband, because the husband was not on the day of her marriage with him, or at any time afterwards, seised of such estate, so that she could be endowed of the same. See 2 Saund. 329; 10 Wentw. Pl. 159; 3 Chitty, Pl. 598.

NE UNQUES SON RECEIVER. The name of a plea in an action of account-render, by which the defendant affirms that he never was receiver of the plaintiff. 12 Viner, Abr. 183.

NE VARIETUR (Lat. that it be not changed). A form sometimes written by notaries public upon bills or notes, for the purpose of identifying them. This does not destroy their negotiability. Fleckner v. Bank, 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 338, 5 L. Ed. 631.

NEAP TIDES. Those tides which happen between the full and change of the moon, twice in every twenty-four hours. Teschemacher v. Thompson, 18 Cal. 21, 79 Am. Dec. 151.

NEAR. Close or at no great distance. Ward v. R. Co., 109 N. C. 358, 13 S. E. 926. Near is a relative term, and its precise meaning depends upon circumstances; Barrett v. Schuyler Co. Ct., 44 Mo. 197; American D. & I. Co. v. Trustees, 39 N. J. Eq. 435; Kirkbride v. Lafayette Co., 108 U. S. 211, 2 Sup. Ct. 501, 27 L. Ed. 705.

Two and one half miles was held to be near; Barrett v. Schuyler Co. Ct., 44 Mo. 197.

NEAREST. Not necessarily nearest by geographical measurement, but by conveniences of access, having regard to the usual travelled route. Shaw v. Cade, 54 Tex. 307. See MILEAGE.

NEAT. See NET.

NEAT CATTLE. Oxen or heifers. Whart. Dict. "Beeves" may include neat stock, but all neat stock are not beeves; Castello v. State, 36 Tex. 324. It includes a cow. State v. Crow, 107 Mo. 341, 17 S. W. 745.

NEAT LAND. Land let out to the yeomanry. Cowell.

NEATNESS. In Pleading. The statement in apt and appropriate words of all the necessary facts and no more. Lawes, Plead. 62.

NEBRASKA. One of the states of the American Union, being the thirty-seventh admitted to the Union.

Its territory formed a part of the province of Louisiana as ceded by France, and was afterwards included in the district and the territory of Louisiana as organized in 1804 and 1805, respectively, and in the territory of Missouri, to which the name of the last-named territory was changed in 1812. The territory of Nebraska, extending beyond the limits of the present state westward to the summit of the Rocky Mountains, and northward to the British possessions, was organized by the act of May 30, 1854. An enabling act for the formation of a state government was passed April 19, 1864; a state constitution was adopted June 21, 1866; on the 9th of February, 1867, an act was passed for the admission of the state into the Union, on condition that civil rights and the elective franchise should be secured to all races, excepting Indians not taxed; and on the first of March, 1867, a proclamation by the president announced the acceptance of this condition, whereupon by the terms of the act the admission of the state became complete. The present constitution was adopted October 12, 1875.

There was an amendment in 1912, providing for initiative and referendum.

NEC NON. A clause so called which was used as a fiction to give jurisdiction to the common pleas in connection with the writ of quare clausum fregit. 1 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 89, note. See BILL OF MIDDLESEX.

NECESSARIES. Such things as are proper and requisite for the sustenance of man, including food, clothing, medicine, and habitation. Bergh v. Warner, 47 Minn. 250, 50 N. W. 77, 28 Am. St. Rep. 362.

The term necessities is not confined merely to what is requisite barely to support life, but includes many of the conveniences of refined society. It is a relative term, which must be applied to the circumstances and conditions of the parties; Add. Contr. 382; Cunningham v. Irwin, 7 S. & R. (Pa.) 247, 10 Am. Dec. 458. Ornaments and superfluities of dress, such as are usually suitable to the party's rank and situation in life; 7 C. & P. 52; 8 Term 578; Bergh v. Warner, 47 Minn. 250, 50 N. W. 77, 28 Am. St. Rep. 362; Neasham v. McNair, 103 Ia. 695, 72 N. W. 773, 38 L. R. A. 847, 64 Am. St. Rep. 202 (a diamond shirt stud for the husband); some degree of education; 4 M. & W. 727; Middlebury College v. Chandler, 16 Vt. 683, 42 Am. Dec. 537 (but not a set of Stoddard's Lectures; Shuman v. Steinel, 129 Wis. 422, 109 N. W. 74, 7 L. R. A. [N. S.] 1048, 116 Am. St. Rep. 961, 9 Ann. Cas. 1064); lodging and house-rent; 1 B. & P. 340; see Tupper v. Cadwell, 12 Metc. (Mass.) 559, 46 Am. Dec. 704; 5 Q. B. 606; a board bill; Kilgore v. Rich, 83 Me. 305, 22 Atl. 176, 12 L. R. A. 859, 23 Am. St. Rep. 780; board and lodging; Edminston v. Smith, 13 Idaho, 645, 92 Pac. 842, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 871, 121 Am. St. Rep. 294; pew rent; St. John's Parish v. Bronson, 40 Conn. 75, 16 Am. Rep. 17; horses, saddles, bridles, liquors, pistols; Beeler v. Young, 1 Bibb (Ky.) 519. An infant is not liable on a contract for the erection of a dwelling house; Allen v. Lardner, 78 Hun (N. Y.) 603, 29 N. Y. Supp. 213. A racing bicycle was held a necessary for an apprentice earning 21s. a week and living with his parents; 78 L. T. 296. Jewelry purchased by an infant as a present for a young lady to whom he was engaged without the consent of his guardian was held not a necessary; Hewlings v. Graham, 84 L. T. Rep. 496. Whether articles of a certain kind or certain subjects of expenditure are or are not such necessities as an infant may contract for, is a matter of law; but the question whether any particular things come under these classes, and the question, also, as to quantity, are generally matters for the jury to determine; Tupper v. Cadwell, 12 Metc. (Mass.) 559, 46 Am. Dec. 704; Phelps v. Worcester, 11 N. H. 51; 6 M. & W. 42; 6 C. & P. 690; Ans. Contr. 113; Poll. Contr. 67.

Infants, when not maintained by parent or guardian, may contract for necessities; 4 M. & W. 727; Perrin v. Wilson, 10 Mo. 451; Wailing v. Toll, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 141; Genereux v. Sibley, 18 R. I. 43, 25 Atl. 345. But when living with and supported by their parents they are not liable for necessities; Gay v. Ballou, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 403, 21 Am. Dec. 158; McKanna v. Merry, 61 Ill. 177; Tharp v. Connelly, 48 Mo. App. 59; Ewell, Lead. Cas. 55. Nor can an infant pledge his father's credit, as a wife can her husband's, on abandonment of duty; Gordon v. Potter, 17 Vt. 348; 6 M. & W. 482; Schoul. Dom. Rel. 328. Infants are not liable at law for borrowed money, though expended for necessities; Beeler v. Young, 1 Bibb (Ky.) 519; Walker v. Simpson, 7 W. & S. (Pa.) 83, 42 Am. Dec. 216; Bent v. Manning, 10 Vt. 225. See 1 P. Wms. 558; Conn v. Coburn, 7 N. H. 368, 26 Am. Dec. 746; N. H. Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Noyes, 32 N. H. 345. Otherwise in equity; 1 P. Wms. 558; Watson v. Cross, 2 Duvall (Ky.) 149; Walker v. Simpson, 7 W. & S. (Pa.) 83, 42 Am. Dec. 216. But they are liable for money advanced at their request to a third party to pay for necessities; Swift v. Bennett, 10 Cush. (Mass.) 436; Conn v. Coburn, 7 N. H. 368, 26 Am. Dec. 746; Kilgore v. Rich, 83 Me. 305, 22 Atl. 176, 12 L. R. A. 859, 23 Am. St. Rep. 780. An infant is not liable upon a bill of exchange at the suit of an indorsee of the bill, although it was accepted for the price of necessities; [1891] 1 Q. B. 413; held contra on a note; Melton v. Katzenstein (Tex.) 49 S. W. 173. See 35 Centr. L. J. 203.

Services rendered by an attorney to an infant in examining the public records and advising him as to his rights to certain property are not necessities; Cobbey v. Buchanan, 48 Neb. 391, 67 N. W. 176. Necessaries for the infant's wife and children are necessities for himself; Stra, 168; Com. Dig. Infant (B 5); Beeler v. Young, 1 Bibb (Ky.) 519; Angel v. McLellan, 16 Mass. 31, 8 Am. Dec. 118; Sams v. Stockton, 14 B. Monr. (Ky.) 232.

The obligation must be repudiated upon coming of age, or the person is bound; [1899] 2 Ch. 569. An infant's obligation to pay for necessities is not created by agreement, but imposed by law; Pollock, Contr. 57, citing [1908] 2 K. B. 1.

See INFANT.

When a wife is living with her husband, it is presumed that she has his assent to pledge his credit for necessities. See Baker v. Carter, 83 Me. 132, 21 Atl. 834, 23 Am. St. Rep. 764; O'Malley v. Ruddy, 79 Wis. 147, 48 N. W. 116, 24 Am. St. Rep. 702. But this presumption may be rebutted by showing a prohibition on his part or that he has already supplied her with necessities; Allen v. Rieder, 41 Pa. Super. Ct. 534, where it was held, if the husband makes a proper provision for the wife, he is not liable.

The fact of cohabitation is not conclusive of the husband's assent; 2 Ld. Raym. 1006; Tebbets v. Hapgood, 34 N. H. 420; Keller v.

Phillips, 39 N. Y. 351; Schoul. Dom. Rel. 80. But if the husband altogether neglects to supply the wife, she may pledge his credit notwithstanding he has forbidden tradesmen to trust her; the law here raising a presumption of agency to enforce the marital obligation and protect the wife; Shelton v. Hoadley, 15 Conn. 535; Bloomington v. Brinckerhoff, 2 Misc. 49, 20 N. Y. Supp. 858. A wife is ordinarily authorized to purchase clothing on the husband's credit only in case of necessity, and where the wife has habitually clothed herself out of her separate income which is adequate for that purpose, the husband is not liable for clothing ordered by her; Dolan v. Brooks, 168 Mass. 350, 47 N. E. 408; Raynes v. Bennett, 114 Mass. 424.

It was held in Llewellyn v. Levy, 163 Pa. 647, 30 Atl. 292, that when a wife refused to accept an allowance of $125 a month offered by the husband whose income was $20,000, she could still charge him with necessities; it also appeared there that the plaintiff had previously sold the wife like articles which had been paid for by the husband, and that the plaintiff did not know of the separation; but the first point above mentioned appears to have been ruled by the court. Under the Pennsylvania married woman's act, the wife's estate is liable for necessities furnished to her during her lifetime, though the husband is primarily liable and could be called upon to reimburse her estate; In re Weber's Estate, 20 Phila. (Pa.) 8.

The husband is also liable when away from his wife without her fault or by his own misconduct; Wray v. Cox, 24 Ala. 337; 2 Kent 146; Seybold v. Morgan, 43 Ill. App. 39. In order to charge a husband with necessities sold to his wife, it must affirmatively appear that the goods were sold on the husband's credit; Ehrich v. Bucki, 7 Misc. (N. Y.) 118, 27 N. Y. Supp. 247. But otherwise where it is the wife's fault; Evans v. Fisher, 5 Gilman (Ill.) 569; Allen v. Aldrich, 29 N. H. 63; Sturtevant v. Starin, 19 Wis. 268. But if the wife elopes, though it be not with an adulterer, he is not chargeable even for necessities; the very fact of the elopement and separation is sufficient to put persons on inquiry, and whoever gives credit to the wife afterwards gives it at his peril; McCutchen v. McGahay, 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 281, 6 Am. Dec. 373; Hunter v. Boucher, 3 Pick. (Mass.) 289; 2 Kent 123; Bacon, Abr. Baron and Feme (H); 1 Hare & W. Sel. Dec. 104, 106; 6 C. B. N. S. 519; Sturtevant v. Starin, 19 Wis. 268.

A husband is liable for groceries purchased for the family by his wife; Bradt v. Shull, 46 App. Div. 347, 61 N. Y. Supp. 484; primarily for wages of a servant; Hackman v. Cedar, 13 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 618; Woods v. Kauffman, 115 Mo. App. 398, 91 S. W. 399; for the tuition of a daughter in a commercial school; Haas v. Bank, 42 Tex. Civ. App. 167, 94 S. W. 439; for medical attendance for a wife; Carpenter v. Hazelrigg, 103 Ky. 538, 45 S. W. 666; though she promised to pay for the same out of her separate estate; Thomas v. Passage, 54 Ind. 106.

A statute making a married woman liable to a suit in connection with her separate property or business does not remove the common law disability rendering her liable for the services of a physician contracted by her for herself and family, since such contract does not relate to her separate property or business; Stack v. Padden, 111 Wis. 42, 86 N. W. 568.

In the absence of special agreement or provision, the separate estate of a deceased wife is not liable for her doctor's bills to the estate of her husband, who died after her, having paid such bills; they were necessities supplied to her while living with him, for which he is liable; In re Stadtmuller, 110 App. Div. 76, 96 N. Y. Supp. 1101.

Insane persons are liable for necessities; 5 B. & C. 170; Kendall v. May, 10 Allen (Mass.) 59; Sawyer v. Lufkin, 56 Me. 308.

See MARRIED WOMAN.

NECESSARY. Reasonably convenient. Alabama & V. Ry. Co. v. Odeneal, 73 Miss. 34, 19 South. 202.

This word has great flexibility of meaning. It is used to express mere convenience, or that which is indispensable to the accomplishment of a purpose, St. Louis, J. & C. R. Co. v. Trustees, 43 Ill. 307. It frequently imports no more than that one thing is convenient, or useful, or essential to another; McCulloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 414, 4 L. Ed. 579.

As used in a code exempting the wages of a laboring man when necessary for the support of his family in whole or in part, it does not mean that his wages must be absolutely indispensable to the bare subsistence of the family and that the family could not live without them, but is used in a broader and less rigid sense looking rather to the comfort and well being of the family, and contemplates the furnishing to it whatever is necessary to its comfort and well-being as distinguished from luxuries. Cushing v. Quigley, 11 Mont. 577, 29 Pac. 337.

Witness fees are not necessary disbursements where witnesses were not called at the trial, unless the party shows why he did not call them; Kohn v. R. Co., 8 Misc. 421, 28 N. Y. Supp. 663.

Necessary material for the construction of a railroad includes the railroad as a completed structure, station buildings, depots, machine shops, side tracks, turn outs, and water tanks. U. S. v. R. Co., 150 U. S. 1, 14 Sup. Ct. 11, 37 L. Ed. 975.

Necessary help. A physician may be appointed by a warden of a state prison under authority to appoint all necessary help. State v. Hobart, 13 Nev. 419.

Necessary implication. In construing a will, not a natural necessity, but so strong a probability that a contrary construction cannot be supported. 1 V. & B. 466.

See EMINENT DOMAIN.

NECESSITOUS CIRCUMSTANCES. In the civil code of Louisiana the words are used relative to the fortune of the deceased and to the condition in which the claimant lived during the marriage. Smith v. Smith, 43 La. Ann. 1140, 10 South. 248.

NECESSITY. That which makes the contrary of a thing impossible.

Necessity is of three sorts: of conservation of life; see DURESS; of obedience, as the obligation of civil subjection, and, in some cases, the coercion of a wife by her husband; and necessity of the act of God, or of a stranger. Jacob.

Whatever is done through necessity is done without any intention; and as the act is done without will (q. v.) and is compulsory, the agent is not legally responsible; Whart. Cr. L. § 95; Bacon, Max. Reg. 5. Hence the maxim, Necessity has no law; indeed, necessity is itself a law which cannot be avoided nor infringed. Clef des Lois Rom.; Dig. 10. 3. 10. 1; Comyns, Dig. Pleader (3 M 20, 3 M 30). As to the circumstances which constitute necessity, see 1 Russ. Cr. 16, 20; Morris v. State, 31 Ind. 189; Flagg v. Millbury, 4 Cush. (Mass.) 243.

Either public officers or private persons may raze houses to prevent the spreading of a conflagration. But this right rests on public necessity, and no one is bound to compensate for or to contribute to the loss, unless the town or neighborhood is made liable by express statute; Ralli v. Troop, 157 U. S. 405, 15 Sup. Ct. 657, 39 L. Ed. 742, citing 2 Kent 338; Bowditch v. Boston, 101 U. S. 16, 25 L. Ed. 980; The James P. Donaldson, 19 Fed. 269. See EMINENT DOMAIN; FIRES.

In 12 Rep. 63, it was held that in a tempest, and to save the lives of the passengers, a passenger might cast out ponderous and valuable goods, without making himself liable to an action by their owner, cited in Ralli v. Troop, 157 U. S. 405, 15 Sup. Ct. 657, 39 L. Ed. 742. Where a person goes to the house of another to buy cattle and there becomes ill and is turned out in the cold and injured thereby, it is an actionable breach of the duty to care for him in his necessity; Depue v. Flatau, 100 Minn. 299, 111 N. W. 1, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 485.

To justify a trespass by a tenant on the ground that his intervention was necessary in order to prevent destruction of property (here a heath fire on land leased for shooting), it is sufficient to show that the intervention was, in the circumstances at the time it took place, reasonably necessary; 81 L. J. K. B. 346.

The law of necessity (jus necessitatis) is the right of a man to do that from which he cannot be dissuaded by any terror of legal punishment. The test of necessity is the powerlessness of any possible, not that of any reasonable, punishment. Only the most limited scope can be given to the jus necessitatis; it is acknowledged as a reason for the reduction of the penalty, even to a nominal amount, but not for its total remission. Salmond, Jurisprudence 429. See 2 Stephen, Hist. Cr. L. ch. 18; 1 L. Q. R. 51.

In the German Criminal Code, p. 51, the doctrine receives express recognition. See EMINENT DOMAIN; FIRES.

As to the meaning of the word under Sunday laws, see SUNDAY.

NECK-VERSE. The Latin sentence Miserere mei, Deus, Ps. li. 1, because the reading of it was made a test for those who claimed benefit of clergy (q. v.).

If a monk had been taken
For stealing of bacon,
For burglary, murder, or rape;
If he could but rehearse
(Well prompt) his neck-verse,
He never could fail to escape.
Brit. Apollo 1710; Whart. Dict.

NEEDLESSLY. In a statute with reference to the needless killing or bad treatment of animals, it denotes an act done without any useful motive, in a spirit of wanton cruelty, or for the mere pleasure of destruction. Hunt v. State, 3 Ind. App. 383, 29 N. E. 933; Grise v. State, 37 Ark. 460; State v. Bogardus, 4 Mo. App. 215.

NEFAS. That which is against right or divine law; a wicked thing or act. Calv. Lex.

NEGATIVE. Negative propositions are usually much more difficult of proof than affirmative, and in cases where they are involved, it is often a nice question upon which side lies the burden of proof. The general rule has been thus stated: Whoever asserts a right dependent for its existence upon a negative, must establish the truth of the negative, except where the matter is peculiarly within the knowledge of the adverse party. Otherwise rights of which a negative forms an essential element may be enforced without proof; Goodwin v. Smith, 72 Ind. 113, 37 Am. Rep. 144; Hale v. Smith, 78 N. Y. 480. Thus in actions for malicious prosecution, the plaintiff must prove that there was no probable cause; Carey v. Sheets, 67 Ind. 375; 2 Greenl. Ev. § 454. The rule applies whenever the claim is founded in a breach of duty in not repairing highways, and in cases of mutual negligence; Hale v. Smith, 78 N. Y. 480; Shearm. & Red. Neg. 312. So one must prove the allegation that a negotiable promissory note was not taken in payment of a debt; Smith v. Bettger, 68 Ind. 254, 34 Am. Rep. 256. So the onus is on a plaintiff who assigns as a breach by tenant that he did not repair; 9 C. & P. 734; 6 H. L. C. 672. In all actions for breach of warranty of the soundness of a personal chattel, the plaintiff must prove the negative. "It may be stated as a test admitting of universal application, that whether the proposition be affirmative or negative, the party against whom judgment would be given, as to a particular issue, supposing no proof to be offered on either side, has on him, whether he be plaintiff or defendant, the burden of proof which he must satisfactorily sustain." 1 Whart. Ev. § 357; see 14 M. & W. 95; Heinemann v. Heard, 62 N. Y. 448; Maltman v. Williamson, 69 Ill. 423; Colorado C. & I. Co. v. U. S., 123 U. S. 317, 8 Sup. Ct. 131, 31 L. Ed. 182.

NEGATIVE AVERMENT. In Pleading. An averment in some of the pleadings in a case in which a negative is asserted.

NEGATIVE CONDITION. One where the thing which is the subject of it must not happen. 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 751. See POSITIVE CONDITION.

NEGATIVE COVENANT. See COVENANT.

NEGATIVE EASEMENT. See EASEMENT.

NEGATIVE PREGNANT. In Pleading. Such a form of negative expression as may imply or carry within it an affirmative. Fields v. State, 134 Ind. 46, 32 N. E. 780.

Thus, where a defendant pleaded a license from the plaintiff's daughter, and the plaintiff rejoined that he did not enter by her license, the rejoinder was objected to successfully as a negative pregnant; Cro. Jac. 87. The fault here lies in the ambiguity of the rejoinder, since it does not appear whether the plaintiff denies that the license was given or that the defendant entered by the license; Steph. Pl. 381.

This ambiguity constitutes the fault; Hob. 295; which, however, does not appear to be of much account in modern pleading; Com. Dig. Pleader (R 6); Gould, Pl. c. 6, § 36.

A special denial in the words of the allegation denied is a mere negative pregnant and a motion to make more definite and certain will lie; Moody v. Belden, 60 Hun 582, 15 N. Y. Supp. 119. A mere denial in the language of the complaint, that a partial payment was made on a specified day, is an admission that the payment was made on some other day; Argard v. Parker, 81 Wis. 581, 51 N. W. 1012.

A negative pregnant is not a good plea; U. S. v. Larkin, 153 Fed. 113, 82 C. C. A. 247.

NEGATIVE STATUTE. One which is enacted in negative terms, and which so controls the common law that it has no force in opposition to the statute. Bac. Abr. Statutes (G); Brook, Abr. Parliament, pl. 72; Bish. Writ. L. § 153.

NEGGILDARE. To claim kindred. Jac. L. Dict.

NEGLECT. To omit, as to neglect business, or payment, or duty, or work. It does not generally imply carelessness or imprudence, but simply an omission to do or perform some work, duty, or act. Rosenplaenter v. Roessle, 54 N. Y. 262. See NEGLIGENCE.

NEGLIGENCE. The omission to do something which a reasonable man, guided by those considerations which ordinarily regulate the conduct of human affairs, would do, or the doing something which a prudent and reasonable man would not do. 11 Ex. 784. See Webb, Poll. Torts 537. The standard is not that of a particular man, but of the average prudent man; 3 Bing. N. C. 468.

The failure to observe, for the protection of the interests of another person, that degree of care, precaution, and vigilance which the circumstances justly demand, whereby such other person suffers injury. Cooley, Torts 630; Barrett v. Southern Pac. Co., 91 Cal. 296, 27 Pac. 666, 25 Am. St. Rep. 186.

The absence of care according to circumstances. See Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. v. Stinger, 78 Pa. 219; Texas & P. Ry. Co. v. Murphy, 46 Tex. 356, 26 Am. Rep. 272; Blaine v. R. Co., 9 W. Va. 252.

Such an omission by a reasonable person, to use that degree of care, diligence, and skill which it was his legal duty to use for the protection of another person from injury as, in a natural and continuous sequence, causes unintended injury to the latter. Bucki v. Cone, 25 Fla. 1, 6 South. 160.

The failure to do what a reasonable and prudent person would ordinarily have done under the circumstances of the situation, or the doing what such a person under the existing circumstances would not have done. Baltimore & P. R. Co. v. Jones, 95 U. S. 441, 24 L. Ed. 506.

Negligence, in its civil relation, is such an inadvertent imperfection, by a responsible human agent, in the discharge of a legal duty, as immediately produces, in an ordinary and natural sequence, a damage to another. Whart. Negl. § 3. It is conceded by all the authorities that the standard by which to determine whether a person has been guilty of negligence is the conduct of the prudent or careful or diligent man. Bigelow, Torts 261; Needham v. R. Co., 85 Ky. 423, 3 S. W. 797, 11 S. W. 306; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Adler, 129 Ill. 335, 21 N. E. 846; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Gower, 85 Tenn. 465, 3 S. W. 824.

The opposite of care and prudence, the omission to use the means reasonably necessary to avoid injury to others. Great W. R. Co. v. Haworth, 39 Ill. 353. Opposed to diligence or carefulness. Smith v. Whittier, 95 Cal. 279, 30 Pac. 529.

The result of a failure to perform a duty; Toncray v. Dodge County, 33 Neb. 802, 51 N. W. 235. It implies a duty as well as its breach, and the fact can never be found in the absence of a duty; Little Rock & Ft. S.

Ry. Co. v. Lawton, 55 Ark. 428, 18 S. W. 543, 15 L. R. A. 434, 29 Am. St. Rep. 48.

When a contract creates a duty, the neglect to perform that duty, as well as the negligent performance of it, is a ground of action for tort. Hence it is at the election of the party injured to sue either on the contract or on the tort; Robinson v. Threadgill, 35 N. C. 39; but there must be privity of contract between the parties, therefore an attorney who made a mistake in drawing a will is not liable to a person who, by the mistake, is deprived of a gift intended for him by the testator; Buckley v. Gray, 110 Cal. 339, 42 Pac. 900, 31 L. R. A. 862, 52 Am. St. Rep. 88.

It is not a thing but a relation. It implies a duty to use diligence, and such a duty may be owed to one person and not to another; Boston M. R. Co. v. Sargent, 72 N. H. 455, 57 Atl. 688. There must be shown to exist some obligation or duty towards the plaintiff which the defendant has left undischarged or unfulfilled; Sweeney v. R. Co., 10 Allen (Mass.) 368, 87 Am. Dec. 644.

Due care is such attention and effort applied to a given case as the ordinary prudent man would put forth under the same circumstances; this rule seems to meet the demands of every conceivable case. The general duty of diligence includes the particular duty of competence where the matter in hand requires more knowledge or ability than any prudent man may be expected to have. If, in an emergency and to avoid imminent risk, the conduct of something generally intrusted to skilled persons, is taken by an unskilled person, no more is required of him than to make a prudent and reasonable use of such skill as he actually has; McNeveins v. Lowe, 40 Ill. 209.

It is said that liability for negligence depends on the probability of the consequences, i. e. its capability of being foreseen by a reasonable man; Poll. Torts 37.

A person is expected to anticipate and guard against all reasonable consequences, but not against that which no reasonable man would expect to occur. See 5 Ex. 248. Some cases have gone to the extent of maintaining an action in tort even where no attempt has been made to perform a contract; Robinson v. Threadgill, 35 N. C. 39; 11 Cl. & F. 1.

It is said not to be essential to constitute negligence that the damage caused might reasonably have been expected from the negligent act; Whart. Negl. § 16. Thus Gray, C. J., says, in Higgins v. Dewey, 107 Mass. 494, 9 Am. Rep. 63: "A man who negligently sets fire on his own land and keeps it negligently, is liable to an action at common law for any injury done by the spreading or communication of the fire directly from his own land to the property of another, whether through the air or along the ground, and whether he might or might not have reasonably anticipated the particular manner in which it was communicated." And in L. R. 6 C. P. 14, where a railway company left a pile of rubbish in hot weather by the side of their track, and the pile was ignited by sparks from an engine, and the fire crossed a field and burned the plaintiff's cottage, Channell, B., said: "When there is no direct evidence of negligence, the question what a reasonable man might foresee is of importance in considering the question whether there is evidence for the jury of negligence or not, . . . but when it has been once determined that there has been evidence of negligence, the person guilty of it is equally liable for its consequences, whether he could have foreseen them or not."

Where a person unlawfully injures another, he is liable in damages, without regard to the intention with which the act was done; Bruch v. Carter, 32 N. J. L. 554; Cate v. Cate, 44 N. H. 211; and good faith does not excuse negligence; Lincoln v. Buckmaster, 32 Vt. 652. As to the right of action for negligence resulting in the death of the injured person, see ACTIO PERSONALIS MORITUR CUM PERSONA; DEATH.

The damage caused must arise from inadvertence. If it be intentional, a suit for negligence will not lie; the remedy is in trespass and not case.

One negligent person cannot escape liability for his negligence because the negligence of another concurred in producing the injury; Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Lucas, 119 Ind. 583, 21 N. E. 968, 6 L. R. A. 193.

Whether negligence is divisible into degrees, corresponding to degrees of care incumbent on the defendant, is a question which has elicited much discussion and a great variety of opinions. Speaking broadly, the various theories may be reduced to three classes:

First, that there are three degrees of care required by the law, slight, ordinary and great; and consequently there are three degrees of negligence: gross, the failure to exercise ordinary care, and slight, or the failure to exercise great care; Redington v. Tel. Cable Co., 107 Cal. 317, 40 Pac. 432, 48 Am. St. Rep. 132; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Johnson, 103 Ill. 512; First N. Bk. v. Graham, 85 Pa. 91, 27 Am. Rep. 628; I. & G. N. R. Co. v. Cocke, 64 Tex. 151; Sullivan v. Electric Light Co., 181 Mass. 294, 63 N. E. 904; Davis v. Ry. Co., 63 S. C. 370, 41 S. E. 468.

Second, that but two degrees of care are required; the care ordinarily exercised by a specialist in the matter in hand, and the care ordinarily exercised by a non-specialist in the same matter. A failure to exercise the former of these degrees of care is termed ordinary negligence, while a failure to exercise the latter kind of care is termed slight negligence; Wharton, Neg. 636.

Third, that there are no degrees of care or of negligence; that negligence is in all cases the same thing, namely, the absence of due care. According to this view, it is in each case practically a question of fact for the jury whether the proper degree of care has been taken, the jury being guided by a consideration of what a reasonable and prudent man would have done under the circumstances; 11 M. & W. 115; The New World v. King, 16 How. (U. S.) 469, 14 L. Ed. 1019; New York C. R. Co. v. Lockwood, 17 Wall. (U. S.) 357, 21 L. Ed. 627; Purple v. R. Co., 114 Fed. 123, 51 C. C. A. 564, 57 L. R. A. 700; Culbertson v. Holliday, 50 Neb. 229, 69 N. W. 853.

Where one is liable only in case of gross negligence, the slightest care is enough, or as a degree of negligence, it is falling much below the average standard; Brennan v. Oil Co., 187 Mass. 376, 73 N. E. 472.

It is said that there should be no degrees of negligence or care, but that the rule should be such care as an average, ordinary prudent man would exercise under the circumstances. So one would fall short of average prudence in trying to set a leg which could only be done by professional skill, and so it is negligence for a layman to try it, given a situation that any prudent man knew required special knowledge. These rules would be relaxed in extreme, extraordinary cases, as well as cases of necessity; Pollock, Torts 220. In dealing with prudence we always have to consider the advance of the science, learning and the particular locality, etc., and these incidents are the circumstances spoken of in the test; McCandless v. McWha, 22 Pa. 261.

"The tendency of modern judicial opinion is adverse to the distinction between gross and ordinary negligence;" Bradley, J., in New York C. R. Co. v. Lockwood, 17 Wall. (U. S.) 357, 382, 21 L. Ed. 627; and the measure of duty owed by persons in the discharge of their mutual relations is better expressed by the use of the term negligence as a negative definition, or due, reasonable or ordinary care; Raymond v. R. Co., 100 Me. 529, 62 Atl. 602, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 94.

No distinction between the degrees of negligence can be made so as to avoid the effect of a contract made by a Pullman porter releasing a railroad from liability for negligent injuries; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Hamler, 215 Ill. 525, 74 N. E. 705, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 674, 106 Am. St. Rep. 187, 3 Ann. Cas. 42; and injuries caused by gross negligence are included in a release which speaks only of "negligence"; id.

Proof of negligence. The first requisite for the plaintiff is to show the existence of the duty which he alleges has not been performed, and then he must show a failure to observe this duty; that is, he must establish negligence on the defendant's part. This is an affirmative fact, the presumption always being, until the contrary appears, that every man will perform his duty; Cooley, Torts 659. It is not sufficient for the plaintiff to prove a state of facts consistent with the accident having been caused either by the negligence of the defendant or by that of the person injured. He must prove that it was caused by the defendant; 12 App. Cas. 41.

The litigant who bases his case or his defence upon negligence is bound to prove that his opponent was negligent. The presumption of law is that every person performs his legal duty; Huff v. Austin, 46 Ohio St. 386. Accordingly, the burden of proving negligence, in any litigation, rests throughout the case on the party asserting it, although, as in other cases, the burden of giving evidence may shift from one side to the other, during the progress of the trial. The same evidence may or may not establish a prima facie case of negligence on the part of the defendant, according as it shows a breach of contract on defendant's part; Stokes v. Saltonstall, 13 Pet. (U. S.) 181, 10 L. Ed. 115; as where a railroad train is suddenly jolted; Piehl v. Ry., 162 N. Y. 617, 57 N. E. 1122; or a steamship is driven with extraordinary force against a wharf; Inland & S. C. Co. v. Tolson, 139 U. S. 551, 11 Sup. Ct. 653, 35 L. Ed. 270; or a train is derailed by obstacles on the track, or by defective rails or defective rolling stock; New Jersey R. Co. v. Pollard, 22 Wall. (U. S.) 341, 22 L. Ed. 877; and a passenger is injured; in such cases the accident itself affords prima facie evidence of the carrier's negligence, for he contracted to carry the passenger safely. Had a servant of the carrier been injured in the same accident, a different rule would have obtained, for the employé would be bound to establish, as an affirmative fact, that the employer had been guilty of negligence; Patton v. R. Co., 179 U. S. 658, 21 Sup. Ct. 275, 45 L. Ed. 361.

One who is killed at a railroad crossing is presumed to have done his duty in exercising due care and not to have been guilty of contributory negligence; Hanna v. R. Co., 213 Pa. 157, 62 Atl. 643, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 344; and in the absence of evidence to the contrary, a railroad company is also presumed to have done its duty and this presumption must be overcome before any recovery can be had; id. Such presumption is destroyed if it appears that if the person killed had looked and listened on approaching the crossing he would have seen and heard the train; Carlson v. R. Co., 96 Minn. 504, 105 N. W. 555, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 349, 113 Am. St. Rep. 655; or if it is incompatible with the conduct of the person to whom it is sought to be applied; Wabash R. Co. v. De Tar, 141 Fed. 932, 73 C. C. A. 166, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 352.

The instinct of self-preservation is not alone sufficient to establish due care; Wright

v. R. Co., 74 N. H. 128, 65 Atl. 687, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 832, 124 Am. St. Rep. 949; and the exercise of due care cannot be sustained by mere conjecture and speculation, or by showing or assuming what men in general would have done; id.; Binewicz v. Haglin, 103 Minn. 297, 115 N. W. 271, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1096, 14 Ann. Cas. 225; contra, Adams v. Min. Co., 12 Idaho, 637, 89 Pac. 624, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 844, where it was held to constitute prima facie proof of the exercise of ordinary care.

The mere fact that a passenger train runs into an open switch and collides with cars standing thereon does not raise a presumption of gross negligence on the part of the carrier in favor of an injured passenger; Southern R. Co. v. Lee, 101 S. W. 307, 30 Ky. L. Rep. 1360, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 837.

There is no presumption of negligence on the part of the defendant for injury caused by his horse running away, where the only evidence as to the driver was that, when he was first seen, he was falling towards the ground; Rowe v. Such, 134 Cal. 573, 66 Pac. 862, 67 Pac. 760.

Where there is a requirement for cars to "run slow," proof of the violation of such requirement by a motorman directly resulting in an injury to a pedestrian is evidence from which the jury may find a street railway company liable for negligence; Hayward v. R. Co., 74 N. J. L. 678, 65 Atl. 737, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1062.

It is said that a presumption of negligence arises from the occurrence of an accident in the course of a business, which may, according to expert testimony, be safely carried on if conducted with due care; Judson v. Powder Co., 107 Cal. 549, 40 Pac. 1020, 29 L. R. A. 718, 48 Am. St. Rep. 146.

In the absence of a contract between the parties, the burden of proof of negligence is on the plaintiff, and if the "evidence is equally consistent with the existence or non-existence of negligence, it is not competent to the judge to leave the matter to the jury;" 11 C. B. N. S. 588; but the rule of the burden of proof is modified when there is a relation of contract between the parties; Poll. Torts 416; as in cases of common-carriers, or where the thing which was the cause of the mischief was "under the management of the defendant or his servants, and the accident was such as in the ordinary course of things does not happen, if those who have the management use proper care;" 3 H. & C. 596.

In some classes of cases the mere proof of the accident constitutes sufficient prima facie proof of defendant's negligence. See RES IPSA LOQUITUR.

As a general rule this liability cannot be avoided by stipulation; thus, a common carrier will not be permitted to contract for immunity from the results of its own negligence or that of its agents; Graham v. Davis, 4 Ohio St. 362, 62 Am. Dec. 285; Grogan v. Exp. Co., 114 Pa. 523, 7 Atl. 134, 60 Am. Rep. 360; Bartlett v. R. Co., 94 Ind. 281; Railway Co. v. Sowell, 90 Tenn. 17, 15 S. W. 837; Erie R. Co. v. Wilcox, 84 Ill. 239, 25 Am. Rep. 451; School Dist. v. R. Co., 102 Mass. 552, 3 Am. Rep. 502; Southern Pac. R. Co. v. Maddox, 75 Tex. 300, 12 S. W. 815; this may be considered as the rule generally followed in this country, in which the leading case is New York C. R. Co. v. Lockwood, 17 Wall. (U. S.) 357, 21 L. Ed. 627, where the authorities are collected by Bradley, J. In England, however, the courts seem to find no conclusive objection to sustaining such contracts when specially made; L. R. 10 Q. B. 212; 23 U. C. Q. B. 600; and in New York, though the contracts are upheld, it is only when expressed in clear and specific language and not by mere general words in the usual printed bills of lading or receipts; Knell v. S. S. Co., 1 Jones & S. (N. Y.) 423; Mynard v. R. Co., 71 N. Y. 180, 27 Am. Rep. 28. So the liability may be limited in consideration of a reduced rate of transportation; Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Payne, 86 Va. 481, 10 S. E. 749, 6 L. R. A. 849; L. R. 8 H. L. 703; L. R. 10 Q. B. D. 250; or by special contract, for all negligence except gross; Chicago, B. & N. R. Co. v. Hawk, 42 Ill. App. 322. Such a contract, made in New York, was enforced in an action in Pennsylvania according to the law of New York; Forepaugh v. R. Co., 123 Pa. 217, 18 Atl. 503, 5 L. R. A. 508, 15 Am. St. Rep. 672. See COMMON CARRIERS.

The contract of an express messenger, whereby the railroad upon which he travels as messenger is exonerated from liability for damages to him resulting from its negligence, is not void as against public policy; Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. v. Voigt, 176 U. S. 498, 20 Sup. Ct. 385, 44 L. Ed. 560; likewise the contract of a sleeping car porter; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Hamler, 215 Ill. 525, 74 N. E. 705, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 674, 106 Am. St. Rep. 187, 3 Ann. Cas. 42. A contract between a railroad and a partnership, to whom it has leased a strip of land near its track for the purpose of erecting a warehouse, which exonerates the railroad from liability for damage resulting from fire from locomotives, is not void as against public policy even though there is a state statute holding railroads liable for such damage; Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. R. Co., 175 U. S. 91, 20 Sup. Ct. 33, 44 L. Ed. 84.

Provisions contained in a steamship ticket exempting a carrier from liability for losses occasioned by negligence, although such provisions are valid by the law of the country where the ticket was bought, are unreasonable and void as against the public policy of the United States; The Kensington, 183 U. S. 263, 22 Sup. Ct. 102, 46 L. Ed. 190; The New England, 110 Fed. 415.

By an act of congress of February 13, 1893 (Harter Act), common carriers by sea cannot exempt themselves from responsibility for loss or damage arising from the negligence of their own servants, and any stipulation for such exemption is contrary to public policy and void. See HARTER ACT.

Taking precaution after an accident against the future is not to be construed as an admission of responsibility for the past; Barber A. P. Co. v. Odasz, 60 Fed. 71, 8 C. C. A. 471, 20 U. S. App. 326; so a subsequent alteration or repair of the machine which caused an injury is not evidence of negligence in its original construction; Columbia & P. S. R. Co. v. Hawthorne, 144 U. S. 202, 12 Sup. Ct. 591, 36 L. Ed. 405; Champion Ice Mfg. & C. S. Co. v. Carter, 51 S. W. 16, 21 Ky. L. Rep. 210; Cunningham v. R. Co., 40 Pa. Super. Ct. 212.

Law or fact. It is generally said that the question of negligence is a mixed question of law and fact, to be decided by the court when the facts are undisputed or conclusively proved, but not to be withdrawn from the jury when the facts are disputed, and the evidence is conflicting; Whart. Negl. § 420; Faris v. Hoberg, 134 Ind. 269, 33 N. E. 1028, 39 Am. St. Rep. 261; see Chaffee v. R. Co., 17 R. I. 658, 24 Atl. 141; Woolwine's Adm'r v. R. Co., 36 W. Va. 329, 15 S. E. 81, 16 L. R. A. 271, 32 Am. St. Rep. 859. In the great majority of cases the question is left to the jury to determine whether the defendant's conduct was reasonable under the circumstances. When a well-recognized legal duty rested upon the defendant, it is usual for the court to define this duty to the jury, and leave to it the question as to whether the defendant fulfilled this duty. More recently the courts have drawn a distinction between what is evidence of negligence for the jury and what is negligence per se, and therefore a question of law for the court, and the tendency has been rather to increase the number of cases in which the question of negligence is passed upon by the court. In Pennsylvania, when the standard of duty is defined by law, and is the same under all circumstances, and when there has been such an obvious disregard of duty and safety as amounts to misconduct, the courts have withdrawn the case from the consideration of the jury. Thus the Pennsylvania rule of stop, look and listen limits, to a great extent, the province of the jury, i. e. usually the jury must be satisfied that the plaintiff had met these requirements before the question of defendant's negligence arises. See GRADE CROSSING.

It is said to be clear, by most of the authorities, that when the facts are found, and it is perfectly manifest that a prudent man would or would not do as the defendant has done, the court may rule accordingly, or rather, may direct the jury to find accordingly. The same is also true when the law has prescribed the nature of the duty, and also when there exists a well-known practice in the community, of a proper character. In other cases, the inference concerning negligence is left to the jury; Bigelow, Torts 263; Carrico v. R. Co., 35 W. Va. 389, 14 S. E. 12. When the evidence is conflicting, the court should instruct the jury that there would or would not be negligence, accordingly as they might find the facts; Knight v. R. Co., 110 N. C. 58, 14 S. E. 650.

"When the circumstances of a case are such that the standard of duty is fixed, when the measure of duty is defined by law and is the same under all circumstances, its omission is negligence and may be so declared by the court. But it is said that when the negligence is clearly defined and palpable, such that no verdict of a jury could make it otherwise, or when there is no controversy as to the facts, and from these it clearly appears what course a person of ordinary prudence would pursue under the circumstances, the question of negligence is purely one of law." 2 Thomp. Negl. 1236.

"As a general rule, a question whether a party has been guilty of negligence or not, is one of fact, not of law. Where, however, the plaintiff brings action for a negligent injury, and the action of the two parties must have concurred to produce it, it devolves upon him to show that he was not himself guilty of negligence; and if he gives no evidence to establish that fact, the court may properly instruct the jury that they should return a verdict for defendant. Where, however, the question of negligence depends upon a disputed state of facts, or when the facts, though not disputed, are such that different minds might honestly draw different conclusions from them, the court cannot give such positive instructions, but must leave the jury to draw their own conclusions upon the facts, and upon the question of negligence depending upon them. To warrant the court in any case in instructing the jury that the plaintiff was guilty of negligence, the case must be a very clear one against him, and one which would warrant no other inference." Per Cooley, C. J., in Detroit & M. R. Co. v. Van Steinburg, 17 Mich. 99.

It is true, in many cases, that when the facts are undisputed, the effect of them is for the judgment of the court. That is true in that class of cases when the existence of such facts comes in question, rather than when deductions or inferences are to be made from the facts (and see Kansas Pac. R. Co. v. Richardson, 25 Kan. 391). In some cases, too, the necessary inference from the proof is so certain that it may be ruled as a question of law. Certain facts we may suppose to be clearly established from which one sensible, impartial man would infer that proper care had not been used; another man, equally sensible, equally impartial, would infer that proper care had been used. It is this class of cases and those akin to it that the law commits to the decision of a jury. Twelve men of the average of the community, comprising men of education and of little education, men of learning and men whose learning consists in what they have themselves seen and heard, the merchant, the mechanic, the farmer, the laborer; these sit together, consult, apply their separate experiences of the affairs of life to the facts proven, and draw a unanimous conclusion. This average judgment thus given, it is the final effort of the law to obtain; Sioux City & P. R. Co. v. Stout, 17 Wall. (U. S.) 663, 21 L. Ed. 745. Although the facts are undisputed, it is for the jury and not for the judge to determine whether proper care was given or whether they established negligence; Ohio & M. P. W. Co. v. Collarn, 73 Ind. 261, 38 Am. Rep. 134; Brotherton v. Imp. Co., 48 Neb. 563, 67 N. W. 479, 33 L. R. A. 598, 58 Am. St. Rep. 709.

The terms "ordinary care," "reasonable prudence," and such like terms have a relative significance, and cannot be arbitrarily defined; and, when the facts are such that reasonable men differ as to whether there was negligence, the determination of the matter is for the jury; Grand T. R. Co. v. Ives, 144 U. S. 408, 12 Sup. Ct. 679, 36 L. Ed. 485; as it is in all cases where the inference from the facts is not so plain as to make it a legal conclusion that there was negligence; Northern P. R. Co. v. Egeland, 163 U. S. 93, 16 Sup. Ct. 975, 41 L. Ed. 82; and it is only where they would draw the same conclusion that it is a question of law for the court; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Gentry, 163 U. S. 353, 16 Sup. Ct. 1104, 41 L. Ed. 186; Southern Pac. Co. v. Burke, 60 Fed. 704, 9 C. C. A. 229, 23 U. S. App. 1; Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Melick, 65 Fed. 181, 12 C. C. A. 544, 27 L. R. A. 629; and a decision of the trial judge on the question is subject to review; id.

Whether a railroad company should erect guards at its car windows is a question for the jury; New Orleans & C. R. Co. v. Schneider, 60 Fed. 210, 8 C. C. A. 571, 13 U. S. App. 655; so also where a workman, returning from his work on the train and being ordered by the conductor to jump off at a station when the train was moving about four miles an hour and where the platform was about a foot lower than the car step, jumped and was seriously injured, the question of contributory negligence was for the jury; Northern P. R. Co. v. Egeland, 163 U. S. 93, 16 Sup. Ct. 975, 41 L. Ed. 82; Negligence only becomes a question of law to be taken from the jury when the facts are such that fair-minded men can only draw from them the inference that there was no negligence; otherwise it is a question for the jury under proper instructions; McDermott v. Severe, 202 U. S. 600, 26 Sup. Ct. 709, 50

L. Ed. 1162; nor should a case be withdrawn from the jury unless the conclusion follows as a matter of law that no recovery can be had upon any view which can be properly taken of the facts which the evidence tends to establish; Kreigh v. Westinghouse, C., K. & Co., 214 U. S. 249, 29 Sup. Ct. 619, 53 L. Ed. 984; where there is uncertainty as to the existence of negligence or contributory negligence, whether such uncertainty arises from a conflict of testimony, or because, the facts being undisputed, fair-minded men might honestly draw different conclusions therefrom, the question is not one of law; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Harvey, 228 U. S. 319, 33 Sup. Ct. 518, 57 L. Ed. 852.

See Lewis v. R. Co., 13 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 284, where the subject is fully treated and the earlier decisions collected by states.

In actions for negligence the English rule is said to be that the "judge has to say whether any facts have been established from which negligence may be reasonably inferred; the jurors have to say whether, from those facts, negligence ought to be inferred;" 3 App. Cas. 197; or better, whether, as reasonable men, they do infer it; Poll. Torts 420.

Contributory Negligence. If the evidence shows that the plaintiff himself was guilty of negligence contributing to the injury, there can be no recovery; Beach, Contrib. Neg. 14. The distinction, however, must be drawn between condition and causes, between causa causans and causa sine qua non. The question must always be considered whether the act of the plaintiff had a natural tendency to expose him directly to the danger which resulted in the injury complained of. If it had not, the plaintiff's negligence is not considered in law as contributing to the injury. One who sees or could have seen if he had looked, and has the faculties to understand the dangers to which he is exposed, is charged with a knowledge of them; and his failure to act on the knowledge as a prudent and cautious man would act under like circumstances, is negligence which, notwithstanding the negligence of the defendant, will defeat a recovery; Glascok v. R. Co., 73 Cal. 137, 14 Pac. 518. And when it appears that the plaintiff, by the defendant's misconduct, became frightened, and in endeavoring to escape the consequence of the defendant's misconduct, rushed into danger and was injured, the plaintiff's conduct does not contribute to the injury; Coulter v. Exp. Co., 56 N. Y. 585. If, through the defendant's negligence, the injured person is placed in a position of peril and confronted with sudden danger, the law does not require him to exercise the same degree of care and caution that it does of a person who has ample opportunities for the full exercise of his judgment; Dunham T. & W. Co. v. Dandelin, 143 Ill. 409, 32 N. E. 258; Gibbons v. Ry., 155 Pa. 279, 26 Atl. 417. Contributory negligence has been held to be no defence where defendant's negligence was reckless or wanton; Kansas P. R. Co. v. Whipple, 39 Kan. 531, 18 Pac. 730.

Contributory negligence is a good defence to an action for damages for a personal injury; and it is immaterial to what extent it is proven, provided it contributed to the injury; Kyne v. R. Co., 8 Houst. (Del.) 185, 14 Atl. 922; Gerity's Adm'x v. Haley, 29 W. Va. 98, 11 S. E. 901; in order to bar a recovery, the contributory negligence must have been a proximate cause of the injury; Cornwall v. R. Co., 97 N. C. 11, 2 S. E. 659; Virginia M. R. Co. v. White, 84 Va. 498, 5 S. E. 573, 10 Am. St. Rep. 874.

In some cases it has been held that the plaintiff must show affirmatively that he was in the exercise of due care, when the injury happened; Kepperly v. Ramsden, 83 Ill. 354; Beers v. R. Co., 19 Conn. 566; Murphy v. Deane, 101 Mass. 455, 3 Am. Rep. 390; Mosher v. Smithfield, 84 Me. 334, 24 Atl. 876. This is frequently termed the Illinois rule. Probably the proof need not be direct, but may be inferred from the circumstances of the case; Mayo v. R. Co., 104 Mass. 137; 2 Thomp. Negl. 1178, note. In other states, contributory negligence is a matter of defence, the burden of proving which is on the defendant; Hocum v. Weatherick, 22 Minn. 152; Hicks v. R. Co., 65 Mo. 34; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Whitacre, 35 Ohio St. 627; Prideaux v. Mineral Point, 43 Wis. 513, 28 Am. Rep. 558; Bromley v. R. Co., 95 Ala. 397, 11 South. 341; Augusta v. Hudson, 88 Ga. 599, 15 S. E. 678; Washington & G. R. Co. v. Harmon, 147 U. S. 571, 13 Sup. Ct. 557, 37 L. Ed. 284; Baker v. Gas Co., 157 Pa. 593, 27 Atl. 789, where the cases are discussed. But even in these courts, if the plaintiff's own showing disclose contributory negligence, he cannot recover. The rule that a plaintiff cannot recover, if himself guilty of contributory negligence, applies where the party inflicting the injury is not guilty of negligence after the position of the injured party was discovered, or, by the exercise then of reasonable care, could have been discovered; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Nolan, 62 Fed. 552, 11 C. C. A. 202, 23 U. S. App. 443.

Negligence of the defendant's employes in failing to whistle or ring a bell at a crossing is no excuse for contributory negligence of the plaintiff in failing to use his senses; Carlson v. R. Co., 96 Minn. 504, 105 N. W. 555, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 349, 113 Am. St. Rep. 655; and continuing contributory negligence will bar a recovery by the plaintiff, although the defendant ought to have discovered, but in fact did not discover, his peril in time to prevent the accident; Dyerson v. R. Co., 74 Kan. 528, 87 Pac. 680, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 132, 11 Ann. Cas. 207.

It is not contributory negligence to ride upon the platform of a street car in spite of a notice that it is dangerous to do so, and notwithstanding the fact that there was room at the time within the car, where it was the custom of the company to overload its cars so that passengers ordinarily rode upon the platform; Capital Traction Co. v. Brown, 29 App. D. C. 473; but one who gives up his place in a street car to a woman and rides upon the platform where he is subsequently injured, forfeits the advantage of the presumption of negligence on the part of the defendant company; Paterson v. Rapid Transit Co., 218 Pa. 359, 67 Atl. 616, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 839. A spectator at a baseball game, who elects to occupy an unprotected seat, cannot recover for an injury; Crane v. Baseball Co., 168 Mo. App. 301, 153 S. W. 1076.

Negligence is only deemed contributory when it is the proximate cause of the injury; Smith v. Ry. & Lighting Co., 80 Conn. 268, 67 Atl. 888, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 707.

The fact that the plaintiff lived near a powder magazine, with knowledge of the danger, does not constitute contributory negligence; Hazard Powder Co. v. Volger, 58 Fed. 152, 7 C. C. A. 130, 12 U. S. App. 665. It has been said that the true rule is that the onus of proving contributory negligence rests in the first instance on the defendant, although the plaintiff may disclose upon his own case such evidence of it as to relieve the defendant of that primary obligation and shift to the plaintiff the onus of displacing the effect of his own evidence; 12 Q. B. D. 71.

Last Clear Chance. If the plaintiff, by ordinary care, could have avoided the effect of the negligence of the defendant, he is guilty of contributory negligence, no matter how careless the defendant may have been at the last or any preceding stage; Tuff v. Warman, 2 C. B. N. S. 740 (on appeal, 5 C. B. N. S. 573). When the defendant was driving carelessly along the highway, and ran into and injured the plaintiff's donkey, which was straying improperly on the highway with his fore feet fettered, it was held that the plaintiff's negligence had not contributed to the accident; Davies v. Mann, 10 M. & W. 546. To this case the doctrine of the last clear chance is generally attributed. It is that the party who last has a clear opportunity of avoiding an accident, notwithstanding the negligence of the other party is considered responsible for it; 2 L. Quart. Rev. 507; Grand T. R. Co. v. Ives, 144 U. S. 408, 12 Sup. Ct. 679, 36 L. Ed. 485; Thompson v. Rapid Transit Co., 16 Utah, 281, 52 Pac. 92, 40 L. R. A. 172, 67 Am. St. Rep. 621; Pilmer v. Traction Co., 14 Idaho, 327, 94 Pac. 432, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 254, 125 Am. St. Rep. 161.

If the plaintiff could by the exercise of reasonable care, at or just before the happening of the injury to him, have avoided the same, he cannot recover; Tuff v. Warman, 5 C. B. N. S. 573; Barnum v. Terpening, 75 Mich. 557, 42 N. W. 967; Willard v. Swan- sen, 126 Ill. 381, 18 N. E. 548. "The true ground of contributory negligence being a bar is that it is the proximate cause (or 'decisive' cause) of the mischief; and negligence on the plaintiff's part, which is only part of the inducing cause (i. e. a 'condition,' not a 'cause'; Whart. Negligence) will not disable him"; Poll. Torts 434; and it "would seem that a person who has by his own act or default deprived himself of ordinary ability to avoid the consequences of another's negligence, can be in no better position than if, having such ability, he had failed to avoid them; unless, indeed, the other has notice of his inability in time to use care appropriate to the emergency; in which case the failure to use that care is the decisive negligence." Poll. Torts 434. To make this doctrine applicable, it must clearly appear that the negligence of one person was subsequent to that of the other: The Steam Dredge No. 1, 134 Fed. 161, 67 C. C. A. 67, 69 L. R. A. 293. Where the negligence of each party was the same in character, time and duration, and equally active in causing the injury, the rule does not apply; Cleveland, C., C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Gahan, 24 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 277.

"Ultimate negligence" is the negligence of the defendant which, though anterior to the plaintiff's negligence, makes the defendant liable if in the result he could by the exercise of ordinary care have avoided the mischief; 13 Ontario L. Rep. 423; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Baker, 21 Okl. 51, 95 Pac. 433, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 825. The doctrine of last clear chance cannot be applied in an admiralty case; The Steam Dredge No. 1, 134 Fed. 161, 67 C. C. A. 67, 69 L. R. A. 293. The doctrine has been held not to apply where an intoxicated person is killed by an electric car whose head light can be seen 800 feet away and would have been sufficient warning to a sober man of the approach of the car; Vizacchero v. Rhode Island Co., 26 R. I. 392, 59 Atl. 105, 69 L. R. A. 188. See Herrick v. W. Power Co. (Wash.) 134 Pac. 934.

A street car company is liable for running down a pedestrian who is walking negligently along the track where the motorman is inattentive and the pedestrian fails to hear the approach of the car because of noises made by other cars on other tracks; Indianapolis, T. & T. Co. v. Kidd, 167 Ind. 402, 79 N. E. 347, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 143, 10 Ann. Cas. 942. A railroad company whose yard is customarily used as a thoroughfare with knowledge of the company, is liable for the death of one who is himself negligent, if those in charge of a train could have stopped it after the person was knocked down, but before he was killed; Teakle v. R. Co., 32 Utah, 276, 90 Pac. 402, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 486.

Where one, knowing of the frequent passage of cars, goes on the tracks for the purpose of repairs and removing dirt, and is struck and killed, the company is not liable, although the motorman does not sound the gong in accordance with the requirements of a municipal ordinance; Brockschmidt v. R. Co., 205 Mo. 435, 103 S. W. 964, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 345; and a fortiori where the locomotive engineer used every effort to avert the accident; Hoffard v. R. Co., 138 Iowa, 543, 110 N. W. 446, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 797; but the company is liable to its employes if it is shown that the train was running at an extraordinary and illegal rate of speed and not under full control as required by the company's rules; Neary v. R. Co., 37 Mont. 461, 97 Pac. 944, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 446. If an employe is lying helpless on the track as the result of being struck by lightning, and if those in charge of a train might have discovered his peril by the exercise of proper care in time to avoid the injury, the company is liable; Sawyer v. R. & L. Co., 145 N. C. 24, 58 S. E. 598, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 200.

Where a locomotive was run along the public street of a city at an unlawful rate of speed and no signal was given of its approach and no outlook was kept, and as a result a pedestrian is injured, the defence of contributory negligence is not available, although the employes did not know of the presence of the person injured; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Baker, 79 Kan. 183, 98 Pac. 804, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 427; likewise a railroad company is liable for injuries to a person who is negligently walking on its trestle, if those in charge of the train might, in the exercise of ordinary care, have discovered his peril and avoided the accident; Bogan v. R. Co., 129 N. C. 154, 39 S. E. 808, 55 L. R. A. 418.

Although one is negligent in attempting to cross a track in front of a street car, his act is not the proximate cause of a resulting collision, if the motorman, upon seeing his design, becomes confused and increases instead of decreases the speed of the car; Smith v. Ry. & Lighting Co., 80 Conn. 268, 67 Atl. 888, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 707.

Although a company's employes may be negligent, after removing an intoxicated passenger from their train, in placing him upon a flight of steps down which he subsequently falls, to his injury, the jury may reasonably find that intoxication is the direct and proximate cause of the injury; Black v. R. Co., 193 Mass. 448, 79 N. E. 797, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 148, 9 Ann. Cas. 485.

A passenger alighting from a street car who immediately crosses the street and steps upon a parallel track without looking for an approaching car is negligent, but such negligence does not relieve a street car company from liability for injuries if those in charge of the other car, in the exercise of ordinary care, could have discovered his peril and averted the injury; Louisville Ry. Co. v. Hudgins, 124 Ky. 79, 98 S. W. 275, 7

L. R. A. (N. S.) 152; but there is no liability for injuries to one who steps from the hub of a wagon, standing near a car track, immediately in front of an approaching car, where it did not appear that his position on the hub was so perilous as to charge the company with the duty of taking precautions to avoid injuring him; State v. Ry. Co., 106 Md. 529, 68 Atl. 197, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 297.

No one is bound to anticipate that others will be guilty of negligence. See L. R. 5 H. L. 45.

Where one is in danger through fault of another and chooses between two methods of escape, he is not negligent if he chooses that which, otherwise, would not be prudent; 12 Q. B. 439. See, further, Washington & G. R. Co. v. Gladmon, 15 Wall. (U. S.) 401, 21 L. Ed. 114; Hoyt v. Hudson, 41 Wis. 105, 22 Am. Rep. 714.

The question of contributory negligence is one of fact for the jury, under proper instructions, and is not one of law for the court; Smith v. R. Co., 9 Utah 141, 33 Pac. 626; Grand T. R. Co. v. Ives, 144 U. S. 408, 12 Sup. Ct. 679, 36 L. Ed. 485; Thuringer v. R. Co., 71 Hun 526, 24 N. Y. Supp. 1087. Where the evidence of contributory negligence is not of such a conclusive character as would warrant the court in setting aside a verdict, the question should be left to the jury; Washington & G. R. Co. v. Harmon, 147 U. S. 571, 13 Sup. Ct. 557, 37 L. Ed. 284.

Formerly a rule prevailed in Illinois that negligence "is relative, and that the plaintiff, although guilty of negligence which may have contributed to the injury, may hold the defendant liable if he has been guilty of a higher degree of negligence, amounting to wilful injury. The fact that the plaintiff is guilty of slight negligence does not absolve the defendant from the use of care and the use of reasonable efforts to avoid the injury." See Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Dimick, 96 Ill. 42. But the doctrine has been repudiated in Illinois; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Kelly, 75 Ill. App. 490; Macon v. Holcomb, 205 Ill. 643, 69 N. E. 79; and it was rejected in Matta v. Ry. Co., 69 Mich. 109, 37 N. W. 54; Harrison v. Electric Light Co., 195 Mo. 606, 93 S. W. 951, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 293; Tesch v. Ry. & Light Co., 108 Wis. 593, 84 N. W. 823, 53 L. R. A. 618; Riley v. R. Co., 69 Neb. 82, 95 N. W. 20; Birmingham Ry., L. & Power Co. v. Bynum, 139 Ala. 389, 36 South. 736; Woolf v. R. & N. Co., 37 Wash. 491, 79 Pac. 997; Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. v. Kellerman, 39 Tex. Civ. App. 274, 87 S. W. 401; Thomas v. R. Co., 124 Ga. 748, 52 S. E. 801.

In admiralty, where both ships are in fault, the damages are equally divided; Marsden, Coll. ch. 6; this rule is preserved by the Judicature Act in the Admiralty Division. See 2 L. Quart. R. 357; 13 id. 17; COLLISION; Report, Int. Law Asso. 1895.

An injury to a government inspector caused by the negligence of those in charge of a dredge, and in part by his own negligence is sufficient to bring him within the admiralty rule of apportionment of damages; The Steam Dredge No. 1, 134 Fed. 161, 67 C. C. A. 67, 69 L. R. A. 293.

Imputed Negligence. In cases of actions brought by infants of tender years for injuries caused by the defendant's negligence, it was held in Hartfield v. Roper, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 615, 34 Am. Dec. 273, that the negligence of the parent or guardian of the infant in permitting it to be exposed to danger, should be imputed to the infant and bar its right of action. Substantially all the cases in other jurisdictions have refused to accept this doctrine. The court held in St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Underwood, 194 Fed. 363, 114 C. C. A. 323, that the parent's negligence could not be imputed to the child in a case of suit brought by the child and said that this rule "was supported by the decided weight of authority." Agnew, J., in Kay v. R. Co., 65 Pa. 269, 3 Am. Rep. 628, said: "The doctrine that imputes the negligence of the parent to the child in such a case is repulsive to our natural instincts and repugnant to that class of persons who have to maintain life by daily toil."

In Albert v. R. Co., 5 App. Div. 544, 39 N. Y. Supp. 430, affirmed without opinion in 154 N. Y. 780, 49 N. E. 1093, the court appears rather to avoid the application of the rule of Hartfield v. Roper, thus: "It is the settled rule in this state that it is not negligence, as matter of law, for parents to permit a child non sui juris [i. e. not of years of discretion] to play in the public streets of a city, and the burden is upon the plaintiff to establish freedom from contributory negligence." So of a child of six years playing out of doors without a caretaker; Ferrell v. Cotton Mills, 157 N. C. 528, 73 S. E. 142, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 64.

A child has been held to be without discretion in this connection when it was four years of age; Potter v. Leviton, 199 Ill. 93, 64 N. E. 1029; when it was two and one-half years of age; Indianapolis St. R. Co. v. Bordenchecker, 33 Ind. 138, 70 N. E. 995; when it was less than four years of age; Fink v. Des Moines, 115 Iowa, 641, 89 N. W. 28; and so of a boy five and one-half years of age who was used to go to school alone; Barksdull v. R. Co., 23 La. Ann. 180.

Negligence of a father as well as of the mother in not discovering a train at a railroad crossing was held to be imputable to a child held in the arms of his mother, who was sitting by the side of the father, who was driving, as the father was not acting as driver merely, but also as the guardian of his child; Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. v. Devore, 114 Fed. 155, 52 C. C. A. 77. As this case arose in the Southern district of New York, it was probably influenced by the ruling in Hartfield v. Roper, supra.

While a child of such tender years as to be incapable of exercising any judgment or discretion is not chargeable with contributory negligence; yet where he has attained such an age as to be capable of exercising judgment and discretion, he is held to such a degree of care as might be reasonably expected of one of his age and mental capacity; Twist v. R. Co., 39 Minn. 164, 39 N. W. 402, 12 Am. St. Rep. 626; Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Boozer, 70 Tex. 530, 8 S. W. 119, 8 Am. St. Rep. 615; Western & A. R. Co. v. Young, 81 Ga. 397, 7 S. E. 912, 12 Am. St. Rep. 320; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Slater, 129 Ill. 91, 21 N. E. 575, 6 L. R. A. 418, 16 Am. St. Rep. 242. At what age an infant's responsibility for negligence is presumed to begin is a question of law for the court; Schmidt v. Cook, 1 Misc. 227, 20 N. Y. Supp. 889. If the parent is negligent in permitting his child of tender years to be exposed to danger, his negligence is always held to bar his action. Thus the unexplained presence of a child too young to exercise judgment is prima facie evidence of its parents' negligence; Harrington v. R. Co., 37 Mont. 169, 95 Pac. 8, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 395.

The negligence of a gripman on a cable car in running across the crossing of another road undergoing repairs, at an excessive rate of speed, is imputable to the conductor of such car in control of such gripman, and will prevent him recovering for injuries sustained by reason of such negligence; Minster v. R. Co., 53 Mo. App. 276.

A vessel colliding with an obstruction to navigation cannot be charged with the negligence of a tug acting as an independent contractor in towing her, and wholly controlling her movements; Vessel Owners' T. Co. v. Wilson, 63 Fed. 626, 11 C. C. A. 366.

In England, where a passenger has been injured by concurrent negligence of his own carrier and a third party, it was formerly held that the carrier's negligence was imputed to the passenger and barred his recovery; Thorogood v. Bryan, 8 C. B. 115. But the doctrine has been overruled in 13 App. Cas. 1. See a review of the case in Dean v. R. Co., 129 Pa. 523, 18 Atl. 718, 6 L. R. A. 143, 15 Am. St. Rep. 733. It was rejected in New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. v. Steinbrenner, 47 N. J. L. 161, 54 Am. Rep. 126; Chapman v. R. Co., 19 N. Y. 341, 75 Am. Dec. 344; Transfer Co. v. Kelly, 36 Ohio St. 86, 38 Am. Rep. 558; Wabash, St. L. & P. Ry. Co. v. Shacklet, 105 Ill. 364, 44 Am. Rep. 791; and, after a review of the authorities, in Little v. Hackett, 116 U. S. 366, 6 Sup. Ct. 391, 29 L. Ed. 652. It was followed in Payne v. R. Co., 39 Ia. 523; Allyn v. R. Co., 105 Mass. 77; Prideaux v. Mineral Point, 43 Wis. 513, 28 Am. Rep. 558.

The negligence of a bailee of a horse and buggy is not to be imputed to the owner so as to prevent him from recovering from a railroad company for killing the horse; Gibson v. R. Co., 226 Pa. 198, 75 Atl. 194, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 689, 18 Ann. Cas. 535; contra, Illinois C. R. Co. v. Sims, 77 Miss. 325, 27 South. 527, 49 L. R. A. 322; nor is the negligence of a master imputable to his servant who is riding beside him on a truck driven by the master at the time of a collision between the truck and a street car; Doctoroff v. R. Co., 55 Misc. 216, 105 N. Y. Supp. 229; but the negligence of a driver is imputable to the employer under like circumstances; Markowitz v. R. Co., 186 Mo. 350, 85 S. W. 351, 69 L. R. A. 389.

One who is riding as a guest is not precluded from recovery by the negligence of the driver where the impending danger is so sudden as not to permit her to act for her own protection; Shultz v. R. Co., 193 Mass. 309, 79 N. E. 873, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 597, 118 Am. St. Rep. 502, 9 Ann. Cas. 402; but the right of one who has entrusted himself to the care of another, with whom he is riding, to recovery for injuries caused by the negligence of a street car company, is dependent upon the exercise of due care by his companion; Evensen v. R. Co., 187 Mass. 77, 72 N. E. 355. The negligence of a locomotive engineer is not imputable to the conductor in charge of the train; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. McFall, 75 Ark. 30, 86 S. W. 824, 69 L. R. A. 217, 5 Ann. Cas. 161. One who rides in a buggy with another, who is driving, is bound to exercise care upon approaching a railroad crossing; Colorado & S. R. Co. v. Thomas, 33 Colo. 517, 81 Pac. 801, 70 L. R. A. 681, 3 Ann. Cas. 700. The bailee of a carriage does not become the master or principal of the driver, so as to be chargeable with his negligence; Sluder v. Transit Co., 189 Mo. 107, 88 S. W. 648, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 186. The negligence of a husband who is driving his wife in a conveyance is not imputable to her, so as to prevent her recovery against another negligent person who causes injuries to her, and she can sue in her own name; Louisville Ry. Co. v. McCarthy, 129 Ky. 814, 112 S. W. 925, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 230, 130 Am. St. Rep. 494.

The negligence of a landlord is not imputable to his tenants for damage by the fall of a wall in their building due to such negligence, and the negligent excavation of the adjoining lot; Contos v. Jamison, 81 S. C. 488, 62 S. E. 867, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 498.

The negligence of a husband cannot be imputed to his wife, who was riding with him over a defective highway, unless it be shown that he was at that time under her control and direction; Reading Tp. v. Telfer, 57 Kan. 798, 48 Pac. 134, 57 Am. St. Rep. 355. Such is the weight of the authorities; Sheffield v. Tel. Co., 36 Fed. 164; Hoag v. R. Co., 111 N. Y. 199, 18 N. E. 648. There are cases to the contrary; Peck v. R. Co., 50 Conn. 379; Yahn v. Ottumwa, 60 Ia. 429, 15 N. W.

257; G. & S. F. R. Co. v. Greenlee, 62 Tex. 344.

In Rylands v. Fletcher, L. R. 3 H. L. 330, it was held that one who brings a dangerous substance on his property, and keeps it there without restraining it, is liable for an injury caused by its escape. In L. R. 10 Exch. 255, the court held that the mere fact of building a dam and accumulating water which flooded the plaintiff would not make the owner of the dam liable if it gave way without the fault of the owner; so in Everett v. Tunnel Co., 23 Cal. 225. In Turpen v. Irr. Dist., 141 Cal. 1, 74 Pac. 295, the defendant was held liable for damages from seepage from an irrigation ditch because its construction was not in the usual and reasonable manner; and a like case in Idaho placed the owner's liability on the ground of negligence; McCarty v. Canal Co., 2 Idaho (Hasb.) 245, 10 Pac. 623. In Losee v. Buchanan, 51 N. Y. 476, 10 Am. Rep. 623, the court says that the rule of Rylands v. Fletcher, 1 L. R. Ex. 265, does not apply in that state to one who builds a dam upon his own premises and holds back and accumulates water for his own use, or if he brings water upon his premises in a reservoir, without proof of some fault or negligence on his part; and to the same effect Pixley v. Clark, 35 N. Y. 524, 91 Am. Dec. 72; Murphy v. Gillum, 73 Mo. App. 487; but in Parker v. Larsen, 86 Cal. 236, 24 Pac. 989, 21 Am. St. Rep. 30, the owner of an artesian well who allowed percolation to injure others was held liable for the injury on the ground that the water which did the injury was not a natural stream flowing across defendant's land, but was brought upon the land by artificial means, and that where one brings a foreign substance upon his land, he must take care of it; a railroad company was found to maintain a nuisance where it failed to construct a culvert and thereby created a reservoir, which, filling up with water, damaged the plaintiff's land by percolation; International & G. N. R. Co. v. Slusher, 42 Tex. Civ. App. 631, 95 S. W. 717; one who undertakes to change the accustomed flow of surface water and to concentrate it in underground drains and a vault is bound to provide adequate means to discharge the water so gathered by it, and to discharge it in a way that would not be injurious to others. That the company relied on the judgment of competent engineers will not avail as a defence, and is not the fulfillment of a duty to avoid doing injury to another; Lion v. R. Co., 90 Md. 266, 44 Atl. 1045, 47 L. R. A. 127.

The rule of Rylands v. Fletcher has been adopted with or without modification in many of the states; Brennan Const. Co. v. Cumberland, 29 App. D. C. 554, where it was held that one who stores upon his premises near a navigable river large quantities of oil, the escape of which is bound to injure persons using the stream, is liable for the injury done in case of an escape of the oil, although it occurs without any negligence in his part; so in Berger v. Gaslight Co., 60 Minn. 301, 62 N. W. 336, the escape of crude petroleum from a tank was held to render the defendant liable, without proof of negligence on his part; it was no defence that the defendant was ignorant that his tanks were leaking; Kinnaid v. Oil Co., 89 Ky. 468, 12 S. W. 937, 7 L. R. A. 451, 25 Am. St. Rep. 545. The escape from a pipe line of oil brought from a distance is held a nuisance irrespective of negligence, and will render the owner of the pipe line liable in damages to one injured thereby; Hauck v. Pipe Line Co., 153 Pa. 366, 26 Atl. 644, 20 L. R. A. 642, 34 Am. St. Rep. 710. This case was distinguished from Pennsylvania Coal Co. v. Sanderson, 113 Pa. 126, 6 Atl. 453, 57 Am. Rep. 445, where the injuries complained of were the natural and necessary results of the development by the owner of the resources of his land. In the pipe line case the oil which was the cause of the injury to the plaintiff's property was brought from a distance, and allowed to escape from its pipes and to percolate through plaintiffs' lands and destroy their springs. The mere fact that the business is a lawful business and has been conducted with care is no defence where it is not incident and necessary to the development of the land or the substances lying within it. The owner of the land has a right to develop it by digging for coal, iron, gas, oil, or other minerals, and if in the progress of his development an injury occurs to the owner of adjoining land, without fault or negligence, an action for such an injury cannot be maintained. It is not so where the injury is caused by the prosecution of a business which has no necessary relation to the land itself and is not essential to its development; Robb v. Carnegie Bros. & Co., 145 Pa. 324, 22 Atl. 649, 14 L. R. A. 329, 27 Am. St. Rep. 694. To permit negligently the escape of crude oil into a sewer was held to give a right of action to one whose products were injured by gases arising therefrom; Brady v. S. & S. Co., 102 Mich. 277, 60 N. W. 687, 26 L. R. A. 175.

A gas company was held liable to the owner of a greenhouse for the escape of gas from its mains laid in a city street through a city sewer, owing to the negligence of the city in building the sewer; Butcher v. Gas Co., 12 R. I. 149, 34 Am. Rep. 626; Evans v. Gas Co., 148 N. Y. 112, 42 N. E. 513, 30 L. R. A. 651, 51 Am. St. Rep. 681. It has been held that gas companies cannot be held liable without proof of negligence; Morgan v. Imp. Co., 214 Pa. 109, 63 Atl. 417; Koelsch v. Philadelphia Co., 152 Pa. 355, 25 Atl. 522, 18 L. R. A. 759, 34 Am. St. Rep. 653, where a gas company permitted the accumulation of gas on premises under its control, through percolation from a leak in the main pipe, it was held liable for an injury to one who in the course of his duty as a water inspector was required to visit the premises to inspect the meter.

While Rylands v. Fletcher has been cited frequently by our courts, few of them have given it unqualified approval, while many have emphatically rejected its doctrine. Massachusetts limits the doctrine to cases of trespass and nuisance; Ainsworth v. Lakin, 180 Mass. 397, 62 N. E. 746, 57 L. R. A. 132, 91 Am. St. Rep. 314. The doctrine has been rejected in Losee v. Buchanan, 51 N. Y. 476, 10 Am. Rep. 623; Brown v. Collins, 53 N. H. 442, 16 Am. Rep. 372; Marshall v. Welwood, 38 N. J. L. 339, 20 Am. Rep. 394. The common law did not impose upon the owner of cattle the liability of an insurer against all damage done by them, if they escaped from his land; but when vicious animals are not useful for any lawful purpose, or are so kept as to be a menace to human beings, while engaged in lawful pursuits, they are fairly classed as a nuisance, and if they do damage, their owner or responsible keeper is liable; Aldrich v. Wright, 53 N. H. 398, 16 Am. Rep. 339; Muller v. McKesson, 73 N. Y. 195, 29 Am. Rep. 123. When the vicious animal, such as a watchdog, may be lawfully kept for useful purposes, then the liability is for negligence in the manner of keeping it; Knickerbocker Ice Co. v. Finn, 80 Fed. 483, 25 C. C. A. 579; Hahnke v. Friederich, 140 N. Y. 224, 35 N. E. 487; Baldwin v. Ensign, 49 Conn. 113, 44 Am. Rep. 205.

The common law held the person starting a fire, even for necessary and lawful purposes, to an absolute responsibility for its consequences; 2 H. IV, 18, pl. 6. This was modified later. The same extraordinary liability rests upon one, who brings electricity upon his premises, whence it escapes, to the injury of neighbors; [1893] 2 Ch. 186. In the United States the common law liability for fire has never been enforced.

The rule in Rylands v. Fletcher has been treated at length by Prof. Francis H. Bohlen in Univ. of Pa. Law Rev., etc. (1911).

A landlord who lets premises in a condition so unrepaired that they are a nuisance, and agrees to keep them in repair, is liable in tort to any person, other than the tenant, who is injured because of such condition, on the ground that by the letting he has authorized the maintenance of the nuisance; he is not in such case liable in tort to the tenant; Miles v. Janvrin, 196 Mass. 431, 82 N. E. 708, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 378, 124 Am. St. Rep. 575.

In L. R. 6 Q. B. 759, the plaintiff was injured while walking along a public highway by a brick which fell from a pier of the defendant's bridge; the defendant was held liable. It was said to be the duty of the defendant from time to time to inspect the bridge and ascertain that the brickwork was in 'good order. In L. R. 1 Q. B. D. 314, it was held that one who for his own benefit suspends an object over the highway, and puts the public safety in peril thereby, is under an absolute duty, to keep it in such a state as not to be dangerous (here the defendant was the lessee and occupier of a house from the front of which a heavy lamp projected over the public footway). A lot owner in a city who maintains a scuttle hole in the sidewalk in front of his house is liable for injuries received by one using the sidewalk, although the scuttle hole was authorized by the city and the tenant had agreed to keep it closed; Calder v. Smalley, 66 Ia. 219, 23 N. W. 638, 55 Am. Rep. 270. One who builds or maintains a high chimney, the fall of which would injure an adjoining building, is liable for its fall in a not unusual gale; Cork v. Blossom, 162 Mass. 330, 38 N. E. 495, 26 L. R. A. 256, 44 Am. St. Rep. 362. One who builds a wall owes a duty to persons lawfully upon the premises to take reasonable care that the wall should be so constructed as not to fall; Dettmering v. English, 64 N. J. L. 16, 44 Atl. 855, 48 L. R. A. 106; so if an awning be erected, the owner of the building is liable for damage occasioned by its fall, if the wall to which it is attached is of insufficient strength to support its burden; Riley v. Simpson, 83 Cal. 217, 23 Pac. 293, 7 L. R. A. 622; and where a sign projects over the sidewalk it is the duty of the owner to see that the fastenings are secure; Railway Co. v. Hopkins, 54 Ark. 209, 15 S. W. 610, 12 L. R. A. 189; one who permits a shivered pane of glass to remain in a window above a street will be liable to a person who is struck by a piece of the glass while on a sidewalk below the window; Detzur v. Brewing Co., 119 Mich. 282, 77 N. W. 948, 44 L. R. A. 500. The owner was held liable where a cornice overhanging the sidewalk fell because nails fastening it to the building had been loosened by ordinary decay, though he had no knowledge of the defect; 21 Ont. App. 433.

The installation of an electric third-rail system will not render the company liable to a trespasser, it being guarded by a fence, though there was nothing to show the trespasser (an infant of seven years) that the third-rail was more dangerous than the ordinary track, it being exposed and uncovered; Riedel v. R. Co., 177 Fed. 374, 101 C. C. A. 428, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 98, 21 Ann. Cas. 746; contra, Anderson v. R. Co., 36 Wash. 387, 78 Pac. 1013, 104 Am. St. Rep. 962, where the passenger was injured by the third-rail while walking along the track after having been wrongfully ejected from a train.

A man must not set traps of a dangerous description in a situation to invite, and for the particular purpose of inviting, his neighbor's animals, so that it would compel them by their instinct to come into the trap; Walsh v. R. Co., 145 N. Y. 301, 39 N. E. 1068, 27 L. R. A. 724, 45 Am. St. Rep. 615; 9

East 277. One who dug a pit under a cotton-gin near the highway leaving it unclosed, with corn and cotton seed scattered about it, was held liable for the death of a cow that wandered into it; Jones v. Nichols, 46 Ark. 207, 55 Am. Rep. 575.

Lord Ellenborough intimates in Townsend v. Wathen, 9 East 277, that there is no difference between drawing an animal into a trap by means of his instinct which he cannot resist and putting him there by manual force.

It is a general principle that one who invites another upon his premises is bound to exercise more than ordinary care towards him. If the person giving the invitation is alone benefited he is responsible for even the slightest negligence. So a storekeeper, who either expressly or impliedly invites the public to enter his place of business for the purpose of trading must exercise a high degree of care to keep his premises in a safe condition, and where such person is accidentally injured the shopkeeper is liable in the absence of negligence on the part of the person injured; Oberfelder v. Doran, 26 Neb. 118, 41 N. W. 1094, 18 Am. St. Rep. 771; Engel v. Smith, 82 Mich. 1, 46 N. W. 21, 21 Am. St. Rep. 549; Snyder v. Witwer Bros., 82 Ia. 652, 48 N. W. 1046; O'Brien v. Tatum, 84 Ala. 186, 4 South. 158; Clopp v. Mear, 134 Pa. 203, 19 Atl. 504; so letter-carriers have an implied invitation to enter certain buildings for the purpose of placing mail in boxes; Gordon v. Cummings, 152 Mass. 513, 25 N. E. 978, 9 L. R. A. 640, 23 Am. St. Rep. 846; and an employé and contractor for the construction of a building is not a trespasser and may maintain an action for injuries; Ferris v. Aldrich, 12 N. Y. Supp. 482. See Webb, Elevators. A person invited to come upon a ship for the purpose of business is entitled to be protected by the exercise of such care and prudence as would render the premises reasonably safe; The William Branfoot, 52 Fed. 390, 3 C. C. A. 155, 8 U. S. App. 129; and one who, while riding in a private carriage of another at his invitation, is injured by the negligence of a third party, may recover against the latter, notwithstanding the negligence of the driver of the carriage may have contributed to the injury; Union Pac. R. Co. v. Lapsley, 51 Fed. 174, 2 C. C. A. 149, 16 L. R. A. 800, 4 U. S. App. 542. But the owner of land and of buildings is not liable to one who is on his premises as a mere licensee. As one who enters on premises by permission only, without any inducement being held out to him by the occupant, cannot recover for injuries caused by obstructions or pitfalls; Gibson v. Leonard, 143 Ill. 182, 32 N. E. 182, 17 L. R. A. 588, 36 Am. St. Rep. 376; unless it was unlawful to erect the machine or contrivance, or the injury was wilful and wanton; the wilfulness will be presumed from gross negligence; Galveston Oil Co. v.

Morton, 70 Tex. 400, 7 S. W. 756, 8 Am. St. Rep. 611; where an elevator is out of order or is intended for freight only and not for passengers, and notice of such fact is duly posted, one who has a reasonable opportunity for seeing and reading such posted notice assumes the risk of venturing on or near such elevator; Springer v. Byram, 137 Ind. 15, 36 N. E. 361, 23 L. R. A. 244, 45 Am. St. Rep. 159; Hansen v. Schneider, 58 Hun 60, 11 N. Y. Supp. 347; McCarthy v. Foster, 156 Mass. 511, 31 N. E. 385. There is an ambiguity in the use of the word license in decisions relating to negligence. It is sometimes used for sufferance of a trespass; L. R. 1 C. P. 274; sometimes equivalent to invitation; 4 C. B. N. S. 563, 567. See 2 C. P. D. 310.

Invited Persons. The defendant is obliged to exercise due care to warn an invited person of dangers he does know and those which, by the exercise of reasonable care, he might have known; L. R. 1 C. P. 274. A licensee is raised to an invited person when the defendant receives some benefit. An invited person is one going not only on his own business but also on business for defendant. There is a conflict, as to the position of a social guest or a fireman, but by the better view they are considered mere licensees.

One managing a place of public amusement, and who sells intoxicating liquors to a person whom he knows to be of a quarrelsome disposition when intoxicated, is bound to exercise reasonable care to protect other customers from the assaults and insults of such person; Mastad v. Swedish Brethren, 83 Minn. 40, 85 N. W. 913, 53 L. R. A. 803, 85 Am. St. Rep. 446. Persons conducting a fair are liable for injury to a patron caused by the fall of the floor in one of its buildings; Brown v. Agr. Soc., 47 Me. 275, 74 Am. Dec. 484; so are proprietors of a hall for the giving way of a guard rail against which persons were accustomed to lean; Schofield v. Wood, 170 Mass. 415, 49 N. E. 636; and so is a corporation conducting a balloon ascension for injuries caused by the insecure fastening of the guy ropes; Peckett v. Beach Co., 44 App. Div. 559, 60 N. Y. Supp. 966; or for the fall of a pole used in connection with the exhibition, where no notice was given that the pole would fall; Richmond & M. R. Co. v. Moore's Adm'r, 94 Va. 493, 27 S. E. 70, 37 L. R. A. 258. The owner of a toboggan slide must anticipate and provide against injuries from defects in construction to the extent that reasonably prudent men might foresee the necessity for doing; Barrett v. Imp. Co., 174 N. Y. 310, 66 N. E. 968, 61 L. R. A. 829.

The owner of a pleasure park, in which there is a swimming pool operated for hire, is liable to one diving and injured by striking invisible timber under the water; Bass v. Reitdorf, 25 Ind. App. 650, 58 N. E. 95

(but the mere presence of a pond in a public pleasure park is not an invitation to bathe therein; and where there is no invitation or sign or appearance that the pond is used by visitors for such purpose, the proprietor is not obliged to inform all comers that they shall not bathe therein; Le Grand v. Traction Co., 10 Pa. Super. Ct. 12).

The owner of a public bathing resort may be found to be negligent if he places no signs as to the depth of water, or marks to indicate danger, and no one at hand to aid persons in danger; Larkin v. Beach Co., 30 Utah 86, 83 Pac. 686, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 982, 116 Am. St. Rep. 818, 8 Ann. Cas. 977. Where the defendant had negligently constructed a shooting gallery on his exhibition grounds, he was held liable to one injured by a bullet therefrom, although the plaintiff was not at the time on the owner's land, but was waiting to be admitted; he was held to be classed as a business visitor; Thornton v. Agri. Soc., 97 Me. 113, 53 Atl. 979, 94 Am. St. Rep. 488.

One who maintains a park for the entertainment of the public, and has knowledge of a conspiracy on the part of certain persons to assault negroes visiting the park, is liable for injuries inflicted on a negro in pursuance of such conspiracy, where he permitted him to enter and took no measures to protect him from danger; Indianapolis St. R. Co. v. Dawson, 31 Ind. App. 605, 68 N. E. 909. In commenting on this case, it is said: "If as a result of the defendant's invitation, an unsuspecting plaintiff has been intentionally or negligently led into a trap, his right to demand indemnity from the defendant should not depend upon the particular manner in which he meets with injury;" 17 Harv. L. R. 358.

There is a duty to the licensee to warn him against all perils known to the defendant and concealed; Campbell v. Boyd, 88 N. C. 129, 43 Am. Rep. 740; Bennett v. R. Co., 102 U. S. 578, 26 L. Ed. 235.

A man is not liable in any way for the condition of his property to a trespasser unless he sets an active force in motion aimed at expectant trespassers; Lary v. R. Co., 78 Ind. 323, 41 Am. Rep. 572. The obligation of a railroad company and its operatives is not pre-existing, but arises at the moment of the discovery of the trespasser and is negative in its nature—a duty which is common to human conduct to make all reasonable effort to avert injury to others by means which can be controlled; Sheehan v. R. Co., 76 Fed. 201, 22 C. C. A. 121, 46 U. S. App. 498. As to the duty of an engineer to keep a lookout for trespassers, the decisions are in conflict: In Cincinnati & Z. R. Co. v. Smith, 22 Ohio 227, it was held that locomotive engineers, so far as consistent with their other duties, must use ordinary care to avoid injuring persons, and that they were of course bound to adopt the ordinary precautions to discover danger as well as to avoid its consequences. In Herrick v. Wixom, 121 Mich. 384, 80 N. W. 117, 81 N. W. 333, it was held that where a trespasser is discovered on the premises by the owner or occupant, then any negligence resulting in injury will render the person guilty of negligence liable to respond in damages. In Maynard v. R. Co., 115 Mass. 458, 15 Am. Rep. 119, the company was held not liable to a trespasser for anything short of reckless or wanton misconduct. In Jeffries v. R. Co., 129 N. C. 236, 39 S. E. 836, the duty of keeping a look-out was held to rest on the defendant. If it can keep a proper look-out by means of an engineer alone, that is sufficient. But if it cannot, and if the aid of the fireman is needed, he also should be used, and if either or both are so hindered that a proper look-out cannot be kept, then it is the duty of the defendant, at such places on its road, to have a third man employed, for it is the duty of the defendant to keep a proper look-out.

Turntable Cases. There is a class of cases where the owner of property is held liable to children who are trespassing thereon and injured, upon the ground that the owner is bound to know that children may be attracted and may thereby be injured, although the owner is guilty of no negligence except in maintaining property in such condition that children may trespass thereon to their harm. As many such cases have arisen in connection with railroad turntables, the whole class has been called turntable cases.

Turntables being somewhat in the nature of a merry-go-rounds are such as to render them peculiarly attractive to children, and although on the private property of a railroad company, they are usually located in more or less public places, where the presence of children might naturally be expected. That a rule requiring all dangerous attractions to be guarded would be burdensome on the landowner is not denied and generally he is not held liable for injuries to child trespassers, unless guilty of gross and wanton negligence. But whether the good to the community would outweigh the partial restriction of the dominion over property is an open question. In the case of the turntable the expense and inconvenience of keeping them locked or secured is slight in comparison with the benefits to be derived to the public in keeping them secured. In an early case, the question of the negligence of the company in leaving its turntables unguarded was left to the jury, and it was said that the fact that the child was a trespasser did not relieve the company from the obligation to exercise reasonable care for its safety; Sioux City & P. R. Co. v. Stout, 17 Wall. (U. S.) 657, 21 L. Ed. 745. Though a railroad company is not obliged to fasten its turntable so securely that it is impossible for children to remove the fastenings, the fastenings must be such that an ordinarily prudent person would deem them sufficient to render it improbable that young children would remove them; O'Malley v. R. Co., 43 Minn. 289, 45 N. W. 440. A railroad company is liable for an injury received by an infant while upon its premises from idle curiosity or for purposes of amusement, if such injury was, under the circumstances, attributable to the negligence of the company; Union P. R. Co. v. McDonald, 152 U. S. 262, 14 Sup. Ct. 619, 38 L. Ed. 434.

A turntable is a dangerous machine likely to cause injury to children who resort to it; if defendants took no means to keep children away and to prevent accident, they were guilty of negligence; Barrett v. Southern Pac. Co., 91 Cal. 296, 27 Pac. 666, 25 Am. St. Rep. 186; Ferguson v. R. Co., 77 Ga. 102; Kansas C. R. Co. v. Fitzsimmons, 22 Kan. 686, 31 Am. Rep. 203; Nagel v. R. Co., 75 Mo. 653, 42 Am. Rep. 418; Bridger v. R. Co., 25 S. C. 24; Ft. Worth & D. C. R. Co. v. Measles, 81 Tex. 474, 17 S. W. 124; Edgington v. R. Co., 116 Ia. 410, 90 N. W. 95, 57 L. R. A. 561; Ft. Worth & D. C. R. Co. v. Robertson (Tex.) 16 S. W. 1093; contra, Daniels v. R. Co., 154 Mass. 349, 28 N. E. 283, 13 L. R. A. 248, 26 Am. St. Rep. 253; Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. v. Reich, 61 N. J. L. 635, 40 Atl. 682, 41 L. R. A. 831, 68 Am. St. Rep. 727; Walker's Adm'r v. R. Co., 105 Va. 226, 53 S. E. 113, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 80, 115 Am. St. Rep. 871, 8 Ann. Cas. 862.

What an express invitation would be to an adult, the temptation of an attractive plaything is to a child of tender years; Keffe v. R. Co., 21 Minn. 207, 18 Am. Rep. 393. If the defendant knew that his turntable, when left unfastened, was attractive and dangerous to young children, and knew also that children were in the habit of going on it for play, it was not merely inviting young children to leave it unfastened and unguarded, but was holding out an allurements; Keffe v. R. Co., 21 Minn. 207, 18 Am. Rep. 393.

In the case of young children and other persons not sui juris, an implied license might sometimes arise, when it would not on behalf of others; thus, leaving exposed a tempting thing for children to play with, where they would be likely to gather for that purpose, may be equivalent to an invitation to them to make use of it; Cooley, Torts, c. 10, p. 303. A leading English case is Lynch v. Nurdin, 1 Q. B. 29, where the defendant's servant went into a house, leaving his horse and cart standing in the street for about half an hour unguarded, and a child playing about the team was run over by the wheel and his leg broken. The carelessness of the servant was held to have tempted the child and the action against the defendant was maintainable.

On the other hand, it is held that the defendant owes no duty of care in respect to the condition of a turntable or of a defective hedge, to a child trespassing upon its premises.

es, and the fiction of implied invitation or allurements is repudiated; 41 Ir. L. T. R. 157. Property owners are not bound to contemplate the infraction of property rights because the temptation to untrained minds to infringe them might have been foreseen; Holbrook v. Aldrich, 168 Mass. 16, 46 N. E. 115, 36 L. R. A. 493, 60 Am. St. Rep. 364, per Holmes, J.

An invitation is not extended to children to enter upon private premises, by erecting thereon for beneficial use a structure which happens to be attractive to them; Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. v. Reich, 61 N. J. L. 635, 40 Atl. 682, 41 L. R. A. 831, 68 Am. St. Rep. 727; [1913] 1 K. B. 398; and a landowner is not under a duty to keep his premises safe for mere trespassers, even if they are children; Ritz v. Wheeling, 45 W. Va. 262, 31 S. E. 993, 43 L. R. A. 148; Ryan v. Towar, 128 Mich. 463, 87 N. W. 644, 55 L. R. A. 310, 92 Am. St. Rep. 481; Dobbins v. R. Co., 91 Tex. 60, 41 S. W. 62, 38 L. R. A. 573, 66 Am. St. Rep. 856; Fitzmaurice v. Lighting Co., 78 Conn. 406, 62 Atl. 620, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 149, 112 Am. St. Rep. 159. To leave a street car in the streets is held not to be an invitation or license to children to play upon it, although the company knows that it attracts them; Gay v. Ry. Co., 159 Mass. 238, 34 N. E. 186, 21 L. R. A. 448, 38 Am. St. Rep. 415; or to leave a hand car on the ground beside a railroad track; Robinson v. R. Co., 7 Utah 493, 27 Pac. 689, 13 L. R. A. 765. An owner was held to be not under obligation so to pile ties as to prevent injury to a child attempting to climb upon them; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Edwards, 90 Tex. 65, 36 S. W. 430, 32 L. R. A. 825; Powers v. Bridge Co., 97 App. Div. 477, 89 N. Y. Supp. 1030; Kramer v. R. Co., 127 N. C. 328, 37 S. E. 468, 52 L. R. A. 359; Lynch v. Knoop, 118 La. 611, 43 South. 252, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 480, 118 Am. St. Rep. 391, 10 Ann. Cas. 807 (where an attempt had been made to drive the child away).

A city is not liable for the death of a child who falls into an open conduit while playing, and drowns; Brown v. Salt Lake City, 33 Utah, 222, 93 Pac. 570, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 619, 126 Am. St. Rep. 828, 14 Ann. Cas. 1004; neither is the owner of an open bulkhead near a path used by school children, for the drowning of a child who falls therein; Bottum's Adm'r v. Hawks, 84 Vt. 370, 79 Atl. 858, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 440, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 1025. See also 46 Am. L. Rev. 277. The fact that a public bridge is attractive to boys does not render an electric company liable where a boy climbs up a pier thereon and is electrocuted by contact with a live wire; Graves v. W. P. Co., 44 Wash. 675, 87 Pac. 956, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 452.

A child who climbs into a milk wagon and rides a short distance thereon with the consent of the owner is a trespasser, and the owner's consent does not constitute an implied invitation, and he is not liable for her injury; West v. Poor, 196 Mass. 183, 81 N. E. 960, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 936, 124 Am. St. Rep. 541. Where a child of 2½ years got through a fence to a pile of railroad sleepers at a place where the railroad company had knowledge that children constantly played, and from thence went 35 yards to its track (unfenced) and was injured, held that the license (if any) to play on the sleepers did not extend to the tracks; [1912] 1 K. B. 525. But where large gas pipes were so left as to be movable by children and a child was killed by one of them rolling on him, it was held to be a "death trap" and that the owner was liable; O'Hara v. Gaslight Co., 131 Mo. App. 428, 110 S. W. 642.

In Cincinnati & H. S. Co. v. Brown, 32 Ind. App. 58, 69 N. E. 197, a child while playing in a grove, situated partly on defendant's and partly on adjacent lands, was injured by running into a barbed wire, a remnant of a fence that originally separated the defendant's land from the rest of the grove. The defendant knew of the condition of the property and the habit of the children playing in the grove. It was held that the question of the defendant's negligence and the plaintiff's contributory negligence should be left to the jury. The thing which attracts the children, namely, the grove, unlike the turntable, is not dangerous in itself nor the instrument of injury, nor is it an artificial structure maintained by the land owner. See 11 H. L. Rev. 349.

The law recognizes that under some circumstances the omission of a duty owed by one individual to another will make the other chargeable with the consequences; the rule is based upon the proposition that the duty neglected must be a legal duty, imposed by law or by contract, and not a mere moral obligation; People v. Beardsley, 150 Mich. 206, 113 N. W. 1128, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1020, 121 Am. St. Rep. 617, 13 Ann. Cas. 39.

Where one is in a house by express invitation and becomes violently ill, the defendants owe him the duty, upon discovering his physical condition, to exercise reasonable care not to expose him to danger by sending him from their home; and if defendants knew and appreciated his physical condition, their conduct amounts to negligence; Depue v. Flatau, 100 Minn. 299, 111 N. W. 1, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 485. But where plaintiff was taken ill with an infectious disease while visiting the janitor in defendant's apartment house, and defendant ordered her from the house, and plaintiff, being unable to hire an ambulance, made use of the street cars and by walking reached her own home, where she immediately became worse, it was held that defendant violated no legal duty to plaintiff, it being as much his duty to look out for his tenants as to look out for her; Tucker v. Burt, 152 Mich. 68, 115 N. W. 722, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 510.

In case of a person falling overboard from a ship at sea, whether a passenger or seaman, where he is not killed by the fall, the captain is bound both by law and by contract to do everything, consistent with the safety of the ship and of the passengers and crew, necessary to his rescue, no matter what delay in voyage may be occasioned, or what expense to the owners may be incurred; U. S. v. Knowles, 4 Sawy. 519, Fed. Cas. No. 15,540. If a guest in a hotel by reason of intoxication is troublesome to the other guests, the proprietor may rightfully put him out of the house, using no unnecessary force or violence. If, however, the trouble and disturbances caused by the guest are due to sickness, he must be treated with the consideration due to a sick man, and if he is removed, such removal must be in a manner suited to his condition; McHugh v. Schlosser, 159 Pa. 480, 28 Atl. 291, 23 L. R. A. 574, 39 Am. St. Rep. 699.

Violation of Ordinance. When does the violation of a criminal statute or ordinance make the wrongdoer civilly responsible? Sometimes it is said that the wrongful act is "negligence per se"; sometimes that it is only "evidence of negligence"; sometimes again that it is "prima facie evidence of negligence." See Jaggard, Torts § 263. Danger, reasonably to be foreseen at the time of acting, is the established test of negligence. The proposition, then, that the defendant is under a "duty of care" to certain persons in a certain situation means that as to them he acts at peril if he does dangerous things carelessly.

Does an ordinance or statute change this situation? Before its passage the common law liability was for negligent conduct; "negligent" meant "dangerous"; the test of danger was the foresight of the prudent man; the jury, within the territory where opinions could reasonably differ, was to say what he should have foreseen; outside this territory the question was for the court. The ordinance narrows the last question; Monroe v. R. Co., 76 Conn. 201, 56 Atl. 498; Osborne v. McMasters, 40 Minn. 103, 41 N. W. 543, 12 Am. St. Rep. 698; Smith v. Supply Co., 32 Utah 21, 30, 88 Pac. 683.

The court can no longer submit the question of danger to the jury, because there is no longer room for a reasonable difference of opinion; Smith v. Supply Co., supra. The ordinance has foreclosed the question whether the specified act is a dangerous thing. This can only mean that the act is labelled "dangerous."

As society develops, new dangers to the public welfare are constantly perceived, and new prohibitions enacted by the legislature. They may be regulations of highway traffic, the position of vehicles on the highway; Newcomb v. Protective Dep't, 146 Mass. 596, 16 N. E. 555, 4 Am. St. Rep. 344; the speed at which they may run; U. S. Brewing Co.

v. Stoltenberg, 211 Ill. 531, 71 N. E. 1081; the conduct of railways at crossings; Holman v. R. Co., 62 Mo. 562; or building laws passed to lessen fire risks; Aldrich v. Howard, 7 R. I. 190; or restrictions on the use of dangerous articles, such as the carrying of fire-arms by children; Horton v. Wylie, 115 Wis. 505, 92 N. W. 245, 95 Am. St. Rep. 953; or the sale of poisons unlabeled; Osborne v. McMasters, 40 Minn. 103, 41 N. W. 543, 12 Am. St. Rep. 698; or handling explosives without specified precautions; Brannock v. Elmore, 114 Mo. 55, 21 S. W. 451. Whatever form the prohibition may take (and the varieties are infinite) a danger has been deemed by the legislature so great as to justify making its creation or continuance a public wrong. A new statutory "nuisance" has thus been created in every sense in which that word has legal significance; and the proposition that he who violates the statute or ordinance does so at his peril is only an application of the principle that an action lies in favor of one who has suffered a private injury from a public nuisance.

The prior cases were under statutes forbidding objectionable conduct and punishing one who does the forbidden act. But suppose the statute calls for action, and punishes a failure to do the thing required. In Dawson & Co. v. Bingley Urban District Council, [1911] 2 K. B. 149, the defendant was a municipal board charged with the duty of furnishing water for fire protection, and among other things providing proper fire plugs and putting up signs in the street to show their situation. They put up the sign in the wrong place and this delayed the fire brigade in hunting for the plug while plaintiff's building was burning. The court held defendant liable for plaintiff's additional damage during this delay. In Couch v. Steel, 3 E. & B. 402, defendant was held liable for damage for breach of a statute requiring medicines to be kept on shipboard. In Evans v. R. Co., 109 Minn. 64, 122 N. W. 876, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 278, a carrier which had brought into the state a diseased horse without complying with the inspection laws, was held liable to a purchaser from the consignee.

See RES IPSA LOQUITUR.

One who leaves a horse unhitched in a street in which cars using snow scrapers are running cannot hold the street car company liable for injury to the horse due to its being frightened and dashing in front of a car; Moulton v. Ry., 102 Me. 186, 66 Atl. 388, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 845. The owner takes the risk of what the horse may do and such act raises a presumption of negligence, and puts upon him the burden of showing circumstances which justified or excused it; Stevenson v. Exp. Co., 221 Pa. 59, 70 Atl. 275, 128 Am. St. Rep. 725; Doherty v. Sweetser, 82 Hun 556, 31 N. Y. Supp. 649; and he is liable for any damage caused by the horse running away; Corona C. & I. Co. v. White, 158 Ala. 627, 48 South. 362, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 958. It is negligent for the driver of a horse to abandon his seat and run after his hat in the street without fastening or otherwise securing the animal; Damonte v. Patton, 118 La. 530, 43 South. 153, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 209, 118 Am. St. Rep. 384, 10 Ann. Cas. 862.

An employer is liable for the negligence of a servant who, while driving the master's horse within the scope of his employment, negligently leaves him standing unhitched, and the horse runs away and injures a third person who is lawfully upon the highway; Hayes v. Wilkins, 194 Mass. 223, 80 N. E. 449, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1033, 120 Am. St. Rep. 549.

NEGLIGENT ESCAPE. The omission on the part of a gaoler to take such care of a prisoner as he is bound to take, when in consequence thereof the prisoner departs from his confinement without the knowledge or consent of the gaoler, and eludes pursuit.

For a negligent escape, the sheriff or keeper of the prison is liable to punishment, in a criminal case; and in a civil case he is liable to an action for damages at the suit of the plaintiff. In both cases the prisoner may be retaken; 3 Bla. Com. 415. See ESCAPE.

NEGOTIABLE. In Mercantile Law. A term applied to a contract, the right of action on which is capable of being transferred by indorsement (of which delivery is an essential part), in case the undertaking is to A or his order, A or his agent, and the like, or by delivery alone, in case the undertaking is to A or bearer,—the assignee in either case having a right to sue in his own name.

That which is capable of being transferred, by assignment, indorsement, or by delivery. Viotor v. Johnson, 148 Pa. 583, 24 Atl. 173.

Complete negotiability involves the right of the assignee to sue in his own name and take free of equities against the assignor; L. R. 8 Q. B. 874.

At common law, choses in action were not assignable; but exceptions to this rule have grown up by mercantile usage as to some classes of simple contracts, and others have been introduced by statute, so that now bills of exchange, promissory notes, and bank-notes, to order or bearer, are universally negotiable; and notes not to order or bearer have become quasi negotiable; that is, an indorsement will give a right of action in the name of the assignor; and in some states, by statute, bonds and other specialties are assignable by indorsement.

See ASSIGNMENT.

NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS. Besides notes, bills, and checks, the following have been held to be negotiable instruments: exchequer bills; 4 B. & Ald. 1; 12 Cl. & F. 787, 805; state and municipal bonds; 3 B. & C. 45; Cromwell v. Sac County, 96 U. S. 51, 24 L. Ed. 681; Independent School Dist. v. Hall, 113 U. S. 135, 5 Sup. Ct. 371, 28 L. Ed. 954; corporate bonds; L. R. 3 Ch. App. 758, 154; White v. R. Co., 21 How. (U. S.) 575, 16 L. Ed. 221; [1892] 3 Ch. 527; coupon bonds of an individual; In re Leland, 6 Ben. 175, Fed. Cas. No. 8,229; coupon bonds of a corporation; Kenosha v. Lamson, 9 Wall. (U. S.) 477, 19 L. Ed. 725; Evertson v. Bank, 66 N. Y. 14, 23 Am. Rep. 9; Beaver County v. Armstrong, 44 Pa. 63; government scrip; L. R. 10 Ex. 337; United States treasury notes; Vermilye v. Exp. Co., 21 Wall. (U. S.) 138, 22 L. Ed. 609; Dinsmore v. Duncan, 57 N. Y. 573, 15 Am. Rep. 534; post-office orders; 65 L. T. 52; certificates of deposit; Miller v. Austen, 13 How. (U. B. 658; bonds of foreign governments; 3 B. & C. 45.

The following have been held not to be negotiable: lottery tickets; 8 Q. B. 134; dividend warrants; 9 Q. B. 396; iron scrip notes; 3 Macq. 1; debentures, on which authorities differ; L. R. 8 Q. B. 374; pass-book of savings bank; McCaskill v. Bank, 60 Conn. 300, 22 Atl. 568, 13 L. R. A. 737, 25 Am. St. Rep. 323; a treasury warrant not presented for three years, the amount having been covered back into the treasury; Harris v. U. S., 27 Ct. Cls. 177.

Bills of lading are not properly negotiable instruments, but they may be called so in a limited sense as against stoppage in transitu only; Poll. Contr. 207.

An instrument in the form of a promissory note drawn by a corporation, and bearing its seal, is not a promissory note negotiable by the law merchant; per Blatchford, J., in Coe v. R. Co., 8 Fed. 534.

Any addition to the form of a note which destroys its essential quality of a promise to pay, "simple, certain, unconditional, not subject to any contingency," will destroy its negotiable character; Woods v. North, 84 Pa. 409, 24 Am. Rep. 201. Thus, the addition of the words, "given as collateral security with agreement;" Costelo v. Crowell, 127 Mass. 293, 34 Am. Rep. 367; "a warrant to confess judgment;" Sweeney v. Thickstun, 77 Pa. 131; "in facilities;" Springfield Bank v. Merrick, 14 Mass. 322; "foreign bills;" Jones v. Fales, 4 Mass. 245; "and it is the understanding it will be renewed at maturity;" Citizens N. Bk. v. Piollet, 126 Pa. 195, 17 Atl. 603, 4 L. R. A. 190, 12 Am. St. Rep. 860; "return notice ticket with this order," and "deposit book must be at bank before money can be paid;" Iron City N. Bk. v. McCord, 139 Pa. 53, 21 Atl. 143, 11 L. R. A. 559, 23 Am. School District*, 4 N. D. 30, 58 N. W. 499, 25 L. R. A. 363; Nicely v. Bank, 15 Ind. App. 563, 44 N. E. 572, 57 Am. St. Rep. 245; contra, Bullock v. Taylor, 39 Mich. 137, 33 Am. Rep. 356; Bradley v. Lill, 4 Biss. 473, Fed. Cas. No. 1,783; with counsel fees, expenses of collection, or other words to the same effect; First N. Bk. v. Bynum, 84 N. C. 27, 37 Am. Horr*, 32 Ia. 184; Schlesinger v. Arline, 31 Fed. 649.

A note containing a tax clause is not negotiable; Brooke v. Struthers, 110 Mich. 562, 68 N. W. 272, 35 L. R. A. 537; McClelland v. R. Co., 110 N. Y. 469, 18 N. E. 237, 1 L. R. A. 299, 6 Am. St. Rep. 397; nor is one given for rent and subject to set-off for repairs; Jones v. Laturnus (Tex.) 40 S. W. 1010.

Contracts are not necessarily negotiable because by their terms they inure to the benefit of the bearer. Hence, a receipt acknowledging that a person has received from another named so many shares of stock in a specified corporation, entitling the bearer to so many dollars in certain bonds to be issued, is not free in the hands of a transferee from equities which would have affected it in the hands of the original recipient; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Howard, 7 Wall. (U. S.) 392, 19 L. Ed. 117.

Indorsements of payment on a promissory note before delivery do not destroy negotiability; Smith v. Shippey, 182 Pa. 24, 37 Atl. 844, 38 L. R. A. 823.

The rule in Illinois that a negotiable note, secured by a mortgage, transferred to a bona fide holder before maturity, is held subject to all equities between the original parties, is not binding on the federal courts, which hold in such cases that in a suit in equity brought to foreclose the mortgage, no other defences are allowed against it than would be allowed in an action at law to recover on the notes; Swett v. Stark, 31 Fed. 858. Coupons attached to a railroad bond and payable to bearer, when detached and negotiated, are no longer incidents of the bond, but independent negotiable instruments; Internal Imp. Fund v. Lewis, 34 Fla. 424, 16 South. 325, 26 L. R. A. 743, 43 Am. St. Rep. 209. See COUPONS.

"By the decisive weight of authority in this country where negotiable paper has been put in circulation, and there is no infirmity or defence between the antecedent parties thereto, a purchaser of such securities is entitled to recover thereon, as against the maker, the whole amount, irrespective of what he may have paid therefor." Wade v. R. Co., 149 U. S. 327, 13 Sup. Ct. 892, 37 L. Ed. 755. See Fowler v. Strickland, 107 Mass. 552; Bange v. Flint, 25 Wis. 544; National Bk. of Michigan v. Green, 33 Ia. 140.

All the states, territories, etc., have passed the Uniform Negotiable Instruments Act, except California, Georgia, Maine, Mississippi, Texas, and Porto Rico. Under this act an instrument, to be negotiable, must be in writing and signed; must contain an unconditional promise or order to pay a certain sum of money on demand at a fixed and determinable future time; it must be payable to order or to bearer, and where it is addressed to the drawee, he must be named or otherwise indicated with reasonable certainty; its negotiability is not affected by the fact that it is not dated, or that it bears a seal, or that it does not specify the value given or that any value was given.

The sum payable is certain within the act, although it is to be paid with interest, or by stated instalments, with the provision that, upon default in the payment of any instalment or interest, the whole sum becomes payable, or if payable with exchange or with costs of collection or an attorney's fee.

It may be payable to the order of a specified person, or to him, or his order. A note payable to the maker's order is not negotiable till he endorses it. It may be payable to the holder of an office.

Negotiability is not affected if the instrument authorizes the sale of collateral security; or a confession of judgment on default; or waives the benefit of any law intended for the obligor's benefit; or gives the holder an election to require something to be done in lieu of payment of money.

Warehouse receipts and bills of lading are said to be usually treated as only quasi negotiable instruments on the ground that they do not contain a sufficiently definite promise and are not payable in money; Sel. Neg. Inst. § 34. In some states receipts issued by certain warehouse and storage companies are still negotiable, for the statute giving them negotiability was not repealed by the Negotiable Instruments Act; Hanover N. Bk. v. Trust Co., 148 N. Y. 612, 43 N. E. 72, 51 Am. St. Rep. 721. In Wisconsin warehouse receipts, bills of lading and railroad receipts are negotiable unless the words "not negotiable" are plainly written, printed or stamped on the face of the instrument. A certificate of deposit payable to the order of the depositor is negotiable; Birch v. Fisher, 51 Mich. 36, 16 N. W. 220; Pardee v. Fish, 60 N. Y. 265, 19 Am. Rep. 176; Johnson v. Henderson, 76 N. C. 227.

A note promising to pay a certain sum "to be allowed at my decease," is negotiable; Martin v. Stone, 67 N. H. 367, 29 Atl. 845; and one payable "sixty days after my death"; Crider v. Shelby, 95 Fed. 212; and one payable "on demand after my decease"; Bristol v. Warner, 19 Conn. 7.

But instruments payable on a contingency are not negotiable, and the happening of the contingency does not cure the defect; as an instrument payable when one shall become of age; Kelley v. Hemmingway, 13 Ill. 604, 56 Am. Dec. 474; or be elected to a certain office; Cooper v. Brewster, 1 Minn. 94 (Gil. 73); or when a certain estate shall be settled; Husband v. Epling, 81 Ill. 172, 25 Am. Rep. 273.

It has been a recognized rule that instruments payable at a fixed period after date or sight, though payable before then on a contingency, are sufficiently certain to be negotiable; Stevens v. Blunt, 7 Mass. 240; Thorp v. Mindeman, 123 Wis. 149, 101 N. W. 417, 68 L. R. A. 146, 107 Am. St. Rep. 1003.

That letters of credit "possess a real negotiability when they relate to bills of exchange," see 2 Dan. Neg. Instr. § 1798.

A receiver's certificate is not negotiable; Turner v. R. Co., 95 Ill. 134, 35 Am. Rep. 144; nor a passbook issued by a savings bank; Smith v. Bank, 101 N. Y. 58, 4 N. E. 123, 54 Am. Rep. 653; nor municipal warrants and orders; Stanton v. Shipley, 27 Fed. 498.

Instruments payable in services are not; Quinby v. Merritt, 11 Humph. (Tenn.) 439; or in merchandise; Gushee v. Eddy, 11 Gray (Mass.) 502, 71 Am. Dec. 728; Tibbets v. Gerrish, 25 N. H. 41, 57 Am. Dec. 307; or in the alternative, in money or merchandise; Thompson v. Gaylard, 3 N. C. 150; or in money or bank stock; Alexander v. Oaks, 19 N. C. 513.

A provision in a note, otherwise negotiable, that the title to the property for which it was given shall remain in the vendor until the note is paid, has been held to be not negotiable under the Negotiable Instruments Act; Third N. Bk. v. Spring, 28 Misc. 9, 59 N. Y. Supp. 794; but the rule is generally that such a provision will not destroy negotiability; Chicago R. Equipment Co. v. Bank, 136 U. S. 268, 10 Sup. Ct. 999, 34 L. Ed. 349; First N. Bk. v. Slaughter, 98 Ala. 602, 14 South. 545, 39 Am. St. Rep. 88; Choate v. Stevens, 116 Mich. 28, 74 N. W. 289, 43 L. R. A. 277.

The negotiable character of an instrument is not affected by the fact that it designates a particular kind of current money in which payment is to be made; thus an instrument is payable in money if payable in "pounds sterling"; King v. Hamilton, 12 Fed. 478; or in cash notes; Ward v. Lattimer, 2 Tex. 245; or in gold dollars; Chrysler v. Renois, 43 N. Y. 209; or in Mexican silver dollars; Hogue v. Williamson, 85 Tex. 553, 22 S. W.

580, 20 L. R. A. 481, 34 Am. St. Rep. 823; but is not payable in money if payable in bank stock; Markley v. Rhodes, 59 Ia. 57, 12 N. W. 775; or in current bank notes; State v. Corpening, 32 N. C. 58; or in current funds; Wright v. Hart's Adm'r, 44 Pa. 454 (contra, Bull v. Bank, 123 U. S. 105, 8 Sup. Ct. 62, 31 L. Ed. 97); or in currency; Ruidskoff v. Barrett, 11 Ohio 172 (contra, Butler v. Paine, 8 Minn. 324 [Gil. 284]).

A note payable at New York in New York funds or their equivalent is not negotiable because the term "New York funds," it is presumed, may embrace stocks, bank notes, specie and every description of currency which is used in commercial transactions; Hasbrook v. Palmer, 2 McLean 10, Fed. Cas. No. 6,188; but a note payable in bank notes current in the city of New York was held negotiable; Keith v. Jones, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 120; so also a note payable in "York State bills or specie"; Judah v. Harris, 19 Johns. (N. Y.) 144. See Selover, Neg. Instr. § 41.

In the absence of statute, bills and notes are treated as choses in action and are not subject to levy and sale on execution, but by statute in many states it is now otherwise; 1 Freem. Ex. § 112; Brown v. Anderson, 4 Mart. N. S. (La.) 416. It is held that a note may be made the subject of seizure and delivery in a replevin suit; Smith v. Eals, 81 Ia. 235, 46 N. W. 1110, 25 Am. St. Rep. 486. That bills and notes are governed by the designation of "goods and chattels" in the statute of frauds and other statutes, see 2 Ames, Bills and Notes 706. They are goods, wares and merchandise; Baldwin v. Williams, 3 Metc. (Mass.) 365; Somerby v. Buntin, 118 Mass. 279, 19 Am. Rep. 459; and are the subject of conversion; 3 Campb. 477. They may be the subject of a donatio causa mortis, even though payable to order and undorsed; 2 Ames, Bills and Notes 699. Bonds and negotiable instruments are more than mere evidences of debt. The debt is inseparable from the paper which declares and constitutes it by a tradition which comes down from more archaic conditions; Blackstone v. Miller, 188 U. S. 206, 23 Sup. Ct. 277, 47 L. Ed. 439; Bacon v. Hooker, 177 Mass. 335, 58 N. E. 1078, 83 Am. St. Rep. 279.

As to the early history of negotiable instruments, see Jenks, in 9 L. Q. R. 70 (3 Sel. Essays in Anglo-Amer. L. II. 51). As to the Negotiable Instruments Acts, see A. M. Eaton in 12 Mich. L. Rev. 89.

See PROMISSORY NOTES; BILLS OF EXCHANGE; BOND; COUPONS; Daniel, Neg. Instr. (Calvert's Ed. 1913); Selover, Neg. Instruments.

NEGOTIATE. The power to negotiate a bill or note is the power to indorse and deliver it to another, so that the right of action thereon shall pass to the indorser or holder. Weckler v. Bank, 42 Md. 581, 20 Am. Rep. 95; see Yerkes v. Bank, 69 N. Y. 386, 25

Am. Rep. 208; or, in case of such instrument payable to bearer, to deliver it. A note transferred by delivery is negotiated; Lowrie v. Zunkel, 49 Mo. App. 153. A national bank, under the power to negotiate evidences of debt, may exchange government bonds for registered bonds; Yerkes v. Bank, 69 N. Y. 383, 25 Am. Rep. 208.

NEGOTIATION. The deliberation which takes place between the parties touching a proposed agreement.

That which transpires in the negotiation makes no part of the agreement, unless introduced into it. It is a general rule that no evidence can be given to add to, diminish, contradict, or alter a written instrument; Leake, Contr. 26; McDermott v. Ins. Co., 3 S. & R. (Pa.) 609. But this rule has been much modified, and parol evidence is now held admissible to contradict, vary, or even avoid a written instrument where it would not have been executed but for the oral stipulation, except in the case of negotiable paper; Hoopes v. Beale, 90 Pa. 82. See EVIDENCE.

As to negotiations preceding a contract, see MERGER.

In Mercantile Law. The act by which a bill of exchange or promissory note is put into circulation by being passed by one of the original parties to another person.

The transfer of a bill or note in the form and manner prescribed by the law merchant, with the incidents and privileges annexed thereby, i. e.:

The transferee can sue all parties to the instrument in his own name;

The consideration for the transfer is prima facie presumed;

The transferor can under certain conditions give a good title, although he has none himself;

The transferee can further negotiate the bill with the like privileges and incidents.

There are two modes of negotiation, viz.: by delivery and by indorsements. The former applies to bills, etc., payable to bearer; the latter to those payable to order. See Chalm. Dig. of Bills, etc. § 106; 1 Pars. Notes & B. 14; Byles, Bills 169.

Until an accommodation bill or note has been negotiated, there is no contract which can be enforced on the note; 2 M. & G. 911.

NEGOTIUM GESTOR (Lat.). In Civil Law. One who spontaneously, and without authority, undertakes to act for another, during his absence, in his affairs.

In cases of this sort, as he acts wholly without authority, there can, strictly speaking, be no contract; but the civil law raises a quasi mandate by implication for the benefit of the owner, in many such cases; Mackelvey, Civ. Law, § 460; 2 Kent 610, n.; Story, Bailm. §§ 82, 189.

NEGRO. A black man descended from the black race of Southern Africa; it has been held not to include a mulatto; Felix v. State, 18 Ala. 726. A negro is defined by statute in Alabama, Kentucky, Maryland, Mississippi, North Carolina, Tennessee and Texas as a person of color who is descended from a negro to the third generation inclusive, though one ancestor in each generation may have been white; in Florida, Georgia, Indiana, Minnesota, Missouri and South Carolina, where there is as much as one-eighth negro blood; in Nebraska and Oregon, one-fourth, and so apparently in Virginia and Michigan. It was held in Monroe v. Collins, 17 Ohio St. 665, that if white blood predominates the person is to be considered white. If one was a slave before 1865, it is presumed that he is a negro; McMillan v. School Committee, 107 N. C. 609, 12 S. E. 330, 10 L. R. A. 823; if it appears that a person usually associates with negroes, it is evidence that he is one; Hopkins v. Bowers, 111 N. C. 175, 16 S. E. 1; and if it appears that a woman's first husband was a white man, it is evidence tending to prove that she is a white woman; Bell v. State, 33 Tex. Cr. R. 163, 25 S. W. 769.

Compelling a sheriff with a negro prisoner to ride in a negro coach is not actionable; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Sharman (Tex.) 158 S. W. 1045. An ordinance making it unlawful for a colored person to reside upon a street where the greater number of houses are occupied by whites, is invalid; State v. Darnell (N. C.) 81 S. E. 338.

See 43 Am. L. Rev. 29, where the subject of Race Distinctions is fully treated by Gilbert S. Stephenson (since published in book form).

See MIXED JURY; CIVIL RIGHTS; MISCEGENATION; EQUAL PROTECTION OF THE LAWS; CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES; WHITE PERSONS.

NEIFE, NAIF, NATIVUS. In Old English Law. A woman who was born a villein, or a bond-woman. 1 Steph. Com. 133.

NEIGHBOR. One who lives in close proximity to another. In a grant relating to the use of water by neighbors, it was limited to the next adjoining farm; 1 A. C., 22 (So. Africa).

NEIGHBORHOOD. A surrounding or adjoining district. It depends upon no arbitrary rule of distance or topography. The neighborhood of a person will cover a larger space in a sparsely settled country than in a city; State v. Jungling, 116 Mo. 162, 22 S. W. 688. See Peters v. Bourneau, 22 Ill. App. 179; Langley v. Barnstead, 63 N. H. 246.

It is not synonymous with territory or district, but is a collective noun, with the suggestion of proximity, and refers to the units which make up its whole, as well as to the region which comprehends those units. A district or locality, especially when considered with relation to its inhabitants or their interests. Lindsay Irr. Co. v. Mehrtens, 97 Cal. 676, 32 Pac. 803.

NEMINE CONTRA DICENTE (usually abbreviated nem. con.). Words used to signify the unanimous consent of the house to which they are applied. In England, they are used in the house of commons; in the house of lords, the words used to convey the same idea are nemine dissentiente.

NEPHEW. The son of a brother or sister. Ambl. 514; 1 Jac. 207.

The Latin nepos, from which nephew is derived, was used in the civil law for nephew, but more properly for grandson; and we accordingly find neveu, the original form of nephew, in the sense of grandson. Britton, c. 119.

According to the civil law, a nephew is in the third degree of consanguinity; according to the common law, in the second; the latter is the rule of common law; 2 Bla. Com. 206. But in this country the rule of the civil law is adopted; 2 Hill, R. P. 194.

Nephews and nieces may be shown by circumstances to include grand-nephews and grand-nieces, and even a great-grand-niece; In re Logan, 131 N. Y. 456, 30 N. E. 485; but in a bequest, would not include, without special mention, nephews and nieces by marriage; Appeal of Green, 42 Pa. 25. See LEGACY.

NEPOS (Lat.). A grandson. See NEPHEW.

NEPTIS (Lat.). Granddaughter; sometimes great-granddaughter. Calv. Lex.; Vicat, Voc. Jur. See LEGACY.

NET. Clear of all charges and deductions; that which remains after the deduction of all charges or outlay, as net profit. St. John v. R. Co., 22 Wall. (U. S.) 148, 22 L. Ed. 743.

The exact weight of an article, without the bag, box, keg, or other thing in which it may be enveloped.

NET BALANCE. In commercial usage it means the balance of the proceeds after deducting the expenses incident to the sale. Evans v. Waln, 71 Pa. 74.

NET EARNINGS. The excess of the gross earnings over the expenditures defrayed in producing them, aside from, and exclusive of, the expenditure of capital laid out in constructing and equipping the works themselves. Union P. R. Co. v. U. S., 99 U. S. 420, 25 L. Ed. 274. See Barry v. R. Co., 27 Fed. 1; St. John v. R. Co., 22 Wall. (U. S.) 148, 22 L. Ed. 743; Sioux City & P. R. Co. v. U. S., 110 U. S. 205, 3 Sup. Ct. 565, 28 L. Ed. 120; Schmidt v. R. Co., 95 Ky. 289, 25 S. W. 494, 26 S. W. 547.

NET PROFITS. This term does not mean what is made over the losses, expenses, and interest on the amount invested; it includes simply the gain that accrues on the investment, after deducting the losses and expenses of the business. Tutt v. Land, 50 Ga. 350. See Park v. Locomotive Works, 40 N. J. Eq. 114, 3 Atl. 162. See PROFITS.

NETHER HOUSE OF PARLIAMENT. The house of commons so called in the time of Henry VIII.

NETHERLANDS, THE. A monarchy of Europe.

The first constitution after its reconstruction as a kingdom was given in 1815. It has been revised, especially in 1848 and in 1887. It is a constitutional and hereditary monarchy.

The executive power consists of the Sovereign. He has the command of the army and navy, the control of the colonies and the right to create nobles, etc. The Council of State of which the members are appointed by the Sovereign advises His Majesty. The Cabinet Ministers appointed by the Sovereign are responsible to the country. The First Chamber of the States-General consists of fifty members appointed by the Provincial States from the highest direct tax-payers and great functionaries and persons of high rank. The Second Chamber consists of one hundred members elected by the male electors of the country. The Provincial States, elected by the male electors of the province, regulate the affairs of the province. The Parish Corporations, elected by the male electors of the parish, regulate the affairs of the parish. Justice is administered in the name of the Sovereign. Religion is free. Taxes are decreed by the law.

The judiciary consists of:

1. The Court of the Canton, of which there are one hundred and six, each having its judge, who decides without appeal all cases of civil or commercial nature in which the claim does not exceed fl. 50 ($20); and all criminal cases, subject to appeal, where the penalty does not exceed fl. 25 ($10).
2. The Arrondissement (or District) Court, of which there are twenty-three having from five to twenty-four judges each. The higher courts are:
3. The Court of Justice, of which there are five having from nine to twelve judges each, decides all appeals in civil, commercial and criminal cases from the Arrondissement Court.
4. The High Court of Justice, which has fourteen to sixteen judges and decides all cases in which the Sovereign, or the Royal House, or the members of the States-General are the defendants; cases of appeal from the Courts of Justice; all criminal cases in which high officials of the State are implicated; and all cases outside the jurisdiction of the lower courts.

The Netherlands law is based on the French law as introduced by Napoleon, and the earlier provincial law, which is for the greater part of German origin.

NEUTRAL PROPERTY. Property which belongs to neutral owners, and is used, treated, and accompanied by proper insignia as such.

Where the insured party has property and commercial establishments and depositories in different countries, if the property and concern of any one are in, or belong to, a belligerent country, they will have the national character of such country though the national character of the owner may be that of a neutral; 5 W. Rob. 302; The Antonia Johanna, 1 Wheat. (U. S.) 159, 4 L. Ed. 60. The declaration of war by a nation subsequently to the time in reference to which the policy takes effect will, however, only affect ownership thereafter acquired or acts thereafter done; 1 C. Rob. 107, 336; 6 id. 364; The Fortuna, 3 Wheat. (U. S.) 245, 4 L. Ed. 379.

The description of the subject in a policy of insurance as neutral or belonging to neutrals, is, as in other cases, a warranty that the property is what it is described to be, and it must, accordingly, in order to comply with the warranty not only belong to neutral owners at the time of making the insurance, but must continue to be so owned during the period for which it is insured, and must, so far as it depends upon the assured, be accompanied by the usual insignia, as such, and in all respects represented, managed, and used as such; Livingston v. Ins. Co., 6 Cra. (U. S.) 274, 3 L. Ed. 222; 1 C. Rob. 26, 336; 2 id. 133, 218.

NEUTRALITY. The state of a nation which takes no part between two or more other nations at war with each other.

"The relation of neutrality will be found to consist in two principal circumstances: Entire abstinence from any participation in the war, and impartiality of conduct towards both belligerents." 3 Phill. Int. L. 225. They remain the common friends of the belligerents, favoring the arms of neither to the detriment of the other; 2 Halleck, Int. L., Baker's ed. 161.

It has been said that there should be, on the part of a neutral state, not an impartiality of action, but of nonaction; Massé, Droit Com. 190.

The rights and duties of neutral states may be classified as follows:

Rights. The territory of neutral powers must not be violated by any acts of hostility between the two belligerents or by any acts on the part of either belligerent which are directly connected with the conduct of hostilities. Neutral powers may repel by force any such acts without thereby committing a hostile act.

Duties. Passive duties. In all matters relating to the war a neutral must abstain in its official capacity from giving any help to either belligerent; it must not furnish troops or give or sell arms or munitions to either belligerent, nor make presents or loans of money, nor purchase belligerent ships, nor decide in its courts upon the validity of belligerent captures, nor give expression to its sympathy for either party. It must acquiesce in the exercise of the belligerent's right of search, blockade, and capture of contraband.

Active duties. A neutral state must resist the commission of any act of hostility by either belligerent within its territories; it must prevent the issuance of commissions in the service of either belligerent, the enlistment of soldiers, the fitting out of hostile expeditions in its ports, and the preparation of military expeditions on land; it need not, however, prevent its individual subjects from leaving the country to enlist abroad, nor from exporting arms or ammunition to either belligerent, nor from making loans to either belligerent, nor from giving expression to their sympathy for either party.

On the other hand, belligerents have the right to interfere with neutral commerce by the capture of contraband (q. v.) and by blockade (q. v.), and they have the duty of refraining from committing within neutral territory any acts connected with hostile operations.

There are certain acts of friendliness on the part of neutral towards belligerent states, such as the furnishing of warships with limited supplies of food, coal, etc., which are permitted in spite of the fact that they involve a certain amount of indirect assistance to the belligerents. But absolute impartiality must be observed towards both belligerents.

It was formerly held that where a neutral has bound itself, by previous treaty, to one belligerent, assistance under such treaty does not necessarily forfeit its neutral character; but this doctrine is now rejected by the majority of writers. 2 Opp. § 305.

The idea of neutrality which, strictly speaking, consists of an abstention from any participation in a public, private or civil war, must not be so extended as to prevent the recognition of the belligerency of an insurgent party in a foreign state, when the extent of the insurrection calls for such recognition; and acts of war undertaken upon the territory of the United States in favor of foreign insurgents cannot be excused on the ground that the neutrality of the United States prevents that government from recognizing the belligerency of the insurgents to the extent of checking their hostile operations upon its soil. See The Three Friends, 166 U. S. 1, 17 Sup. Ct. 495, 41 L. Ed. 897.

The recognition of the belligerency of insurgents relieves the parent state from all responsibility for damages for any irregularities committed against neutrals by the other belligerent, which claims could be enforced against the parent nation if the injuries were committed by insurgents.

The public ships of a neutral are inviolable; and so are its private ships, subject, however, to laws relating to a breach of blockade, contraband, and search. Neutral territory, including the sea for a distance of three miles from low-water mark, is inviolable. If a ship is captured in neutral waters, in violation of neutrality, the neutral power is bound to enforce its restoration or compensate the injured belligerent; and, in general, a neutral is bound to prevent and punish a violation of its rights as a neutral by either belligerent; Halleck, Int. L., Baker's ed. 143. These principles are now confirmed by 13 H. C. (1907) arts. 1-3.

Where a United States war vessel captured a Confederate steamer in a neutral port of Brazil and brought it to a United States port, and it was there sunk by a collision, and the United States disavowed the action of its ship in making the capture, it was held that as the capture was unlawful, or had been disavowed by the government, a libel for the captured vessel as prize of war could not be sustained; The "Florida," 101 U. S. 37, 25 L. Ed. 898. A neutral may demand the return of a captured vessel and further redress. But where the vessel chooses to resist capture in neutral waters, its capture is not an offence against the neutral; Cobb, Int. L. Cas. 230; Hall, Int. L. § 228.

Where neutral territory is violated by illegal outfit and equipment, the offence is deposited after the termination of the voyage; The Santissima Trinidad, 7 Wheat. 283, 348, 5 L. Ed. 454. A neutral ship should, ordinarily, submit to capture and seek its remedies in the courts for damage; 1 Rob. 374.

It has been suggested that a belligerent who has begun an attack on another belligerent outside of neutral territory or water may continue the contest within the neutral waters and complete the capture; 5 C. Rob. 365; but on the other hand it is said that the inviolability of neutral territory should allow of no exceptions, and that property captured under such circumstances must be restored, though it actually belonged to the enemy; 5 C. Rob. 15; 3 Phill. Int. L. 386.

It belongs exclusively to the neutral government to raise the question of a capture made within neutral territory; The Adela, 6 Wall. (U. S.) 266, 18 L. Ed. 821; the owner of the captured ship must assert his claim through his government; 1 Kent 121; an enemy cannot do so; The Sir William Peel, 5 Wall. (U. S.) 517, 18 L. Ed. 696; but whenever a capture is made by a belligerent in violation of neutral rights, if the prize come voluntarily within the jurisdiction of the neutral, it should be restored to its original owner; 3 Phill. Int. L. 532; La Amistad de Rues, 5 Wheat. (U. S.) 385, 5 L. Ed. 115. See 13 H. C. (1907) arts. 12-20.

A public vessel of a belligerent may enter a neutral port to make such repairs or to take in such coal and provisions as may be necessary; but the ordinary rule is that it must not remain more than twenty-four hours, except in case of necessity.

A belligerent vessel may bring a prize into a neutral port and sell it there, with the consent of the neutral; Hopner v. Appleby, 5 Mas. 77, Fed. Cas. No. 6,699; and a neutral may permit a prize to be brought into its ports for repairs; 1 Op. Att. Gen. 603; but neutrals may prohibit this and have often, by proclamation, done so; 2 Halleck, Int. L., Baker's ed. 148.

Where a neutral allows the right of passage through its territory to one belligerent, it must accord it to both; 3 Phill. Int. L.

183; 1 Kent *120; 21 Rev. de Dr. Int. 117. The troops of a belligerent cannot cross neutral territory, nor can even the wounded be taken across neutral territory, without the express permission of the neutral, which, in the case of the Franco-Prussian War of 1870, was refused by Belgium; nor can a neutral allow its ports and waters to be used as a base of operations or supplies, or as a point from which to watch the other belligerent. See 5 H. C. (1907) arts. 1-2; 13 H. C. (1907) art. 5.

The subjects of neutral states are entitled to carry on, upon their own account, a trade with a belligerent; this doctrine is well settled; 3 Phill. Int. L. 300. But it was considered unlawful, under the common law, for an English subject to raise a loan to support the subjects of a foreign state at war with a government in alliance with his own; 3 Phill. Int. L., 247; yet it now appears to be the opinion that, although the neutral state cannot loan money, yet the individual citizens of a neutral state may, and such loans are not considered a violation of neutrality any more than the sales of arms and ammunition; Snow, Lect. Int. Law 119. But such loans to an insurgent state or colony have been considered unlawful; Risley, Law of War; 9 Moore, P. C. 586.

A neutral will not permit a belligerent's ship to coal in its ports except in case of necessity, and then only to the extent necessary to carry them to their nearest home port; and a belligerent vessel cannot take on coal again at any port of such neutral within three months. See 13 H. C. (1907) arts. 19-20.

It was formerly held that citizens of a neutral state may send armed vessels as well as munitions of war to a belligerent port for sale; The Santissima Trinidad, 7 Wheat. (U. S.) 283, 5 L. Ed. 454; though they would be subject, of course, to capture as contraband. But this doctrine has been modified as between the United States and Great Britain by the treaty relating to the Alabama claims, by which those nations agreed that "A neutral state is bound: 1. To use due diligence to prevent the fitting out, arming, or equipping, etc., within its jurisdiction, of any vessel which it has reasonable ground to believe is intended to cruise or carry on war against a power with which it is at peace, and also to use due diligence to prevent the departure from its jurisdiction of any vessel, etc., such vessel having been specially adapted, in whole or in part, within such jurisdiction, to warlike use." 2. "Not to permit or suffer either belligerent to make use of its ports or waters as the base of naval operations against the other, or for the purpose of the renewal or augmentation of military supplies or arms, or the recruitment of men."

A belligerent may capture certain articles as contraband of war when carried in neutral ships and having a hostile destination. See 13 H. C. (1907) arts. 5, 8. This includes munitions of war. Other articles are of doubtful use, incipit usus, and may be contraband or not according to circumstances. There is no settled definition of contraband, nor any practice in regard to its exact limits. Provisions, money, or coal destined for the use of a belligerent army or fleet have been included within the term. Coal is declared contraband in the proclamation of President McKinley, April 26, 1898, and by the British government on the breaking out of the Hispano-American war. Where things are of doubtful use, that is, occasional contraband, they are not usually confiscated, but are bought by the captor at a fair price. This is called Pre-emption (q. v.), and usually applies to cargoes of provisions. See CONTRABAND; 1 Kent 138.

The question whether a belligerent may take the goods of its enemy, not contraband, which are being carried in a neutral ship, has been much discussed, and also whether innocent goods of a neutral can be transported in a belligerent's vessel without being confiscated when the vessel is captured. Formerly it was held that a belligerent might take enemy's goods from neutral custody, on the high seas. But the Declaration of Paris changed the rule of the nations, except in the case of the United States, Spain, and Venezuela, and a neutral flag now covers enemy's goods with the exception of contraband of war. This is a general rule of international law, although some treaties made by the United States have laid down a different rule; Snow, Int. Law 164; it was applied by the United States during the war of the Rebellion; 1 Kent 128; and adopted by it in the Hispano-American war of 1898.

By the Declaration of Paris (q. v.) the following principles were adopted: The neutral flag covers enemy's goods, except contraband of war. Neutral goods, except contraband of war, are not liable to capture under an enemy's flag.

Neutral goods on an armed belligerent cruiser are not subject to capture, though there was resistance to capture by the vessel, provided the neutral owner did not aid in the armament or the resistance, notwithstanding he had chartered the whole vessel and was on board at the capture; The Nereide, 9 Cra. (U. S.) 388, 3 L. Ed. 769; The Atalanta, 3 Wheat. (U. S.) 409, 4 L. Ed. 422. British practice is, however, to the contrary; 1 Dods. 443. If the neutral vessel is in the direct employ of the enemy, both ships and goods are liable to capture; The City of Mexico, 24 Fed. 33; and so are neutral goods on a neutral vessel, if the latter be under the enemy's protection; The Schooner Nancy, 27 Ct. Cl. 99.

It is lawful for a neutral ship to carry contraband goods, but the right is always exercised subject to capture. Ordinarily the neutral ship is not subject to confiscation and will be released in the prize court, unless she belongs to the owner of the contraband, or her owner is privy to the carriage of the contraband goods, or uses false papers; Risley, Law of War 232; 1 Kent 143.

When two states are at war, it has become the practice of modern times for other states to issue a proclamation of neutrality to protect their commercial interests and territory.

The subjects of a neutral power residing in a belligerent territory are not entitled to any special protection for their property or to exemption from military contributions to which they may be liable in common with the inhabitants of the place in which they reside or in which their property may be situated; 2 Halleck, Int. L., Baker's ed. 141.

By Convention of the Great Powers, 1887 and 1888, the Suez Canal is neutralized, and is to remain open in war or peace, to vessels of commerce and war of all nations. See id. 149. In 1815, the Rhine was neutralized, as between the States of the Rhine, to a certain extent. In 1829, entrance into the Black Sea was admitted to belong to Russia and to powers at amity with Russia. By the treaty of Paris the Black Sea was neutralized, but this was largely abrogated in 1871. By the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, 1850, Great Britain and the United States agreed that any canal built between the Atlantic and Pacific oceans should be forever neutral. The principle is again asserted in the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, 1901, entered into in contemplation of the canal about to be constructed by the United States.

The neutrality acts of the United States, which regulate the conduct of its citizens and of aliens while within its jurisdiction, constitute Title LXVII. of the Revised Statutes. Their origin and scope are as follows: President Washington, in his annual message to Congress, December 3, 1793, said: "The original arming and equipping of vessels in the ports of the United States by any of the belligerent parties for military services, offensive or defensive, is deemed unlawful." The act of 1794, which has been generally recognized as the first instance of municipal legislation in support of the obligations of neutrality, and a remarkable advance in the development of international law, was passed in accordance with this recommendation. The acts of 1817 and 1818 were successively passed and carried forward into R. S. Title LXVII., which forbids citizens from accepting a commission from a foreign prince against a foreign prince with whom we are at peace; enlisting, or hiring or retaining another to enlist, in the army or navy of such foreign prince; fitting out or arming a vessel in the service of a foreign prince to commit hostilities against a foreign prince, etc. (the vessel to be forfeited—one half to the informer); increasing the force of any vessel of war of such foreign prince by adding any equipment solely applicable to war; preparing any military expedition in the United States to be carried on thence against any foreign prince with whom we are at peace.

Sec. 5288 provides that the president may employ the land and naval forces of the United States and militia in compelling any foreign vessel to depart the United States in all cases in which by the laws of nations or the treaties of the United States she ought not to remain therein. Sec. 5289 provides that the owners or consignees of every armed vessel sailing out of our ports belonging wholly or in part to citizens thereof shall before clearing give bond in double the value of the vessel and cargo, conditioned that she shall not commit any hostilities against any foreign prince, etc., with whom we are at peace. Sec. 5290 provides that the United States shall detain any vessel manifestly built for warlike purposes and about to depart the United States, the cargo of which consists principally of munitions of war, when the number of men on board or other circumstances render it probable that it is intended to commit hostilities against any such foreign prince, etc., until the decision of the president is had thereon or the owner gives bond and securities as required in cases under § 5289. Sec. 5291 provides that this title shall not extend to subjects of any foreign prince, etc., transiently within the United States, who enlist on a vessel of war or privateer which at the time of its arrival here was equipped as such, or who employ other citizens of the same foreign prince, etc., to enlist on board such vessel of war, etc., if the United States shall then be at peace with such foreign prince, etc. Offences under these sections are made high misdemeanors. These sections are now part of the Crim. Code, ch. 2.

The act does not prohibit armed vessels belonging to citizens from sailing out of our ports, but only requires their owners to give security; U. S. v. Quincy, 6 Pet. (U. S.) 445, 8 L. Ed. 458.

The word "people," as used in § 5283, covers any insurgent or insurrectionary body conducting hostilities, although its belligerency has not been recognized; The Three Friends, 166 U. S. 1, 17 Sup. Ct. 495, 41 L. Ed. 897.

Where a vessel is chartered by a foreign government to carry a cargo of arms to that government, she is not liable to seizure; The Carondelet, 37 Fed. 799. It is not the intent of § 5286 to interfere with the commercial activities of citizens of the United States, but to prevent complications between this government and foreign powers, and fitting out military expeditions against friendly nations; U. S. v. Murphy, 84 Fed. 609, per Bradford, J.

The offence covered by the act consists of an act done in the United States, with the intent to commit an offence against the act; the intent is a necessary ingredient: The Conserva, 38 Fed. 431; and it must be formed and exist within the United States; The City of Mexico, 24 Fed. 33. The offence is complete when the expedition is organized; U. S. v. Ybanez, 53 Fed. 536; and although it is formed and detached in separate parts; U. S. v. The Mary N. Hogan, 18 Fed. 529.

No particular number of men is necessary to constitute a military expedition under the act; its character may be determined by the designation of the officers, the organization of the men in regiments or companies, and the purchase of military stores; U. S. v. Ybanez, 53 Fed. 536. Where insurgents carrying on war against a foreign country sent a vessel to procure arms in the United States, the purchase of such arms and placing them on board the vessel was held not within § 5286, though they were intended to be used by the insurgents in carrying on war against a foreign country, if they were not designed to constitute any part of the furnishings of the vessel herself; U. S. v. Trumbull, 48 Fed. 99. Placing munitions of war on a vessel, with intent to carry them to insurgents in a foreign country, but without intent that they shall constitute any part of the furnishings of the vessel, is not within the act; The Itata, 49 Fed. 646. One who provides the means for transporting a military expedition on any part of its journey, with knowledge of its ultimate destination and unlawful character, commits an offence under § 5286; Hart v. U. S., 84 Fed. 799, 28 C. C. A. 612. Sec. 5283 is not applicable to such a case; 13 Op. Att. Gen. 177.

A proceeding under § 5283 is a simple suit in admiralty, where the decree is that the libel be dismissed, or the vessel condemned; and no decree of restitution is necessary; The Conserva, 38 Fed. 431.

The above sections of R. S. were re-enacted in the Criminal Code, March 4, 1909, in effect January 1, 1910.

The British Foreign Enlistment Act of 1819 forbade British subjects to enlist or to induce others to enlist, or to leave or to induce others to leave the king's dominions in order to enlist; and forbade ship-owners to take aboard their ships persons illegally enlisted. It is a substantial copy of the American act of 1818; The Three Friends, 166 U. S. 60, 17 Sup. Ct. 495, 41 L. Ed. 897. In 1870 a new British act was passed, with a view to preventing the evasions of the law which gave rise to the complaints of the United States that Confederate cruisers had been fitted out in the ports of Great Britain.

At the Second Hague Peace Conference, 1907, two conventions dealing with neutrality were adopted, one respecting the rights and duties of neutral powers and persons in war on land, and the other respecting the rights and duties of neutral powers in maritime war. The former asserts the principle that the territory of neutral powers is inviolable, and prohibits belligerents from moving troops or convoys across the territory of a neutral power. It also forbids the erection of wireless telegraph stations upon neutral territory and reaffirms the principle in R. S. § 5282 (see Cr. Code), forbidding recruiting upon neutral territory in the interest of a belligerent. It relieves neutral powers of responsibility for the fact that persons cross the frontier singly to enter the service of one of the belligerents, and of the duty of preventing the export from their territories of arms and munitions of war. Further provisions regulate the use of neutral telegraph and telephone systems.

The Convention Respecting the Rights and Duties of Neutral Powers in Maritime War, besides codifying existing custom, enacts the following rules:

When belligerent ships have been captured in neutral waters, the neutral power must employ the means in its power to release the ship if it be still within its jurisdiction; if the ship has been removed, the captor government must, on demand of the neutral power, release the vessel and its crew. In adhering to the convention the United States insisted that it was the duty of neutrals to make the said demand.

Art. 8 reaffirms the first rule of the Treaty of Washington (1871) making it the duty of the neutral government to prevent the fitting out or arming, or the departure from its ports, of any vessel which it has reason to believe is intended to cruise or engage in hostile operations against one of the belligerents.

Art. 12 restricts to a period of twenty-four hours the asylum which may be given to belligerent war vessels in neutral ports.

Art. 16 regulates the departure of war vessels of the opposing belligerents from neutral ports.

Arts. 17-20 regulate the repairs which may be carried out, and the amount of provisions and fuel which may be taken on, in neutral ports.

Arts. 21-24 regulate the duties of neutral powers with regard to prizes brought by a belligerent into their ports.

NEVADA. One of the United States of America.

It was admitted into the Union, Oct. 31, 1864. Its boundaries were defined by an enabling act, approved March 21, 1864, as amended by the act of May 5, 1866.

The constitution was amended in 1912, by providing that women shall be eligible to certain public offices and it also provides for the recall of public officers.

NEVER INDEBTED. A plea to an action of indebitatus assumpsit, by which the defendant asserts that he is not indebted to the plaintiff. 6 C. & P. 545; 1 Q. B. 77. The plea of never indebted has, in England, been substituted for nil debet, in certain actions specified in schedule B (36) of the Common Law Procedure Act of 1852; and the effect of the plea never indebted is to deny those facts from which the liability of the defendant is alleged. In actions on negotiable bills or notes, never indebted is inadmissible; Reg. Gen. Hil. T. 1833, §§ 6, 7; 3 Chitty, Stat. 560. By the judicature act, 1875, Ord. xix. r. 20, a defendant is no longer allowed to deny generally the facts alleged by the plaintiff; Whart. Lex. A defendant cannot, under the plea of "never indebted," contend that, though a contract was made in fact, it was void in point of law, for the facts from which its invalidity is inferred must form the subject of a special plea; Moz. & W.

NEW. This term in its ordinary acceptance, when applied to the same subject or object, is the opposite of old. Pollard v. Kibbe, 14 Pet. (U. S.) 364, 10 L. Ed. 490.

NEW AND USEFUL INVENTION. A phrase used in the act of congress relating to patents for inventions. See PATENT.

NEW ASSIGNMENT. A re-statement of the cause of action by the plaintiff, with more particularity and certainty, but consistently with the general statement in the declaration. Steph. Pl. 241; Troup v. Smith's Ex'rs, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 43.

Its purpose is to avoid the effect of an evasive plea which apparently answers the declaration, though it does not really apply to the matter which the plaintiff had in view; 1 Wms. Saund. 299 b. Thus, if a defendant has committed two assaults on the plaintiff, one of which is justifiable and the other not, as the declaration may not distinguish one from the other, the defendant may justify, and the plaintiff not being able either to traverse, demur, or confess and avoid, must make a new assignment.

There may be several new assignments in the course of the same action; 1 Chitty, Pl. 614. A plaintiff may reply to a part of the plea and also make a new assignment. A new assignment is said to be in the nature of a new declaration; 1 Saund. 299 c; but is more properly considered as a repetition of the declaration; 1 Chit. Pl. 602; differing only in this, that it distinguishes the true ground of complaint, as being different from that which is covered by the plea. Being in the nature of a new or repeated declaration, it is, consequently, to be framed with as much certainty or specification of circumstances as the declaration itself. In some cases, indeed, it should be even more particular; Gould, Pl. 339 n.; Bac. Abr. Trespass (I 4, 2); 1 Chit. Pl. 610. See 3 Bla. Com. 311; Archb. Civ. Pl. 286. In England, under the Judicature Act, 1875, Ord. xix. r. 14, no new assignment is necessary or is to be used; but everything which has heretofore been alleged by way of new assignment is to be introduced by way of amendment of the statement of claim; Whart. Dict.

NEW CODE. A collection of imperial constitutions in twelve books, promulgated in 534, so called in reference to a code promulgated by Justinian in 529. 1 Steph. Com. 33.

NEW FOR OLD. A term used in marine insurance in cases of adjustment of a loss when it has been but partial. In making such adjustment, the rule is to apply the old materials towards the payment of the new, by deducting the value of them from the gross amount of the expenses for repairs, and to allow the deduction of one-third new for old upon the balance. See Byrnes v. Ins. Co., 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 265; Brooks v. Ins. Co., 7 Pick. (Mass.) 259. The deduction is usually one-third, and is made from the cost of labor and material, and in practice also from the incidental expenses of repairs, as towage, etc.; but see, as to this last, Potter v. Ins. Co., 3 Sumn. 45, Fed. Cas. No. 11,335; The Star of Hope v. Annan, 9 Wall. (U. S.) 203, 19 L. Ed. 638. The deduction is without regard to the age of the vessel; Dunham v. Ins. Co., 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 315, 6 Am. Dec. 374. A writer criticises the rule of thirds, and suggests that the increase of iron mills will change the rule of law; Gourlie, Gen. Av. In Liverpool, no deduction is made on iron vessels for the first eighteen months.

NEW FOREST. The royal forest in Hampshire, created by William the Conqueror. See FOREST LAW.

NEW HAMPSHIRE. The name of one of the original thirteen United States of America.

It was subject to Massachusetts from 1641 to 1680. It was governed as a province, under royal commissions, by a governor and council appointed by the king, and a house of assembly elected by the people, until the revolution.

In January, 1776, a temporary constitution was adopted, which continued till 1784. The constitution adopted in 1784 was amended by a convention of delegates held at Concord, approved by the people in their town-meetings, and established by the convention in February, 1792. This constitution was amended in 1850, by abolishing the property qualifications for certain offices, and amended again in 1877, changing it in eleven particulars, the principal of which were the abolition of the religious test, and adoption of biennial elections, increasing the number of senators, and changing the election from March to November. It was amended in 1912, by disqualifying voters convicted of certain crimes.

NEW INDUSTRY. See LABOR.

NEW INN. An inn of chancery. See INNS OF COURT.

NEW JERSEY. The name of one of the original thirteen states of the United States of America.

The territory of which the state is composed was included within the patent granted by Charles II. to his brother James, duke of York, bearing date on the 12th of March, 1663-4. This grant comprised all the lands lying between the western side of Connecticut river and the east side of Delaware bay, and conferred powers of government over the granted territory. At this time the province was in the possession and under the government of Holland. Before the close of the year the inhabitants of the province submitted to the government of England, on the 23d and 24th of June, 1664. The duke of York, by deeds of lease and release, conveyed to John Lord Berkeley and Sir George Carteret, their heirs and assigns forever, "all that tract of land adjacent to New England and lying and being to the westward of Long Island and Manhitas Island, and bounded on the east part by the main sea, and part by Hudson river, and hath upon the west Delaware bay or river, and extendeth southward to the main ocean as far as Cape May at the mouth of Delaware bay, and to the northward as far as the northernmost branch of the said bay or river of Delaware, which is in 41 degrees and 40 minutes of latitude, and crosseth over thence in a straight line to Hudson's river in forty-one degrees of latitude; which said tract of land is hereafter to be called Nova Cæsaria, or New Jersey."

This grant first defined the boundaries and gave the name of the province. It conferred upon the grantees, with the territory, powers of government in as full and ample manner as they were conferred by the crown upon the duke of York. Lord Berkeley and Sir George Carteret, being by virtue of this conveyance the sole proprietors of New Jersey, on the 10th of February, 1664-5, signed a constitution which they published under the title of "The concessions and agreement of the lords proprietors of the province of Nova Cæsaria, or New Jersey, to and with all and every of the adventurers, and all such as shall settle or plant there." This document, under the title of "The Concessions," was regarded as the first constitution of New Jersey, and continued in force until the division of the province in 1676. The instrument was considered as irrevocable, and therefore of higher authority than the acts of assembly, which were subject to alteration and repeal. War having been declared by England against Holland in 1673, the Dutch were again in possession of the country, and the inhabitants submitted to their authority.

By the treaty of peace between England and Holland on the 9th of February, 1674, the country was restored to the possession of the English. On the conclusion of peace, in order to remove all grounds of objection to his title on account of the recapture of the country by the Dutch, the duke of York obtained from the crown a new patent, similar to the first, and dated on the 29th of June, 1674. On the 20th of July in the same year, the duke of York made a second grant of a portion of the province to Sir George Carteret individually. The partition which this patent was intended to secure, in addition to the confirmation of Carteret's grant, was accomplished by deeds of partition executed July 1, 1676, between Carteret and the trustees of Byllinge. In 1702, the proprietors of the two provinces, called respectively East New Jersey and West New Jersey, surrendered their powers of government to Queen Anne, still retaining their title to the land. The two divisions constituted thenceforth but one colony. The colony was governed by a governor and council appointed by the crown, and an assembly of the representatives of the people chosen by the freeholders. This form of government continued till the American revolution.

The first constitution of the state of New Jersey was adopted by the provisional congress on the second day of July, 1776. This body was composed of representatives from all the counties of the state, who were elected on the fourth Monday of May, and convened at Burlington on the tenth day of June, 1776. It was finally adopted on the second day of July, but was never submitted to a popular vote. This constitution continued in force until the first day of September, 1844, when it was superseded by the existing constitution. The new constitution was adopted May 14, 1844, by a convention composed of delegates elected by the people in pursuance of an act passed by the legislature. The constitution thus framed, having been submitted to and adopted by the people at an election held on the thirteenth day of August, took effect and went into operation, pursuant to one of its provisions, on the twenty-second of September, 1844. This constitution was amended at a special election held September 7, 1875.

NEW MATTER. In Pleading. Matter not previously alleged. Statements of fact not previously alleged by either party to the pleadings. Where special pleading prevails, such matter must be pleaded in avoidance, and it must, in general, be followed by a verification; Gould, Pl. c. 3, § 195; Steph. Pl. 251; Com. Dig. Pleader (E 32); 1 Wms. Saund. 103. See PLEA.

In equity, new matter, discovered by either plaintiff or defendant, may be introduced by cross or supplemental bill before a decree has been pronounced, but not by amendment after an answer has been filed; Stafford v. Howlett, 1 Paige Ch. (N. Y.) 200; Hammond v. Place, Harr. Ch. (Mich.) 438.

NEW MEXICO. One of the states of the United States.

By act of congress, approved September 9, 1850, the territory of New Mexico was constituted and described. A proviso was annexed that the United States might divide the territory into two or more, and that when admitted as a state the said territory, or any portion of the same, should be received into the Union with or without slavery, as their constitution might prescribe at the time of admission.

Colorado was partly formed from New Mexico in 1861, and in 1863 the entire territory of Arizona, which reduced New Mexico to its present boundaries. By the organic act, the powers of the territory were lodged in three branches,—the legislative, executive, and judicial. The operation of this act was suspended until the Texan boundary was agreed upon, when it went into force by proclamation of the president, December 13, 1850.

The enabling act for its admission was passed by congress June 20, 1910. The joint resolution for its admission was passed August 21, 1911, to take effect upon proclamation by the president that certain conditions had been complied with. The proclamation was made January 6, 1912.

NEW PROMISE. A contract made after the original promise has, for some cause, been rendered invalid, by which the promisor agrees to fulfil such original promise. Within the meaning of the statute of frauds the renewal of a promise to pay is a new promise; McCrillis v. Millard, 17 R. I. 724, 24 Atl. 576. See LIMITATIONS.

NEW TRIAL. A re-examination of an issue in fact before a court and a jury, which has been tried at least once before the same court; Hill. N. Tr. 1. A rehearing of the legal rights of the parties, upon disputed facts, before another jury, granted by the court on motion of the party dissatisfied with the result of the previous trial, upon a proper case being presented for the purpose; 4 Chitty, Gen. Pr. 30; Grah. & W. N. Tr. 32. It is either upon the same, or different, or additional evidence, before a new jury, and probably, but not necessarily, before a different judge. It is a re-examination of an issue of fact in the same court after a trial and decision by a jury, court or referee; Harper v. Hildreth, 99 Cal. 265, 33 Pac. 1103.

The origin of the practice of granting new trials is of extremely ancient date, and, consequently, involved in some obscurity. Blackstone gives the most connected and satisfactory account of it of any writer; 3 Com. 387.

Courts have, in general, a discretionary power to grant or refuse new trials, according to the exigency of each particular case, upon principles of substantial justice; 1 Burr. 390. That the trial judge is not satisfied with a verdict is not binding on the court in banc, but deserves serious consideration; L. J. 55 Q. B. 403. This discretion is generally not reviewable on error; Hardin v. Inferior Court, 10 Ga. 93; Kerr v. Clappitt, 95 U. S. 188, 24 L. Ed. 493; Rex v. Gough, 2 Doug. 791; and such action by the court may be taken if a motion is not made within the time limited by rule or statute, since "if the court conceive a doubt that justice is not done, it is never too late to grant a new trial, but not on application of the party"; Lord Mansfield in 5 Term 437; and the same opinion was expressed by Kenyon, C. J., and Buller, J., in 5 Term 436. It should be exercised with great caution where a new trial is asked only because the verdict is against the weight of the evidence; Ruffner's Heirs v. Hill, 31 W. Va. 428, 7 S. E. 13.

Where one party moves for a new trial and the opposing party consents thereto, the court is not compelled to grant the same; Smedley v. R. Co., 45 Ill. App. 426. An order granting a new trial operates to set aside the judgment; Wheeler v. Kassabaum, 76 Cal. 90, 18 Pac. 119.

"Ordinarily a court has no power to grant a new trial after the adjournment of the term if no application has been made previous to the adjournment and no continuance granted"; Belknap v. U. S., 150 U. S. 588, 14 Sup. Ct. 183, 37 L. Ed. 1191; Sanderson v. U. S., 210 U. S. 168, 175, 28 Sup. Ct. 661, 52 L. Ed. 1007, where it was held that the power to grant a new trial after the term may be given by statute and that the provision of U. S. R. S. § 1088, permitting a motion for a new trial on behalf of the government within two years after final disposition of a claim by the court of claims was within the power of congress, inasmuch as, where the government consents to be sued, it may attach such conditions as to it seem proper. And in Pennsylvania by statute (1903) the supreme court may authorize the trial court to grant a new trial, nunc pro tunc, after the term at which a prisoner was convicted and sentenced for murder in the first degree, when it is made to appear that there is ground for substantial doubt of guilt. But a new trial may be granted after judgment so long as the case is still under the control of the trial court and if the motion was made reasonably within the rule of the state statute or common law; Kingman v. Wester Mfg. Co., 170 U. S. 675, 18 Sup. Ct. 786, 42 L. Ed. 1192.

The usual grounds for a new trial may be enumerated as follows:

The not giving the defendant sufficient notice of the time and place of trial, unless waived by an appearance and making a defence, will be a ground for setting aside the verdict; 3 Price 72; Lisher v. Parmelee, 1 Wend. (N. Y.) 22. But the defendant's ignorance must not have been owing to his own negligence, and the insufficiency of the notice must have been reasonably calculated to mislead him; 3 B. & P. 1; Kitchen v. Crawford, 13 Tex. 516; Seymour v. Miller, 32 Conn. 402.

Pleadings. Failure of the complaint to state a cause of action is available on motion for a new trial; Consol. Canal Co. v. Peters, 5 Ariz. 80, 46 Pac. 74; so of one which shows the alleged cause of action to be barred; Lambert v. Mfg. Co., 42 W. Va. 813, 26 S. E. 431.

Misconduct of parties, counsel, or witnesses. The use of crutches by plaintiff in going to and from the witness stand, when just before and after the trial he walked readily without them, is ground for a new trial; Corley v. R. Co., 12 App. Div. 409, 42 N. Y. Supp. 941; but plaintiff's hysteria while on the witness stand is not; Chicago & E. R. Co. v. Meech, 163 Ill. 305, 45 N. E. 290; nor is a controversy, between court and counsel, during the trial, not prejudicial to the defeated party; Herdler v. Range Co., 136 Mo. 3, 37 S. W. 115; nor improper remarks made by counsel in his argument; Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Curb, 66 Fed. 519, 13 C. C. A. 587, 27 U. S. App. 663.

A new trial will be granted where jurors were treated by a party to the cause; Philipsburgh Bk. v. Fulmer, 31 N. J. L. 52, 86 Am. Dec. 193; Harrington v. Probate Judge, 153 Mich. 660, 117 N. W. 62; Scott v. Tubbs, 43 Colo. 221, 95 Pac. 540, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 733, and note; or by counsel; People v. Montague, 71 Mich. 447, 39 N. W. 585; Rainy v. State, 100 Ga. 82, 27 S. E. 709; Steenburgh v. McRorie, 60 Misc. 510, 113 N. Y. Supp. 1118; Stewart v. Woolman, 26 Ont. Rep. 714; or by persons interested; McGill Bros. v. Ry., 75 S. C. 177, 55 S. E. 216; 6 U. C. Q. B. O. S. 352; though in some cases, where the treating was satisfactorily explained and considered innocent of evil effect, the verdict was not disturbed, though generally disapproval of the practice was expressed; Patton v. Mfg. Co., 11 R. I. 188; Doe v. Roe, 3 Pennewill (Del.) 128, 50 Atl. 217. Giving the jury a dinner in a public place after the verdict is rendered is not ground for a new trial; Beach Front Hotel Co. v. Sooy, 197 Fed. 881, 118 C. C. A. 579.

Mistakes or omissions of officers in summoning and drawing jurors, when the irregularity deprives the party complaining of a substantial right, will entitle him to a new trial; Straughan v. State, 16 Ark. 37; Com. v. Roby, 12 Pick. (Mass.) 496. Likewise, where the officer summoning the jury is nearly related to one of the parties; Munshower v. Patton, 10 S. & R. (Pa.) 334, 13 Am. Dec. 678; Rector v. Hudson, 20 Tex. 234; or is interested in the event; Woods v. Rowan, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 133; unless the objection to the officer was waived by the party; Walker v. Green, 3 Greenl. (Me.) 215; Orrok v. Ins. Co., 21 Pick. (Mass.) 457, 32 Am. Dec. 271; or the authority of the officer be so circumscribed as to put it out of his power to select an improper jury; Wakeman v. Sprague, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 720. A verdict will be set aside for the following causes: The unauthorized interference of a party, or his attorney, or the court, in selecting or returning jurors, unless the interference can be satisfactorily explained; Park v. Harrison, 8 Humphr. (Tenn.) 412; that a juror not regularly summoned and returned personated another; Stripling v. State, 77 Ga. 108, 3 S. E. 277; 7 Dowl. & R. 684; but not if the juror personated another through mistake, was qualified in other respects, and no injustice has been done; 12 East 229; Toledo Consol. St. R. Co. v. R. Co., 12 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 367. That a juror sat on the trial after being challenged and stood aside, unless the party complaining knew of it, and did not object; Jordan v. Meredith, 3 Yeates (Pa.) 318, 2 Am. Dec. 373; that a juror was discharged without any sufficient reason, after being sworn; Stewart v. State, 1 Ohio St. 66; but not if the juror was discharged by mistake and with the knowledge and acquiescence of the party; Com. v. Stowell, 9 Metc. (Mass.) 572; State v. Lytle, 27 N. C. 58; that the jury were not sworn, or that the oath was not administered in the form prescribed by law; Irwin v. Jones, 1 How. (Miss.) 497.

The disqualification of jurors, if it has not been waived, will be ground for a new trial; but a principal cause of challenge to a juror, not discovered during the trial, will not require a new trial in a criminal case, unless injustice resulted to the prisoner from the fact that such juror served; State v. Harrison, 36 W. Va. 729, 15 S. E. 982, 18 L. R. A. 224; that a juror was also a member of the grand jury finding the bill will not sustain a motion in arrest of judgment, where no objection was made to the juror on the trial; State v. Cooler, 30 S. C. 105, 8 S. E. 692, 3 L. R. A. 181; People v. Lewis, 4 Utah, 42, 5 Pac. 543. The want of a necessary property qualification is ground for a new trial; 4 Term 473; Briggs v. Georgia, 15 Vt. 61; irregularity in selection, which results in injury to the defeated party; State v. Breen, 50 Mo. 417; but after a plea of not guilty and conviction, defendant may not object to the venire or to jurors summoned under it; State v. Cole, 9 Humphr. (Tenn.) 626; or to a juror whose name was not in the box, on the list, or on the books of the tax receiver; Osgood v. State, 63 Ga. 791; but not if it appears that injustice was not done; Beck v. Thompson, 31 W. Va. 459, 7 S. E. 447, 13 Am. St. Rep. 870; and there was a fair trial, and the verdict was fully warranted by the evidence; Fisher v. Yoder, 53 Fed. 505. Relationship to one of the parties; Hardy v. Sprowle, 32 Me. 310; or to one of the counsel; Brown v. Reed, 81 Me. 158, 16 Atl. 504; Swift v. Mott, 92 Ga. 448, 17 S. E. 631; or business relations with the counsel; Fealy v. Bull, 11 App. Div. 468, 42 N. Y. Supp. 569; is ground; but knowledge of such relation must not have been obtained before trial, else the disqualification is waived; Jewell v. Jewell, 84 Me. 304, 24 Atl. 858, 18 L. R. A. 473; unless the relationship be so remote as to render it highly improbable that it could have had any influence; Churchill v. Churchill, 12 Vt. 661. So is interest in the event; Wood v. Stoddard, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 194; Page v. R. R., 21 N. H. 438; concealment of his interest by juror; Pearcy v. Ins. Co., 111 Ind. 59, 12 N. E. 98, 60 Am. Rep. 673; bias or prejudice; U. S. v. Fries, 3 Dall. (U. S.) 515, 1 L. Ed. 701; where a juror was deputy prosecuting attorney; Block v. State, 100 Ind. 357; conscientious scruples against finding a verdict of guilty; Pierce v. State, 13 N. H. 536; Martin v. State, 16 Ohio 364; People v. Damon, 13 Wend. (N. Y.) 351; an opinion held by juror which would have excluded him if discovered before he was sworn; State v. Harrison, 36 W. Va. 729, 15 S. E. 982, 18 L. R. A. 224; and mental or bodily disease unfitting jurors for the intelligent performance of their duties; Hogshhead v. State, 6 Humphr. (Tenn.) 59; Baxter v. People, 3 Gilman (Ill.) 368; alienage; Richards v. Moore, 60 Vt. 449, 15 Atl. 119; (but not criminality of juror; State v. Powers, 10 Or. 145, 45 Am. Rep. 138; Hill v. Corcoran, 15 Colo. 270, 25 Pac. 171; but see Greenup v. Stoker, 3 Gilman [Ill.] 202; Hollingsworth v. Duane, 4 Dall. [U. S.] 353, 1 L. Ed. 864). The want of purely statutory qualifications, such as citizenship, age, property, etc., which are not essential to an intelligent and impartial discharge of duty by a juror, are not treated with the same strictness as bias and like causes; Brewer v. Jacobs, 22 Fed. 234.

When indirect measures have been resorted to, to prejudice the jury, or tricks practised or disingenuous attempts made to suppress or stifle evidence or thwart the proceedings, or to obtain an unconscionable advantage, they will be defeated by granting a new trial. For example: where papers material on the point in issue, not previously submitted, are surreptitiously handed to the jury; Cas. temp. Hardw. 116; Sheaff v. Gray, 2 Yeates (Pa.) 273; or where the party, or some one in his behalf, directly approaches the jury on the subject of the trial; Kitchie v. Holbrooke, 7 S. & R. (Pa.) 458; Knight v. Freeport, 13 Mass. 218; or where one not a member of the jury slept in the same room with them, and had a conversation with one or two of them, in which he made statements reflecting on the character of the party against whom the verdict was rendered; Welch v. Taverner, 78 Ia. 207, 42 N. W. 650. But if the other party is aware of such attempts, and neglects to correct them when in his power, he will be deemed to have waived all objection; 11 Mod. 118. If the interference with the jury comes from a stranger, he without fault in the jury, and without the knowledge of the parties, and no injury has thereby ensued, the verdict will not be disturbed; Stewart v. Small, 5 Mo. 525; Luster v. State, 11 Humphr. (Tenn.) 169; Rowe v. State, id. 491. But see Boles v. State, 13 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 398. Where the jury, after retiring to deliberate, examined witnesses in the case, a new trial was granted; Cro. Eliz. 189; Thompson v. Mallet, 2 Bay (S. C.) 94; Smith v. Graves, 1 Brev. (S. C.) 16; so, also, when one of their number communicates to his fellows private information possessed by him, which influences the finding; Booby v. State, 4 Yerg. (Tenn.) 111; Wood R. Bk. v. Dodge, 36 Neb. 708, 55 N. W. 234; or the judge addresses a note to them, or privately visits them, after they have retired to deliberate; Sargent v. Roberts, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 337, 11 Am. Dec. 185; or a juror takes a private view; Harrington v. R. Co., 157 Mass. 579, 32 N. E. 955; Consolidated Ice-Mach. Co. v. Ice Co., 57 Fed. 898; Woodbury v. Anoka, 52 Minn. 329, 54 N. W. 187.

Misconduct of jurors will sometimes avoid the verdict, and by the weight of authority, if prejudicial, is ground for reversal; Com. v. Landis, 12 Phila. (Pa.) 576.

Instances of misconduct are: Jurors betting as to the result; Booby v. State, 4 Yerg. (Tenn.) 111; sleeping during the trial; Baxter v. People, 3 Gilman (Ill.) 368; see Com. v. Jongrass, 181 Pa. 172, 37 Atl. 207; unauthorized separation; Wesley v. State, 11 Humphr. (Tenn.) 502; but see State v. Harper, 101 N. C. 761, 7 S. E. 730, 9 Am. St. Rep. 46; Territory v. Hart, 7 Mont. 489, 17 Pac. 718; Sanitary Dist. of Chicago v. Cullerton, 147 Ill. 385, 35 N. E. 723; taking refreshment at the charge of the prevailing party; Harrison v. Rowan, 4 Wash. C. C. 32, Fed. Cas. No. 6,142; Vose v. Muller, 23 Neb. 171, 36 N. W. 583; see supra; see Wichita & W. R. Co. v. Fechheimer, 49 Kan. 643, 31 Pac. 127; drinking spirituous liquor; Gregg's Lessee v. McDaniel, 4 Harr. (Del.) 367; Rose v. Smith, 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 17, 15 Am. Dec. 331; People v. Douglass, 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 26, 15 Am. Dec. 332; People v. Lee Chuck, 78 Cal. 317, 20 Pac. 719; if any mental incapacity results therefrom; Territory v. Burgess, 8 Mont. 57, 19 Pac. 558, 1 L. R. A. 808; but see Territory v. Burgess, 8 Mont. 57, 19 Pac. 558, 1 L. R. A. 808; State v. Bailey, 100 N. C. 528, 6 S. E. 372; talking to strangers on the subject of the trial; Bennett v. Howard, 3 Day (Conn.) 223; Riley v. State, 9 Humphr. (Tenn.) 646; but not general conversation; State v. Harrison, 36 W. Va. 729, 15 S. E. 982, 18 L. R. A. 224; determining the verdict by a resort to chance; Harvey v. Rickett, 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 87; Hendrickson v. Kingsbury, 21 Ia. 379; St. Martin v. Desnoyer, 1 Minn. 156 (Gil. 131), 61 Am. Dec. 494; Boynton v. Trumbull, 45 N. H. 408; by returning as the verdict the quotient obtained by dividing by twelve the total of the sums named by the jurors; E. Tennessee & W. N. C. R. Co. v. Winters, 85 Tenn. 240, 1 S. W. 790; Parshall v. R. Co., 35 Fed. 649; Houk v. Allen, 126 Ind. 568, 25 N. E. 897, 11 L. R. A. 706. But not every irregularity which would subject jurors to censure will overturn the verdict, unless there be some reason to suspect that it may have had an influence on the final result. See Testard v. State, 26 Tex. App. 260, 9 S. W. 888; State v. Gould, 40 Kan. 258, 19 Pac. 739. In general, if it does not appear that the misconduct was occasioned by the prevailing party or any one in his behalf, and does not indicate improper bias, and the court cannot see that it either had or might have had an effect unfavorable to the party moving for a new trial, the verdict will not be disturbed. For gross misconduct of the jury a new trial may be granted on grounds of public policy; Hilly. New T. 198. Where the jury after returning an informal verdict were discharged, and within thirty seconds recalled and the verdict corrected, the separation will not vitiate the verdict; Boyett v. State, 26 Tex. App. 689, 9 S. W. 275. When the jury were kept out eighty-four hours it was held that their agreement was coerced and a new trial ordered; People v. Sheldon, 156 N. Y. 268, 50 N. E. 840, 41 L. R. A. 644, 66 Am. St. Rep. 564.

Reading a newspaper account of the facts is misconduct; Moore v. State, 36 Tex. Cr. R. 88, 35 S. W. 668; but if favorable to the prisoner or not such as to cause prejudice against him, it is immaterial; U. S. v. Reid, 12 How. (U. S.) 361, 13 L. Ed. 1023. If the article was such as to aid in reaching a verdict, a new trial will be granted; Mattox v.

U. S., 146 U. S. 140, 13 Sup. Ct. 50, 36 L. Ed. 917; People v. Stokes, 103 Cal. 193, 37 Pac. 207, 42 Am. St. Rep. 102. Where jurors had read a newspaper article with a strong bias against the prisoner, but records so clearly established guilt that whether they had read the article or not they could have returned no other verdict, a new trial was denied; State v. Williams, 96 Minn. 351, 105 N. W. 265. The reading by jurors of a scurrilous newspaper article is ground for a motion for a new trial, but where the jurors had been interrogated, and counsel had expressed himself satisfied and declined to press a motion to withdraw a juror, he was not afterwards entitled to a new trial; U. S. v. Marlin, 159 Fed. 767, 772, where many cases of motions for new trials on that ground are cited.

Error of the judge will be ground for a new trial; such as, admitting illegal evidence which has been objected to,—unless the illegal evidence was wholly immaterial, or it is certain that no injustice has been done; Thompson v. Thompson, 77 Ga. 692, 3 S. E. 261; and where the illegal testimony was admitted in gross violation of the well-settled principles which govern proof, it has been deemed per se ground for a new trial, notwithstanding the jury were directed to disregard it; Penfield v. Carpenter, 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 350; but see Hamblett v. Hamblett, 6 N. H. 333; improperly rejecting evidence tending in any degree to aid the jury in determining a material fact; Coleman v. Allen, 3 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 229; the admission of incompetent evidence, although of slight importance, if the party has suffered or might have suffered prejudice by its admission; Glover v. Flowers, 101 N. C. 134, 7 S. E. 579; but the objection that the jury were not allowed to take to their room letters introduced in evidence cannot first be raised on a motion for a new trial; German S. Bk. v. Bank, 101 Ia. 530, 70 N. W. 769, 63 Am. St. Rep. 399; nor the admission of improper evidence not objected to at the trial; Herdler v. Range Co., 136 Mo. 3, 37 S. W. 115; withdrawing testimony once legally before the jury,—unless the excluded testimony could not be used on a second trial; Brown v. Williams, 4 Humphr. (Tenn.) 22; denying to a party the right to be heard through counsel; Belmore v. Caldwell, 2 Bibb (Ky.) 76; erroneously refusing to grant a non suit; Foot v. Sabin, 19 Johns. (N. Y.) 154, 10 Am. Dec. 208; improperly restricting the examination or cross-examination of witnesses, or allowing too great latitude in that respect, under circumstances which constitute a clear case or abuse; Allen v. Bodine, 6 Barb. (N. Y.) 383; refusing to permit a witness to refer to documents to refresh his memory, where, by the denial, the complaining party has sustained injury; Key v. Lynn, 4 Litt. (Ky.) 338; improperly refusing an adjournment, whereby injustice has been done; Bishop v. State, 9 Ga. 121; improperly denying the right to open and close at the trial; Royce v. Gazan, 76 Ga. 79; refusing to give such instructions to the jury as properly arise in the case, where it is manifest that the jury erred through want of instruction; Maston v. Fanning, 9 Mo. 305; giving to the jury binding instructions, when there are circumstances in the case which ought to have been submitted to them,—unless the verdict is in strict accordance with the weight of evidence; Fitzgerald v. Alexander, 19 Wend. (N. Y.) 402; giving an erroneous exposition of the law on a point material to the issue,—unless it is certain that no injustice has been done, or the amount in dispute is very trifling, so that the injury is scarcely appreciable; Stoddard v. R. Co., 5 Sandf. (N. Y.) 180; misleading the jury by a charge which is not explicit, or which is absurd and impossible, or contradictory, or argumentative and evasive; Benham v. Cary, 11 Wend. (N. Y.) 83; erroneous instruction as to the proof that is requisite; Handly v. Harrison, 3 Bibb (Ky.) 481; State v. Somerville, 21 Me. 20; misapprehension of the judge as to a material fact, and a direction to the jury accordingly, whereby they are misled; Murden v. Ins. Co., 1 Mill (S. C.) 200; see Misdirection; instructing the jury as to the law upon facts which are purely hypothetical,—but not if the charge was correct in point of law, and the result does not show that the jury were misled by the generality of the charge; Bethune v. McCrary, 8 Ga. 114; submitting as a contested point what has been admitted; Toby v. Reed, 9 Conn. 216; erroneously leaving to the jury the determination of a question that should have been decided by the court, whereby they have mistaken the law; charging as to the consequences of the verdict; Baylies v. Davis, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 206; 2 Graham & W. New Tr. 595. Neither the rejection nor admission of immaterial evidence is cause for a new trial; Thompson v. Thompson, 77 Ga. 692, 3 S. E. 261.

Misconduct of the Court. Where the judge took it upon himself to develop the plaintiff's case by asking questions, which would have been objectionable if asked by counsel, the appellate court reversed the judgment and granted a new trial, remarking that they would have done so, even if no exception had been taken, owing to the extreme use of judicial power; Bolte v. Ry. Co., 38 App. Div. 234, 56 N. Y. Supp. 1038; and such abuse of judicial discretion is recognized as a ground of relief in Wheeler v. Wallace, 53 Mich. 355, 19 N. W. 33; Dunn v. People, 172 Ill. 582, 50 N. E. 137, where the court objected to the examination of witnesses in criminal trials as prejudicial to a fair result. And see 13 H. L. R. 144.

Where the trial judge smiled when the name of a witness was called out as Ananias Godwin, and an exception was taken and the witness was not examined, it was held not reversible error and the appellate court remarked that it was impossible to place itself in a position to consider intelligently the harmful effect, if any, of this slight lapse from severe judicial decorum had Ananias been before the jury as a witness. It is reasonably certain, however, that had he been presented to the jury, the biblical forbear of the name would speedily have been brought to the attention of any juror so ignorant as to be unaware of it, and that the smile was natural, even if not justified or excusable; Bellamy v. State, 56 Fla. 43, 47 South. 868.

Surprise, as a ground for setting aside the verdict, is cautiously allowed. When it is occasioned by the act of the adverse party, or by circumstances out of the knowledge and beyond the control of the party injured by it, this has sometimes been held to constitute grounds for relief; but not when he might have been fully informed by the exercise of ordinary diligence; Matthews v. Allaire, 11 N. J. L. 242; Clifford v. R. Co., 12 Colo. 125, 20 Pac. 333; although even when the complainant is not entirely free from fault, the court, in cases where great wrong would otherwise be done, will, for the sake of promoting justice, grant a new trial. Among the cases of surprise may be enumerated the following: the unexpectedly being summoned and detained as a witness or juror in another court, or sudden and serious illness, which prevents the party from attending at the trial; Stewart v. Durrett, 3 T. B. Monr. (Ky.) 113; Sherard v. Olden, 6 N. J. L. 344; that the cause was brought on prematurely, in the absence of the party; Donallen v. Lennox, 6 Dana (Ky.) 89; erroneous ruling of the court as to the right to begin, which has worked manifest injustice; Davis v. Mason, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 156; but see Comstock v. Ecclesiastical Soc., 8 Conn. 254, 20 Am. Dec. 100; Scott v. Hull, 8 Conn. 296; perturbation of counsel, arising from sudden and dangerous sickness occurring in his family and coming to his knowledge during the trial; Cutler v. Rice, 14 Pick. (Mass.) 494; where some unforeseen accident has prevented the attendance of a material witness; 6 Mod. 22; Glover v. Miller, Harp. (S. C.) 267; that testimony beyond the reach of the party injured, and completely under the control of the opposite party, was not produced at the trial; Jackson v. Warford, 7 Wend. (N. Y.) 62; that competent testimony was unexpectedly ruled out on the trial; Boyce v. Yoder, 2 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 515; where a party's own witnesses, through forgetfulness, mistake, contumacy, or perjury, testify differently than anticipated, or where evidence is unexpectedly sprung upon a party by his opponent; Wilson v. Brandon, 8 Ga. 136;

the withdrawal of a material witness before testifying, attended with suspicions of collusion; Tilden v. Gardiner, 25 Wend. (N. Y.) 663; that a material witness was suddenly deprived of the power of testifying by a paralytic stroke, or other affection, or that the testimony of the witness was incoherent on account of his being disconcerted at the trial; Ainsworth v. Sessions, 1 Root (Conn.) 175; where it is discovered after the trial that a material witness who testified is interested in the event, or where it is probable that the verdict was obtained by false testimony, which the party injured could not until after the trial contradict or expose; 2 C. B. 342; Morrell v. Kimball, 1 Greenl. (Me.) 322. But a new trial cannot be obtained on the ground of surprise caused by evidence which was clearly within the issues presented by the pleadings; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Shearer, 1 Tex. Civ. App. 343, 21 S. W. 133. There is no such ground for granting a new trial as mistake or inadvertence, as distinguished from accident or surprise; Fincher v. Malcolmson, 96 Cal. 38, 30 Pac. 835. Accident or surprise which ordinary prudence could not have guarded against, does not include ignorance, mistake, nor misapprehension of an attorney, not occasioned by the adverse party, nor mismanagement of the defence by the attorney, through design, ignorance, or neglect; Holderman v. Jones, 52 Kan. 743, 34 Pac. 352; Tittman v. Thornton, 107 Mo. 500, 17 S. W. 979, 16 L. R. A. 410.

New trials on account of after-discovered evidence are granted but rarely, and with great caution. The court, in order to set aside the verdict on this ground, must be satisfied that the evidence has come to the applicant's knowledge since the trial; Wiggin v. Coffin, 3 Sto. 1, Fed. Cas. No. 17,624; State v. Carr, 21 N. H. 166, 53 Am. Dec. 179; that it is not owing to the want of diligence that it did not come sooner; Floyd v. Jayne, 6 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 479; Wright v. Exp. Co., 80 Fed. 85; Etowah G. M. Co. v. Exter, 91 Ga. 171, 16 S. E. 991; Harralson v. Barrett, 99 Cal. 607, 34 Pac. 342; that it is so material that it will probably produce a different result; Chicago v. Edson, 43 Ill. App. 417; see Morgan v. Bell, 41 Kan. 345, 21 Pac. 255; and that it is not cumulative; Aiken v. Bemis, 3 Woodb. & M. 348, Fed. Cas. No. 109; as mere cumulative evidence is insufficient to warrant a new trial; Plumb v. Campbell, 129 Ill. 101, 18 N. E. 790; Gilmore v. Brost, 39 Minn. 190, 39 N. W. 139; Sabine & E. T. R. Co. v. Wood, 69 Tex. 679, 7 S. W. 372; Bond v. Com., 83 Va. 581, 3 S. E. 149; but the rule does not apply where it is cumulative evidence to prove an alibi; State v. Stowe, 3 Wash. 206, 28 Pac. 337, 14 L. R. A. 609. Nor must the sole object of the newly-discovered evidence be to impeach witnesses examined on the former trial;

Robinson v. Veal, 79 Ga. 633, 7 S. E. 159; Brown v. Grove, 116 Ind. 84, 18 N. E. 387, 9 Am. St. Rep. 823; State v. Mitchell, 102 N. C. 347, 9 S. E. 702. The moving party must state what the evidence is, and what diligence he has used in the preparation of his case; and his application must be accompanied by affidavits of the newly-discovered witness, unless some cause be shown why they cannot be produced; Sheppard v. Sheppard, 10 N. J. L. 250; Gilbert v. Woodbury, 22 Me. 246. Evidence which could have been procured before the trial by the exercise of reasonable diligence is not sufficient; Beachley v. McCormick, 41 Kan. 485, 21 Pac. 646; Gray v. Barton, 62 Mich. 186, 28 N. W. 813; Fears v. Albea, 69 Tex. 437, 6 S. W. 286, 5 Am. St. Rep. 78; Booth v. McJilton, 82 Va. 827, 1 S. E. 137.

When a continuance on account of absent testimony is refused, and it subsequently appears that such evidence is necessary and material to the defendant, he should be awarded a new trial; Fowler v. State, 25 Tex. App. 27, 7 S. W. 340; McCline v. State, 25 Tex. App. 247, 7 S. W. 667.

Perjury. Where perjured testimony had been procured by bribery on the part of the successful party, it was held not a ground for setting aside a verdict, though there was a reasonable certainty that the result of a new trial would be different; Pico v. Cohn, 91 Cal. 129, 25 Pac. 970, 27 Pac. 537, 13 L. R. A. 336, 25 Am. St. Rep. 159; nor where the perjured testimony was obtained by conspiracy of the opposing party and his witnesses; Ross v. Wood, 70 N. Y. 9; the perjury of a witness will not be a ground for a new trial even if he promise that he would tell the truth; Loucheine v. Strouse, 49 Wis. 623, 6 N. W. 360; but a new trial was granted where one party alleged that a witness had committed perjury and the allegation was sustained by the affidavit of the witness; Seward v. Cease, 50 Ill. 228. In any event, a conviction of perjury is necessary before a new trial will be granted because of it; Holtz v. Schmidt, 44 N. Y. Super. Ct. 327; unless the witness has died since the trial so that his conviction is impossible; Dyche v. Patton, 56 N. C. 332; where there has been a conviction, a new trial was granted; Great Falls Mfg. Co. v. Mathes, 5 N. H. 574. But the conviction for perjury would not be ground for granting a new trial where it was procured mainly on the testimony of the party moving for the new trial; Horne v. Horne, 75 N. C. 101. Pico v. Cohn, supra, was decided mainly on the authority of U. S. v. Throckmorton, 98 U. S. 65, 25 L. Ed. 95, in which keeping the unsuccessful party away from the court by a false promise of a compromise, or falsely keeping him in ignorance of the suit, or a fraudulent pretence of the attorney who represented the party and corruptly sold out his client's interests, were given as illustrations of the rule that in order to afford a basis for setting aside a judgment on the ground of fraud, it must be extrinsic or collateral to the question examined and determined.

Excessive damages may be good cause for granting a new trial; first, where the measure of damages is governed by fixed rules and principles, as in actions on contracts, or for torts to property, the value of which may be ascertained by evidence; second, in suits for personal injuries, where, although there is no fixed criterion for assessing the damages, yet it is clear that the jury acted from passion, partiality, or corruption: Lang v. Hopkins, 10 Ga. 37.

A new trial should be granted for an error of law, where the general merits of the case, as one for a recovery at all, are doubtful, and where the damages are apparently excessive; Savannah, F. & W. R. Co. v. Harrigan, 80 Ga. 602, 7 S. E. 280. In actions for personal torts, a new trial will not, in general, be granted on account of the smallness of the damages, unless the verdict is the result of contrivance by the defendant, or surprise on the plaintiff, or of partiality or misconduct of the jury, or unless the finding is entirely disproportioned to the injury. See 49 L. J. Q. B. 233, where a verdict of £7,000 in favor of a physician for damages, caused by defendant's negligence, was set aside on the ground of the damages being insufficient.

A state statute forbidding new trials on account of inadequate damages, if binding on the federal courts, would be in violation of the constitutional right of a trial by jury; Hughey v. Sullivan, 80 Fed. 72. Where the verdict is for an amount exceeding the damages laid in the writ, it will be set aside unless the plaintiff will release the excess; McIntire v. Clark, 7 Wend. (N. Y.) 330. See JURY; DAMAGES.

The court will not grant a new trial on motion of plaintiff on the ground that the amount of the verdict was inadequate, where in its opinion the verdict should have been for the defendant; Blazosseck v. Sherman Co., 141 Fed. 1022.

It is within the discretion of the trial court, after a verdict awarding excessive damages, to make an order denying a motion for a new trial on the condition that the plaintiff will remit a certain part of the verdict; Davis v. Southern Pac. Co., 98 Cal. 13, 32 Pac. 646; Arkansas Valley L. & C. Co. v. Mann, 130 U. S. 69, 9 Sup. Ct. 458, 32 L. Ed. 854. It is error to set aside a verdict as excessive unless the amount is such as to show misconduct and impropriety on the part of the jury; Scott v. Pub. Ass'n, 74 Hun 284, 26 N. Y. Supp. 690. Where the question of damages is peculiarly for the jury, if the court grant a new trial, it should be granted absolutely and not on condition of a refusal to file a remittitur; Albany v. Sikes, 94 Ga.

30, 20 S. E. 257, 26 L. R. A. 653, 47 Am. St. Rep. 132.

When the verdict is clearly against the law, it will be set aside, notwithstanding the jury had power to decide both the law and the fact, or the issue was one exclusively of fact and there have been concurrent verdicts by two successive juries; State v. Sims, Dudl. (Ga.) 213; Chambers v. Collier, 4 Ga. 193; see Cheatham v. Lord, 79 Ga. 770, 4 S. E. 162; if, however, substantial justice has been done, a new trial will not be granted though the law arising on the evidence would have justified a different result; 1 Burr. 54; 4 Term 468.

The jury are bound to follow the instructions of the court, even though they be held erroneous by the appellate court; they are the law of the trial; Barton v. Shull, 62 Neb. 570, 87 N. W. 322; Crane v. R. Co., 74 Ia. 330, 37 N. W. 397, 7 Am. St. Rep. 479; Flemming v. Ins. Co., 4 Whart. (Pa.) 59, 33 Am. Dec. 33; Emerson v. Santa Clara County, 40 Cal. 543; Murray v. Heinze, 17 Mont. 353, 42 Pac. 1057, 43 Pac. 714; Swartout v. Willingham, 6 Misc. 179, 26 N. Y. Supp. 769; Lucas v. Clafflin, 76 Va. 269; 17 C. B. 280; Lynch v. Iron Works, 132 Ky. 241, 116 S. W. 693, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 852, and note; even if the judge is subsequently convinced that his view of the law was wrong; Paul v. Casselberry, 12 Phila. (Pa.) 313; Dent v. Bryce, 16 S. C. 1; although if there is an instruction which is correct and with which the verdict accords, it will be sustained; Cobb v. R. Co., 38 Ia. 601; contra; Wellborn v. Weaver, 17 Ga. 267, 63 Am. Dec. 235; Peck v. Land, 2 Ga. 1, 46 Am. Dec. 368; Cochrane v. Winburn's Ex'rs, 13 Tex. 143; Van Vacter v. Brewster, 1 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 400.

A new trial has been refused where verdict was justified by the evidence, though the jury disregarded an erroneous instruction; Galligan v. R. Co., 27 R. I. 363, 62 Atl. 376; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Dooley, 77 Ark. 561, 92 S. W. 789.

Courts are at all times reluctant to grant a new trial on the ground that the verdict is against the evidence; and where the jury have passed upon a mere question of fact, they will only do so when the verdict is palpably against the evidence; injustice must have been done by the verdict, and there must be a probability that justice will be done on a retrial; Derwort v. Loomer, 21 Conn. 245; Hinton v. McNeil, 5 Ohio 509, 24 Am. Dec. 315. A statute forbidding courts to set aside a third verdict in the same action, does not apply to a case where there is no evidence, and thus construed, is constitutional; Railway Co. v. Mahoney, 89 Tenn. 311, 15 S. W. 652. See Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Woodson, 134 U. S. 614, 10 Sup. Ct. 628, 33 L. Ed. 1032. Where the verdict is founded on circumstantial evidence, the court will rarely, if ever, interfere with it; Young v. Silkwood, 11 Ill. 36. On the other hand, when the issue approximates to a purely legal question, courts are somewhat more liberal in granting new trials; Felder v. Bonnett, 2 McMull. (S. C.) 44, 37 Am. Dec. 545. The verdict will be set aside where the witnesses upon whose testimony it was obtained have since the trial been convicted of perjury; 3 Dougl. 24; so where the testimony on which the verdict is founded derives its credit from circumstances, and those circumstances are afterwards clearly falsified by affidavit; 1 B. & P. 427; 3 Grah. & W. N. Tr. 1203.

The verdict may be void for obscurity or uncertainty; Diehl v. Evans, 1 S. & R. (Pa.) 367; and where special findings are contradictory on essential questions, a new trial should be granted; State v. River Corp., 111 N. C. 661, 16 S. E. 331. It will be set aside where it is not responsive to the issue, or does not comprehend all of the issues, unless the finding of one or more of the issues will be decisive of the cause; Toulmin v. Lesesne, 2 Ala. 359; or where it is contrary to the instructions, whether the latter are right or wrong; Crane v. R. Co., 74 Ia. 330, 37 N. W. 397, 7 Am. St. Rep. 479; or where the verdict shows that it includes items not shown by the evidence to be due; McDole v. Simmons, 45 Ill. App. 328. So, where the findings on the issues are contradictory, thus rendering the general verdict inconsistent and unintelligible; Porter v. R. Co., 97 N. C. 66, 2 S. E. 581, 2 Am. St. Rep. 272. That it was not recorded in open court, or was received in the absence of the plaintiff, or was altered after it was recorded and the jury dismissed, will be ground for a new trial; People v. Mayor's Court, 1 Wend. (N. Y.) 36; Walters v. Junkins, 16 S. & R. (Pa.) 414, 16 Am. Dec. 585. If rendered on Sunday, it will, in general, be void; but there are many instances in which verdicts have been sustained though rendered on that day; Hoghtaling v. Osborn, 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 119; Huidekoper v. Cotton, 3 Watts (Pa.) 56; State v. Engle, 13 Ohio 490.

In the United States courts no exception lies to the overruling of a motion for a new trial; Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Charles, 51 Fed. 562, 2 C. C. A. 380, 7 U. S. App. 359; Luitweiler v. U. S., 85 Fed. 957, 29 C. C. A. 504; or where a new trial on the ground of after discovered evidence is refused; McLeod v. New Albany, 66 Fed. 378, 13 C. C. A. 525, 24 U. S. App. 601.

The Pennsylvania act of 1891 provides that "the supreme court shall have power in all cases to affirm, reverse, amend, or modify a judgment, decree, etc., and to enter such judgment or decree as it may deem proper, without returning the record to the court below, and may order a verdict and judgment to be set aside and a new trial had."

In Smith v. Pub. Co., 178 Pa. 481, 36 Atl. 296, 35 L. R. A. 819, it was said by the court that this was "a new power, a wide departure from the policy of centuries in regard to appellate courts and clearly exceptional in character;" but the act was held to be constitutional, and the court ordered the verdict set aside. A later statute (1905) authorizing the appellate court to "review the action of the court below, and enter such judgment as shall be warranted by the evidence taken in that court," is enforced in that state; but it was held that it cannot be enforced in the federal courts in Pennsylvania, being obnoxious to the prohibition of the seventh amendment of the federal constitution; Slocum v. Ins. Co., 228 U. S. 364, 33 Sup. Ct. 523, 57 L. Ed. 879. See NON OBSTANTE VEREDICTO.

An act of Montana authorizing its supreme court to grant a new trial for excessive damages, was upheld in Kennon v. Gilmer, 131 U. S. 29, 9 Sup. Ct. 696, 33 L. Ed. 110; where it was held that the court below could order a new trial, or, with the plaintiff's consent, reduce the verdict, but could not enter judgment itself for a lesser sum than the verdict.

A new trial will be ordered where the appellant is deprived of his bill of exceptions by the death of the trial judge; People v. Judge, 41 Mich. 726, 49 N. W. 924; Hume v. Bowie, 148 U. S. 245, 13 Sup. Ct. 582, 37 L. Ed. 438; (contra, Etechells v. Wainwright, 76 Conn. 534, 57 Atl. 121); Taylor v. Simmons, 116 N. C. 70, 20 S. E. 961; or his retirement; Borrowscale v. Bosworth, 98 Mass. 34; see Malony v. Adsit, 175 U. S. 286, 20 Sup. Ct. 115, 44 L. Ed. 163. Other cases hold that it may be signed by the new judge; People v. McConnell, 155 Ill. 192, 40 N. E. 608; Water S. & S. Co. v. Tenney, 21 Colo. 285, 40 Pac. 442; the legislature may provide for signature by another judge, there being no vested right in the practice previously followed in the state of giving a new trial as a matter of right; Johnson v. Smith, 78 Vt. 145, 62 Atl. 9, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1000, and note.

In the federal courts (R. S. § 953, as amended June 5, 1900), where, by reason of death, sickness, or other disability, a circuit judge is unable to pass on a motion for a new trial and sign a bill of exceptions, his successor, or any other judge holding the court, shall do so, or, if satisfied that he cannot, he may, in his discretion, grant a new trial; Penn Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Ashe, 145 Fed. 593, 76 C. C. A. 283, 7 Ann. Cas. 491.

A new trial will be granted where the judge has lost his notes; Ritter v. Grimm, 114 N. C. 373, 19 S. E. 239; or has neglected to prepare a statement of the case on appeal; Bryans v. State, 29 Tex. App. 247, 15 S. W. 288; or where papers had been lost by appellee; Com'rs of Greenville v. S. S. Co., 98 N. C. 163, 3 S. E. 505; or the summons was lost; Smith v. Trimble, 27 Ill. 153; or the charge had been destroyed by fire; Fire Ass'n of Philadelphia v. McNerney (Tex.) 54 S. W. 1053; or necessary papers had been lost; Zweibel v. Caldwell, 72 Neb. 47, 99 N. W. 843, 102 N. W. 84 (contra, Devore v. Territory, 2 Okl. 562, 31 Pac. 1092); or where by the fault of the official stenographer, an appellant is deprived of his bill of exceptions; Mathews v. Mulford, 53 Neb. 252, 73 N. W. 661; James v. French, 5 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 270 (contra, Morin v. Claffin, 100 Me. 271, 61 Atl. 782); or where the stenographer's notes had been stolen; Nichols v. Harris, 32 La. Ann. 646; or lost; Richardson v. State, 15 Wyo. 465, 89 Pac. 1027, 12 Ann. Cas. 1048.

Loss of papers will not excuse delay in filing the record on appeal, unless the appellant has secured an extension of time, or applied to the lower court to have the papers supplied, and has acted with diligence and been without fault; Bailey v. U. S., 3 Okl. Cr. 175, 104 Pac. 917, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 565, and note citing Williams v. La Penotiere, 25 Fla. 473, 6 South. 167; Succession of Llula, 42 La. Ann. 475, 7 South. 585; Buckman v. Whitney, 28 Cal. 555.

When the record on a criminal appeal is incomplete and does not contain the evidence, without appellant's fault, it was held that a new trial will be granted; State v. McCarver, 113 Mo. 602, 20 S. W. 1058.

In Alley v. McCabe, 147 Ill. 410, 35 N. E. 615, it was held that the hardship to the appellant could not be imposed upon the appellee.

Judgment was reversed and a new trial ordered because the judge went out of the county while the jury was deliberating; Martin v. State, 10 Ga. App. 455, 73 S. E. 686.

Courts of Equity have always proceeded with great caution in awarding new trials where an issue has been sent to be tried at law. At the present day they are but seldom applied to for this purpose, as courts of law are liberal in exercising the same jurisdiction, and it has been held to be unconscionable and vexatious to bring into courts of equity a discussion which might have been had at law; 1 Sch. & L. 201. But, in general, when it would have been proper for a court of law to have granted a new trial if the application had been made while that court had the power, it is equally proper for a court of equity to do so if the application be made on grounds arising after the court of law can no longer act; Colyer v. Langford's Adm'rs, 1 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 237. A court of equity will not grant a new trial at law to enable a party to impeach a witness, or because the verdict is against evidence; Woodworth v. Van Buskerk, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 432; or when the new trial can be obtained by application to a law court; Wolcott v. Jackson, 52 N. J. Eq. 387, 28 Atl. 1045. It will only interpose in cases of newly discovered evidence, surprise, fraud, or the like, where the party is deprived of the means of defence by circumstances beyond his control; Harrison v. Harrison, 1 Litt. (Ky.) 140; Peagram v. King, 9 N. C. 605. But it has been held that a court of equity will often grant a second, and sometimes a third, fourth, and even fifth trial of a feigned issue, in cases where a court of law would not disturb a first verdict; Patterson v. Ackerson, 1 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 96. This arises from the consideration that the responsibility of the decision rests upon the judge in equity; 3 Grah. & W. N. Tr. 1570.

New trials may be granted in criminal as well as in civil cases, on motion of the defendant, when he is convicted even of the highest offences. But a person once lawfully convicted on a sufficient indictment can never after, against his consent, be a second time put in peril for the same offence, unless the former conviction was instituted by the fraudulent procurement of the defendant with a view to shield himself from adequate punishment; 2 Grah. & W. N. Tr. 61. Where the accused has been acquitted, and his acquittal has not been procured by his own fraud or evil practice, the law, mingling justice with mercy in favorem vite et libertatis, does not permit a new trial; State v. Brown, 16 Conn. 57. In civil actions for the recovery of penalties, and in some cases where the form of proceeding is criminal, if the object be only to establish a civil right, as in cases of quo warranto and the like, new trials may be granted even after acquittal. But, in such cases, when the verdict is for the defendant, it will not, in general, be disturbed unless some rule of law be violated in the admission or rejection of evidence or in the charge of the court to the jury; 4 Term 753; Paddock v. Salisbury, 2 Cow. (N. Y.) 811. See JURY; MISDIRECTION; CHARGE; MISTRIAL; Thayer, Evid., for history of new trial.

NEW WORKS. By a new work is understood every sort of edifice or other work which is newly commenced on any ground whatever. Where the ancient form of work is changed, either by an addition being made to it or by some part of the ancient work being taken away, it is styled also a new work. La. Civ. Code, Art. 856.

NEW YORK. The name of one of the original states of the United States of America.

In its colonial condition this state was governed from the period of the revolution of 1688 by governors appointed by the crown, assisted by a council, which received its appointments also from the parental government, and by the representatives of the people. 1 Story, Const. b. 1, ch. 10.

The constitution adopted in 1777 remained in force until January 1, 1823, when the second went into operation. This second constitution remained until January 1, 1847, when a constitution, adopted by a convention of the people at Albany, went into force. This constitution was amended in certain particulars, and remained in force until January 1, 1895, when the present constitution was adopted by a convention at Albany and went into effect on January 1, 1895, except article six, relating to the courts, which became operative January 1, 1896.

NEWLY DISCOVERED EVIDENCE.

Proof of some new and material fact in the case, which has been discovered since the verdict. See NEW TRIAL.

NEWSPAPERS. Papers for conveying news, printed and distributed periodically.

A paper issued every day of the week except one is a daily newspaper; Richardson v. Tobin, 45 Cal. 30.

A paper devoted principally to legal intelligence is a newspaper in which notices required by statute may be published; Kerr v. Hitt, 75 Ill. 51; but see Beecher v. Stephens, 25 Minn. 147.

Publication of notice from June 26 to July 26, both dates inclusive, is a sufficient compliance with an ordinance directing publication for thirty days, although the paper in which the publication is made is not issued on Sundays or on the 4th of July; Moore v. Walla Walla, 60 Fed. 961.

One who receives and retains a newspaper regularly sent to him is bound to pay for it, though he had ordered it discontinued; Austin v. Burge, 156 Mo. App. 286, 137 S. W. 618; Fogg v. Atheneum, 44 N. H. 115, 82 Am. Dec. 191; Ward v. Powell, 3 Harr. (Del.) 379.

See LIBEL; LIBERTY OF THE PRESS; POSTAL SERVICE.

NEXI. In Roman Law. Persons bound (nexi); that is, insolvents, who might be held in bondage by their creditors until their debts were discharged. Heineccius, Antiq. Rom. ad Inst. lib. 3, tit. 330; Calvinus; Mackeldey, Civ. Law § 486 a. See NEXUM.

NEXT. Nearest or nighest, not in the sense of propinquity alone, as, for example, three persons on three chairs, one in the midst, those on each side of the middle one are equally near, each "next" to the middle one; but it signifies also order, or succession, or relation as well as propinquity. 27 L. J. Ch. 654. See 3 Q. B. 723; Couch v. Turnpike Co., 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 26.

NEXT FRIEND. One who, without being regularly appointed guardian, acts for the benefit of an infant, married woman, or other person not sui juris.

Where a person of unsound mind, not found so by inquisition, conveys his land by deed to another, the proper mode of proceeding in equity to have such deed cancelled, annulled, and made void is not by information exhibited by the attorney-general on the relation of others, but by a bill in the name of the incompetent person by a responsible next friend; Penington v. Thompson, 5 Del. Ch. 328, where the practice in such cases was elaborately discussed, both in argument and by Saulsbury, Ch., who permitted an information in the name of the attorney-general to be amended into a bill by next friend, and whose decision was affirmed on appeal, where the only question was the propriety of the amendment.

It has been held in other states that such suit may be brought by next friend on behalf of a person not adjudged insane and having no guardian appointed; Holzheiser v. R. Co., 11 Tex. Civ. App. 677, 33 S. W. 887; Gillespie v. Hauenstein, 72 Miss. 833, 17 South. 602; but in Ohio it was held that such action must be by guardian, not next friend; Row v. Row, 53 Ohio St. 249, 41 N. E. 239; and in Iowa that it could not be done independently of statute; Tiffany v. Worthington, 96 Ia. 560, 65 N. W. 817. In such cases the court may supersede a next friend by a guardian ad litem, and in its discretion stay proceedings instituted by the former; King v. Asylum, 64 Fed. 331, 12 C. C. A. 145.

See PROchein Ami.

Where an infant is so young as to be incapable of making a selection of a person to represent him, the court will permit any person to institute suit in his behalf, exercising, however, discretion to prevent any abuse of that right; Kingsbury v. Buckner, 134 U. S. 650, 10 Sup. Ct. 638, 33 L. Ed. 1047.

A next friend may select one of several tribunals in which the infant's case shall be tried and may elect to accept the jurisdiction of the federal court to which the case may be removed; In re Moore, 209 U. S. 490, 28 Sup. Ct. 585, 706, 52 L. Ed. 904, 14 Ann. Cas. 1164.

The weight of authority is against the right of the next friend to receive payment of and satisfy a judgment recovered on behalf of an infant; Wood v. Claiborne, 82 Ark. 514, 102 S. W. 219, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 913, 118 Am. St. Rep. 89; Galveston Oil Co. v. Thompson, 76 Tex. 235, 13 S. W. 60; Collins v. Gillespie, 148 Ala. 558, 41 South. 930, 121 Am. St. Rep. 81; Tripp v. Gifford, 155 Mass. 108, 29 N. E. 208, 31 Am. St. Rep. 530 (dictum). A person of unsound mind who has not been adjudged insane, and for whom no conservator has been appointed, may bring a suit by next friend; Isle v. Cranby, 199 Ill. 39, 64 N. E. 1065, 64 L. R. A. 513.

In a suit on behalf of an infant, by his next friend, the infant must be a plaintiff; Morgan v. Potter, 157 U. S. 195, 15 Sup. Ct. 590, 39 L. Ed. 670.

NEXT OF KIN. This term is used to signify the relations of a party who has died intestate.

In general, no one comes within this term who is not included in the provisions of the statutes of distribution; 3 Atk. 422, 761; 1 Ves. Sen. 84; Slosson v. Lynch, 28 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 417. The phrase means relation by blood; Keteltas v. Keteltas, 72 N. Y. 312, 28 Am. Rep. 155. It has been held, on the other hand, that next of kin in a will means "nearest of kin;" 10 Cl. & F. 215; Redmond v. Burroughs, 63 N. C. 242. A wife cannot, in general, claim as next of kin of her husband, nor a husband as next of kin of his wife; Haraden v. Larrabee, 113 Mass. 430; Peterson v. Webb, 39 N. C. 56; 14 Ves. 372; Townsend v. Radcliffe, 44 Ill. 446; Appeal of Ivins, 106 Pa. 176, 51 Am. Rep. 516. But see Merchants' Ins. Co. v. Hinman, 34 Barb. (N. Y.) 410; Steel v. Kurtz, 28 Ohio St. 192; French v. French, 84 Ia. 655, 51 N. W. 145, 15 L. R. A. 300. But when there are circumstances in a will which induce a belief of an intention to include them under this term, they will be so considered, though in the ordinary sense of the word they are not; Hovenden, Fr. 288, 289; 1 My. & K. 82; the same rule holds as to the interpretation of statutes; Lima E. L. & P. Co. v. Deubler, 7 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 185; French v. French, 84 Ia. 655, 51 N. W. 145, 15 L. R. A. 300.

As to next of kin in the act of congress of March 3, 1891, see FRENCH SPOILIATION CLAIMS.

In the construction of wills and settlements, after a considerable conflict of opinions, the established rule of interpretation in England is that next of kin when found in ulterior limitations must be understood to mean nearest of kin without regard to the statute of distribution; 2 Jarm. Wills 108; Blagge v. Balch, 162 U. S. 464, 16 Sup. Ct. 853, 40 L. Ed. 1032. This rule was followed in Swasey v. Jaques, 144 Mass. 135, 10 N. E. 758, 59 Am. Rep. 65; Redmond v. Burroughs, 63 N. C. 242; but it was not approved in Tillman v. Davis, 95 N. Y. 17, 47 Am. Rep. 1; Pinkham v. Blair, 57 N. H. 226.

Next of kin ordinarily have no standing in law or equity for the recovery of property alleged to belong to their decedent; Buchanan v. Buchanan, 75 N. J. Eq. 274, 71 Atl. 745, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 454, 138 Am. St. Rep. 563, 20 Ann. Cas. 91, citing Ware v. Galveston City Co., 111 U. S. 170, 4 Sup. Ct. 337, 28 L. Ed. 393, and a large number of other cases; otherwise, if there was collusion between the personal representatives and the party against whom they have brought suit; Rowell v. Rowell, 122 Wis. 1, 99 N. W. 473; Trotter v. Life Ass'n, 9 S. D. 596, 70 N. W. 843, 62 Am. St. Rep. 887; McLemore v. Min. Co., 121 Ky. 53, 88 S. W. 1062; Hubbard v. Urton, 67 Fed. 419. Many cases find an exception to that rule where there are no debts against the estate and nothing remains but to collect the assets and pay them over to the next of kin; Bridgman v. R. Co., 58 Vt. 198, 2 Atl. 467; Walker v. Abercrombie, 61 Tex. 69; Hurt v. Fisher, 96 Tenn. 570, 35 S. W. 1085; Roberts v. Mesinger, 134 Pa. 298, 19 Atl. 625, contra: Davenport v. Brooks, 92 Ala. 627, 9 South. 153; Leamon v. McCubbin, 82 Ill. 263; also an exception to the rule has been made when the administrator refuses to sue; Matheny v. Ferguson, 55 W. Va. 656, 47 S. E. 886; Randel v. Dyett, 38 Hun (N. Y.) 347; but even in such case the rule was applied in L. R. 7 Ch. Div. 210. It seems that, if the administrator consents, the next of kin may sue; Anderson v. Goodwin, 125 Ga. 663, 54 S. E. 679. In Samuel v. Marshall, 3 Leigh (Va.) 567, a bill by the next of kin to set aside a fraudulent gift was sustained, but the property was decreed to the personal representatives.

See LEGACY; DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION; KIN; KINDRED.

NEXUM (Lat.). In Roman Law. The transfer of the ownership of a thing; or the transfer of a thing to a creditor as a security.

In one sense nexum includes mancipium; in another sense, mancipium and nexum are opposed, in the same way as sale and mortgage or pledge are opposed. The formal part of both transactions consisted in a transfer per aes et libram. The person who became nexus by the effect of a nexum placed himself in a servile condition, not becoming a slave, his ingenuitas being only in suspense, and was said nexum inire. The phrases nexi datio, nexi liberatio, respectively express the contracting and the release from the obligation.

The Roman law as to the payment of borrowed money was very strict. A curious passage of Gellius (xx. 1) gives us the ancient mode of legal procedure in the case of debt, as fixed by the Twelve Tables. If the debtor admitted the debt, or had been condemned in the amount of the debt by a judez, he had thirty days allowed him for payment. At the expiration of this time he was liable to the manus injectio, and ultimately to be assigned over to the creditor (addictus) by the sentence of the praetor. The creditor was required to keep him for sixty days in chains, during which time he publicly exposed the debtor, on three nundinae, and proclaimed the amount of his debt. If no person released the prisoner by paying the debt, the creditor might sell him as a slave or put him to death. If there were several creditors, the letter of the law allowed them to cut the debtor in pieces and take their share of his body in proportion to their debt. Gellius says that there was no instance of a creditor ever having adopted this extreme mode of satisfying his debt. But the creditor might treat the debtor, who was addictus, as a slave, and compel him to work out his debt; and the treatment was often very severe. In this passage Gellius does not speak of nexi, but only of addicti, which is sometimes alleged as evidence of the identity of nexus and addictus, but it proves no such identity. If a nexus is what he is here supposed to be, the laws of the Twelve Tables could not apply; for when a man became nexus with respect to one creditor, he could not become nexus to another; and if he became nexus to several at once, in this case the creditors must abide by their contract in taking a joint security. This law of the Twelve Tables only applied to the case of a debtor being assigned over by a judicial sentence to several creditors, and it provided for a settlement of their conflicting claims. The precise condition of a nexus has, however, been a subject of much discussion among scholars. See Smith, Dict. Rom. & Gr. Antiq.; MANCIPIUM.

Nexum was apparently a contract for the repayment of a money loan, the security for which was the debtor's own person. Launspach, State of Family in Early Rome 229.

NICHILLS or NIHILS. Debts due to the exchequer which the sheriff could not levy, and as to which he returned nil. These sums were transcribed once a year by the clerk of the nichills, and sent to the treasurer's remembrancer's office, whence process was issued to recover the "nichill" debts.

Both of these offices were abolished in 1833; Manning's Exch. Pr. 321.

NICKNAME. A short name; one nicked or cut off for the sake of brevity, without conveying any idea of opprobrium and frequently evincing the strongest affection or the most entire familiarity. Busb. Eq. 74. See Rawnley's Dict. of Engl. Names; NAME.

NIDERLING. A vile, base person or slug-gard; chicken-hearted. Spelm. Sometimes Nidering and Nithing. Toml. Dic.

NIECE. The daughter of a brother or sister. Ambl. 514; 1 Jac. 207. See NEPHEW; LEGACY.

NIEFE. See NEIF.

NIENT COMPRISE (Law Fr. not included). An exception taken to a petition because the thing desired is not contained in that deed or proceeding whereon the petition is founded. Toml. Law Dict.

NIENT CULPABLE (Law Fr. not guilty). The name of a plea used to deny any charge of a criminal nature, or in an action for a tort.

NIENT DEDIRE (Law Fr. to say nothing). Words used to signify that judgment be rendered against a party because he does not deny the cause of action: i. e. by default.

When a fair and impartial trial cannot be had in the county where the venue is laid, the practice in the English courts is, on an affidavit of the circumstances, to change it, in transitory actions; or, in local actions, they will give leave to enter a suggestion on the roll, with a nient dedire, in order to have the trial in another county. 1 Tidd, Pr. 655. See 10 C. B. N. S. 825.

NIENT LE FAIT (Law Fr.). In Pleading. The same as non est factum, a plea by which the defendant asserts that the deed declared upon is not his deed.

NIENT SEIST. In Old Pleading. Not seised. The general plea in a writ of annuity. Crabb, Eng. L. 424.

NIGHT. That space of time during which the sun is below the horizon of the earth, except that short space which precedes its rising and follows its setting, during which by its light the countenance of a man may be discerned.

It is night when there is daylight, crepusculum or diluculum, enough left or begun to discern a man's face withal. 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 550; 4 Bla. Com. 224; Bac. Abr. Burglary (D); 2 Russ. Cr. 32. See State v. Morris, 47 Conn. 182; Kroer v. People, 78 Ill. 295.

The common-law rule has been modified by statute in some of the states, and by the stat. 9 Geo. IV. c. 69, the night, for purposes of poaching, was held to begin one hour after sunset, and end one hour before sunrise. By the stat. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, the night, during which a burglary may be committed, is deemed to commence at 9 p. m., and end at 6 a. m.; 4 Steph. Com. 105. But see Klieforth v. State, 88 Wis. 163, 59 N. W. 507, 43 Am. St. Rep. 875, where it was held that it is day when there is daylight enough to discern a person's face.

In the time of the English Saxons and even till Henry I., time was computed by nights: as fortnight for two weeks.

NIGHT WALKERS. Persons who sleep by day and walk by night: 5 Edw. III. c. 14; that is, persons of suspicious appearance and demeanor, who walk by night. In many of the states there are statutes against this practice; 1 Bish. Cr. L. § 501, n. See State v. Dowers, 45 N. H. 543. Watchmen may undoubtedly arrest them; and it is said that private persons may also do so; 2 Hawk. Pl. Cr. 120. But see 3 Taunt. 14; Hamm. N. P. 135. See 4 Steph. Com. 227.

NIHIL CAPIAT PER BREVE (Lat. that he take nothing by his writ). The form of judgment against the plaintiff in an action, either in bar or in abatement. When the plaintiff has commenced his proceedings by bill, the judgment is nihil capiat per billam. Co. Litt. 363.

NIHIL DICIT (Lat. he says nothing). The name of the judgment rendered against a defendant who fails to put in a plea or answer to the plaintiff's declaration by the day assigned. In such a case, judgment is given against the defendant of course, as he says nothing why it should not. See 15 Vin. Abr. 556; Dane, Abr. Index.

NIHIL EST (Lat. there is nothing). A form of return made by a sheriff where he has been unable to serve the writ. "Although non est inventus is the more frequent return in such case, yet it is by no means so full an answer to the command of the writ as is the return of nihil. That amounts to an averment that the defendant has nothing in the bailiwick; no dwelling-house, no family, no residence; and no personal presence to enable the officer to make the service required by the act of assembly. It is, therefore, a full answer to the exigency of the writ." Sherer v. Bank, 33 Pa. 139.

NIHIL HABET (Lat. he has nothing). The name of a return made by a sheriff, marshal, or other proper officer, to a scire facias or other writ, when he has not been able to serve it on the defendant. Sullivan v. Johns, 5 Whart. (Pa.) 367.

Two returns of nihil in proceedings in rem are, in general, equivalent to a service: Yelv. 112; Cumming v. Eden's Devises, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 70; Colley v. Latimer, 5 S. & R. (Pa.) 211; Taylor v. Young, 71 Pa. 81.

NIHILS. See NICHILLS.

NIL DEBET (Lat. he owes nothing). The general issue in debt on simple contract. Gould, Pl. 284. It is in the following form: "And the said C D, by E F, his attorney, comes and defends the wrong and injury, when, etc., and says that he does not owe the said sum of money above demanded, or any part thereof, in manner and form as the said A B hath above complained. And of this the said C D puts himself upon the country." When, in debt on specialty, the deed is the only inducement to the action, the general issue is nil debet. Steph. Pl. 174, n.; Bullis v. Giddens, 8 Johns. (N. Y.) 83. In English practice, by rule 11, Trinity Term, 1853, the plea of nil debet was abolished; 2 Chitty, Pl. 275.

NIL HABUIT IN TENEMENTIS. (Lat.). A plea by which the defendant, who is sued by his landlord in debt for rent upon a lease, but by deed indented, denies his landlord's title to the premises, alleging that he has no interest in the tenements. 2 Lilly, Abr. 214; 12 Viner, Abr. 184.

NISI PRIUS (Lat. unless before). For the purpose of holding trials by jury. Important words in the writ (venire) directing the sheriff to summon jurors for the trial of causes depending in the superior courts of law in England, which have come to be adopted, both in England and the United States, to denote those courts or terms of court held for the trial of civil causes with the presence and aid of a jury.

The origin of the use of the term is to be traced to a period anterior to the institution of the commission of nisi prius in its more modern form. By Magna Carta it was provided that the common pleas should be held in one place, and should not follow the person of the king; and by another clause, that assizes of novel disseisin and of mort d'ancestor, which were the two commonest forms of actions to recover land, should be held in the various counties before the justices in eyre. A practice obtained very early, therefore, in the trial of trifling causes, to continue the cause in the superior court from term to term, provided the justices in eyre did not sooner (nisi prius justiciarii) come into the county where the cause of action arose, in which case they had jurisdiction when they so came. Bracton, l. 3, c. 1, § 11. By the statute of nisi prius, 13 Edw. I. c. 30, enforced by 14 Edw. III. c. 16, justices of assize were empowered to try common issues in trespass and other suits, and return them, when tried, to the superior court, where judgment was given. The clause was then left out of the continuance and inserted in the venire, thus: "Præcipimus tibi quod venire facias coram justiciariis nostris apud Westm. in Octavis Sancti Michaelis, nisi talis et talis, tali die et loco, ad partes illas venerint duodecim," etc. (we command you that you cause to come before our justices at Westminster, on the octave of Saint Michael, unless such and such a one, on such a day and place, shall come to those parts, twelve, etc.). Under the provisions of 42 Edw. III. c. 11, the clause is omitted from the venire, and the jury is respited in the court above, while the sheriff summons them to appear before the justices, upon a habeas corpora juratorum, or, in the king's bench, a distringas. See Sell. Pr. Introd. lxx.; 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 116; 3 Shars. Bla. Com. 352-354; 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law 245, 382.

See ASSIZE; COURT OF ASSIZE AND NISI PRIUS; JURY.

NISI PRIUS ROLL. The transcript of a case made from the record of the superior court in which the action is commenced, for use in the nisi prius court.

It includes a history of all the proceedings in the case, including the declaration, plea, replication, rejoinder, issue, etc. It must be presented in proper manner to the nisi prius court. When a verdict has been obtained and entered on this record, it becomes the postea, and is returned to the superior court.

NITHING. See NIDERLING.

NO AWARD. The name of a plea in an action on an award. Barlow v. Todd, 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 367.

NO BILL. Words frequently indorsed on a bill of indictment by the grand jury when they have not sufficient cause for finding a true bill. They are equivalent to Not found, or Ignoramus. State v. Fitch, 2 N. & M'C. (S. C.) 558.

NOBILITY. An order of men, in several countries, to whom special privileges are granted. The constitution of the United States provides, Art. 1, § 10, that "no state shall grant any title of nobility," and § 9, that "no title of nobility shall be granted by the United States; and no person holding any office of profit or trust under them shall, without the consent of congress, accept of any title of any kind whatever, from any king, prince, or foreign state." It is singular that there should not have been a general prohibition against any citizen whatever, whether in private or public life, accepting any foreign title of nobility. An amendment for this purpose has been recommended by congress, but it has not been ratified by a sufficient number of states to make it a part of the constitution, probably from a growing sense that it is unnecessary. Rawls, Const. 120; Story, Const. § 1350; Federalist No. 84.

NOCTANTER (By night). A writ which issued out of chancery and was returned to the king's bench for the prostration of inclosures, etc. It was repealed by 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 27.

NOCTES DE FIRMA. In Domesday book understood of entertainment of meat and drink for so many nights. Toml. Law Dict. See NIGHT.

NOCUMENTUM (Lat. harm, nuisance). In Old English Law. A thing done whereby another man is annoyed in his free lands or tenements. Also, the assize or writ lying for the same. Fitzh. N. B. 183; Old N. B. 108, 109. Manw. For. Laws, c. 17, divides nocumentum into generale, commune, speciale. Reg. Orig. 197, 199; Coke, Will Case. Nocumentum was also divided into damnosum, for which no action lay, it being done by an irresponsible agent, and injuriousum et damnosum, for which there were several remedies. Bracton 221; Fleta, lib. 4, c. 26, § 2.

NOISÉ. See NUISANCE; INJUNCTION.

NOL. PROS. See NOLLE PROSEQUI.

NOLENS VOLENS (Lat.). Whether willing or unwilling.

NOLISSEMENT. In French Law. Affreightment. Ord. Mar. liv. 3, t. 1.

NOLLE PROSEQUI. An entry made on the record, by which the prosecutor or plaintiff declares that he will proceed no further. See Tr. & H. Pr. 566.

A nolle prosequi may be entered either in a criminal or a civil case. In criminal cases, before a jury is impanelled to try an indictment, and also after conviction, the attorney-general has power to enter a nolle prosequi without the consent of the defendant; but after a jury is impanelled a nolle prosequi cannot be entered without the consent of the defendant; State v. Roe, 12 Vt. 93; State v. Fleming, 7 Humphr. (Tenn.) 152, 46 Am. Dec. 73; Durham v. State, 9 Ga. 306. See Com. v. Cain, 102 Mass. 487; State v. Smith, 49 N. H. 155, 6 Am. Rep. 480. It is for the prosecuting officer to enter a nol. pros. in his discretion; State v. Thompson, 10 N. C. 613; but in some states leave must be obtained of the court; Anonymous, 1 Va. Cas. 139; State v. Roe, 12 Vt. 93.

It may be entered as to one of several defendants; 11 East 307.

The effect of a nolle prosequi, when obtained, is to put the defendant without day; but it does not operate as an acquittal; for he may be afterwards reindicted, and, it is said, even upon the same indictment fresh process may be awarded; 6 Mod. 261; Com. Dig. Indictment (K); Com. v. Wheeler, 2 Mass. 172; State v. Thornton, 35 N. C. 256. See 3 Cox, C. C. 93; Williams v. State, 57 Ga. 478; State v. Primm, 61 Mo. 173.

A nolle prosequi as to some of the counts in an indictment works no acquittal, but leaves the prosecution just as though such counts had never been inserted in the indictment; Dealy v. U. S., 152 U. S. 539, 14 Sup. Ct. 680, 38 L. Ed. 545.

In civil cases, a nolle prosequi is considered not to be of the nature of a retraxit or release, as was formerly supposed, but an agreement only not to proceed either against some of the defendants, or as to part of the suit. See 1 Wms. Saund. 207; 1 Chitty, Pl. 546. A nolle prosequi is now held to be no bar to a future action for the same cause, except in those cases where, from the nature of the action, judgment and execution against one is a satisfaction of all the damages sustained by the plaintiff; 3 Term 511.

In civil cases, a nolle prosequi may be entered as to one of several counts; Brown v. Feeter, 7 Wend. (N. Y.) 301; or to one of several defendants; Minor v. Bank, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 80, 7 L. Ed. 47; as in the case of a joint contract, where one of two defendants pleads infancy, the plaintiff may enter a nolle prosequi as to him and proceed against the other; Woodward v. Newhall, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 500.

See, generally, Beidman v. Vanderslice, 2 Rawle (Pa.) 334; Grahame v. Harris, 5 Gill. & J. (Md.) 489; Judson v. Gibbons, 5 Wend. (N. Y.) 224.

An entry of nolle prosequi does not amount to a retraxit; it may be entered by plaintiff as to a part of the suit or as to one of the defendants where the action is joint and several, or where the defendants sever in their pleas; but not as to a defendant in assumpsit where the action is joint (unless it be for some matter which may be pleaded for his personal discharge); Beidman v. Vanderslice, 2 Rawle (Pa.) 334. It rather resembles a continuance; 1 Troub. & Halv. Pr. § 566.

NOLO CONTENDERE (Lat. I do not wish to contest). A plea sometimes accepted in criminal cases not capital whereby the defendant does not directly admit himself to be guilty, but tacitly admits it by throwing himself upon the mercy of the court and desiring to submit to a small fine, which plea the court may either accept or decline. Chitty, Crim. L. 431. The difference in effect between this "implied confession" and a plea of guilty is that, after the latter, not guilty cannot be pleaded in an action of trespass for the same injury, whereas it may be pleaded at any time after the former. The defendant making this plea may take exception in arrest of judgment for faults apparent on the record; id.

The acceptance of the plea is said to rest entirely upon the discretion of the trial judge; State v. Henson, 66 N. J. L. 601, 50 Atl. 468, 616; State v. La Rose, 71 N. H. 435, 52 Atl. 943; Com. v. Ingersoll, 145 Mass. 381, 14 N. E. 449. This plea has the same effect in a criminal case as the plea of guilty, to the extent that judgment and sentence may be pronounced as if upon a verdict of guilty; Com. v. Ingersoll, 145 Mass. 381, 14 N. E. 449; Clark, Crim. Proc. 374; Com. v. Holstine, 132 Pa. 361, 19 Atl. 273. The legal effect of the plea is the same as that of a plea of guilty so far as all the proceedings on the indictment are concerned; U. S. v. Hartwell, 3 Cliff. 221, Fed. Cas. No. 15,318; State v. Siddall, 103 Me. 144, 68 Atl. 634; State v. Judges, 46 N. J. L. 112; a sentence thereon is a "conviction"; it is a waiver of all formal defects; Com. v. Hinds, 101 Mass. 210; but defendant may still move in arrest of judgment; Com. v. Northampton, 2 Mass. 116.

It is not admissible in a civil proceeding on the same facts to show that the defendant was guilty; White v. Creamer, 175 Mass. 567, 56 N. E. 832. The plea, if accepted, cannot be withdrawn and a plea of not guilty entered except by leave of court; State v. Siddall, 103 Me. 144, 68 Atl. 634; but in Buck v. Com., 107 Pa. 486.

the court held the plea to be equivalent to a confession which may be withdrawn at any time before sentence. That it was, at one time, accepted in England only where a fine was to be imposed, see Tucker v. U. S., 196 Fed. 260, 116 C. C. A. 62, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 70, holding that it cannot be accepted where the punishment must be imprisonment, but may be, in an internal revenue case, where, under some counts, the punishment must be imprisonment and under others a fine alone. (The subject was here much discussed.)

The cases are collected in 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 70.

In recent prosecutions under the Sherman act in the district court for the southern district of New York, Archbald, J., in accepting such plea, said: "This plea is a well recognized one and results in a sentence, and in that respect entirely fulfills the law. I have received this plea in other courts."

NOMEN (Lat.). In Civil Law. A name of a person or thing. In a stricter sense, the name which declared the gens or family: as, Porcius, Cornelius; the cognomen being the name which marked the individual: as Cato, Marcus; agnomen a name added to the cognomen for the purpose of description. The name of the person himself: e. g. nomen curiis addere. The name denoting the condition of a person or class: e. g. nomen liberorum, condition of children. Cause or reason (pro causa aut ratione): e. g. nomine culpa, by reason of fault. A mark or sign of anything, corporeal or incorporeal. Nomen supremum, i. e. God. Debt or obligation of debt. A debtor. See Calvinus, Lex.

In Old English Law. A name. The Christian name, e. g. John, as distinguished from the family name; it is also called prænomen. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 10, §§ 7, 9; Law Fr. & Lat. Dict.

NOMEN COLLECTIVUM (Lat.). A word in the singular number which is to be understood in the plural in certain cases. Misdeemeanor, for example, is a word of this kind, and when in the singular may be taken as nomen collectivum and including several offences. 2 B. & Ad. 75. Heir, in the singular, sometimes includes all the heirs. Felony is not such a term.

NOMEN GENERALISSIMUM (Lat.). A most universal or comprehensive term: e. g. land. 2 Bla. Com. 19; 3 id. 172; Tayl. Law Gloss. So goods. 2 Will. Ex. 1014.

NOMINAL DAMAGES. A trifling sum awarded where a breach of duty or an infringement of the plaintiff's right is shown, but no serious loss is proved to have been sustained.

Those awarded where, from the nature of the case, some injury has been done, the amount of which the proofs fail entirely to show; Bellingham B. & B. C. R. Co. v. Strand, 4 Wash. 311, 30 Pac. 144.

Wherever any act injures another's right, and would be evidence in future in favor of a wrong-doer, an action may be sustained for an invasion of the right without proof of any specific injury; 1 Wms. Saund. 346 a; Bassett v. Mfg. Co., 28 N. H. 438; Chapman v. Mfg. Co., 13 Conn. 269, 33 Am. Dec. 401; and wherever the breach of an agreement or the invasion of a right is established, the law infers some damage, and if none is shown will award a trifling sum: as, a penny, one cent, six and a quarter cents, etc.; Burnap v. Wight, 14 Ill. 301; Sedgw. Dam. 47; Field, Damages § 860.

Thus, such damages may be awarded in actions for flowing lands; Pastorius v. Fisher, 1 Rawle (Pa.) 27; Bassett v. Mfg. Co., 28 N. H. 438; injuries to commons; 2 East 154; violation of trade-marks; 4 B. & Ad. 410; infringement of patents; Lee v. Pillsbury, 49 Fed. 747; diversion of water-courses; 5 B. & Ad. 1; Parker v. Griswold, 17 Conn. 288, 42 Am. Dec. 739; Tillotson v. Smith, 32 N. H. 90, 64 Am. Dec. 355; but see Burden v. Mobile, 21 Ala. 309; McElroy v. Goble, 6 Ohio St. 187; trespass to lands; Dixon v. Clow, 24 Wend. (N. Y.) 188; Carter v. Wallace, 2 Tex. 206; neglect of official duties, in some cases; Goodnow v. Willard, 5 Metc. (Mass.) 517; Bruce v. Petten-gill, 12 N. H. 341; breach of contracts; Horton v. Bauer, 129 N. Y. 148, 29 N. E. 1; Excelsior Needle Co. v. Smith, 61 Conn. 56, 23 Atl. 693; Watts v. Weston, 62 Fed. 136, 10 C. C. A. 302; Dulaney v. Refining Co., 42 Mo. App. 659; when substantial damages have not been sustained; Stock Quotation Tel. Co. v. Board of Trade, 44 Ill. App. 358; and many other cases where the effect of the suit will be to determine a right; 12 Ad. & E. 488; Moulton v. Chapin, 28 Me. 505; Whitehead v. Ducker, 11 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 98; Henry v. Banking Co., 89 Ga. 815, 15 S. E. 757; Weber v. Squier, 51 Mo. App. 601. And see, in explanation and limitation; 10 B. & C. 145; 1 Q. B. 636; Paul v. Slason, 22 Vt. 231, 54 Am. Dec. 75; Jennings v. Loring, 5 Ind. 250.

The title or right is as firmly established as though the damages were substantial; Sedgw. Dam. 47. As to its effect upon costs, see id. 55; Ryder v. Hathaway, 2 Metc. (Mass.) 96.

See DAMAGES; MEASURE OF DAMAGES.

NOMINAL PARTNER. One who allows his name to appear as a member of a firm, wherein he has no real interest. See PARTNER.

NOMINAL PLAINTIFF. One who is named as the plaintiff in an action, but who has no interest in it, having assigned the cause or right of action to another, for whose use it is brought.

In general, he cannot interfere with the rights of his assignee, nor will he be permitted to discontinue the action, or to meddle with it; Welch v. Mandeville, 1 Wheat. (U. S.) 233, 4 L. Ed. 79; Bisp. Eq. § 172; Greenl. Ev. § 173.

NOMINATE CONTRACT. A contract distinguished by a particular name, the use of which name determines the rights of all the parties to the contract: as, purchase and sale, hiring, partnership, loan for use, deposit and the like. The law thus supercedes the necessity for special stipulations, and creates an obligation in the one party to perform, and a right in the other to demand, whatever is necessary, to the explication of that contract. In Roman law there were twelve nominate contracts, with a particular action for each. Bell, Dict. Nominate and Innominate; Mackeldey, Civ. Law §§ 395, 408; Dig. 2. 14. 7. 1.

NOMINATION. An appointment: as, I nominate A B executor of this my last will.

A proposal or naming. The word nominate is used in this sense in the constitution of the United States, art. 2, s. 2, § 2: the president "shall nominate, and by and with the consent of the senate shall appoint, ambassadors," etc.

In an agreement for reference, a provision that each party shall nominate a referee means not only naming him, but also the communication of the nomination to the other party. 17 L. J. Q. B. 2; 11 Q. B. 7.

As to nominations under modern ballot laws, see ELECTION.

NOMINE PÆNÆ (Lat. in the nature of a penalty). In Civil Law. A condition annexed to heirship by the will of the deceased person. Domat, Civ. Law; Hallifax, Anal.

At Common Law. A penalty fixed by covenant in a lease for non-performance of its conditions. 2 Lilly, Abr. 221.

It is usually a gross sum of money, though it may be anything else, appointed to be paid by the tenant to the reversioner, if the duties are in arrear, in addition to the duties themselves. Hamm. N. P. 411.

To entitle himself to the nomine pænæ, the landlord must make a demand of the rent on the very day, as in the case of a re-entry; 1 Saund. 287 b; 7 Co. 28 b; Co. Litt. 202 a. A distress cannot be taken for a nomine pænæ unless a special power to distrain be annexed to it by deed; 3 Bouvier, Inst. n. 2451. See Bac. Abr. Rent (K 4); Dane, Abr. Index.

NOMINEE. One who has been named or proposed for an office.

NOMOCANON. A body of canon law with the addition of imperial laws bearing upon ecclesiastical matters; also a collection of the canons of the ancient church and fathers without regard to the imperial constitutions.

NON-ABILITY. Inability; an exception against a person. Fitz. Nat. Brev. 35, 65.

NON ACCEPTAVIT (Lat. he did not accept). The name of a plea to an action of assumpsit brought against the drawee of a bill of exchange upon a supposed acceptance by him. See 4 M. & G. 561.

NON-ACCESS. The non-existence of sexual intercourse between husband and wife is generally expressed by the words non-access of the husband to the wife; which expressions, in a case of bastardy, are understood to mean the same thing. 2 Stark, Ev. 218, n. See ACCESS.

NON-AGE. By this term is understood that period of life from birth till the arrival at twenty-one years. In another sense it means under the proper age to be of ability to do a particular thing: as, when non-age is applied to one under the age of fourteen, who is unable to marry. See AGE.

NON-APPARENT OR NON-CONTINUOUS EASEMENTS. Discontinuous easements. Such that have no means specially constructed or appropriated to their enjoyment, and that are enjoyed at intervals, leaving between these intervals no visible sign of their existence; such as a right of way, or right of drawing a seine upon the shore. Fetters v. Humphreys, 18 N. J. Eq. 262. See EASEMENT.

NON-ASSUMPSIT (Lat. he did not undertake). The general issue in an action of assumpsit. Andr. Steph. Pl. 231.

Its form is, "And the said C D, by E F, his attorney, comes and defends the wrong and injury, when, etc., and says that he did not undertake or promise, in manner and form as the said A B hath above complained. And of this he puts himself upon the country."

Under this plea almost every matter may be given in evidence, on the ground, it is said, that as the action is founded on the contract, and the injury is the non-performance of it, evidence which disaffirms the obligation of the contract, at the time when the action was commenced, goes to the gist of the action. 1 B. & P. 481. See 12 Viner, Abr. 189; Com. Dig. Pleader (2 G 1).

NON ASSUMPSIT INFRA SEX ANNOS (Lat. he has not undertaken within six years). The plea by which, when pleadings were in Latin, the defendant alleged that the obligation was not undertaken and the right of action had not accrued within six years, the period of limitation of the right to bring suit. See LIMITATION. It is still in use.

NON BIS IN IDEM. In Civil Law. A phrase which signifies that no one shall be twice tried for the same offence: that is, that when a party accused has been once tried by a tribunal in the last resort, and either convicted or acquitted, he shall not again be tried. Code 9. 2. 9. 11; Merlin, Report. See JEOPARDY.

NON CEPIT MODO ET FORMA (Lat. he did not take in manner and form). The plea which raises the general issue in an action of replevin; or rather which involves the principal part of the declaration, for, properly speaking, there is no general issue in replevin; Morris, Repl. 142.

Its form is. "And the said C D, by E F, his attorney, comes and defends the wrong and injury, when, etc., and says that he did not take the said cattle (or, goods and chattels, according to the subject of the action) in the said declaration mentioned, or any of them, in manner and form as the said A B hath above complained. And of this the said C D puts himself upon the country."

It denies the taking the things and having them in the place specified in the declaration, both of which are material in this action. Steph. Pl., Andr. ed. 239, n.; 1 Chitty. Pl. 490.

NON-CLAIM. An omission or neglect by one entitled to make a demand within the time limited by law: as, when a continual claim ought to be made, a neglect to make such claim within a year and a day.

NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICER. A subordinate officer who holds his rank not by commission from the executive authority of a state or nation, but by appointment by a superior officer.

NON COMPOS MENTIS (Lat. not of sound mind, memory, or understanding). A generic term, including all the species of madness, whether it arise from idiocy, sickness, lunacy, or drunkenness. Co. Litt. 247; 4 Co. 124; 4 Comyns, Dig. 613; 5 id. 186; Shelf. Lun. 1. See INSANITY.

NON CONCESSIT (Lat. he did not grant). In English Law. The name of a plea by which the defendant denies that the crown granted to the plaintiff by letters-patent the rights which he claims as a concession from the king: as, for example, when a plaintiff sues another for the infringement of his patent right, the defendant may deny that the crown has granted him such a right. It does not deny the grant of a patent, but of the patent as described in the plaintiff's declaration; 3 Burr. 1544; 6 Co. 15 b. Also a plea resorted to by a stranger to a deed, because estoppels do not hold with respect to strangers. It brought into issue the title of the grantor as well as the operation of the deed; Whart. Dict.

NON-CONFORMISTS. A name given to certain dissenters from the rites and ceremonies of the church of England.

NON CONSTAT (Lat. it does not appear. It is not certain). Words frequently used, particularly in argument, to express dissatisfaction with the conclusions of the other party: as, it was moved in arrest of judgment that the declaration was not good, because non constat whether A B was seventeen years of age when the action was commenced. Swinb. pt. 4, § 22, p. 331.

NON CULPABILIS. A plea of not guilty. It is usually abbreviated non cul.; 16 Viner, Abr. 1.

Issue was joined thereon by the abbreviation "prit"; i. e. paratus, ready to prove the prisoner guilty. In later years, the officer of the court began to apply these abbreviations to the prisoner: "Culprit, how wilt thou be tried?" This is commonly believed to be the origin of the word culprit. 4 Steph. Com. 340; New Engl. Dict.

NON DAMNIFICATUS (Lat. not injured). A plea in the nature of a plea of performance to an action of debt on a bond of indemnity, by which the defendant asserts that the plaintiff has received no damage. 1 B. & P. 640, n. a; 1 Saund. 116, n. 1; 2 id. 81; Douglass v. Clark, 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 177; Brent v. Davis, 10 Wheat. (U. S.) 396, 6 L. Ed. 350; Washington v. Young, 10 Wheat. (U. S.) 406, 6 L. Ed. 352.

NON DECIMANDO. See DE NON DECIMANDO.

NON DEDIT. The general issue in formdon. See NE DONA PAS.

NON DEMISIT (Lat. he did not demise). A plea proper to be pleaded to an action of debt for rent, when the plaintiff declares on a parol lease. Gilb. Debt 436; Bull. N. P. 177; 1 Chitty, Pl. 477. A plea in bar, in replevin, to an avowry for arrears of rent, that the avowant did not demise. Morris, Repl. 179. It cannot be pleaded when the demise is stated to have been by indenture; 12 Viner, Abr. 178; Com. Dig. Pleader (2 W 48).

NON DETINET (Lat. he does not detain). The general issue in an action of detinue. Its form is as follows: "And the said C D, by E F, his attorney, comes and defends the wrong and injury, when, etc., and says that he does not detain the said goods and chattels (or 'deeds and writings,' according to the subject of the action) in the said declaration specified; or any part thereof, in manner and form as the said A B hath above complained. And of this the said C D puts himself upon the country." Andr. Steph. Pl. 231.

It puts in issue the detainer only: a justification must be pleaded specially; 8 Dowl. Pract. Cas. 347. It is a proper plea to an action of debt on a simple contract in the case of executors and administrators. 6 East 549; Bac. Abr. Pleas (I); 1 Chitty, Pl. 476. See DETINET.

NON-ENUMERATED DAY. Used to denote a motion day in New York on which the court hears motions classified by the Code as "non-enumerated motions." Jackson v. ———, 2 Caines (N. Y.) 259.

NON EST FACTUM (Lat. is not his deed). In Pleading. A plea to an action of debt on a bond or other specialty.

Its form is, "And the said C D, by E F, his attorney, comes and defends the wrong and injury, when, etc., and says that the said supposed writing obligatory (or 'indenture,' or 'articles of agreement,' according to the subject of the action) is not his deed. And of this he puts himself upon the country." Cleaton v. Chambliss, 6 Rand. (Va.) 86; Porter v. Martin, 1 Litt (Ky.) 158.

It is a proper plea when the deed is the foundation of the action; 1 Wms. Saund. 38, note 3; 2 id. 187 a, note 2; 2 Ld. Raym. 1500; Minton v. Woodworth, 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 476; and cannot be proved as declared on; 4 East 585; on account of non-execution; 6 Term 317; or variance in the body of the instrument; 4 Maule & S. 470; 2 D. & R. 662. Under this plea the plaintiff may show that the deed was void ab initio; Van Valkenburgh v. Rouk, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 337; Stoever v. Weir, 10 S. & R. (Pa.) 25; see Marine Ins. Co. v. Hodgson, 6 Cra. 219, 3 L. Ed. 200; or became so after making and before suit; 5 Co. 119 b; 11 id. 27. See 1 Chitty, Pl. 417, n.

In covenant, the defendant may, under this plea, avail himself of a mis-statement or omission of a qualifying covenant; 9 East 188; 1 Campb. 70; or omission of a condition precedent; 11 East 639; 7 D. & R. 249.

NON EST INVENTUS (Lat. he is not found). The sheriff's return to a writ requiring him to arrest the person of the defendant, which signifies that he is not to be found within his jurisdiction. The return is usually abbreviated N. E. I. Chitty, Pr. The English form "not found" is also commonly used.

NON-FEASANCE. The non-performance of some act which ought to be performed.

When a legislative act requires a person to do a thing, its non-feasance will subject the party to punishment: as, if a statute require the supervisors of the highways to repair such highways, the neglect to repair them may be punished. See 1 Russ. Cr. 48; MANDATUM.

NON FECIT (Lat. he did not make it). The name of a plea, for example, in an action of assumpsit on a promissory note, 3 M. & G. 446. Rarely used.

NON FECIT VASTUM CONTRA PROHIBITIONEM (Lat. he did not commit waste against the prohibition). The name of a plea to an action founded on a writ of estrepement, that the defendant did not commit waste contrary to the prohibition. 2 Bla. Com. 226.

NON IMPEDIVIT (Lat. he did not impede). The plea of the general issue in quare impedit. 3 Bla. Com. 305; 3 Woodd. Lect. 36. In law French, ne disturba pas.

NON IMPLACITANDO ALIQUEM DE LIBERO TENEMENTO SINE BREVI. A writ to prohibit bailiffs, etc., from levying a distress upon any man without the king's writ touching his freehold. Cowell.

NON INFREGIT CONVENTIONEM (Lat. he has not broken the covenant). A plea in an action of covenant. This plea is not a general issue: it merely denies that the defendant has broken the covenants on which he is sued. It being in the negative, it cannot be used where the breach is also in the negative. Bacon, Abr. Covenant (L); 3 Lev. 19; 2 Taunt. 278; Phelps v. Sawyer, 1 Aik. (Vt.) 150; Bender v. Fromberger, 4 Dall. (Pa.) 436, 1 L. Ed. 898; Roosevelt v. Fulton's Heirs, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 71.

NON-INTERCOURSE. The refusal of one state or nation to have commercial intercourse with another. See EMBARGO.

NON-INTERCOURSE ACT. An act prohibiting commercial intercourse with one or more foreign nations. On June 13, 1798, an act was passed suspending commercial intercourse between the United States and France and her dependencies. On March 1, 1809, an act was passed interdicting commercial intercourse between the United States and Great Britain and France, and their dependencies. The act forbade entrance into the ports or harbors of the United States by the public vessels of England and France and imposed a penalty upon any citizen who should afford any aid or supplies to such public ships. It provided, moreover, that if any vessel sailing under the flag of Great Britain or France should, after May 20th following, enter the ports of the United States, it should be forfeited with its cargo. The importation of goods from England and France was forbidden to vessels of any nationality, subject to forfeiture of the imported articles. On June 28th a second act was passed providing that the former act should continue in force until the end of the next session of congress. On May 1, 1810, a third act was passed forbidding British and French armed vessels to enter the ports of the United States. On March 2, 1811, an act was passed providing that, in case Great Britain should revoke or modify her edict in violation of the neutral commerce of the United States, the restrictions imposed by the act of March 1, 1809, should be removed.

NON INTROMITTENDO QUANDO BREVE DE PRÆCIPI IN CAPITIS SUBDOLE IMPETRATUR. A writ which used to be directed to the justices of the bench or in eyre, commanding them not to give one who had (under cover of entitling the king to land, etc., as holding of him in capite) deceitfully obtained the writ, the benefit of the same, but to put him to his writ of right if he thought fit to use it. Cowell.

NON-ISSUABLE PLEAS. Those upon which an issue would not determine the action upon the merits, as a plea in abatement.

NON-JOINDER. In Pleading. The omission of one or more persons who should have been made parties to a suit at law or in equity, as plaintiffs or defendants.

In Equity. It must be taken advantage of before the final hearing; Kean v. Johnson, 9 N. J. Eq. 401; California Electrical Works v. Finck, 47 Fed. 583; except in very strong cases; Mechanics Bk. v. Seton, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 299, 7 L. Ed. 152; as, where a party indispensable to rendering a decree appears to the court to be omitted; Woodward v. Wood, 19 Ala. 213. The objection may be taken by demurrer, if the defect appear on the face of the bill; Spear v. Campbell, 4 Scam. (Ill.) 424; Shubrick's Ex'rs v. Russell, 1 Des. (S. C.) 315; or by plea, if it do not appear; Gamble v. Johnson, 9 Mo. 605. The objection may be avoided by waiver of rights as to the party omitted; Bull v. Bell, 4 Wis. 54; or a supplemental bill filed, in some cases; Ensworth v. Lambert, 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 605. It will not cause dismissal of the bill in the first instance; Pringle v. Carter, 1 Hill (S. C.) 53; but will, if it continues after objection made; Lyde v. Taylor, 17 Ala. 270; without prejudice; Picquet v. Swan, 5 Mas. 561, Fed. Cas. No. 11,135; Miller v. McCan, 7 Paige Ch. (N. Y.) 451. The cause is ordered to stand over in the first instance; Colt v. Lasnier, 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 320. See JOINDER; PARTIES; MISJOINDER.

In Law. See ABATEMENT; PARTIES.

In England, the Judicature Act of 1875, Ord. xvi., has made very full provisions as to the joinder of parties, and the consequences of misjoinder and non-joinder. All persons may be joined as plaintiffs in whom the right to any relief claimed is alleged to exist, whether jointly, severally, or in the alternative.

NON JURIDICUS. See DIES NON.

NON JURORS. In English Law. Persons who refuse to take the oaths, required by law, to support the government. See Moore v. Few, 1 Dall. (U. S.) 170, 1 L. Ed. 86.

NON LIQUET (Lat. it is not clear). In Civil Law. Words by which the judges (judices), in a Roman trial, were accustomed to free themselves from the necessity of deciding a cause when the rights of the parties were doubtful. On the tablets which were given to the judges wherewith to indicate their judgment, was written N. L.

See AMPLIATION.

NON MERCHANDIZANDO VICTUALIA.

An ancient writ directed to justices of assize commanding them to inquire whether the officers of certain towns sold victuals in gross or by retail during the exercise of their office, contrary to a statute then in force, and to punish them accordingly. Cowell; Reg. Orig. 184.

NON MOLESTANDO. A writ which lay for him who was molested, contrary to the king's protection granted him. Cowell.

NON OBSTANTE. In English Law. These words, which literally signify notwithstanding, were used to express the act of the English king by which he dispensed with the law, that is, authorized its violation. He would by his license or dispensation make an offence punishable which was malum in se; but in certain matters which were mala prohibita he could, to certain persons and on special occasions, grant a non obstante. Vaugh. 330; 12 Co. 18; Bacon, Abr. Prerogative (D 7); 2 Reeve, Eng. C. L. 8, p. 83.

That the crown might, by the royal prerogative, make a sheriff without the election of the judges, non obstante aliquo statuto in contrarium, was held in Dyer 225, but the whole doctrine was abolished by the Bill of Rights.

NON OBSTANTE VEREDICTO. Notwithstanding the verdict. See JUDGMENT.

Judgment non obstante veredicto, strictly and technically, is a judgment given for the plaintiff, on his motion, where the defendant had a verdict, but it appears from the record that, either from some matter growing out of the pleading or because the fact found by the jury is immaterial, the defendant is not, in law, entitled to the judgment. In such cases where the common-law practice prevails, a writ of inquiry is awarded to assess the damages; 2 Tidd, Pr. 920. "The right method . . . is not to state the entry of judgment upon the verdict by rule, but to enter the verdict upon record, and then the judgment for the plaintiff non obstante veredicto." id. For a statement of the nature and effect of such a judgment at common law, see JUDGMENT. As appears from the definition there given, this was a judgment for the plaintiff, and in many of the states, it has been uniformly held that judgment non obstante veredicto can only be given for a plaintiff; the remedy for a defendant is to have the judgment arrested; Buckingham v. McCracken, 2 Ohio St. 287; Bellows v. Shannon, 2 Hill (N. Y.) 86. A motion by a defendant for a judgment non obstante veredicto is never allowable; Smith v. Powers, 15 N. H. 546; Sheehy v. Duffy, 89 Wis. 6, 61 N. W. 295; Bradley Fertilizer Co. v. Caswell, 65 Vt. 231, 26 Atl. 956; Tillinghast v. McLeod, 17 R. I. 208, 21 Atl. 345; Burnham v. R. Co., 17 R. I. 544, 23 Atl. 638; Steph. Pl. [98]; 1

Freem. Judg. § 7; 1 Black, Judg. § 16; unless the well-settled common-law rule has been relaxed by statute or decisions; German Ins. Co. v. Frederick, 58 Fed. 144, 7 C. C. A. 122, 19 U. S. App. 24.

A motion for such judgment must be founded on the record alone; Stearn v. Clifford, 62 Vt. 92, 18 Atl. 1045; Smith v. Smith, 2 Wend. (N. Y.) 624; it cannot be rendered after a judgment upon a verdict has been entered; State v. Bank, 6 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 218, 45 Am. Dec. 280; Scheible v. Hart (Ky.) 12 S. W. 628. It is allowed where a verdict has been found for the defendant on an insufficient plea in avoidance; Jones v. Fennimore, 1 G. Greene (Iowa) 134; Dewey v. Humphrey, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 187; that is, where the plea confesses the action and entirely fails to avoid it; Martindale v. Price, 14 Ind. 115; or if found true, is neither bar nor answer; Sullenberger v. Gest, 14 Ohio 204; or if an immaterial issue tendered by the plaintiff was found for the defendant and a replader was unnecessary to effect justice; Shreve v. Whittlesey, 7 Mo. 473; or if on motion for a new trial it is clear that in no event could damages be recovered on the cause of action; Ballou v. Harris, 5 R. I. 419. But such a judgment will not be entered where the evidence on material issues of fact was conflicting to such an extent as to require the submission of such issues to the jury; Blazossek v. Sherman Co., 141 Fed. 1022.

In Pennsylvania, under a statute, where a point of law is reserved at the trial, the jury is instructed to find for the plaintiff, whereupon the defendant moves for judgment on the point reserved non obstante veredicto. See 2 Brewster, Prac. 1219. This statute is held by the United States supreme court to be not enforceable in the federal courts as being in conflict with the seventh amendment to the constitution; Slocum v. Ins. Co., 228 U. S. 364, 33 Sup. Ct. 523, 57 L. Ed. 879. See NEW TRIAL. And in some other states, the technical common-law rule that this form of judgment should not be given for the defendant, has not been observed; though it would seem that this change of practice is due, in some degree, to the confusion of this subject with judgment on special verdicts and points reserved, and to the fact that judgments are frequently entered under the name non obstante veredicto, which properly and technically would not be such if the common-law distinctions were carefully observed. Such judgment for defendant has been entered in an action for damages where a plea of contributory negligence was not controverted; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Mayfield (Ky.) 35 S. W. 924; or where plaintiff's evidence is a mere scintilla; Holland v. Kindregan, 155 Pa. 156, 25 Atl. 1077; or where special findings in plaintiff's favor were set aside as against undisputed evidence, and defendant moved for judgment on the remaining findings and undisputed evidence; Menominee R. S. & Door Co. v. R. Co., 91 Wis. 447, 65 N. W. 176. But such statute does not apply to a case in which the jury disagreed; McKinnon v. Rynkiewicz, 145 Fed. 863; and such motion by defendant will not be granted where the defence is a general denial; Virgin Cotton Mills v. Abernathy, 115 N. C. 402, 20 S. E. 522; or where the pleadings and evidence raise questions of fact proper for a jury; Slivitski v. Wien, 93 Wis. 460, 67 N. W. 730; or where the evidence supports a verdict for plaintiff, but the undisputed facts show the transaction to be within the statute of frauds; Templeman v. Gibbs (Tex.) 25 S. W. 736. A reservation of "the question whether there is any evidence in this case, to be submitted to the jury, on which plaintiff is entitled to recover," does not present a "point reserved" to authorize judgment for defendant non obstante veredicto; Yerkes v. Richards, 170 Pa. 346, 32 Atl. 1089; nor can such judgment be rendered for plaintiff where verdict is for defendant, subject to the question reserved whether, notwithstanding the findings, plaintiff was not entitled to recover; Hosler v. Hursh, 151 Pa. 415, 25 Atl. 52. Where there was a verdict for plaintiff subject to the opinion of the court on the question of law reserved, the court directed judgment for defendant non obstante veredicto, saying that it had the same effect as a directed verdict; Casey v. Pav. Co., 109 Fed. 744, affirmed 114 Fed. 189, 52 C. C. A. 145.

A motion for such judgment is properly denied, after verdict upon an issue distinctly raised by the answer and submitted to the jury without objection; Lewis v. Foard, 112 N. C. 402, 17 S. E. 9; or where the evidence is sufficient to support the verdict; Fruchey v. Eagleson, 15 Ind. App. 88, 43 N. E. 146; or where, after reserving a point on certain facts, other evidence is submitted to the jury, and it is uncertain on which evidence the jury found; Keifer v. Eldred Tp., 110 Pa. 1, 20 Atl. 592.

It is not sufficient that the verdict was contrary to the weight of the evidence; Manning v. Orleans, 42 Neb. 712, 60 N. W. 953; and the judgment can be entered only when the moving party is entitled to it upon the pleadings of the party who had the verdict; Gibbon v. Loan Ass'n, 43 Neb. 132, 61 N. W. 126.

In Ohio, judgment against a general verdict cannot be entered unless all the facts necessary to support such judgment are expressly found; Fairbank & Co. v. R. Co., 66 Fed. 471. In Indiana, a judgment non obstante will not be granted unless there is an irreconcilable conflict between the general verdict and the answer to the interrogatories; British-American Assur. Co. v. Wilson, 132 Ind. 278, 31 N. E. 938. When the special finding of facts is inconsistent with the general verdict, the former controls the latter, and the court may give judgment accordingly; School Dist. v. Lund, 51 Kan. 731, 33 Pac. 595. In Oregon, there is a statutory provision authorizing judgment for the other party where the verdict does not correspond with pleadings, and it is held that that right is not impaired by failing to move for judgment before verdict; Benicia Agr. Works v. Creighton, 21 Or. 495, 28 Pac. 775, 30 Pac. 676. In Minnesota, such judgment can be given only to a party who, after the testimony, moved to direct a verdict in his favor; Hemstad v. Hall, 64 Minn. 136, 66 N. W. 366. In Kansas, by statute, such a judgment may be entered by the court in favor of the party against whom an adverse verdict has been rendered; Ft. Scott v. Brokerage Co., 117 Fed. 51, 54 C. C. A. 437.

In many states there are statutes on the subject which must be considered in connection with the decisions.

NON OMITTAS (Lat. more fully, non omittas propter libertatem, do not omit on account of the liberty or franchise). There were districts or liberties in England in regard to which grants were formerly made by the crown to individuals, conferring on them or their bailiffs the exclusive privilege of executing legal process therein. When it became necessary to execute a writ in such a liberty, it was framed with a clause of non omittas specially authorizing the sheriff to enter; 2 Stepb. Com. 683. This clause is now usually inserted in all processes addressed to sheriffs. Wharton, Lex.; 3 Chitty, Pr. 190, 310.

NON-PLEVIN. In Old English Law. A neglect to replevin land taken into the hands of the king upon default, within fifteen days, by which seisin was lost, as by default. Heugh. de Magn. Ch. c. 8. By 9 Edw. III. c. 2, no man shall lose his land by non-plevin.

NON PONENDIS IN ASSISSIS ET JURATIS. A writ which lay for persons who are summoned to attend the assizes or to sit on a jury and wish to be freed and discharged from the same. Reg. Orig. 100.

NON PROCEDENDO AD ASSISSAM REGE INCONSULTO. A writ to put a stop to the trial of a cause appertaining unto one who is in the king's service, etc., until the king's pleasure respecting the same be known. Cowell.

NON PROS. An abbreviation of non prosequitur, he does not pursue. Where the plaintiff, at any stage of the proceedings, fails to prosecute his action, or any part of it, in due time, the defendant enters non prosequitur, and signs final judgment and obtains costs against the plaintiff, who is said to be non pros'd. 2 Archb. Pr., Chitty ed. 1409; 3 Bla. Com. 296; 3 Chitty, Pr. 10; Caines, Pr. 102. The name non pros. is applied to the judgment so rendered against the plaintiff; 1 Sell. Pr.; Steph. Pl. 195.

When entered by defendant under a rule of court for failure to file a statement of claim within a year, it is said to be final; Patton's Pr. in Pa. 67; but no case is cited. See NOLLE PROSEQUI.

NON-RESIDENCE. In Ecclesiastical Law. The absence of spiritual persons from their benefices.

NON-RESIDENT. Not residing in the jurisdiction. Service of process on non-resident defendants is void, excepting cases which proceed in rem, such as proceedings in admiralty or by foreign attachment, and the like, or where the property in litigation is within the jurisdiction of the court.

One does not necessarily become a non-resident by absconding or absenting himself from his place of abode; Lindsey v. Dixon, 52 Mo. App. 291; nor does a mere casual or temporary absence on business or pleasure render one a non-resident, even if he may not have a house of usual abode in the state; Crawford v. Wilson, 4 Barb. (N. Y.) 504; if there be no intent to change his residence; Fitzgerald v. McMurrin, 57 Minn. 312, 59 N. W. 199. But where a man has a settled abode, for the time being, in another state for the purpose of business or pleasure, he is a non-resident; Hanson v. Graham, 82 Cal. 631, 23 Pac. 56, 7 L. R. A. 127; and it has been held that one who departs from the state with his family and remains absent for about a year is a non-resident, though he has not acquired a residence elsewhere, and though he intended to return in a few months; Hanover N. Bk. v. Stebbins, 69 Hun 308, 23 N. Y. Supp. 529. See HOME; DOMICIL; RESIDENCE; PROCESS; SERVICE.

NON RESIDENTIA PRO CLERICIS REGIS. A writ addressed to a bishop charging him not to molest a clerk employed in the king's service, by reason of his non-residence. Cowell; Reg. Orig. 58.

NON SOLVENDO PECUNIAM AD QUAM CLERICUS MULCTATUR PRO NON RESIDENTIA. A writ prohibiting an ordinary from taking a pecuniary mulct imposed upon a clerk of the king's for non-residence. Cowell.

NON SUBMISSIT (Lat.). The name of a plea to an action of debt on a bond to perform an award, by which the defendant pleads that he did not submit. Bacon, Abr. Arbitration, etc. (G).

NON SUM INFORMATUS (Lat.). I am not informed. See JUDGMENT.

NON TENENT INSIMUL (Lat. they do not hold together). A plea to an action in partition, by which the defendant denies that he holds the property which is the subject of the suit, together with the complainant or plaintiff.

NON TENUIT (Lat. he did not hold). The name of a plea in bar in replevin, when the defendant has avowed for rent-arrear, by which the plaintiff avows that he did not hold in manner and form as the avowry alleges. Rosc. Real Act. 628.

NON-TENURE. A plea in a real action, by which the defendant asserted that he did not hold the land, or at least some part of it, as mentioned in the plaintiff's declaration. 1 Mod. 250; in which case the writ abates as to the part with reference to which the plea is sustained; Green v. Lister, 8 Cra. (U. S.) 242, 3 L. Ed. 545. It may be pleaded with or without a disclaimer. It was a dilatory plea, though not strictly in abatement; 2 Saund. 44, n. 4; Dy. 210; Booth, Real Act. 179; Hunt v. Sprague, 3 Mass. 312; but might be pleaded as to part along with a plea in bar as to the rest; 1 Lutw. 716; Rast. Ent. 231 a, b; and was subsequently considered as a plea in bar; Otis v. Warren, 14 Mass. 239; Miles v. Peirce, 2 N. H. 10; Bac. Abr. Pleas (1 9).

NON-TERM. The vacation between two terms of a court.

NON-TRADING PARTNERSHIP. A partnership organized for carrying on the business of sawing lumber pickets and lath is non-trading in character; Dowling v. Bank, 145 U. S. 512, 12 Sup. Ct. 928, 36 L. Ed. 795, reversing National Exch. Bank v. White, 30 Fed. 413.

NON-USER. The neglect to make use of a thing.

A right which may be acquired by use may be lost by non-user; and an absolute discontinuance of the use for twenty years affords presumption of the extinguishment of the right in favor of some other adverse right; Dyer v. Depui, 5 Whart. (Pa.) 584; Williams v. Nelson, 23 Pick. (Mass.) 141, 34 Am. Dec. 45; but non-user of the franchise of a corporation is held insufficient to constitute a dissolution of the same without a judicial adjudication thereof; Parker v. Hotel Co., 96 Tenn. 252, 34 S. W. 209, 31 L. R. A. 700.

See DISSOLUTION; FORFEITURE.

A right of way, by grant or prescription, is not extinguished by the habitual use by its owner of another way, equally convenient, instead of it, unless there is an intentional abandonment of the former way; Jamaica Pond Aqueduct Corp. v. Chandler, 121 Mass. 3. See ABANDONMENT; EASEMENT.

Every public officer is required to use his office for the public good; a non-user of a public office is, therefore, a sufficient cause of forfeiture; 2 Bla. Com. 153; 9 Co. 50.

As to repeal of a statute by non-user, see OBSOLETE.

NONSENSE. That which in a written agreement or will is unintelligible.

It is a rule of law that an instrument shall be so construed that the whole, if possible, shall stand. When a matter is written grammatically right, but it is unintelligible and the whole makes nonsense, some words cannot be rejected to make sense of the rest; 1 Salk. 324; but when matter is nonsense by being contrary and repugnant to some precedent sensible matter, such repugnant matter is rejected; 14 Viner, Abr. 142; 15 id. 560. The maxim of the civil law on this subject agrees with this rule: Quæ in testamento ita sunt scripta ut intelligi non possent, perinde sunt ac si scripta non essent. Dig. 50. 17. 73. 3. See AMBIGUITY; INTERPRETATION. In pleading, when matter is nonsense by being contradictory and repugnant to something precedent, the precedent matter, which is sense, shall not be defeated by the repugnancy which follows, but that which is contradictory shall be rejected: as in ejectment where the declaration is of a demise on the second day of January, and that the defendant postea scilicet, on the first of January, ejected him, here the scilicet may be rejected as being expressly contrary to the postea and the precedent matter; 5 East 255; 1 Salk. 324.

NONSUIT. The name of a judgment given against the plaintiff when he is unable to prove a case, or when he refuses or neglects to proceed to the trial of a cause after it has been put at issue, without determining such issue.

In construing a statute such as those existing in some states, extending the statute of limitations after a nonsuit is "suffered" so as to facilitate the bringing of a new suit a nonsuit has been defined as "any judgment of discontinuance or dismissal whereby the merits are left untouched"; Mason v. R. Co., 226 Mo. 212, 125 S. W. 1128, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 914; and under this statute the dismissal of a cause for want of prosecution was held to be a nonsuit; Meddis v. Wilson, 175 Mo. 126, 74 S. W. 984; and the extension of the limitation was held not to begin to run until judgment on appeal from the nonsuit; Hewitt v. Steele, 136 Mo. 334, 38 S. W. 82.

A voluntary nonsuit is an abandonment of his cause by plaintiff, who allows a judgment for costs to be entered against him by absenting himself or failing to answer when called upon. Runyon v. R. Co., 25 N. J. L. 550.

After the trial is begun, it is held in many jurisdictions that the plaintiff's right to take a nonsuit is not absolute, but lies in the discretion of the court, and will be denied when plaintiff gets all his own evidence in and is not surprised by defendant's evidence; Johnson v. Bailey, 59 Fed. 670, where many cases are cited which support the decision. But the practice in many jurisdictions is otherwise, particularly where the common law is adhered to, and it is permissible to take a voluntary nonsuit at any time before verdict is rendered; Bradshaw v. Earnshaw, 11 App. D. C. 495; Lay v. Collins, 74 Ark. 536, 86 S. W. 281; New Hampshire Banking Co. v. Ball, 57 Kan. 812, 48 Pac. 137; Woodward v. Woodward, 84 Mo. App. 328; Helwig v. Judge, 73 Mich. 258, 41 N. W. 268; Beals v. Tel. Co., 53 Neb. 601, 74 N. W. 54. This is somewhat modified where the defendants set up a counter-claim (as to which, see infra); Summer v. Kelly, 38 S. C. 507, 17 S. E. 364; Toulouse v. Pare, 103 Cal. 251, 37 Pac. 146.

If a nonsuit is proper, to grant it prematurely is harmless error; Vincent v. Pac. Grove, 102 Cal. 405, 36 Pac. 773. Defendant waives his motion for a nonsuit and cannot base any claim of error upon it, where, after it is overruled, he proceeds with his defence and introduces testimony; Bogk v. Gassert, 149 U. S. 17, 13 Sup. Ct. 738, 37 L. Ed. 631; Runkle v. Burnham, 153 U. S. 216, 14 Sup. Ct. 837, 38 L. Ed. 694. Exception cannot be taken to the court's refusal to enter a compulsory nonsuit; Medary v. Cathers, 161 Pa. 87, 28 Atl. 1012.

After a voluntary nonsuit taken by the plaintiff, the court may reinstate the case; Sharpless v. Sevier, 1 Overt. (Tenn.) 117; but it is said that the reinstatement is not as a matter of right; Grant v. Burgwyn, 88 N. C. 95. The case is still within the jurisdiction of the court, so as to entitle it to vacate the judgment on a showing of mistake; Palace Hardware Co. v. Smith, 134 Cal. 381, 66 Pac. 474; but it has been held that the court has no authority to reinstate it against the consent of the defendant; Simpson v. Brock, 114 Ga. 294, 40 S. E. 266; although if the record shows that the court has acted irregularly and unadvisedly, it may and should, so long as its jurisdiction over the matter continues, reverse its action; Horton v. State, 63 Neb. 34, 88 N. W. 146.

An involuntary nonsuit takes place when the plaintiff, on being called, when his case is before the court for trial, neglects to appear, or when he has given no evidence on which a jury could find a verdict. Pratt v. Hull, 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 334.

At common law the plaintiff cannot be nonsuited against his will; for a party cannot be compelled to make default.

There is much difference of practice in the United States as to the granting of nonsuits or orders dismissing causes. In many of the state courts involuntary nonsuits are not allowed, either as matter of practice or because, as it is put in some cases, there is no authority to grant it. In some of the states there are statutes under which such nonsuits are authorized. And where there was a statute authorizing a nonsuit, it could only be granted upon the ground and in the manner therein provided; Burns v. Rodefer, 15 Nev. 59. Among the cases from states in which involuntary nonsuits are not allowed, are: Williams v. Port, 9 Ind. 551; Hill, M. & Co. v. Rucker, 14 Ark. 706; Cahill v. Ins. Co., 2 Dougl. (Mich.) 124, 43 Am. Dec. 457; Scruggs v. Brackin, 4 Yerg. (Tenn.) 528; Winston v. Miller, 12 S. & M. (Miss.) 550; Thwait v. Finch, 1 Wash. (Va.) 217; Kettlewell v. Peters, 23 Md. 312; French v. Smith, 4 Vt. 363, 24 Am. Dec. 616; Huston v. Berry, 3 Tex. 235; Mitchell v. Ins. Co., 6 Pick. (Mass.) 117; Saunders v. Coffin, 16 Ala. 421; Bryan v. Pinney, 3 Ariz. 34, 21 Pac. 332; Rankin v. Curtenius, 12 Ill. 334.

It has been frequently said that an involuntary nonsuit cannot be ordered in a federal court; Doe v. Grymes, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 469, 7 L. Ed. 224; Crane v. Morris, 6 Pet. (U. S.) 598, 609, 8 L. Ed. 514; Silsby v. Foote, 14 How. (U. S.) 218, 14 L. Ed. 394; Castle v. Bullard, 23 How. (U. S.) 172, 183, 16 L. Ed. 424; Oscanyan v. Arms Co., 103 U. S. 261, 26 L. Ed. 539; but in Central Trans. Co. v. Car Co., 139 U. S. 24, 11 Sup. Ct. 478, 35 L. Ed. 55, the court after citing the above cases said: "Yet, instead of overruling, upon that ground alone, exceptions to a refusal to order a nonsuit, this court, more than once, has considered and determined questions of law upon the decision of which the nonsuit was refused in the court below," citing Crane v. Morris and Castle v. Bullard, supra, and the court proceeded to consider the case on the merits and affirmed the judgment of nonsuit, apparently following the action of the court below which was in accordance with a Pennsylvania statute providing for such practice in the state courts. And that case was cited with approval in Coughran v. Bigelow, 164 U. S. 301, 17 Sup. Ct. 117, 41 L. Ed. 442, where the cases denying the power to grant an involuntary nonsuit are said to have been based "upon the absence of authority, whether statutory or by a rule promulgated by this court," and the action under the state statute is approved and taken as authority "that granting a nonsuit for want of sufficient evidence is not an infringement of the constitutional right of trial by jury."

The reason for refusing to permit compulsory nonsuits is given in Booe v. Davis, 5 Blackf. (Ind.) 115, 33 Am. Dec. 457, in these words: "The plaintiff has a right to have every question of fact in his case tried by a jury; and to nonsuit him on the trial, against his consent, would be an infringement of that right." In one case it was held that the court had no power to dismiss a suit on the ground that it appeared from the evidence that the contract sued on was illegal and void; Hudson v. Strickland, 49 Miss. 591. In French v. Smith, supra, it was said: "In this state, where the right of review is given by statute, a nonsuit should not be ordered at the first trial, as the plaintiff may be able to supply the defects in his first proofs; nor at the last, because public policy will then require that the controversy should be ended."

Cases in which it is held that the power of compulsory nonsuit exists are: Bailey v. Kimball, 26 N. H. 351; Naugatuck R. Co. v. Button Co., 24 Conn. 468; Ensminger v. McIntire, 23 Cal. 593; Ellis v. Trust Co., 4 Ohio St. 628, 64 Am. Dec. 610; Turnbull v. Rivers, 3 McCord (S. C.) 131, 15 Am. Dec. 622; Spensley v. Ins. Co., 54 Wis. 433, 11 N. W. 894; Deyo v. R. Co., 34 N. Y. 9, 88 Am. Dec. 418. In Warren v. McGill, 103 Cal. 153, 37 Pac. 144, a motion was held to have been properly overruled because there was some evidence tending to prove plaintiff's case, but the power was recognized. A nonsuit should be allowed where, on the uncontroverted facts, the plaintiff is not entitled to recover, or if he did the verdict would be set aside; Aycrigg's Ex'rs v. R. Co., 30 N. J. L. 460; People v. Ins. Exch., 126 Ill. 466, 18 N. E. 774, 2 L. R. A. 340; and where a verdict for the plaintiff would be clearly against the weight of evidence so that it must be set aside if rendered, a nonsuit should be granted; Wilds v. R. Co., 24 N. Y. 430; but there must be absolutely no evidence to support the plaintiff's claim in order to entitle the defendant to a nonsuit; Potter v. Mellen, 36 Minn. 122, 30 N. W. 438.

The legitimate ground for a nonsuit is either that the plaintiff has alleged no legal cause of action, or that there is no evidence to support his case. It is not the duty of the court to determine the question on the preponderance of evidence; that is for the jury; Bayley v. R. Co., 125 Mass. 65; and the refusal of the court to withdraw the case from the jury is not to be treated as indicating its opinion that the plaintiff should have a verdict, he simply does his duty in submitting the case to the jury even if he considers the preponderance of evidence to be against the plaintiff; if the evidence taken altogether raises a question of fact, it should go to the jury; Gaynor v. Ry. Co., 100 Mass. 212, 97 Am. Dec. 96; Warren v. R. Co., 8 Allen (Mass.) 227, 85 Am. Dec. 700.

Where an issue has been directed, the court in which it is tried cannot grant a nonsuit, but must have a trial and report the result of it; Woolfolk v. Mfg. Co., 22 S. C. 332. Where a case entitling the plaintiff to relief is not established by the pleadings nor the evidence, a nonsuit is proper; Manzy v. Hardy, 13 Neb. 36, 13 N. W. 12; and when any essential element of the plaintiff's case is wholly without proof; Murphy v. R. Co., 45 Ia. 661; Long v. Lewis, 16 Ga. 154.

By section 4 of the act of July 20, 1892, U. S. Comp. St. (1901) 707, of which section 1 was amended by act of June 25, 1910, id. (1911) 273, it is provided for suits in the federal courts in forma pauperis, the court may dismiss such cause if it appear that the allegation of poverty is untrue or the alleged cause of action is frivolous or malicious. In a suit under this statute, the circuit court of appeals held that the statute applied, but added that, independently of the statute, any court of general jurisdiction has power to dismiss frivolous proceedings which upon the face of the pleadings present no legal cause of action; O'Connell v. Mason, 132 Fed. 245, 65 C. C. A. 541. Where the declaration stated no cause of action, the court refused leave to defendant to withdraw his plea and demur and dismissed the suit on its own motion; Webb v. Fisher, 109 Tenn. 702, 72 S. W. 110, 60 L. R. A. 791, 97 Am. St. Rep. 863.

On opening statement of counsel. In many cases the trial court exercises the authority to direct a verdict or enter a nonsuit where the opening statement of plaintiff's counsel shows unmistakably that if the facts stated were proved there could be no recovery; Hornblower v. University, 31 App. D. C. 64; Pratt v. Conway, 148 Mo. 299, 49 S. W. 1028, 71 Am. St. Rep. 602; Jordan v. Reed, 77 N. J. L. 584, 71 Atl. 280. Such may be the case and such action may be warranted where the statement discloses that the cause of action was a corrupt contract or one void as unlawful or against public policy; Oscanyan v. Arms Co., 103 U. S. 261, 26 L. Ed. 539; Crisup v. Grosslight, 79 Mich. 380, 44 N. W. 621. It should not be done unless it clearly appears (1) that the complaint does not state a cause of action; (2) that a cause of action well stated is clearly defeated by some defense interposed and admitted as a fact; or (3) that the statement of the plaintiff's case has completely ruined it by some admission or statement of fact; Hoffman House v. Foote, 172 N. Y. 350, 65 N. E. 169; Montgomery v. Boyd, 78 App. Div. 65, 79 N. Y. Supp. 879. So a motion to dismiss may be granted if it appears from the opening statement that the cause of action did not survive to plaintiff; Hey v. Prime, 197 Mass. 474, 84 N. E. 141, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 570 (but the court may, in its discretion, withhold the decision until all the evidence, or the plaintiff's, is in); or that the claim is barred by the statute of limitations; Freusse v. Hotel Co., 134 App. Div. 384, 119 N. Y. Supp. 98; or where the suit is for a breach of covenant respecting property in which the plaintiff has parted with his estate; Wallace v. Vernon, 3 N. B. 5. Where an officer was charged with bribery and the opening statement discloses that the defendant did not at the time hold the office, a verdict of acquittal was properly directed; U. S. v. Dietrich, 126 Fed. 676. Upon such application all the facts stated should be considered without limitation of the allegations of the declaration or complaint, unless any additional facts stated would not be admitted in proof under the pleadings; Robertson v. New York, 7 Misc. 645, 28 N. Y. Supp. 13, affirmed 149 N. Y. 609, 41 N. E. 1128; and all inferences proper to be drawn from the facts stated should have full consideration; Carr v. R. Co., 78 N. J. L. 692, 75 Atl. 928; and opportunity should be given to amplify the statement if it seem too meagre; Kelly v. Gas Co., 74 N. J. L. 604, 67 Atl. 21; and it must clearly appear that there can be no recovery; Brashear v. Rabenstein, 71 Kan. 455, 80 Pac. 950.

Such motion admits that the statements made are true; Roberts v. R. Co., 45 Colo. 188, 101 Pac. 59; and where a nonsuit was granted on the opening statement of counsel which did not appear in the record the appeal was dismissed; Johnson v. Spokane, 29 Wash. 730, 70 Pac. 122; but where after the opening the complaint was dismissed as not stating a legal cause of action, on appeal it will be considered as if on demurrer; Sheridan v. Jackson, 72 N. Y. 170. In Wisconsin such practice is not recognized; Smith v. Ins. Co., 49 Wis. 322, 5 N. W. 804. And it is not permissible in England; [1892] 1 Q. B. 122. In Idaho, under a statute authorizing the entry of judgment or nonsuit if the proof of the plaintiff's case fails, a nonsuit may not be granted on the opening statement of his counsel; Wheeler v. Nav. Co., 16 Idaho, 375, 102 Pac. 347. A judge has no right, without the consent of the plaintiff's counsel, to nonsuit the plaintiff upon his counsel's opening statement of the facts. The opening of counsel may be incorrect in consequence of his having had wrong instructions. Owing to some accident, even if the greatest care is taken, the evidence of the witnesses when they are called may differ from that which has been opened by counsel. It is for that very reason that a liberty is given to the plaintiff's counsel; [1892] 1 Q. B. 122.

A plaintiff has no longer the old common law right of allegation to suffer a nonsuit at the trial; he cannot at that stage of the proceedings discontinue his action without leave; [1900] A. C. 19.

The right of voluntary nonsuit in case of counter-claim entitling defendant to affirmative relief. The common law rule permitting the plaintiff to dismiss his suit and take a nonsuit at his pleasure before verdict, antedated the modern practice of permitting the defendant to establish a set-off or counter-claim and, under some statutes, to have a verdict in his favor if his claim exceeded the plaintiff's demand. The effect of modern statutes providing for the adjudication of counter-claims in the same suit has given rise to considerable conflict of decision. Probably the nearest approach to certainty, which is practicable is to state that in the majority of cases the determination has been that while the plaintiff may take a nonsuit as to his own claim he cannot prejudice the defendant in the pursuit of his remedy. Such was the decision in Bertschy v. McLeod, 32 Wis. 205, where the court held that the right of discontinuance as at common law still remained under the present practice and had been rightfully exercised by the plaintiff, but that his action did not carry with it those proceedings of the defendant which he was permitted "to institute in the action, or rather to engraft upon it, but which are, in substance and effect, actions brought by the defendant against the plaintiff." This case was followed by others in the same state up to Grignon v. Black, 76 Wis. 674, 45 N. W. 122, in which a rehearing was denied in 76 Wis. 686, 45 N. W. 938. In another jurisdiction it was held that the plaintiff might take a voluntary nonsuit without putting out of court the defendant who had availed himself of the permission of the statute to maintain a counter-claim at the trial; Samaha v. Samaha, 18 App. D. C. 76; and following this case there was a statutory provision in the District of Columbia that when a plea of set-off has been filed, the plaintiff should not discontinue without the defendant's consent, and that without respect to what the defendant might do, the plaintiff would be entitled to a trial in judgment as to his own claim; and the rule of this statute that the defendant must consent to a nonsuit was applied in Francis v. Edward, 77 N. C. 271; but in a later case a distinction was drawn between counter-claims arising out of the plaintiff's cause of action and those which were independent of it; and as to the first a voluntary nonsuit was not permitted but might be as to the latter class of cases though without prejudicing the defendant's right to litigate his own claim. Many cases have followed the general doctrine of these cases up to Boyle v. Stallings, 140 N. C. 524, 53 S. E. 346. In many other states the courts have followed the same doctrine that the plaintiff may not, by a voluntary nonsuit, prejudice the rights of the defendant setting up a counter-claim; Griffin v. Jorgenson, 22 Minn. 92; N. W. Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Barbour, 95 Ky. 7, 23 S. W. 584; in New York there has been a lack of precision and continuity in the decisions but they seem to have settled upon a rule that the right to dismiss where counter-claim has been set up is within the discretion of the court, legal and not arbitrary, and subject to review by the appellate court which will protect the rights of defendants; Carleton v. Darcy, 75 N. Y. 375; Jansen v. Whitlock, 58 App. Div. 367, 68 N. Y. Supp. 1086; Livermore v. Bainbridge, 61 Barb. (N. Y.) 358, affirmed 49 N. Y. 125. Where a referee had found a balance, due to the defendant, and the statute of limitations would bar an original suit, without discussing the general question and under the circumstances of the case, a discontinuance will not be permitted without the consent of the defendant; Holcomb v. Holcomb, 23 Fed. 781. In many cases the contrary view is taken and it is held that the right of a defendant to take judgment for a balance due him where he has pleaded a set-off does not interfere with the right of the plaintiff to take a nonsuit and dismiss his case at any time before verdict unless that right is expressly denied by the statute; Buffington v. Quackenboss, 5 Fla. 196; Cummings v. Pruden, 11 Mass. 206; Theobald v. Colby, 35 Me. 179; McCredy v. Fey, 7 Watts (Pa.) 496; Usher v. Sibley, 2 Brev. (S. C.) 32; Branham v. Brown's Adm'x, 1 Bail. L. (S. C.) 262; Huffstutler v. Packing Co., 154 Ala. 291, 45 South. 418, 129 Am. St. Rep. 57, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 340, and note, where the cases are collected.

In cases of libel. The question of the power to grant a nonsuit in such cases has been raised in a few cases. In Cox v. Lee, L. R. 4 Exch. 284, such suits were treated as on the same footing as others, and it was held that the court should not withdraw the case from the jury unless satisfied that the publication is not libel and that a verdict finding it such would be set aside. In this country where there is a constitutional provision relating to libel suits both civil and criminal, it has been held that a nonsuit may be granted in such a civil action as in other cases; Hazy v. Woltke, 23 Colo. 556, 48 Pac. 1048; Ukman v. Daily Record Co., 189 Mo. 378, 88 S. W. 60.

Final judgment or not. It appears to be the weight of authority that upon the entry of a nonsuit there is no jurisdiction to enter a final judgment so as to prevent a new suit within the period of limitation, the action taken being a mere dismissal of the former suit; Mason v. R. Co., 226 Mo. 212, 125 S. W. 1128, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 914; Davis v. Preston, 129 Ia. 670, 106 N. W. 151; Miller v. R. Co., 30 Mont. 289, 76 Pac. 691; Kelly v. Kelly, 23 Tex. 437; Connor v. Knott, 10 S. D. 384, 73 N. W. 264; a final judgment cannot be entered either for the plaintiff; Hamilton v. Barricklow, 96 Ind. 398; or against him; Miller v. Mans, 28 Ind. 194; Bailey v. Wilson, 34 Or. 186, 55 Pac. 973 (where new matter had been stricken out of the answer, as, it was held, erroneously); but in Deyo v. R. Co., supra, where the plaintiff was nonsuited, judgment was entered for defendants and affirmed first at the general term and then by the Court of Appeals. In that case however there was no question of the effect upon a statutory privilege. It has been permitted to attack a judgment of nonsuit collaterally for fraud; Lowry v. McMillan, 8 Pa. 157, 49 Am. Dec. 501; contra; Sisco v. Parkhurst, 23 Vt. 537.

Reinstatement. An order of reinstatement has been made where the nonsuit was granted under a mistake of fact, which however need not be mutual; Palace Hardware Co.

v. Smith, supra, or the order was fraudulently obtained; Thompson v. Judge, 138 Mich. 81, 101 N. W. 61; or where the statutory period of limitation has elapsed pending suit and the order of dismissal was obtained by an attorney after his employment had terminated; Steinkamp v. Gaebel, 1 Neb. (Unof.) 490, 95 N. W. 684; but the attorney's mistake of judgment as to the law, or his ignorance of the facts which ought to have been known to him, is not a sufficient ground for vacating an order; Bacon v. Mitchell, 14 N. D. 454, 106 N. W. 129, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 244.

The order setting aside a nonsuit reinstates the cause and leaves it pending in the court making such order notwithstanding the entry of another intermediate void order, transferring the cause to another court; Southern Pac. Co. v. Winton, 27 Tex. Civ. App. 503, 66 S. W. 477; and the order vacating the order of dismissal, unappealed from, operates to annul the entry in the clerk's record showing dismissal as well as the judgment of dismissal; Wolters v. Rossi, 126 Cal. 644, 59 Pac. 143.

The formality of "calling" the plaintiff when he is to suffer a nonsuit is obsolete in most of the states.

NORMALLY. As a rule; regularly; according to rule, general custom, etc. Palmer v. Mach. Co., 186 Fed. 504.

NORMAN FRENCH. See LANGUAGE.

NORROY. See HERALD.

NORTH. In a description in a deed, unless qualified or controlled by other words, it means due north. Northerly in a grant, where there is no object to direct its inclination to the east or west, must be construed to mean north. Brandt v. Ogden, 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 156; Currier v. Nelson, 96 Cal. 505, 31 Pac. 531, 746, 31 Am. St. Rep. 239.

NORTH CAROLINA. The name of one of the original states of the United States of America.

The territory which now forms this state was included in the grant made in 1663 by Charles II., to Lord Clarendon and others, of a much more extensive country. The boundaries were enlarged by a new charter granted by the same prince to the same proprietaries in the year 1665. By this charter the proprietaries were authorized to make laws, with the assent of the freemen of the province or their delegates, and they were invested with various other powers. Being dissatisfied with the form of government, the proprietaries procured the celebrated John Locke to draw up a plan of government for the colony, which was adopted, and proved to be impracticable: it was highly exceptionable on account of its disregard of the principles of religious toleration and national liberty, which are now universally admitted. After a few years of unsuccessful operation it was abandoned. The colony, had been settled at two points, one called the Northern and the other the Southern settlement, which were governed by separate legislatures. In 1729 the proprietaries surrendered their charter, when it became a royal province, and was governed by a commission and a form of government in substance similar to that established in other royal provinces. In 1732 the territory was divided, and the divisions assumed the names of North Carolina and South Carolina.

A constitution was adopted December 18, 1776. To this constitution amendments were made in convention June 4, 1835, which were ratified by the people, and took effect on January 1, 1836. There was a second constitution in 1868, and an amended constitution in 1876.

NORTH DAKOTA. One of the states of the United States.

By the act of congress of February 22, 1889 (1 Supp. Rev. Stat. 645), the area comprising the territory of Dakota was divided on the line of the seventh standard parallel produced due west to the western boundary of said territory, and that portion north of said parallel forms the state of North Dakota. The proclamation announcing the admission of this state into the Union was made by the President on November 2, 1889. The constitution was amended, 1912, providing for initiative, referendum and recall.

NORTHAMPTON TABLES. See LIFE TABLES.

NORTHAMPTON, ASSIZE OF. An assize held in 1176; in it, the king confirmed and perfected the judicial legislation which he had begun ten years before in the Assize of Clarendon. The kingdom was divided into six circuits, and the judges appointed in them were given a more full independence, and were no longer joined with the sheriffs in their sessions. Their powers were extended beyond criminal jurisdiction to questions of property, inheritance, wardship, forfeiture of crown lands, advowsons and the tenure of land. It provided for a more thorough administration of criminal law. It provided that no one should entertain a guest in his house for more than a night unless the guest had some reasonable excuse which the host must show to his neighbors, and when the guest leaves, it must be in the presence of neighbors and by day. Stephen, Cr. Proc. in 2 Essays in Anglo-Amer. L. H. 445; Mrs. J. R. Green in 1 id.

NORTHWEST TERRITORY. A name formerly applied to the territory northwest of the Ohio river. See OHIO.

NORWAY. The most northerly country of Europe. It is a limited hereditary monarchy. The executive power is vested in a king and a ministry, and the legislative in a Storting consisting of an upper and a lower house.

NOSOCOMI. In Civil Law. Persons who have the management and care of hospitals for paupers. Clef Lois Rom. mot Administrateurs.

NOT FOUND. Words indorsed on a bill of indictment by a grand jury, when they have not sufficient evidence to find a true bill. See IGNORAMUS.

NOT GUILTY. The general issue plea in several sorts of actions and in criminal cases.

In trespass, its form is as follows: "And the said C D, by E F, his attorney, comes and defends the force and injury, when, etc., and says that he is not guilty of the said trespasses above laid to his charge, or any part thereof, in the manner and form as the said A B hath above complained. And of this the said C D puts himself upon the country."

Under this issue the defendant may give in evidence any matter which directly controverts the truth of any allegation, which the plaintiff on such general issue will be bound to prove; 1 B. & P. 213; and no person is bound to justify who is not prima facie a trespasser; 2 B. & P. 359; 2 Saund. 284 d. For example, the plea of not guilty is proper in trespass to persons, if the defendant have committed no assault, battery, or imprisonment, etc.; and in trespass to personal property, if the plaintiff had no property in the goods, or the defendant were not guilty of taking them, etc.; and in trespass to real property, this plea not only puts in issue the fact of trespass, etc., but also the title, which, whether freehold or possessory in the defendant or a person under whom he claims, may be given in evidence under it, which matters show prima facie that the right of possession, which is necessary in trespass, is not in the plaintiff, but in the defendant or the person under whom he justifies; 7 Term 354; Steph. Pl. 178; 1 Chitty, Pl. 491, 492.

In trespass on the case in general the formula is as follows: "And the said C D, by E F, his attorney, comes and defends the wrong and injury, when, etc., and says that he is not guilty of the premises above laid to his charge, in manner and form as the said A B hath above complained. And of this the said C D puts himself upon the country."

This, it will be observed, is a mere traverse, or denial, of the facts alleged in the declaration, and therefore, on principle, should be applied only to cases in which the defence rests on such a denial. But here a relaxation has taken place; for, under this plea, a defendant is permitted not only to contest the truth of the declaration, but, with some exceptions, to prove any matter of defence that tends to show that the plaintiff has no cause of action, though such matters be in confession and avoidance of the declaration; as, for example, a release given, or satisfaction made; Steph. Pl. 182; 1 Chitty, Pl. 486.

In trover. It is not usual in this action to plead any other plea, except the statute of limitations; and a release, and the bankruptcy of the plaintiff, may be given in evidence under the general issue; 7 Term 391.

In debt on a judgment suggesting a devastavit, an executor may plead not guilty; 1 Term 462.

In criminal cases, when the defendant wishes to put himself on his trial, he pleads not guilty. This plea makes it incumbent upon the prosecutor to prove every fact and circumstance constituting the offence, as stated in the indictment, information, or complaint. On the other hand, the defendant may give in evidence under this plea not only everything which negatives the allegations in the indictment, but also all matter of excuse and justification.

See NON CULPABILIS; NIENT CULPABLE.

NOT POSSESSED. A plea sometimes used in actions of trover, when the defendant was not possessed of the goods at the commencement of the action. 3 M. & G. 101, 103.

NOT PROVEN. In Scotch Criminal Law. It is a peculiarity of the Scotch jury system in criminal trials that it admits a verdict of not proven, corresponding to the non liquet of the Roman law. The legal effect of this is equivalent to not guilty; for a prisoner in whose case it is pronounced cannot be tried again. According to the homely but expressive maxim of the law, no man can be made to thole an assize twice. But, although the verdict of not proven is so far tantamount to an acquittal that the party cannot be tried a second time, it falls very far short of it with regard to the effect upon his reputation. He goes away from the bar of the court with an indelible stigma upon his name. There stands recorded against him the opinion of a jury that the evidence respecting his guilt was so strong that they did not dare to pronounce a verdict of acquittal. When Sir Nicholas Throckmorton was tried and acquitted by an English jury in 1554, he said, "It is better to be tried than to live suspected." But in Scotland a man may be not only tried, but acquitted, and yet live suspected, owing to the sinister influence of a verdict of not proven. Forsyth, Hist. Trial by Jury 334.

NOTARIAL WILL. A will executed by the testator in the presence of a Notary Public and two witnesses.

NOTARIUS. In Civil Law. One who took notes or draughts in shorthand of what was said by another, or of proceedings in the senate or in a court. One who draughted written instruments, wills, conveyances, etc. Vicat, Coc. Jur.; Calvinus, Lex.

In English Law. A notary. Law Fr. & Lat. Dict.; Cowell.

NOTARY, NOTARY PUBLIC. An officer appointed by the executive or other appointing power, under the laws of different states.

Notaries are of ancient origin; they existed in Rome during the republic, and were called tabelliones forenses, or personæ publicæ. Their employment consisted in the drawing up of legal documents. They exist in all the countries of Europe, and as early as A. D. 803 were appointed by the Frankish kings and the popes. Notaries in England are appointed by the archbishop of Canterbury. 25 Hen. VIII. c. 21, § 4. They are officers of the civil and canon law; Brooke, Office & Pr. of a Notary 9. In most of the states, notaries are appointed by the governor alone, in others by the governor by and with the advice of his council, in others by and with the advice and consent of the senate; in the District of Columbia they are appointed by the President of the United States. A notary is a state officer; Com. v. Shindle, 19 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 258. As a general rule, throughout the United States, the official acts of a notary public must be authenticated by seal as well as signature; Tunis v. Withrow, 10 Ia. 305, 77 Am. Dec. 117; Donegan v. Wood, 49 Ala. 242, 20 Am. Rep. 275; Stout v. Slattery, 12 Ill. 162.

Their duties differ somewhat in the different states, and are prescribed by statute. They are generally as follows: to protest bills of exchange and draw up acts of honor; to authenticate and certify copies of documents; to receive the affidavits of mariners and draw up protest relating to the same; to attest and take acknowledgments of deeds and other instruments; and to administer oaths. Ordinarily notaries have no jurisdiction outside the county or district for which they are appointed; but in several states they may act throughout the state.

By act of congress, Sept. 16, 1850, notaries are authorized to administer oaths and take acknowledgments in all cases where under the laws of the United States justices of the peace were formerly authorized to act.

By act of Aug. 15, 1876, c. 304, notaries are authorized to take depositions and do all other acts in relation to taking testimony to be used in the courts of the United States, and to take acknowledgments and affidavits with the same effect as commissioners of the United States circuit courts may do. R. S. § 1778. They may protest national bank circulating notes; R. S. § 5226; take acknowledgment of assignment of claims upon the United States; id. § 3477; and administer oaths of allegiance to persons prosecuting such claims; id. § 3479. By act of June 22, 1874, c. 390, notaries may take proof of debts against the estate of a bankrupt. By act of Feb. 26, 1881, c. 82, reports of national banks may be sworn to before notaries, but such notary must not be an officer of the bank; R. S. § 5211. By act of Aug. 18, 1856, c. 127, every secretary of legation and consular officer may, within the limits of his legation, perform any notarial act; R. S. § 1750. By act of April 5, 1906, every consular officer is required, within his consulate, to perform notarial acts.

A statute which authorizes a notary public to commit for contempt a witness who has been duly subpoenaed to testify before him and who refuses to be sworn or give his deposition, is unconstitutional; In re Huron, 58 Kan. 152, 48 Pac. 574, 36 L. R. A. 822, 62 Am. St. Rep. 614.

The acts of notaries are respected by the custom of merchants and the law of nations. Their protest of a bill is received as evidence in the courts of all civilized countries. Except in cases of protest of bills, the signature of a notary to an instrument going to a foreign country ought to be authenticated by the consul or representative of that country.

The notaries of England have always considered themselves authorized to administer oaths; and the act of 5 & 6 Will. IV. has placed it beyond dispute. In this country they do not exercise the power unless authorized by statute, except in cases where the oath is to be used out of the state or in the courts of the United States.

Upon general principle they cannot act in cases in which they are interested; 95 Am. Dec. 378, note; Ogden B. & L. Ass'n v. Mensch, 196 Ill. 554, 63 N. E. 1040, 89 Am. St. Rep. 330; Hayes v. Loan Ass'n, 124 Ala. 663, 26 South. 527, 82 Am. St. Rep. 216; Sample v. Irwin, 45 Tex. 567 (an attorney for either party).

The acknowledgment of a deed to a corporation cannot be taken by a notary who is a stockholder and director in the corporation; Fugman v. Loan Ass'n, 209 Ill. 176, 70 N. E. 644. One incorporator, who is a notary, cannot take the acknowledgment of another incorporator to the articles of incorporation; People v. Board, 105 App. Div. 273, 93 N. Y. Supp. 584.

A mortgage should not be acknowledged before a notary who is a stockholder and officer of the mortgagee; Kothe v. Krag-Reynolds Co., 20 Ind. App. 293, 50 N. E. 594; a notary who is a stockholder of a corporation cannot take a valid acknowledgment of his company; Bexar B. & L. Ass'n v. Heady, 21 Tex. Civ. App. 154, 50 S. W. 1079, 57 S. W. 583; nor one who is director, stockholder and assistant cashier of a bank; Wilson v. Griess, 64 Neb. 792, 90 N. W. 866. A protest by a notary who is a stockholder in the bank is invalid; Monongahela Bank v. Porter, 2 Watts (Pa.) 141; but where a notary public was intermediary between a borrower and lender on mortgage and took the acknowledgment of the mortgage, his act was held valid, there being nothing on the face of the papers to indicate to third parties that there was any incapacity to act; Jarvis-Conklin Mtg. Trust Co. v. Willhoit, 84 Fed. 515; and some cases hold that the mere fact that he is an officer of a corporation does not make its acknowledgment before him invalid; Horbach v. Tyrrell, 48 Neb. 514, 67 N. W. 485, 489, 37 L. R. A. 434; Read v. Loan Co., 68 Ohio St. 280, 67 N. E. 729, 62 L. R. A. 790, 96 Am. St. Rep. 663; Cooper v. Loan Ass'n, 97 Tenn. 285, 37 S. W. 12, 33 L. R. A. 338, 56 Am. St. Rep. 795; Keene Guaranty S. Bk. v. Lawrence, 32 Wash. 572, 73 Pac. 680.

It is held that a mortgage to a corporation is valid although the notary who took the acknowledgment was a stockholder; Read v. Loan Co., 68 Ohio St. 280, 67 N. E. 729, 62 L. R. A. 790, 96 Am. St. Rep. 663; so where the president of the mortgagee company took an acknowledgment of a mortgage to his company; Keene Guaranty S. Bk. v. Lawrence, 32 Wash. 572, 73 Pac. 680; so, in the case of a chattel mortgage, where the notary was a director, treasurer and stockholder of the mortgagee (the fact not appearing on the face of the papers); Ardmore N. Bk. v. Supply Co., 20 Okl. 427, 94 Pac. 533, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1074, 129 Am. St. Rep. 747, 16 Ann. Cas. 133; and in the case of a notary who was vice-president of the company; Florida S. Bk. & R. E. Exch. v. Rivers, 36 Fla. 575, 18 South. 850.

The books or registers of a deceased notary are admissible to prove his official acts as to presentment, demand, and notice of non-payment of negotiable paper; Porter v. Judson, 1 Gray (Mass.) 175; and so are entries of a notary's clerk; Gawtry v. Doane, 51 N. Y. 84. When produced, the handwriting of the deceased person must be proved; Chaffee v. U. S., 18 Wall. (U. S.) 516, 21 L. Ed. 908; but as to what extent a certificate shall be conclusive proof of the legality of the acknowledgment is not entirely certain; but the general tendency is to protect one who relies on the certificate; Webb, Record Title §§ 87-89, and note in 1 Am. Dec. 81. In several states certificate is, by statute, prima facie evidence only; 1 Hill's Code (Wash.) Sec. 1436.

A recorded deed of trust acknowledged before a notary disqualified by statute may be record notice to a subsequent judgment creditor; Southwestern Mfg. Co. v. Hughes, 24 Tex. Civ. App. 637, 60 S. W. 684.

Where a lawyer who was also a notary was in the habit of mailing instruments to his clients for signature and then certifying his acknowledgment, he was censured by the court, but not further punished as he acted without improper motive; In re Barnard, 151 App. Div. 580, 136 N. Y. Supp. 185.

Where an action is brought against a notary for a false certificate of acknowledgment, the presumption is that the defendant, acting in his judicial capacity, did so on reasonable information, and discharged his full duty. The burden of proof is on the plaintiff to prove a clear and intentional dereliction of duty; Com. v. Haines, 97 Pa. 228, 39 Am. Rep. 805; Proff. Notaries, 2d ed. §§ 48, 175; Notary's Manual. It has been held an actionable libel for a notary falsely and maliciously to protest for non-payment the acceptance of a person, and then send the draft with such protest to the source from whence it came; May v. Jones, 88 Ga. 308, 14 S. E. 552, 15 L. R. A. 637, 30 Am. St. Rep. 154. In England they are appointed by the Archbishop of Canterbury through the master of the Court of Faculties. In the city of London they must have been apprenticed, and also be freemen of the Scriveners' Company; Odgers, C. L. 1446. See [1910] W. N. 228.

See AUTHENTIC ACT; ACKNOWLEDGMENT.

NOTATION. The act of making a memorandum of some special circumstance on a probate or letters of administration.

NOTCHELL, or NOCHELL. "Crying the wife's Notchell" seems to have been a means of preventing her running up debts against her husband. See 20 Law Mag. & Rev. 280. In use in Lancashire. Cent. Dict.

NOTE A BILL. See NOTING A BILL.

NOTE OF A FINE. The fourth step of the proceedings in acknowledging a fine, which is only an abstract of the writ of covenant and the concord, naming the parties, the parcel of land, and the agreement, and enrolled of record in the proper office. 2 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 351, App. n. iv. § 3; 1 Steph. Com., 11th ed. 542.

NOTE OF ALLOWANCE. A note delivered by a master to a party to a cause, who alleged that there was error in law in the record and proceedings, allowing him to bring error.

NOTE OF HAND. A popular name for a promissory note.

NOTE OF PROTEST. A note or minute of the protest, made by the notary, at time of protest, on the bill, to be completed or filled out at his leisure. Byles, Bills, 15th ed. 214.

NOTE OR MEMORANDUM. An informal note or abstract of a transaction required by the statute of frauds.

The form of it is immaterial; but it must contain the essential terms of the contract expressed with such a degree of certainty that it may be understood without reference to parol evidence to show intent of parties; Browne, Stat. of Fr. 353, 386; O'Donnell v. Leeman, 43 Me. 158, 69 Am. Dec. 54; Tallman v. Franklin, 14 N. Y. 584; Johnson v. Brook, 31 Miss. 17, 66 Am. Dec. 547; White v. Watkins, 23 Mo. 423; McConnell v. Brillhart, 17 Ill. 354, 65 Am. Dec. 661. In some states, and in England, the consideration need not be stated in the note or memorandum; 4 B. & Ald. 595; Violett v. Patton, 5 Cra. (U. S.) 142, 3 L. Ed. 61; Packard v. Richardson, 17 Mass. 122, 9 Am. Dec. 123; Sage v. Wilcox, 6 Conn. 81.

A memorandum of the terms of an agreement was signed by plaintiff but not by defendant; the latter subsequently wrote to plaintiff referring to "our agreement for the hire of your carriage," and "my monthly payment." There was no other arrangement between the parties, to which these expressions could refer. Held, that the letter and the document containing the terms of the arrangement together constituted a note and memorandum signed by defendant, within the statute of frauds; 45 L. T. Rep. N. S. 348. See Grafton v. Cummings, 99 U. S. 100, 25 L. Ed. 366; Bibb v. Allen, 149 U. S. 481, 13 Sup. Ct. 950, 37 L. Ed. 819; Lee v. Hills, 66 Ind. 474.

See Browne; Reed, Stat. of Frauds; MEMORANDUM.

NOTES. See JUDGE'S NOTES.

NOTICE. The information given of some act done, or the interpellation by which some act is required to be done. Knowledge.

A statutory notice is not binding unless given as the law directs or allows; Allen v. Strickland, 100 N. C. 225, 6 S. E. 780; O'Fallon v. R. Co., 45 Ill. App. 572.

Actual notice exists when knowledge is actually brought home to the party to be affected by it. This statement is criticised, as being too narrow, in Wade, Notice 4. This writer divides actual knowledge into two classes, express and implied; the former includes all knowledge of a degree above that which depends upon collateral inference, or which imposes upon the party the further duty of inquiry; the latter imputes knowledge to the party because he is shown to be conscious of having the means of knowledge, though he does not use them, choosing to remain ignorant of the fact, or is grossly negligent in not following up the inquiry which the known facts suggest; Wade, Notice 5. In Appeal of Craft, 42 Conn. 146, there is a division into "particular or explicit" and "general or implied" notice. Information which a prudent man believes to be true, and which if followed by inquiry must lead to knowledge, is equivalent to knowledge; Tucker v. Constable, 16 Or. 407, 19 Pac. 13. Where the direct issue of fraud is involved, knowledge may be imputed to one wilfully closing his eyes to information within his reach; Wecker v. Enameling Co., 204 U. S. 176, 27 Sup. Ct. 184, 51 L. Ed. 430, 9 Ann. Cas. 757.

Notice of any fact which is sufficient to put a purchaser of land on inquiry, is adequate notice; Rorer Iron Co. v. Trout, 83 Va. 397, 2 S. E. 713, 5 Am. St. Rep. 285; and of everything to which such inquiry may lead; Shauer v. Alterton, 151 U. S. 607, 14 Sup. Ct. 442, 38 L. Ed. 286.

Constructive notice exists when the party, by any circumstance whatever, is put upon inquiry (which is the same as implied notice, supra), or when certain acts have been done which the party interested is presumed to have knowledge of on grounds of public policy; Bates v. Norcross, 14 Pick. (Mass.) 224; Pritchard v. Brown, 4 N. H.

397, 17 Am. Dec. 431; Scott v. Gallagher, 14 S. & R. (Pa.) 333, 16 Am. Dec. 508. The recording a deed; Wise v. Wimer, 23 Mo. 237; Magoffin v. Mandaville, 28 Miss. 354; 4 Kent 182, n.; an advertisement in a newspaper, when authorized by statute as a part of the process, public acts of government, and lis pendens (but see LIS PENDENS), constitute constructive notice. Judge Story defines the term as "knowledge" imputed by the court on presumption, too strong to be rebutted, that the information must have been communicated; Story, Eq. Jur. § 399. "Constructive notice is a legal inference of notice, of so high a nature, as to be conclusive, unless disproved, and is in most cases insusceptible of explanation or rebuttal by evidence that the purchaser had no actual notice, and believed the vendor's title to be good." 2 Lead. Cas. Eq. 77. Constructive notice is sometimes called notice in law; Sterry v. Arden, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 261. Proof of notoriety of the fact in the neighborhood of the party to be affected is competent to prove notice; Wright v. Stewart, 130 Fed. 905.

To establish notice by telephone, the party relying upon such notice has the burden of proving the identity of the person receiving the communication and that it reached the party sought to be charged; Second Pool Coal Co. v. Coal Co., 188 Fed. 892, 110 C. C. A. 526.

Proof that an envelope was mailed and received is not conclusive evidence that the notice was enclosed, and if its receipt is denied, it is for the jury; Empire State Surety Co. v. Lumber Co., 200 Fed. 224, 118 C. C. A. 410.

The constructive notice given by the record of a deed is sometimes called record notice. Where an instrument affecting the title to real estate is properly recorded, the record thereof is notice to subsequent purchasers, etc., from the same grantor; Wade, Notice, 2d ed. § 97; Vaughan v. Greer, 38 Tex. 530; Mayo v. Cartwright, 30 Ark. 407; Randolph v. R. Co., 28 N. J. Eq. 49.

The possession of land is notice to all the world of the possessor's rights thereunder; Lipp v. Land Syndicate, 24 Neb. 692, 40 N. W. 129; Buck v. Holt, 74 Ia. 294, 37 N. W. 377; Brooke v. Bordner, 125 Pa. 470, 17 Atl. 467; Daniel v. Hester, 29 S. C. 147, 7 S. E. 65; Simmons Creek Coal Co. v. Doran, 142 U. S. 417, 12 Sup. Ct. 239, 35 L. Ed. 1063.

Notice to an agent in the same transaction is, in general, notice to the principal; Farmers & C. Bk. v. Payne, 25 Conn. 444, 68 Am. Dec. 362; Pritchett v. Sessions, 10 Rich. (S. C.) 233; Baker v. Bliss, 39 N. Y. 70; Armstrong v. Abbott, 11 Colo. 223, 17 Pac. 517. A principal imposing confidence in an agent, and therefore neglecting some source of knowledge which he might have sought, is not chargeable with what he might have found out upon inquiry aroused by suspicion; Kilbourn v. Sunderland, 130 U. S. 505, 9 Sup. Ct. 594, 32 L. Ed. 1005. Notice to the trustees is notice to the beneficiaries in a deed of trust; Peters v. Bain, 133 U. S. 670, 10 Sup. Ct. 354, 33 L. Ed. 696; Crumlish v. R. Co., 32 W. Va. 244, 9 S. E. 180.

A principal is not bound by his agent's knowledge where it is not the duty of the agent to communicate it; Hummel v. Bank, 75 Ia. 689, 37 N. W. 954. Notice to an agent must be on the very business on hand; Alger v. Keith, 105 Fed. 105, 44 C. C. A. 371. So of knowledge incidentally acquired by a corporate officer when not acting in his official capacity; Caffee v. Berkley, 141 Ia. 344, 118 N. W. 267. If the agent is acting adversely to the principal his knowledge is not imputed to the principal; Central C. & C. Co. v. Good & Co., 120 Fed. 793, 57 C. C. A. 161; Gunster v. Power Co., 181 Pa. 327, 37 Atl. 550, 59 Am. St. Rep. 650. Where it is in the private interest of the officer of a bank to conceal knowledge from his bank, the law does not, by a fiction, charge the bank with such knowledge; American N. Bk. v. Miller, 229 U. S. 517, 33 Sup. Ct. 883, 57 L. Ed. 1310.

Notice to the president and some directors of a corporation is sufficient to bind it; Paul S. S. Co. v. Paul, 129 Fed. 757; but where the president, acting in his private capacity, acquires knowledge of a particular fact, it does not affect the corporation in a later transaction unless he participated therein; Smith v. Carmack (Tenn.) 64 S. W. 372; Teagarden v. Lumber Co., 105 Tex. 616, 154 S. W. 973. Notice to one who acts as local representative, advisor, secretary and treasurer, is notice to his association; Dennis v. Loan Ass'n, 136 Fed. 539, 69 C. C. A. 315; but where one is secretary of two companies, it must be shown that when notice was given to him, it was his duty to communicate it to the proper company, even though he was acting at the time for the other company; [1902] 1 Ch. 507.

The giving notice in certain cases is in the nature of a condition precedent to the right to call on the other party for the performance of his engagement, whether his contract were express or implied. Thus, in the familiar instance of bills of exchange and promissory notes, the implied contract of an indorser is that he will pay the bill or note, provided it be not paid, on presentment at maturity, by the acceptor or maker (being the party primarily liable), and provided that he (the indorser) has due notice of the dishonor, and without which he is discharged from all liability: consequently, it is essential for the holder to be prepared to prove affirmatively that such notice was given, or some facts dispensing with such notice; 1 Chitty, Pr. 496; 1 Pars. Notes & B. 516.

Whenever the defendant's liability to perform an act depends on another occurrence which is best known to the plaintiff, and of which the defendant is not legally bound to take notice, the plaintiff must prove that due notice was in fact given. So, in cases of insurances on ships, a notice of abandonment is frequently necessary to enable the assured plaintiff to proceed as for a total loss when something remains to be saved, in relation to which, upon notice, the insurers might themselves take their own measures.

Notice may be written or oral, in many cases, at the option of the party required to give it; but written notice is generally preferable, both as avoiding doubt and ambiguity in its terms, and as admitting more easy and exact proof of delivery; 2 Dan. Neg. Inst. 972.

Immediate notice of a fire means reasonable notice; Solomon v. Ins. Co., 160 N. Y. 595, 55 N. E. 279, 46 L. R. A. 682, 73 Am. St. Rep. 707.

Acknowledging service of notice does not preclude showing it was too late; Shearouse v. Morgan, 111 Ga. 858, 36 S. E. 927.

Personal service does not include service at the last known residence; Dalton v. R. Co., 113 Mo. App. 71, 87 S. W. 610.

See KNOWLEDGE; RECORD.

NOTICE, AVERMENT OF. The statement in a pleading that notice has been given.

When the matter alleged in the pleading is to be considered as lying more properly in the knowledge of the plaintiff than of the defendant, then the declaration ought to state that the defendant had notice thereof; as, when the defendant promised to give the plaintiff as much for a commodity as another person had given or should give for the like.

But where the matter does not lie more properly in the knowledge of the plaintiff than of the defendant, notice need not be averred; 1 Saund. 117, n. 2; 2 id. 62 a, n. 4. Therefore, if the defendant contracted to do a thing on the performance of an act by a stranger, notice need not be averred; for it lies in the defendant's knowledge as much as the plaintiff's, and he ought to take notice of it at his peril; Com. Dig. Pleader (C 65). See Com. Dig. Pleader (C 73, 74, 75); Viner, Abr. Notice; Hardr. 42; 5 Term 621.

The omission of an averment of notice, when necessary, will be fatal on demurrer or judgment by default; Cro. Jac. 432; but may be aided by verdict; 1 Saund. 228 a; unless in an action against the drawer of a bill, when the omission of the averment of notice of non-payment by the acceptor is fatal, even after verdict; Dougl. 679.

NOTICE OF DISHONOR. A notice given to a drawer or indorser of a bill, or an indorser of a negotiable note, by a subsequent party, that it had been dishonored either by non-acceptance in the case of a bill, or by non-payment in the case of an accepted bill or a note.

The subject is provided for in almost all the states by the Uniform Negotiable Instruments Act (see NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS); the old cases are, however, retained as having at least historical interest.

Notice of dishonor by non-acceptance or non-payment must be given to the drawer and to each indorser, and any drawer or indorser to whom notice is not given is discharged; Neg. Instr. Act.

The notice must contain a description of the bill or note; Housatonic Bk. v. Laffin, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 546; Kilgore v. Bulkley, 14 Conn. 362; Spann v. Baltzell, 1 Fla. 301, 46 Am. Dec. 346; Brewster v. Arnold, 1 Wis. 264; sufficient to leave no doubt in the mind of the indorser, as a reasonable man, what note was intended; Gilbert v. Dennis, 3 Metc. (Mass.) 495, 38 Am. Dec. 329; Crawford v. Bank, 7 Ala. 205; Youngs v. Lee, 12 N. Y. 551; Bradley v. Davis, 26 Me. 45; Mills v. Bank, 11 Wheat. (U. S.) 431, 6 L. Ed. 512; Dodson v. Taylor, 56 N. J. L. 11, 28 Atl. 316.

It must also contain a clear statement of the dishonor of the bill; 2 Cl. & F. 93; 2 M. & W. 799; Gilbert v. Dennis, 3 Metc. (Mass.) 495, 38 Am. Dec. 329; Lockwood v. Crawford, 18 Conn. 361; and something more than the mere fact of non-acceptance or non-payment must be stated; 2 Q. B. 388; Mills v. Bank, 11 Wheat. (U. S.) 431, 6 L. Ed. 512; Boehme v. Carr, 3 Md. 202; Nailor v. Bowie, id. 251; Chewing v. Gatewood, 5 How. (Miss.) 552; except in some cases; Housatonic Bk. v. Laffin, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 546; Graham v. Sangston, 1 Md. 59; Hunter v. Van Bomhorst & Co., id. 504; see as to effect of the use of the word protested, Mills v. Bank, 11 Wheat. (U. S.) 431, 6 L. Ed. 512; Crawford v. Bank, 7 Ala. 205; Kilgore v. Bulkley, 14 Conn. 362; Housatonic Bk. v. Laffin, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 546.

As to whether there must be a statement that the party to whom the notice is sent is looked to for payment, see 11 M. & W. 372; 7 C. B. 400.

Notice "may be given in any terms which sufficiently identify the instrument" and indicate that it has been dishonored; a misdescription does not vitiate the notice unless the party has been misled thereby; Neg. Instr. Act.

The notice is generally in writing, but may be oral; Woodin v. Foster, 16 Barb. (N. Y.) 146; Gilbert v. Dennis, 3 Metc. (Mass.) 495, 38 Am. Dec. 329; Glasgow v. Pratte, 8 Mo. 336, 40 Am. Dec. 142; 8 C. & P. 355. So in the Neg. Instr. Act.

It need not be personally served, but may be sent by mail; 7 East 385; Bussard v. Levering, 6 Wheat. (U. S.) 102, 5 L. Ed. 215;

Commercial Bk. v. Strong, 28 Vt. 316, 67 Am. Dec. 714; Walters v. Brown, 15 Md. 285, 74 Am. Dec. 566; otherwise, perhaps, if the parties live in the same town; see Peirce v. Pendar, 5 Mete. (Mass.) 352; Ireland v. Kip, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 490; Manchester Bk. v. Fellows, 28 N. H. 302; Remington v. Harrington, 8 Ohio 507; Brown v. Bank, 83 Va. 95, 7 S. E. 357; or left in the care of a suitable person, representing the party to be notified; Miles v. Hall, 12 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 332; Cook v. Renick, 19 Ill. 598; Isbell v. Lewis, 98 Ala. 550, 13 South. 335.

It may be sent through the mails or delivered in person; it may be left with the party's agent. If he is dead, the notice should be given to a personal representative, and if there is none, it should be sent to the last residence or place of business of the deceased. Notice to one partner is sufficient, even though there has been a dissolution. Notice to joint parties must be given to each of them. Notice to a bankrupt can either be given to the bankrupt himself or to his trustees or assignees; Neg. Instr. Act.

It should be sent to the place where it will most probably find the party to be notified most promptly; Bank of Columbia v. Lawrence, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 578, 7 L. Ed. 269; whether the place of business; Hyslop v. Jones, 3 McLean 96, Fed. Cas. No. 6,990; Ireland v. Kip, 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 231; Green v. Darling, 15 Me. 139; 1 Maule & S. 545; or place of residence; Commercial Bk. v. Strong, 28 Vt. 316, 67 Am. Dec. 714.

The word residence in the law of negotiable instruments may be satisfied by a temporary, partial, or even constructive residence; Wachusett N. Bk. v. Fairbrother, 148 Mass. 181, 19 N. E. 345, 12 Am. St. Rep. 530. When sent by mail, it should be to the post-office to which the party usually resorts; Bank of U. S. v. Carneal, 2 Pet. (U. S.) 543, 7 L. Ed. 513; Sherman v. Clark, 3 McLean 91, Fed. Cas. No. 12,763; Farmers' & M. Bk. v. Battle, 4 Humphr. (Tenn.) 86; Glasscock v. Bank, 8 Mo. 443; Bank of Columbia v. Magruder's Adm'r, 6 H. & J. (Md.) 172, 14 Am. Dec. 271; Webber v. Gotthold, 8 Misc. 503, 28 N. Y. Supp. 763. If properly addressed and mailed it will charge the indorser, whether he has received it or not; Townsend v. Auld, 8 Misc. 516, 28 N. Y. Supp. 746.

It should be sent to the address given by the party after his signature, or if no such address is given then to the post-office nearest his place of residence, or where he is accustomed to receive his letters. If notice is actually received within the time specified, it will be sufficient, although not sent in accordance with the requirements of the act; Neg. Instr. Act.

Every person who, by and immediately upon the dishonor of the note or bill, and only upon such dishonor, becomes liable to an action either on the paper or on the consideration for which the paper was given, is entitled to immediate notice; 1 Pars. Notes & B. 499. The holder need give notice only to the parties and to the indorser whom he intends to hold liable; Baker v. Morris, 25 Barb. (N. Y.) 138; Carter v. Bradley, 19 Me. 62, 36 Am. Dec. 735; Bank v. Bank, 49 Ohio St. 351, 30 N. E. 958; Wood v. Callaghan, 61 Mich. 402, 28 N. W. 192, 1 Am. St. Rep. 597. A second indorser duly notified cannot defend on the ground that the first was not so notified; Boteler v. Dexter, 20 D. C. 26; notice of dishonor must be given to the drawer and to each indorser, and any drawer or indorser to whom such notice is not given is discharged; Neg. Instr. Act.

Notice may be given by any party to a note or bill not primarily liable thereon as regards third parties, and not discharged from liability on it at the time notice is given; Baker v. Morris, 25 Barb. (N. Y.) 138; Brailsford v. Williams, 15 Md. 150, 74 Am. Dec. 559; Stanton v. Blossom, 14 Mass. 116, 7 Am. Dec. 198; 15 M. & W. 231. The English doctrine that any party to a note or bill may give the notice by which an antecedent party may be held liable to subsequent parties, is now quite firmly established; Wade, Notice § 709. Such notice may be by the holder's agent; Harris v. Robinson, 4 How. (U. S.) 336, 11 L. Ed. 1000; Payne v. Patrick, 21 Tex. 680; 15 M. & W. 231; and in the agent's name; Drexler v. McGlynn, 99 Cal. 143, 33 Pac. 773; may be by an indorsee for collection; Cowperthwaite v. Sheffield, 3 N. Y. 243; a notary; Burke v. McKay, 2 How. (U. S.) 66, 11 L. Ed. 181; Renick v. Robbins, 28 Mo. 339; the administrator or executor of a deceased person; Story, Pr. Notes § 304; the holder of the paper as collateral security; 14 C. B. N. S. 728. It has been held that notice by a stranger, pretending to be the holder, may be ratified by the real holder; 2 C. & K. 1016.

Mere knowledge on the part of an indorser of a note, learned from the maker that it had been dishonored, is not a notice, since notice must come from a party who is entitled to look to the indorser for payment; Jagger v. Bank, 53 Minn. 386, 55 N. W. 545; notice may be given by or on behalf of the holder, on by or on behalf of any party to the instrument who might be compelled to pay it to the holder. It may be given by an agent of such parties, and an agent, who holds the instrument for another, may give notice to the parties liable or notify his principal; Neg. Instr. Act.

The notice must be forwarded as early as the day after the dishonor, by a mail which does not start at an unreasonably early hour; Chick v. Pillsbury, 24 Me. 458, 41 Am. Dec. 394; Stephenson v. Dickson, 24 Pa. 148, 62 Am. Dec. 369; Downs v. Bank, 1 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 261, 40 Am. Dec. 92; Deminds v. Kirkman, 1 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 644;

Seventh Ward Bk. v. Hanrick, 2 Sto. 416, Fed. Cas. No. 12,678.

Notice must be given before the close of business hours on the day following dishonor. If given at the residence, it must be given before the usual hours of rest on the day following. If sent by mail, it must be deposited in the post-office in time to arrive in the usual course on the following day. Neg. Instr. Act.

An indorser is entitled to notice of demand and non-payment of a note, notwithstanding he has collateral security; Whittier v. Collins, 15 R. I. 44, 23 Atl. 39; Kramer v. Sandford, 4 W. & S. (Pa.) 328, 39 Am. Dec. 92.

Notice of dishonor may be excused: where it is prevented by inevitable accident, or overwhelming calamity; by the prevalence of a malignant disease which suspends the operations of trade; by war, blockade, invasion, or occupation by the enemy; by the interdiction of commerce between the countries from which or to which the notice is to be sent; by the impracticability of giving notice, by reason of the party entitled thereto to having absconded or having no fixed place of residence, or his place of business or residence being unknown, and incapable of being ascertained upon reasonable inquiries. These are the excuses of a general nature given by Story, on Pr. Notes and on Bills.

Delay in giving notice of dishonor is excused when caused by circumstances beyond the control of the holder and not due to his negligence or misconduct, and it must be given with reasonable diligence when the cause of delay ceases to operate; Neg. Instr. Act.

Special excuses are: That the note was for the accommodation of the indorser only; an original agreement on the part of the indorser, made with the maker or other party at all events to pay the note at maturity; the receiving security or indemnity from the maker, or other party for whose benefit the note is made, by the indorser, or money to take it up with; receiving the note as collateral security for another debt where the debtor is no party to the note, or if a party has not indorsed it; an original agreement by the indorser to dispense with notice; an order or direction from the maker to the maker not to pay the note at maturity. See Story, Pr. Notes §§ 293, 357.

Notice of dishonor is not required to be given to the drawer when the drawer and drawee are the same person, or when the drawee is a fictitious person, or when the drawer is the person to whom the instrument is presented for payment, or where the drawer has the right to expect that the drawee or acceptor will honor the instrument, or where the drawer has countermanded payment; Neg. Instr. Act.

Notice of dishonor need not be given to an indorser where the drawee is a fictitious person and the indorser knows of the fact at the time he indorsed, or where the indorser is the person to whom the instrument is presented for payment, or where the instrument was made or accepted for his accommodation; Neg. Instr. Act.

NOTICE OF EXECUTION. Under an exemption act which requires an execution, the debtor desiring to avail himself of its benefits should make a schedule of all his personal property within ten days after notice of execution. The sheriff should, whenever practical, give personal notice, and an ambiguously worded notice by mail from which the debtor may infer that personal demand will be made on him at some time in the future is insufficient; Boggess v. Pennell, 46 Ill. App. 150.

NOTICE OF INQUIRY. The plaintiff must give a written notice of executing a writ of inquiry to the defendant or his solicitor; 2 Chit. Arch. Prac.; Wharton.

NOTICE OF JUDGMENT. In several of the states it is provided by statute that a written notice shall be served by the party entering the judgment upon his adversary or his attorney, stating the time when the judgment is entered.

NOTICE OF LIS PENDENS. A notice filed for the purpose of warning all persons that the title to certain property is in litigation. See LIS PENDENS.

NOTICE OF MOTION. A notice in writing, entitled in a cause, stating that, on a certain day designated, a motion will be made to the court for the purpose stated. Burrill.

NOTICE OF PROTEST. A notice given to a drawer or indorser of a bill, or to an indorser of a note, that the bill or note has been protested for refusal of payment or acceptance. See NOTICE OF DISHONOR.

NOTICE OF TRIAL. The plaintiff under the practice of some states may give notice of trial at any time after the issues of fact are ready for trial; and if not given within a certain time the defendant may give notice of same or move to dismiss the action for want of prosecution.

NOTICE TO ADMIT. In the practice of the English high court either party may call upon the other to admit a document, and on refusal or neglect to admit he must bear the costs of proving the document, unless the judge certifies that the refusal was reasonable. Rules of Court XXXII; Whart.

NOTICE TO PLEAD. Written notice to defendant, requiring him to plead within a certain time. It must always be given before plaintiff can sign judgment for want of a plea. 1 Chitty, Archb. Pr. 221. Notice to plead, indorsed on the declaration or delivered separately, is sufficient without demanding plea or rule to plead, in England, by statute.

NOTICE TO PRODUCE PAPERS. When it is intended to give secondary evidence of a written instrument or paper which is in the possession of the opposite party, it is, in general, requisite to give him notice to produce the same on the trial of the cause, before such secondary evidence can be admitted. See Roberts v. Dixon, 50 Kan. 436, 31 Pac. 1083.

To this general rule there are some exceptions: first, in cases where, from the nature of the proceedings, the party in possession of the instrument has notice that he is charged with the possession of it, as in the case of trover for a bond. McClean v. Hertzog, 6 S. & R. (Pa.) 154; 1 Campb. 143; State v. Mayberry, 48 Me. 218; Forward v. Harris, 30 Barb. (N. Y.) 338; Morrill v. R. R., 58 N. H. 68; second, where the party in possession has obtained the instrument by fraud; 4 Esp. 256.

In general, a notice to produce papers ought to be given in writing, and state the title of the cause in which it is proposed to use the papers or instruments required; 2 Stark. 19. It seems, however, that the notice may be by parol; 1 Campb. 440. It must describe with sufficient certainty the papers or instruments called for, and must not be too general and by that means be uncertain; Ry. & M. 341; M'Cl. & Y. 139.

The notice may be given to the party himself, or to his attorney; 2 Term 203, n.; 3 id. 306; Ry. & M. 327.

The notice must be served a reasonable time before trial, so as to afford an opportunity to the party to search for and produce the instrument or paper in question; 1 Stark. 283; Pitt v. Emmons, 92 Mich. 542, 52 N. W. 1004; Burlington Lumber Co. v. Min. Co., 66 Ia. 292, 23 N. W. 674.

When a notice to produce an instrument or paper in the cause has been proved, and it is also proved that such paper or instrument was, at the time of the notice, in the hands of the party or his privy, and upon request in court he refuses or neglects to produce it, the party having given such notice and made such proof will be entitled to give secondary evidence thereof. See Momery v. Wool Co., 66 Hun 626, 20 N. Y. Supp. 814; Morse v. Woodworth, 155 Mass. 233, 27 N. E. 1010, 29 N. E. 525.

Where a party is notified to produce certain writings, and the same are shown not to be within the state, copies may be introduced; Danforth v. R. Co., 99 Ala. 331, 13 South. 51; Smith v. Bank, 82 Tex. 368, 17 S. W. 779. See PRODUCTION OF BOOKS.

NOTICE TO QUIT. A request from a landlord to his tenant to quit the premises leased, and to give possession of the same to him, the landlord, at a time therein mentioned. Jackson v. French, 3 Wend. (N. Y.)

337, 20 Am. Dec. 699; Den v. Adams, 12 N. J. L. 99.

The form of the notice. The notice or demand of possession should contain a request from the landlord to the tenant or person in possession to quit the premises which he holds from the landlord (which premises ought to be particularly described, as being situate in the street and city or place, or township and county), and to deliver them to him on or before a day certain,—generally, when the lease is for a year, the same day of the year on which the lease commences. But where there is some doubt as to the time when the lease is to expire, it is proper to add, "or at the expiration of the current year of your tenancy." 2 Esp. 589. It should be dated, signed by the landlord himself, or by some person in his name, who has been authorized by him, and directed to the tenant. The notice must include all the premises under the same demise; for the landlord cannot determine the tenancy as to part of the premises demised and continue it as to the residue. For the purpose of bringing an ejectment, it is not necessary that the notice should be in writing, except when required to be so under an express agreement between the parties; Com. Dig. Estate by Grant (G 11, n. p.); 2 Campb. 96. But it is the general and safest practice to give written notices; and it is a precaution which should always, when possible, be observed, as it prevents mistakes and renders the evidence certain. Care should be taken that the words of a notice be clear and decisive, without ambiguity or giving an alternative to the tenant; for if it be really ambiguous or optional, it will be invalid; Ad. Ej. 204.

As to the person by whom the notice is to be given. It must be given by the person interested in the premises, or his agent properly appointed; Ad. Ej. 120. See 3 C. B. 215. As the tenant is to act upon the notice at the time it is given to him, it is necessary that it should be such as he may act upon with security, and should, therefore, be binding upon all the parties concerned at the time it is given. Where, therefore, several persons are jointly interested in the premises, they need not all join in the notice; but, if any of them be not a party at the time, no subsequent ratification by him will be sufficient by relation to render the notice valid. But see 1 B. & Ad. 135; 7 M. & W. 139. But if the notice be given by an agent, it is sufficient if his authority is afterwards recognized; 3 B. & Ald. 689. But see 10 B. & C. 621.

As to the person to whom the notice should be given. When the relation of landlord and tenant subsists, difficulties can seldom occur as to the party upon whom the notice should be served. It should invariably be given to the tenant of the party serving the notice, notwithstanding a part may have been underlet or the whole of the premises may have been assigned; Ad. Ej. 119; 5 B. & P. 330; 6 B. & C. 41; unless, perhaps, the lessor has recognized the sub-tenant as his tenant; Jackson v. Baker, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 270. When the premises are in possession of two or more as joint tenants or tenants in common, the notice should be to all. A notice addressed to all and served upon one only will, however, be a good notice; Ad. Ej. 123. The delivery of a notice to quit to the wife of a tenant, she being in possession of the premises, is a good service upon the husband; Bell v. Bruhn, 30 Ill. App. 300.

As to the mode of serving the notice. The person about serving the notice should make two copies of it, both signed by the proper person, then procure one or more respectable persons for witnesses, to whom he should show the copies, who, upon comparing them and finding them alike, are to go with the person who is to serve the notice. The person serving the notice then, in their presence, should deliver one of these copies to the tenant personally, or to one of his family, at his usual place of abode, although the same be not upon the demised premises; 2 Phill. Ev. 185; or serve it upon the person in possession; and where the tenant is not in possession, a copy may be served on him, if he can be found, and another on the person in possession. The witnesses should then, for the sake of security, sign their names on the back of the copy of the notice retained, or otherwise mark it so as to identify it; and they should also state the manner in which the notice was served. In the case of a joint demise to two defendants, of whom one alone resided upon the premises, proof of the service of the notice upon him has been held to be sufficient ground for the jury to presume that the notice so served upon the premises has reached the other who resided in another place; 7 East 553; 5 Esp. 196. In ejectment the defence of adverse possession is inconsistent with a tenancy, and exempts the plaintiff from the necessity of proving a notice to quit; Wolf v. Holton, 92 Mich. 136, 52 N. W. 459; McGinnis v. Fernandes, 126 Ill. 228, 19 N. E. 44; Simpson v. Applegate, 75 Cal. 342, 17 Pac. 237.

At what time it must be served. At common law it must be given six calendar months before the expiration of the lease; 1 Term 159; Nichols v. Williams, 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 13; Hanchet v. Whitney, 1 Vt. 311; Den v. McIntosh, 26 N. C. 291, 42 Am. Dec. 122; Rising v. Stannard, 17 Mass. 287; see Logan v. Herron, 8 S. & R. (Pa.) 459; Godard's Ex'rs v. R. Co., 2 Rich. (S. C.) 346; and three months is the common time under statutory regulations; and where the letting is for a shorter period the length of notice is regulated by the time of letting; 6 Bing.

362; Howard v. Merriam, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 563; Anderson v. Prindle, 23 Wend. (N. Y.) 616. Where a tenant under a lease for a term assents to the termination of his lease and continues to hold from day to day under a new arrangement, he is not entitled to a month's notice to quit; Lane v. Ruhl, 94 Mich. 474, 54 N. W. 175; a tenant or sub-tenant holding over is not entitled to notice to quit; Frank v. Taubman, 31 Ill. App. 592. Difficulties sometimes arise as to the period of the commencement of the tenancy; and when a regular notice to quit on any particular day is given, and the time when the term began is unknown, the effect of such notice, as to its being evidence or not of the commencement of the tenancy, will depend upon the particular circumstances of its delivery; if the tenant, having been applied to by his landlord respecting the time of the commencement of the tenancy, has informed him it began on a certain day, and in consequence of such information a notice to quit on that day is given at a subsequent period, the tenant is concluded by his act, and will not be permitted to prove that in point of fact the tenancy has a different commencement; nor is it material whether the information be the result of design or ignorance, as the landlord is in both instances equally led into error; Ad. Ej. 141; 2 Esp. 635; 2 Phill. Ev. 186. In like manner, if the tenant at the time of delivery of the notice assent to the terms of it, it will waive any irregularity as to the period of its expiration; but such assent must be strictly proved; 4 Term 361. When the landlord is ignorant of the time when the term commenced, a notice to quit may be given not specifying any particular day, but ordering the tenant in general terms to quit and deliver up the possession of the premises at the end of the current year of his tenancy thereof, which shall expire next after the end of three months from the date of the notice. See 2 Esp. 589. Where a notice to quit is necessary, the day named therein must be the day of, or corresponding to the day of, the conclusion of the tenancy; Finkelstein v. Herson, 55 N. J. L. 217, 26 Atl. 688.

What will amount to a waiver of the notice. The acceptance of rent accruing subsequently to the expiration of the notice is the most usual means by which a waiver of it may be produced; but the acceptance of such rent is open to explanation; and it is the province of the jury to decide with what views and under what circumstances the rent is paid and received; Ad. Ej. 139; 2 Campb. 387. If the money be taken with an express declaration that the notice is not thereby intended to be waived, or accompanied by other circumstances which may induce an opinion that the landlord did not intend to continue the tenancy, no waiver will be produced by the acceptance: the rent must be paid and received as rent, or the notice will remain in force; Cowp. 243. The notice may also be waived by other acts of the landlord; but they are generally open to explanation, and the particular act will or will not be a waiver of the notice, according to the circumstances which attend it; 2 East 236; 1 Term 53. It has been held that a notice to quit at the end of a certain year is not waived by the landlord's permitting the tenant to remain in possession an entire year after the expiration of the notice, notwithstanding the tenant held by an improving lease,—that is, to clear and fence the land and pay the taxes; 1 Binn. 333. In cases, however, where the act of the landlord cannot be qualified, but must of necessity be taken as a confirmation of the tenancy, as if he distrain for rent accruing after the expiration of the notice, or recover in an action for use and occupation, the notice of course will be waived; Ad. Ej. 144; 1 H. Bla. 311; Prindle v. Anderson, 19 Wend. (N. Y.) 391.

A tenant becomes a trespasser at the expiration of the time specified in a due notice to quit; and the landlord has a right during the tenant's absence to re-enter and take possession, and eject the tenant's goods and to keep the possession so obtained; Freeman v. Wilson, 16 R. I. 524, 17 Atl. 921. A tenant at will, after a notice to quit, has a reasonable time in which to vacate the premises; Amsden v. Blaisdell, 60 Vt. 386, 15 Atl. 332.

See LANDLORD AND TENANT; LEASE.

NOTING. A term denoting the act of a notary in minuting on a bill of exchange, after it has been presented for acceptance or payment, the initials of his name, the date of the day, month, and year when such presentment was made, and the reason, if any has been assigned, for non-acceptance or non-payment, together with his charge. The noting is not indispensable, it being only a part of the protest; it will not supply the protest; 4 Term 175.

NOTIO. The power of hearing and trying a matter of fact. Calv. Lex.

NOTORIOUS. As used in defining adverse possession, it means that the character of the holding must possess such elements of notoriety that the owner may be presumed to have notice of it and of its extent. Watrous v. Morrison, 33 Fla. 261, 14 South. 805, 39 Am. St. Rep. 139. See Straus v. Ins. Co., 94 Mo. 187, 6 S. W. 698, 4 Am. St. Rep. 368.

NOTORIOUSLY. Well and generally understood. Martinez v. Moll, 46 Fed. 724.

NOTOUR. In Scotch Law. Open; notorious.

NOVA CUSTOMA. An imposition or duty. See ANTIQUA CUSTOMA.

NOVA STATUTA. English acts beginning with Edward III. are so called. Earlier acts are called vetera statuta, or antiqua statuta. The division is due to the accidental arrangement of the earliest printed copies of the statute. The former were first printed in 1497; the latter in 1588. 2 Holdsw. Hist. B. L. 175. Between them were statuta incerti temporis, which came to be regarded as of the last year of Edward II.; but some were certainly older and some were never issued but were merely lawyers' notes. "apochryphal statutes," like the Apochrypha in the Bible. Maitland, 2 Sel. Essays, Anglo-Am. Leg. Hist. 81.

NOVÆ NARRATIONES. New counts or talys. A book of such pleadings, as were then in use, published in the reign of Edw. III. 3 Bla. Com. 297; 3 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law 439.

NOVATION (from Lat. novare, novus, new). The substitution of a new obligation for an old one, which is thereby extinguished.

A transaction whereby a debtor is discharged from his liability to his original creditor by contracting a new obligation in favor of a new creditor by the order of the original creditor. Griggs v. Day, 136 N. Y. 152, 32 N. E. 612, 18 L. R. A. 120, 32 Am. St. Rep. 704.

It is a mode of extinguishing one obligation by another—the substitution, not of a new paper or note, but of a new obligation in lieu of an old one—the effect of which is to pay, dissolve, or otherwise discharge it. McDonnell v. Ins. Co., 85 Ala. 401, 5 South. 120.

In Civil Law. There are three kinds of novation.

First, where the debtor and creditor remain the same, but a new debt takes the place of the old one. Here, either the subject-matter of the debt may be changed, or the conditions of time, place, etc., of payment.

Second, where the debt remains the same, but a new debtor is substituted for the old. This novation may be made without the intervention or privity of the old debtor (in this case the new agreement is called expromissio, and the new debtor expromissor), or by the debtor's transmission of his debt to another, who accepts the obligation and is himself accepted by the creditor. This transaction is called delegatio. Domat lays down the essential distinction between a delegation and any other novation, thus: that the former demands the consent of all three parties, but the latter that only of the two parties to the new debt. See DELEGATION.

Third, where the debt remains the same, but a new creditor is substituted for the old. This also is called delegatio, for the reason adduced above, to wit: that all three parties must assent to the new bargain. It differs from the cessio nominis of the civil law by completely cancelling the old debt, while the cessio nominis leaves the creditor a claim for any balance due after assignment.

In every novation the old debt is wholly extinguished by the new. To effect such a transformation, several things are requisite.

First, there must be an anterior obligation of some sort, to serve as a basis for the new contract. If the old debt be void, as being, e. g., contra bonos mores, then the new debt is likewise void; because the consideration for the pretended novation is null. But if the old contract is only voidable, in some cases the new one may be good, operating as a ratification of the old. Moreover, if the old debt be conditional, the new is also conditional unless made otherwise by special agreement,—which agreement is rarely omitted.

Second, the parties innovating must consent thereto. In the modern civil law, every novation is voluntary. Anciently, a novation not having this voluntary element was in use. And not only consent is exacted, but a capacity to consent. But capacity to make or receive an absolute payment does not of itself authorize an agreement to innovate.

Third, there must be an express intention to innovate,—the animus novandi. A novation is never presumed. If an intent to destroy the old debt be not proved, two obligations now bind the debtor,—the old and the new. Conversely, if the new contract be invalid, without fraud in the transaction, the creditor has now lost all remedy. The anterior obligation is destroyed without being replaced by a new one.

An important rule of novation is that the extinction of the debt destroys also all rights and liens appertaining thereto. Hence, if any hypothecations be attached to the ancient agreement, they are cancelled by the new one, unless express words retain them. The second contract is simple and independent, and upon its terms is the action ex stipulatu to be brought. Hence, too, the new parties cannot avail themselves of defences, claims, and set-offs which would have prevailed between the old parties.

Obviously, a single creditor may make a novation with two or more debtors who are each liable in solido. In this case any one debtor may make the contract to innovate; and if such a contract be completed, all his fellow-debtors are discharged with him from the prior obligation. Therefore Pothier says that, under the rule that novation cancels all obligations subsidiary to the main one, sureties are freed by a novation contracted by their principal. The creditor must specially stipulate that codebtors and guarantors shall consent to be bound by the novation, if he wish to hold them liable. If they do not consent to such novation, the parties all remain, as before, bound under the old debt. So in Louisiana the debt due to a community creditor is not necessarily novated by his taking the individual note of the surviving spouse, with mortgages to secure its payment; Rachel v. Rachel, 11 La. Ann. 687.

It follows that the new debtor, in a delegation, can claim nothing under the old contract, since he has consented to the destruction of that contract. For the same reason, a creditor cannot proceed against the discharged debtor. And this is true though the new debtor should become insolvent while the old remains solvent. And even though at the time of the novation the new debtor was insolvent, still the creditor has lost his remedy against the old debtor. But the rule, no doubt, applies only to a bona fide delegation. And a suit brought by the creditor against a delegated debtor is not evidence of intention to discharge the original debtor; Jackson v. Williams, 11 La. Ann. 93.

In a case of mistake, the rule is this: If the new debtor agree to be substituted for the old, under the belief that he himself owes so much to the discharged debtor, although he do not in fact owe the amount, yet he is bound to the creditor on the novation; because the latter has been induced to discharge the old debtor by the contract of the new, and will receive only his due in holding the new debtor bound. But where the supposed creditor had really no claim upon the original debtor, the substitute contracts no obligation with him; and even though he intended to be bound, yet he may plead the fact of no former debt against any demand of the creditor, as soon as this fact is made known to him.

A novation may be made dependent on a condition. In that case the parties remain bound, as before, until the condition is fulfilled. The new debtor is not freed from a conditional novation as to the creditor until the condition happens; and he is not liable in an action to the old debtor until it is performed.

Any obligation which can be destroyed at all may be destroyed by novation. Thus, legacies, judgments, etc., with mortgages, guarantees, and similar accessories, are as much the subjects of novation as simple contract debts. But a covenant by the obligee of a bond not to sue the obligor within a certain time is not an example of the civil-law novation. The agreement was not a release, not a substituted contract, but a covenant merely, for the breach of which the obligee has his action; Chandler v. Herrick, 19 Johns. (N. Y.) 129.

At Common Law. The common-law doctrine of novation mainly agrees with that of the civil law, but in some parts differs from it.

The term novation is rarely employed. The usual common-law equivalent is assignment, and sometimes merger. Still, this form of contract found its way into common-law treatises as early as Fleta's day, by whom it was called innovatio. Item, per innovationem, ut si transfusa sit obligatio de una persona in aliam, quæ in se suscepit obligationem. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 60, § 12. The same words here quoted are also in Bracton, lib. 3, c. 2, § 13, but we have novatio for innovatio. In England, recently, the term novation has been revived in some cases.

A case of novation is put in Tatlock v. Harris, 3 Term 180. "Suppose A owes B £100, and B owes C £100, and the three meet, and it is agreed between them that A shall pay C the £100: B's debt is extinguished, and C may recover that sum against A."

The requisites of a novation are (1) a valid prior obligation to be displaced; (2) the consent of all the parties to the substitution; (3) a sufficient consideration; (4) the extinction of the old obligation; and (5) the creation of a valid new one; In re Ransford, 194 Fed. 658.

If a creditor orally directs his debtor to pay a third party and the debtor mutually agrees with the third party to do so, it is a novation; Castle v. Persons, 117 Fed. 844, 54 C. C. A. 133.

The subject of novation has been much before the courts in reference to the transfers of the business of life assurance companies. In order to constitute a novation the old obligation must be discharged; and it has often been the interest of claimants on the transferee company, where the transferor company has become insolvent, to contend that there is no "novation," but that the old obligation is still in force. In England the questions which have arisen on this matter are for the most part set at rest by the stat. 35 & 36 Vict. c. 41, s. 7, providing that no policy-holder shall be deemed to have abandoned any claim against the original company, and to have accepted in lieu thereof the liability of the new company, unless such abandonment and acceptance shall have been signified by some writing signed by him, or by his agent lawfully authorized. Moz. & W.

There must always be a debt once existing and now cancelled, to serve as a consideration for the new liability. The action in all cases is brought on the new agreement. But in order to give a right of action there must be an extinguishment of the original debt; 1 M. & W. 124; Short v. New Orleans, 4 La. Ann. 281; Warren v. Batchelder, 15 N. H. 129; Caswell v. Fellows, 110 Mass. 52; Black v. De Camp, 78 Ia. 718, 43 N. W. 625; Brewer v. Winston, 46 Ark. 163.

Where there is a substitution of a new contract for an old one, the new contract must be a valid one upon which the creditor can have his remedy; Guichard v. Brande, 57 Wis. 534, 15 N. W. 764; and the previous obligation of which novation is sought must be a valid one; Clark v. Billings, 59 Ind. 509.

No mere agreement for the transformation of one contract into another is of effect until actually carried into execution and the consent of the parties thereto obtained. A good novation is an accord executed; 5 B. & Ad. 925; Cox v. Baldwin, 1 La. 410; Goodrich v. Stanley, 24 Conn. 621; otherwise, if there be no satisfaction; 2 Scott N. R. 938. But as to the distinction between novation and accord and satisfaction, see that title. The discharge of the old debt must be contemporaneous with, and result from the consummation of, an arrangement with the new debtor; Cornwell v. Megins, 39 Minn. 407, 40 N. W. 610.

But where an agreement is entered into by deed, that deed gives in itself a substantial cause of action; and the giving such deed may be a sufficient accord and satisfaction for a simple contract debt; Co. Litt. 212 b; 1 Burr. 9; Jones v. Johnson, 3 W. & S. (Pa.) 276, 38 Am. Dec. 760; Snyder v. Sponable, 1 Hill (N. Y.) 567.

In the civil law delegatio, no new creditor could be substituted without the debtor's consent. This rule is observed in the common law. Hence, without this consent and promise to pay, a new creditor can have no action against the debtor, because there is no privity of contract between them. To establish such privity there must be a new promise founded on sufficient consideration; Mandeville v. Welch, 5 Wheat. (U. S.) 277, 5 L. Ed. 87; 5 Ad. & E. 115; Cornwell v. Megins, 39 Minn. 407, 40 N. W. 610; Spycher v. Werner, 74 Wis. 456, 43 N. W. 161, 5 L. R. A. 414; Gails v. The Osceola, 14 La. Ann. 54.

But in equity a creditor may assign his claim fully to another without any intervention of the debtor; and the assignee is not even compelled to sue in his assignor's name; Vanbuskirk v. Ins. Co., 14 Conn. 141, 36 Am. Dec. 473; Moseley v. Boush, 4 Rand. (Va.) 392.

The extinction of the prior debt is consideration enough to support a novation. If A holds B's note, payable to A, and assigns this for value to C, B is by such transfer released from his promise to A, and this is sufficient consideration to sustain his promise to C; Ans. Contr. 220; Bacon v. Daniels, 37 Ohio St. 279; Parsons v. Tillman, 95 Ind. 452; Bacon v. Bates, 53 Vt. 30. And a consideration need not be expressed in the contract of novation; though one must be proved in order to defend in a suit brought by creditors of the assignor.

When assent or consideration is wanting, the novation operates only as a species of collateral security. The transferee cannot sue in his own name, and will be subject to all the equitable defences which the debtor had against the original creditor. This assent on the debtor's part is said to be essential, for the reason that he may have an account with his assignor, and he shall not be barred of his right to a set-off. Still, if anything like an assent on the part of a holder of money can be inferred, he will be considered as the debtor; 4 Esp. 203; McNeil v. McCamley, 6 Tex. 163; if the debtor's assent be not secured, the order of transfer may be revoked before it is acted on.

In a delegation, if the old debtor agree to provide a substitute, he must put his creditor into such a position that the latter can claim full satisfaction from the delegated debtor, or otherwise the original liability remains, and there is no novation; Coy v. De Witt, 19 Mo. 322; Appleton v. Kennon, id. 637. See 2 M. & W. 484; Sheehy v. Mandeville, 6 Cra. (U. S.) 253, 3 L. Ed. 215; Arnold v. Camp, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 409, 7 Am. Dec. 328; Guichard v. Brande, 57 Wis. 534, 15 N. W. 764.

One who has contracted to pay the debts of another, and has been notified by a creditor that he accepts the arrangement, cannot be released from liability to such creditor by rescinding the contract without his consent; Hume v. Brower, 25 Ill. App. 130.

The existing Louisiana law is based upon the doctrines of the Civil Code considered above. It is held in numerous cases that "novation is not to be presumed;" hence the receipt of a bill or note is not necessarily a novation, or extinguishment of the debt for which it is given. An express declaration to that effect is required in most of our states, or else acts tantamount to a declaration. An intention to discharge the old debt must be shown in all cases; and this intention is sufficient to work a novation; Smith v. Brown, 12 La. Ann. 299. "The delegation by which the debtor gives to the creditor another debtor, who obliged himself towards such creditor, does not operate as a novation unless the creditor has expressly declared his intention to discharge the debtor who made the delegation." Choppin v. Gobbold, 13 La. Ann. 238.

One of the most common of modern novations is the surrender and destruction of an old promissory note or bill of exchange, and the receipt of a new one in payment thereof. The rules of novation apply as completely to debts evidenced by mercantile paper as to all other obligations; Story, Bills § 441; Pothier, de Change, n. 189. Hence, everywhere, if the parties intend that a promissory note or bill shall be absolute payment, it will be so considered; Ans. Contr. 273, n.; 10 Ad. & E. 593; Johnson v. Weed, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 310, 6 Am. Dec. 279; Torrey v. Baxter, 13 Vt. 452. In some states, the receipt of a negotiable promissory note is prima facie payment of the debt upon which it is given, and no action lies upon the account unless the presumption is controverted; Parham Sewing Mach. Co. v. Brock, 113 Mass. 194; Bunker v. Barron, 79 Me. 62, 8 Atl. 253, 1 Am. St. Rep. 282; Ricker v. Adams, 59 Vt. 154, 8 Atl. 278; Nixon v. Beard, 111 Ind. 137, 12 N. E. 131; Matasce v. Hughes, 7 Or. 39, 33 Am. Rep. 696. "If a creditor gives a receipt for a draft in payment of his account, the debt is novated;" Hunt v. Boyd, 2 La. 109. But see the cases cited supra for the full Louisiana law. In most states, however, the rule is, as in England, that, whether the debt be pre-existing or arise at the time of giving the note, the receipt of a promissory note is prima facie a conditional payment only, and works no novation.

It is payment only on fulfilment of the condition, i. e. when the note is paid; 5 Beav. 415; Sheehy v. Mandeville, 6 Cra. (U. S.) 264, 3 L. Ed. 215; Murray v. Gouverneur, 2 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 438, 1 Am. Dec. 177; Smith v. Smith, 27 N. H. 253; Brewster v. Bours, 8 Cal. 501; Hart v. Boller, 15 S. & R. (Pa.) 162, 16 Am. Dec. 536.

If a vendor transfer his vendee's note, he can only sue on the original contract when he gets back the note, and has it in his power to return it to his vendee; Parker v. U. S., 1 Pet. C. C. 262, Fed. Cas. No. 10,750; Townsends v. Stevenson, 4 Rich. (S. C.) 59.

Where the holder of a note agrees to accept another as debtor in place of the maker, there is a complete novation of the debt, and the indorsers are discharged; 22 Can. S. C. R. 479.

A novation is not a promise to pay the debt of another, within the statute of frauds, and need not be in writing; Roehl v. Porteous, 47 La. Ann. 1582, 18 South. 646. See Eden v. Chaffee, 160 Mass. 225, 35 N. E. 675; Hamlin v. Drummond, 91 Me. 175, 39 Atl. 551.

See Dixon, Substituted Liabilities; DISCHARGE; PAYMENT; MORTGAGE; MERGER.

NOVEL ASSIGNMENT. See NEW ASSIGNMENT.

NOVEL DISSEISIN. The name of an old remedy which was given for a new or recent disseisin.

When a tenant in fee-simple, fee-tail, or for term of life, was put out and disseised of his lands or tenements, rents, and the like, he might sue out a writ of assize or novel disseisin; and if, upon trial, he could prove his title and his actual seisin, and the disseisin by the present tenant, he was entitled to have judgment to recover his seisin and damages for the injury sustained; 3 Bla. Com. 187. Now obsolete.

NOVELLÆ LEONIS. The ordinances of the Emperor Leo, which were made from the year 887 till the year 893, are so called. These novels changed many rules of the Justinian law. This collection contains one hundred and thirteen novels, written originally in Greek, and afterwards, in 1560, translated into Latin by Aglæus.

NOVELS. NOVELLÆ CONSTITUTIONES. In Civil Law. The name given to the constitutions or laws of Justinian and his immediate successors, which were promulgated soon after the Code of Justinian.

It appears to have been the intention of Justinian, after the completion of the second and revised edition of the Code, to supply what had not been foreseen in the preceding laws, together with any necessary amendments or alterations, not by revising the Code, but by supplementary laws. Such laws he promulgated from time to time; but no official compilation of them is known to have been made until after his death, when his laws, 159 in number, with those of the reigns of Justin II. and Tiberias, nine in number, were collected, together with some local edicts, under this name. They belong to various times between 535 and 565.

Although the Novels of Justinian are the best known, and when the word Novels only is mentioned those of Justinian are always intended, he was not the first who used that name. Some of the acts of Theodosius, Valentinian, Leo, Severus, Authennius, and others, were also called Novels. But the Novels of the emperors who preceded Justinian had not the force of law after the legislation of that emperor. Those Novels are not, however, entirely useless: because, the Code of Justinian having been compiled to a considerable extent from the Theodosian Code and the earlier Novels, the latter frequently remove doubts which arise on the construction of the Code.

The original language of the Novels was for the most part Greek: but they are represented in the Corpus Juris Civilis by a Latin translation of 134 of them. These form the fourth part of the Corpus Juris Civilis. They are directed either to some officer, or an archbishop or bishop, or to some private individual of Constantinople; but they all had the force and authority of law.

The 118th Novel is the foundation and groundwork of the English Statute of Distribution of Intestates' Effects, which has been copied in many states of the Union. See 1 P. Wms. 27; Prec. in Chanc. 593; CIVIL LAW; CODE.

NOVELTY. In Patent Law. See PATENT.

NOVIGILD. A pecuniary satisfaction for an injury, amounting to nine times the value of the thing for which it was paid. Spelman.

NOVUS HOMO (Lat. a new man). This term is applied to a man who has been pardoned of a crime, by which he is restored to society and is rehabilitated.

NOW. At this time, or at the present moment; or at a time contemporaneous with something done. Pike v. Kennedy, 15 Or. 426, 15 Pac. 637. At the present time. Nutt v. U. S., 26 Ct. Cl. 15. In a will the word now is construed to mean at the death of the testator; 53 L. J. Ch. 1163 (reversed on other grounds, 30 Ch. D. 50); except where persons or classes must be ascertained or a description of property fixed; 30 L. J. Ex. 230; 6 H. & N. 583, where the word now is held to refer to the date of the will.

NOXA (Lat.). In Civil Law. Damage resulting from an offence committed by an irresponsible agent. The offence itself. The punishment for the offence. The slave or animal who did the offence, and who is delivered up to the person aggrieved (datur noxæ) unless the owner choose to pay the damage. The right of action is against whoever becomes the possessor of the slave or animal (noxæ caput sequitur). D. de furt. L. 41; Vicat, Voc. Jur.; Calv. Lex.

NOXÆ DEDITIO. The surrender of a slave who has committed a misdeed. The master may elect whether he will pay the damages assessed or surrender the slave. Noxa is the body that has done the harm; i. e. the slave. Hunter, Rom. Law, 166.

NOXAL ACTION. See NOXA.

NOXIOUS. Hurtful; offensive. Within the meaning of a statute prohibiting noxious or offensive trade or manufactures, brick-making is not included. 32 L. J. M. C. 135; 13 C. B. N. s. 479.

A thing is noxious if capable of doing harm. And if noxious as administered, although innoxious if differently administered; 49 L. J. M. C. 44; 5 Q. B. Div. 307; 13 Cox 547; 12 id. 463.

NUBILIS (Lat.). In Civil Law. One who is of a proper age to be married. Dig. 32, 51.

NUDE. Naked. Figuratively, this word is now applied to various subjects.

Nude matter is a bare allegation of a thing done, without any evidence of it.

NUDUM PACTUM. In Roman Law. Informal agreements not coming within any of the privileged classes. They could not be sued on. The term was sometimes used with a special and rather different meaning to express the rule that a contract without delivery will not pass property. Pollock, Contracts 743. See CONSIDERATION; SALMOND, Jurisprudence 640.

It is now commonly used to express a contract made without a consideration.

NUISANCE. Anything that unlawfully worketh hurt, inconvenience, or damage. 3 Bla. Com. 5, 216. See COOLEY, Torts 670.

That class of wrongs that arises from the unreasonable, unwarrantable, or unlawful use by a person of his own property, either real or personal, or from his own improper, indecent, or unlawful personal conduct, working an obstruction of or to the right of another, or of the public, and producing such material annoyance, inconvenience, discomfort, or hurt that the law will presume a consequent damage. Wood, Nuisance.

A private nuisance is anything done to the hurt or annoyance of the lands, tenements, or hereditaments of another. It produces damage to but one or a few persons, and cannot be said to be public; Ely v. Board, 36 N. Y. 297; State v. Paul, 5 R. I. 185; Ad. Eq. 210; 3 Bla. Com. 215; Webb, Poll. Torts 484.

A public or common nuisance is such an inconvenience or troublesome offence as annoys the whole community in general and not merely some particular person. It produces no special injury to one more than another of the people; 1 Hawk. Pl. Cr. 197; 4 Bla. Com. 166.

A mixed nuisance is one which, while producing injury to the public at large, does some special damage to some individual or class of individuals; Wood, Nuisance 35.

It is difficult to say what degree of annoyance constitutes a nuisance. If a thing is calculated to interfere with the comfortable enjoyment of a man's house, it is a nuisance; 3 Jur. n. s. 571. In relation to offensive trades, it seems that when such a trade renders the enjoyment of life and property uncomfortable it is a nuisance; 1 Burr. 333; Wesson v. Iron Co., 13 Allen (Mass.) 95, 90 Am. Dec. 181; 116 E. C. L. 608; Requena v. Los Angeles, 45 Cal. 55; State v. Kaster, 35 Ia. 221; Allen v. State, 34 Tex. 230; for the neighborhood has a right to pure and fresh air; 2 C. & P. 485; Duncan v. Hayes, 22 N. J. Eq. 26; 4 B. & S. 608. Every citizen holds his property subject to the implied obligation that he will use it in such way as not to prevent others from enjoying the use of their property; State v. Yopp, 97 N. C. 477, 2 S. E. 458, 2 Am. St. Rep. 305.

It is not a defence that a business is in the best place possible for the defendant or that it is conducted in the proper manner with the latest devices, when the evidence shows that when so conducted it still results in very great damage to, if not the total destruction of, the property of complainants who reside in the vicinity, the rights of habitation being superior to the rights of trade; American S. & R. Co. v. Godfrey, 158 Fed. 225, 89 C. C. A. 139, 14 Ann. Cas. 8.

A thing may be a nuisance in one place which is not so in another; therefore the situation or locality of the nuisance must be considered. A tallow-chandler, for example, setting up his business among other tallow-chandlers, and increasing the noxious smells of the neighborhood, is not guilty of setting up a nuisance unless the annoyance is much increased by the new manufactory; Peake 91. Such an establishment might be a nuisance in a thickly populated town of merchants and mechanics where no such business was carried on; Dennis v. Eckhardt, 3 Grant (Pa.) 390. The same doctrine obtains as regards other trades or employments. Persons living in populous manufacturing towns must expect more noise, smoke, and disturbance than those living elsewhere, and the circumstances of every case must govern; Whitney v. Bartholomew, 21 Conn. 213. A private hospital in a fashionable square in Dublin is an offensive trade; [1896] 1 I. R. 76. A private lunatic asylum is not an offensive trade; 2 A. & E. 161.

Coal burning was at one time decided to be a nuisance, and on petition Edw. II. issued a proclamation against the using it in London; Chamb. Encyc. tit. Coal, cited in 8 Ont.

Q. B. Div. 583, where it was held that a barbed wire fence is not a nuisance. A city ordinance declaring a public laundry to be a nuisance if carried on in a city except in designated parts of it, is unconstitutional as contravening the XIVth amendment; In re Hong Wah, 82 Fed. 623. Carrying on an offensive trade for several years in a place remote from buildings and public roads does not entitle the owner to continue it in the same place after houses have been built and roads laid out in the neighborhood. Formerly the contrary doctrine obtained, on the ground that the complainants were in fault in coming to a nuisance. This doctrine is now exploded, as it is manifest that an observance of it would interfere greatly with the growth of cities; Com. v. Upton, 6 Gray (Mass.) 473; 2 C. & P. 483; Brady v. Weeks, 3 Barb. (N. Y.) 157; Board of Health v. Lederer, 52 N. J. Eq. 675, 29 Atl. 444; People v. White Lead Works, 82 Mich. 471, 46 N. W. 735, 9 L. R. A. 722; 11 H. L. Cas. 642; Bushnell v. Robeson, 62 Ia. 540, 17 N. W. 888; Woodruff v. Min. Co., 18 Fed. 753.

The trade may be offensive for noise; McKeon v. See, 51 N. Y. 300, 10 Am. Rep. 659; L. R. 4 Ch. App. 388; 2 Sim. n. s. 133; L. R. 8 Ch. App. 467; Com. v. Smith, 6 Cush. (Mass.) 80; Leete v. Congregational Soc., 14 Mo. App. 590 (as to noise, see 40 Am. L. Rev. 301); or smell; 2 C. & P. 485; Allen v. State, 34 Tex. 230; Bishop v. Banks, 33 Conn. 121, 87 Am. Dec. 197; State v. Wilson, 43 N. H. 415, 82 Am. Dec. 163; Shirely v. R. Co., 74 Ia. 169, 37 N. W. 133, 7 Am. St. Rep. 471; or for other reasons; People v. Sands, 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 78, 3 Am. Dec. 296; L. R. 5 Eq. Ca. 166; Thompson v. R. Co., 51 N. J. L. 42, 15 Atl. 833; Pensacola Gas Co. v. Pebley, 25 Fla. 381, 5 South. 593.

To constitute a public nuisance, there must be such a number of persons annoyed that the offence can no longer be considered a private nuisance; 1 Burr. 337; Hackney v. State, 8 Ind. 494; Harrower v. Ritson, 37 Barb. (N. Y.) 301. Where pugilistic entertainments were given at a club and crowds collected outside, and men whistled for cabs during late hours, it was held a nuisance which would be enjoined; 63 L. T. 65.

Public nuisances arise in consequence of following particular trades, by which the air is rendered offensive and noxious; Cro. Car. 510; 1 Burr. 333; 4 B. & S. 608; State v. Woodward, 23 Vt. 92; Board of Health v. Lederer, 52 N. J. Eq. 675, 29 Atl. 444; also where rendered offensive from stagnant ponds; Rochester v. Simpson, 134 N. Y. 414, 31 N. E. 871; from acts of public indecentness, as bathing in a public river in sight of the neighboring houses; 2 Campb. 89; State v. Taylor, 29 Ind. 517; State v. Millard, 18 Vt. 574, 46 Am. Dec. 170; Miller v. People, 5 Barb. (N. Y.) 203; or for acts tending to a breach of the public peace, as for drawing a number of persons into a field for the purpose of pigeon-shooting, to the disturbance of the neighborhood; 3 B. & Ald. 184; or for rude and riotous sports or pastimes; 6 C. & P. 324; or keeping a disorderly house; Com. v. Howe, 13 Gray (Mass.) 26; State v. Williams, 30 N. J. L. 103; or a gaming house; Hawk, Pl. Cr. b. 1, c. 75, § 6; or a baudry-house; Darling v. Hubbell, 9 Conn. 350; Cranford v. Tyrrell, 128 N. Y. 341, 28 N. E. 514; State v. Osgood, 85 Me. 288, 27 Atl. 154; or a merry-go-round; Town of Davis v. Davis, 40 W. Va. 464, 21 S. E. 906; or a dangerous animal, known to be such, and suffering him to go at large, as a large bulldog accustomed to bite people; Kertschacke v. Ludwig, 28 Wis. 430; Oakes v. Spaulding, 40 Vt. 347, 94 Am. Dec. 404; or exposing a person having a contagious disease, as the smallpox, in public; 4 M. & S. 73, 472; and the like. The bringing a horse infected with the glanders into a public place, to the danger of infecting the citizens, is a misdemeanor at common law; 2 H. & N. 299; Fisher v. Clark, 41 Barb. (N. Y.) 329. The selling of tainted and unwholesome food is likewise indictable; 4 Bla. Com. 162; State v. Smith, 10 N. C. 378, 14 Am. Dec. 594; 3 M. & S. 11. The leaving unburied the corpse of a person for whom the defendant was bound to provide Christian burial, as a wife or child, is an indictable nuisance, if he is shown to have been of ability to provide such burial; 2 Den. Cr. Cas. 325. So of storing combustible articles in undue quantities or in improper places; Bradley v. People, 56 Barb. (N. Y.) 72; 3 East 192; Henderson v. Sullivan, 159 Fed. 46, 86 C. C. A. 236, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 691, 14 Ann. Cas. 590; Rhodes v. Dunbar, 57 Pa. 274, 98 Am. Dec. 221; or the placing of a powder magazine in dangerous proximity to a city; Chicago, W. & V. Coal Co. v. Glass, 34 Ill. App. 364; or the erection and maintenance of purprestures; People v. Vanderbilt, 25 N. Y. 396, 84 Am. Dec. 351; State v. Woodward, 23 Vt. 92; or the keeping of a coalshed by a railroad in a thickly settled part of a city; Wylie v. Elwood, 134 Ill. 281, 25 N. E. 570, 9 L. R. A. 726, 23 Am. St. Rep. 673; or maintaining a powder magazine within the city limits, against an ordinance; Hazard Powder Co. v. Volger, 58 Fed. 152, 7 C. C. A. 130, 12 U. S. App. 665; or bull-fighting; State v. Canty, 207 Mo. 439, 105 S. W. 1078, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 747, 123 Am. St. Rep. 393, 13 Ann. Cas. 787; or using property for a prize fight; Columbian Athletic Club v. State, 143 Ind. 98, 40 N. E. 914, 28 L. R. A. 727, 52 Am. St. Rep. 407; or a stable; Oehler v. Levy, 234 Ill. 595, 85 N. E. 271, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1025, 14 Ann. Cas. 891; or the storage of tons of dynamite; Henderson v. Sullivan, 159 Fed. 46, 86 C. C. A. 236, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 691, 14 Ann. Cas. 590; or the keeping, standing, or exhibiting of stallions and jacks in a public place; Ex parte Foote, 70 Ark. 12, 65 S. W. 706, 91 Am. St. Rep. 63; or maintaining in a public place a house where pools are sold on horse races; Respass v. Com., 131 Ky. 807, 115 S. W. 1131, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 836; or the erection of a water tank by a railroad on a populous public place; Chicago, G. W. R. Co. v. Church, 102 Fed. 85, 42 C. C. A. 178, 50 L. R. A. 488; or maintaining in Havana, Cuba, a public slaughter house from which offal ran into the harbor; O'Reilly De Camara v. Brooke, 142 Fed. 858, affirmed in 209 U. S. 45, 28 Sup. Ct. 439, 52 L. Ed. 676.

One who has been divested of littoral rights cannot maintain a suit to enjoin obstructions to his access to navigable waters in front of his land under the rule that individuals are not entitled to redress against a public nuisance; McCloskey v. Coast Co., 160 Fed. 794, 87 C. C. A. 568, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 673.

Private nuisances may be to corporeal inheritances: as, for example, if a man should build his house so as to throw the rain-water which fell on it on my land; Fitzherbert, Nat. Brev. 184; Aiken v. Benedict, 39 Barb. (N. Y.) 400; 5 Rep. 101; have a tree projecting over the land of another; Poll. Torts 62; keep hogs or other animals so as to incommode his neighbor and render the air unwholesome; 9 Co. 58; Com. v. Perry, 139 Mass. 198, 29 N. E. 656; or to incorporeal hereditaments; as, for example, obstructing a right of way by ploughing it up or laying logs across it, and the like; Fitzherbert, Nat. Brev. 183; 2 Rolle, Abr. 140; Holmes v. Jones, 80 Ga. 659, 7 S. E. 168; or obstructing a spring; 1 Campb. 463; or "shooting" a gas well; Tyner v. Gas Co., 131 Ind. 408; or making musical and other sounds, for the purpose of vexing and annoying the next door neighbor; [1893] 1 Ch. 316; interfering with a franchise, as a ferry or railroad, by a similar erection unlawfully made; or with a navigable stream by a railroad bridge erected without authority; South Carolina R. Co. v. Moore, 28 Ga. 398, 73 Am. Dec. 778. Any annoyance arising from odors, smoke, unhealthy exhalations, noise, interference with water power, etc., etc., whereby a man is prevented from fully enjoying his own property, may be ranked as a private nuisance. See Adams v. Car Co., 131 Ind. 375, 31 N. E. 57; Hauck v. Pipe Line Co., 153 Pa. 366, 26 Atl. 644, 20 L. R. A. 642, 34 Am. St. Rep. 710; Fogarty v. Brick Co., 50 Kan. 478, 31 Pac. 1052, 18 L. R. A. 756; Pach v. Geoffroy, 67 Hun 401, 22 N. Y. Supp. 275; [1893] 2 Ch. 447; polluting a stream by discharge of drainage; Morgan v. Danbury, 67 Conn. 484, 35 Atl. 499; Valparaíso v. Moffitt, 12 Ind. App. 250, 39 N. E. 909, 54 Am. St. Rep. 522; lowering the grade of a highway; 17 U. C. Q. B. 165; building a railway across it unlawfully; Com. v. R. Co., 4 Gray (Mass.) 22; failing to keep a street railway in repair;

Railway Co. v. State, 87 Tenn. 746, 11 S. W. 946. So making noises in the street and thereby occasioning damage to citizens; Com. v. Smith, 6 Cush. (Mass.) 80; and making a great outcry and clamor in the streets, by which people are drawn together and the highway obstructed; Com. v. Harris, 101 Mass. 29; and even though the noise disturbed but a single person; Com. v. Oaks, 113 Mass. 8; and a continuous and daily beating of drums on the street; In re Flaherty, 105 Cal. 558, 38 Pac. 981, 27 L. R. A. 529; if it be so troublesome as to annoy the whole community; State v. Hughes, 72 N. C. 27.

Generally, obnoxious vapors and smoke from a gas manufactory constitute a private nuisance; Brown v. Illius, 25 Conn. 583; Ottawa G. L. & C. Co. v. Thompson, 39 Ill. 598; Farley v. Gas Light Co., 105 Ga. 323, 31 S. E. 193; Cleveland v. Gas Light Co., 20 N. J. Eq. 201; Rosenheimer v. Gas Light Co., 39 App. Div. 482, 57 N. Y. Supp. 330; also gas works so operated that the percolations from the refuse matter therefrom contaminate the waters of neighboring wells; Farley v. Gas Light Co., 105 Ga. 323, 31 S. E. 193; Beatrice Gas Co. v. Thomas, 41 Neb. 662, 59 N. W. 925, 43 Am. St. Rep. 711; Keiser v. Gas Co., 143 Pa. 276, 22 Atl. 759 (and it is no excuse that the company has legislative authority to make gas; Bohan v. Gaslight Co., 122 N. Y. 18, 25 N. E. 246, 9 L. R. A. 711); or to contaminate the waters of a stream with tarry or oily substances from gas works; Carhart v. Gas Light Co., 22 Barb. (N. Y.) 297.

Railroad terminals needlessly located near to private property; Rainey v. R. Co., 99 Tex. 276, 89 S. W. 768, 90 S. W. 1096, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 590, 122 Am. St. Rep. 622, 13 Ann. Cas. 580; driving a current of foul air against the windows of another; Vaughan v. Bridgham, 193 Mass. 392, 79 N. E. 739, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 695; the keeping of barking and howling dogs and whining puppies; Herring v. Wilton, 106 Va. 171, 55 S. E. 546, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 349, 117 Am. St. Rep. 997, 10 Ann. Cas. 66; may be nuisances; but the noises and odors issuing from chicken houses; Wade v. Miller, 188 Mass. 6, 73 N. E. 849, 69 L. R. A. 820; public dances and picnics, in their nature; Com. v. R. Co., 139 Ky. 429, 112 S. W. 613, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 699, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 427 (otherwise of an acrobat performing on a wire on a public street; Wheeler v. Ft. Dodge [Ia.] 108 N. W. 1057, 9 L. R. A. [N. S.] 146); the display of fireworks in a city street of itself; Melker v. New York, 190 N. Y. 487, 83 N. E. 565, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 621, 13 Ann. Cas. 544; the burning of brick; Phillips v. Tile Co., 72 Kan. 643, 82 Pac. 787, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 92; and the unavoidable noises of an ice plant; Le Blanc v. Mfg. Co., 121 La. 249, 46 South. 226, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 287; are not nuisances.

Noise made by hogs kept for slaughter is not such a nuisance as to justify the destruction of a slaughter house business; Ballentine v. Webb, 84 Mich. 38, 47 N. W. 485, 13 L. R. A. 321; the noise of carefully switched railroad trains to a religious society whose services are disturbed by them is not a nuisance; Church of Latter-Day Saints v. R. Co., 36 Utah, 238, 103 Pac. 243, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 860, 140 Am. St. Rep. 819.

The vibration due to a gas engine which injures adjoining premises and affects the comfort of its occupant may be enjoined, though in an industrial district of Glasgow; [1912] S. C. 156 (Sc. Ct. q. Sess.); but residents in large industrial cities must put up with a certain amount of noise which accompanies the reasonable recreations of a crowded population. The question in each case is whether such noises amount to a substantial interference with the comfort of neighbors upon ordinary sober common sense standards; New Imper. Hotel Co. v. Johnson, [1912] 1 I. R. 327.

See several full notes on nuisances in 39 L. R. A.; and see MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS; ORDINANCE.

A person is not liable in damages for a nuisance erected on land by his grantor until after a request to abate; Rouse v. R. Co., 42 Ill. App. 421; but see Whitenack v. R. Co., 57 Fed. 901.

The remedies are by an action for the damage done, by the owner, in the case of a private nuisance; 3 Bla. Com. 220; or by any party suffering special damage, in the case of a public nuisance; Lansing v. Smith, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 9, 21 Am. Dec. 89; Pittsburgh v. Scott, 1 Pa. 309; Vaugh. 341; 3 M. & S. 472; 2 Bingham. 283; Hatch v. R. Co., 28 Vt. 142; Yolo County v. Sacramento, 36 Cal. 193; Hughes v. R. Co., 2 R. I. 493; San Jose Ranch Co. v. Brooks, 74 Cal. 463, 16 Pac. 250; Ison v. Manley, 76 Ga. 804; Knowles v. R. Co., 175 Pa. 623, 34 Atl. 974, 52 Am. St. Rep. 860; by abatement by the owner, when the nuisance is private; 2 Rolle, Abr. 565; 3 Dowl. & R. 556; Rhea v. Forsyth, 37 Pa. 503, 78 Am. Dec. 441; and in some cases when it is public; Add. Torts 71. But in neither case must there be any riot, and very pressing exigency is requisite to justify summary action of this character, particularly in the case of a public nuisance; Wetmore v. Tracy, 14 Wend. (N. Y.) 250, 28 Am. Dec. 525; Harvey v. Dewoody, 18 Ark. 252; 16 Q. B. 546; by injunction, which is the most usual and efficacious remedy; see INJUNCTION; or by indictment for a public nuisance; 2 Bish. Cr. L. § 856; Whart. Cr. L. § 1410, etc.; State v. R. Co., 57 Vt. 144; State v. Railroad, 91 Tenn. 445, 19 S. W. 229. A private individual cannot abate a nuisance in a public highway, unless it does him special injury, and then only so far as is necessary to the exercise of his right of passing along the highway; The Brinton, 66 Fed. 71, 13 C. C. A. 331, 26 U. S. App. 486; 9 Co. 55; 3 Bla. Com. 5; Shaw v. R. Co., 159 Mass. 597, 35 N. E. 92; Houck v. Wachter, 34 Md. 265, 6 Am. Rep. 332. The courts have had some difficulty in determining what was a sufficient special injury to enable a citizen to sue for a public nuisance obstructing a navigation right; Thayer v. R. Co., 125 Mass. 253; Frost v. R. Co., 96 Me. 76, 51 Atl. 806, 59 L. R. A. 68; Steamboat Co. v. R. Co., 46 S. C. 329, 24 S. E. 337, 33 L. R. A. 541, 57 Am. St. Rep. 688; Lammers v. Brennan, 46 Minn. 209, 48 N. W. 766; he may abate a public nuisance only when it is also a private nuisance as to him, or incommodes him more than the general public; Brown v. Perkins, 12 Gray (Mass.) 89.

Every continuance of a nuisance or recurrence of the injury is an additional nuisance forming in itself the subject-matter of a new action; Sloggy v. Dilworth, 38 Minn. 179, 36 N. W. 451, 8 Am. St. Rep. 656.

Relief in equity by abatement is not the necessary sequence of the establishment of the charge of nuisance. Criminal nuisances are abatable by criminal process, and where this process is adequate, jurisdiction in equity fails, either because adequate legal remedy precludes jurisdiction in equity or the subject-matter is beyond the scope of equity jurisdiction. If a nuisance, purely criminal, injures or affects a private plaintiff in certain respects, he may resort to equity for relief; but the existence of neither a civil nor criminal public nuisance necessarily calls for the interposition of equity. A private person cannot abate it unless it is specially prejudicial to him, and the state cannot proceed against it in equity if it be merely a criminal nuisance, unattended by injury to a personal or property right of some sort, creating a necessity for the prevention of irreparable injury; State v. Ehrlick, 65 W. Va. 700, 64 S. E. 935, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 691; People v. Condon, 102 Ill. App. 449.

Obstructions to highways, public grounds, harbors, landings, etc., are classed by the old writers as "purprestures," signifying enclosures. In such cases the attorney general may proceed in equity to abate the nuisance. Whether it be a criminal nuisance or not is wholly immaterial. If it is indictable as a crime, it does not bar the remedy in equity, because the citizen and the general public have an immediate right to the enjoyment of the thing interfered with. The decisions awarding injunctions to abate purprestures are numerous. Of this character was the injunction granted in the Debs Case, 158 U. S. 564, 15 Sup. Ct. 900, 39 L. Ed. 1092, and also Raritan Tp. v. R. Co., 49 N. J. Eq. 11, 23 Atl. 127; People v. Beaudry, 91 Cal. 213, 27 Pac. 610; State v. Power Co., 82 S. C. 181, 63 S. E. 884, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 435, 129 Am. St. Rep. 876, 17 Ann. Cas. 343.

Equity will not restrain the keeping of an unlicensed dram shop, though the keeping of it is a public nuisance; State v. Uhrig, 14 Mo. App. 413; or restrain gambling; Cope v. District Fair Ass'n, 99 Ill. 489, 39 Am. Rep. 30; or pool selling; People v. Condon, 102 Ill. App. 449; or keeping a gaming house; State v. Ehrlick, 65 W. Va. 700, 64 S. E. 935, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 691; or the keeping of slaughter houses on the banks of a running stream or placing dead animals therein; Tiede v. Schneidt, 99 Wis. 201; nor will it restrain the breach of a covenant on the ground that the act covenanted against was criminal, injury to property resulting therefrom having been waived; Ocean City Ass'n v. Schurch, 57 N. J. Eq. 268, 41 Atl. 914.

Equity will consider the comparative injury which will result from the granting or refusing of an injunction, and it will not be granted where it will be inequitable and oppressive, as where it would cause a large loss to defendant and others, while the injury, if it is refused, would be comparatively slight and can be compensated by damages; Mountain Copper Co. v. U. S., 142 Fed. 625, 73 C. C. A. 621.

See Wood, Nuisance, as to municipal authority to abate a nuisance; 9 L. R. A. 711, note.

According to the principles of equity as recognized in the courts of the United States, a state can obtain relief by a suit in equity to restrain a public nuisance; Coosaw Min. Co. v. South Carolina, 144 U. S. 550, 12 Sup. Ct. 689, 36 L. Ed. 537.

NUL AGARD (L. Fr. no award). A plea to an action on an arbitration bond, when the defendant avers that there was no legal award made. 3 Burr. 1730.

NUL DISSEISIN. No disseisin. A plea in a real action, by which the defendant denies that there was any disseisin. It is a species of the general issue.

NUL TIEL RECORD (Fr. no such record). A plea which is proper when it is proposed to disprove the existence of the record on which the plaintiff founds his action. Andr. Steph. Pl. 234.

Any matters may be introduced under it which tend to destroy the validity of the record as a record, provided they do not contradict the recitals of the record itself; Bennett v. Morley, 10 Ohio 100. It is frequently used to enable the defendant to deny the jurisdiction of the court from which the alleged record emanates; Jacquette v. Hugunon, 2 McLean, 129, Fed. Cas. No. 7,169.

It is said to be the proper plea to an action on a foreign judgment, especially if of a sister state; Newcomb v. Peck, 17 Vt. 302, 44 Am. Dec. 340; Hall v. Williams, 6 Pick. (Mass.) 232, 17 Am. Dec. 356; though it is held that nil debet is sufficient; Clark

v. Mann, 33 Me. 268; Williams v. Preston, 3 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 600, 20 Am. Dec. 179; especially if the judgment be that of a justice of the peace; Graham v. Grigg, 3 Harr. (Del.) 408. It has been held that it is an inappropriate plea to suits upon foreign judgments, since such judgments do not create a merger, and are only prima facie evidence of an indebtedness; Tourigny v. Houle, 88 Me. 406, 34 Atl. 158.

See CONFLICT OF LAWS.

NUL TORT (L. Fr. no wrong). A plea to a real action, by which the defendant denies that he committed any wrong. It is a species of general issue.

NUL WASTE. The general issue in an action of waste. Co. 3d Inst. 700 a, 708 a. The plea of nul waste admits nothing, but puts the whole declaration in issue; and in support of this plea the defendant may give in evidence anything which proves that the act charged is no waste, as that it happened by tempest, lightning, and the like; Co. Litt. 283 a; 3 Wms. Saund. 238, n. 5.

NULL. Properly, that which does not exist; that which is not in the nature of things. In a figurative sense it signifies that which has no more effect than if it did not exist. 8 Toullier, n. 320.

NULLA BONA (L. Lat. no goods). The return made to a writ of feri facias by the sheriff, when he has not found any goods of the defendant on which he could levy.

NULLITY. An act or proceeding which has absolutely no legal effect whatever. See Chitty, Contr., 12th ed. 671.

NULLITY OF MARRIAGE. The requisites of a valid and binding marriage have been considered in the article on that subject. If any of these requisites are wanting in a given case, the marriage is either absolutely void, or voidable at the election of one or both of the parties. The more usual imperfections which thus render a marriage void or voidable are: 1. Unsoundness of mind in either of the parties. 2. Want of age, i. e. fourteen in males and twelve in females. 3. Fraud or error; but these must relate to the essentials of the relation, as personal identity, and not merely to the accidentals, as character, condition, or fortune. 4. Duress. 5. Physical impotence, which must exist at the time of the marriage and be incurable. 6. Consanguinity or affinity within the prohibited degrees. 7. A prior subsisting marriage of either of the parties. The fifth and sixth are termed canonical, the remainder, civil, impediments.

The distinction between the two is important,—the latter rendering the marriage absolutely void, while the former only renders it voidable. In the one case, it is not necessary (though it is certainly advisable) to bring a suit to have nullity of the marriage ascertained and declared: it may be treated by the parties as no marriage, and will be so regarded in all judicial proceedings. In the other case, the marriage will be treated as valid and binding until its nullity is ascertained and declared by a competent court in a suit instituted for that purpose; and this must be done during the lifetime of both parties: if it is deferred until the death of either, the marriage will always remain good. But the effect of such sentence of nullity, when obtained, is to render the marriage null and void from the beginning, as in the case of civil impediments.

For the origin and history of this distinction between void and voidable marriages, see 1 Bish. Mar. Div. & Sep. § 252.

A suit for nullity is usually prosecuted in the same court, and is governed by substantially the same principles, as a suit for divorce; 2 Bish. Mar. Div. & Sep. § 39.

In its consequences, a sentence of nullity differs materially from a divorce. The latter assumes the original validity of the marriage, and its operation is entirely prospective. The former renders the marriage void from the beginning, and nullifies all its legal results. The parties are to be regarded legally as if no marriage had ever taken place: they are single persons, if before they were single; their issue are illegitimate; and their rights of property as between themselves are to be viewed as having never been operated upon by the marriage. Thus, the man loses all right to the property, whether real or personal, which belongs to the woman; and the woman loses her right to dower; 2 Bish. Mar. Div. & Sep. §§ 907, 1597.

A woman domiciled in England at the time of her marriage with a foreigner may,—after he has debarred her from claiming any relief in the courts of his (foreign) domicile by obtaining there a decree of nullity,—petition the court of her own domicile to which she has reverted and obtain a decree there dissolving her marriage; [1913] P. 46.

The jurisdiction where the ceremony was performed creates the marriage and alone can annul it; Cummington v. Belchertown, 149 Mass. 223, 21 N. E. 435, 4 L. R. A. 131; [1908] P. 46. Entire absence of cohabitation or incapacity to consummate marriage is ground for nullity; [1905] P. 231.

Where a woman of 56 married a man of 69 and lost her pension by the marriage, a decree of nullity on the ground of his physical incapacity was refused; the court saying that as she had lost her pension by gaining a husband, she could not exchange again; Hatch v. Hatch, 58 Misc. 54, 110 N. Y. Supp. 18.

As to venereal diseases in the law of marriage and divorce, see 37 Am. L. Rev. 226.

A woman, upon a sentence of nullity, is not entitled to permanent alimony; though the better opinion is that she is entitled to alimony pendente lite; 2 Bish. Mar. Div. & Sep. §§ 907, 1597.

See ALIMONY; MARRIAGE; DIVORCE; Burge, Col. Law. Renton & Phillimore's ed.

NULLIUS FILIUS (Lat.). The son of no one; a bastard.

A bastard is considered nullius filius as far as regards his right to inherit. But the rule of nullius filius does not apply in other respects, and has been changed by statute in most states so as to make him the child of his mother, in respect of inheritance.

The mother of a bastard, during its age of nurture, is entitled to the custody of her child, and is bound to maintain it; Com. v. Fee, 6 S. & R. (Pa.) 255; People v. Landt, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 375; Wright v. Wright, 2 Mass. 109; 4 B. & P. 148. But see 5 East 224, n.

The putative father, too, is entitled to the custody of the child as against all but the mother; Com. v. Anderson, 1 Ashm. (Pa.) 55. And it seems that the putative father may maintain an action, as if his child were legitimate, for marrying him without his consent, contrary to law; Macklin v. Taylor, Add. (Pa.) 212. See BASTARD; CHILD; FATHER; MOTHER; PUTATIVE FATHER.

NULLUM ARBITRIUM (Lat.). In Pleading. The name of a plea to an action on an arbitration bond for not fulfilling the award, by which the defendant asserts that there is no award.

NULLUM FECERUNT ARBITRIUM (Lat.). In Pleading. The name of a plea to an action of debt upon an obligation for the performance of an award, by which the defendant denies that he submitted to arbitration, etc. Bac. Abr. Arbitr. etc. (G).

NULLUM TEMPUS ACT. The statute 3 Geo. III. c. 16. See 32 Geo. III. c. 58, and 7 Will. IV, c. 3. It was so called because the right of the crown to sue, etc., was limited by it to sixty years, in contradiction to the maxim, Nullum tempus occurrit regi. 3 Chitty, Stat. 63.

NULLUM TEMPUS OCCURRIT REGI. See LIMITATIONS.

NUMBER. A collection of units.

In pleading, numbers must be stated truly when alleged in the recital of a record, written instrument, or express contract; 4 Term 314; Cro. Car. 262; 2 W. Bla. 1104. But in other cases it is not, in general, requisite that they should be truly stated; because they are not required to be strictly proved. If, for example, in an action of trespass the plaintiff proves the wrongful taking away of any part of the goods duly described in his declaration, he is entitled to recover pro tanto; Bac. Abr. Trespass (I 2); Lawes, Pl. 48.

And sometimes, when the subject to be described is supposed to comprehend a multiplicity of particulars, a general description is sufficient. A declaration in trover alleging the conversion of "a library of books," without stating their number, titles, or quality, was held to be sufficiently certain; 3 Bulstr. 31; Carth. 110; Bac. Abr. Trover (F 1); and in an action for the loss of goods by burning the plaintiff's house, the articles may be described by the simple denomination of "goods" or "divers goods"; 1 Kebl. 825; Plowd. 85, 118, 123; Cro. Eliz. 837; 1 H. Bla. 284. The singular number may be included within the plural; State v. Nichols, 83 Ind. 228, 43 Am. Rep. 66; Carpenter v. Lippitt, 77 Mo. 246; Bish. Stat. Crimes § 213.

NUMERATA PECUNIA (Lat.). In Civil Law. Money counted or paid; money given in payment by count. See PECUNIA NUMERATA and PECUNIA NON-NUMERATA; L. 3, 10, C. de non numerat. pecun.

NUNC PRO TUNC (Lat. now for then). A phrase used to express that a thing is done at one time which ought to have been performed at another.

A nunc pro tunc entry is an entry made now, of something which was actually previously done, to have effect as of the former date. Its office is not to supply omitted action by the court, but to supply an omission in the record of action really had, but omitted through inadvertence or mistake. Perkins v. Hayward, 132 Ind. 95, 31 N. E. 670.

Leave of court must be obtained to act in legal proceedings nunc pro tunc; and this is granted to answer the purposes of justice, but never to do injustice. A judgment nunc pro tunc can be entered only when the delay has arisen from the act of the court; 3 C. B. 970. See 1 V. & B. 312; 1 Moll. 462; 13 Price 604; Brooks v. Brooks, 52 Kan. 562, 35 Pac. 215. But perhaps this rule is not always strictly enforced. Entering a decree nunc pro tunc, and thereby restricting the time for appeal, is not prejudicial error, where the defeated party succeeds in perfecting his appeal; Monson v. Kill, 144 Ill. 248, 33 N. E. 43; Monson v. Jacques, 144 Ill. 651, 33 N. E. 757.

A decree nunc pro tunc presupposes a decree allowed or ordered, but not entered through inadvertence of the court; or a decree under advisement when the death of a party occurs; Cuebas y Arredondo v. Cuebas y Arredondo, 223 U. S. 376, 32 Sup. Ct. 277, 56 L. Ed. 476.

A plea puis darrein continuance may be entered nunc pro tunc after an intervening continuation, in some cases; Rangely v. Webster, 11 N. H. 299; and lost pleadings may be replaced by new pleadings made nunc pro tunc; Chambers v. Astor, 1 Mo. 327. See

The Bayonne, 159 U. S. 687, 16 Sup. Ct. 185, 40 L. Ed. 306.

NUNCIATIO. In Civil Law. A formal proclamation or protest. It may be by acts (realis) or by words. Mackeldey, Civ. Law § 237. Thus, nunciatio novi operis was an injunction which one man could place on the erection of a new building, etc., near him, until the case was tried by the prætor. Id.; Calv. Lex. An information against a criminal. Calv. Lex.

NUNCIO. The name given to the pope's ambassador. Nuncios are ordinary or extraordinary; the former are sent upon usual missions, the latter upon special occasions.

NUNCIUS. In International Law. A messenger; a minister; the pope's legate, commonly called a nuncio. See LEGATE.

NUNCUPATIVE WILL. An oral will, declared by a testator in extremis, or under circumstances considered equivalent thereto, before witnesses, and afterwards reduced to writing. 4 Kent 576; 2 Bla. Com. 500; 1 Jarm. Wills, 6th Am. ed. *78.

When a man lieth languishing for fear of sudden death, dareth not stay the writing of his testament, and therefore he prayeth his curate and others to bear witness of his last will, and declareth by word what his last will is. Perk. Conv. § 476; Bac. Abr. 305; Male's Case, 49 N. J. Eq. 266, 24 Atl. 370.

In early times this kind of will was very common, and before the statute of frauds, by which it was virtually abolished, save in the case of soldiers and sailors, was of equal efficacy, except for lands, tenements, and hereditaments, with a written testament. Such wills are subject to manifest abuses and by stat. 1 Vict. c. 26, §§ 9, 11 (preceded by 1 Will. IV. c. 20), the privilege is confined to soldiers in actual service, and sailors at sea, and extends only to personal estate. Similar provisions have been enacted in Massachusetts, Minnesota, New York, Rhode Island, Virginia, West Virginia, and Montana. In Georgia, the statute embraces both real and personal property. In California and the Dakotas, the decedent must have been in actual military service, or at sea, and in immediate fear of death. In the other states, nuncupative wills by persons in extremis are still recognized, subject to restrictions as to amount of property bequeathed, similar to those of the English statute of frauds.

Statutes relating to nuncupative wills are strictly construed; 2 Phillim. 194; Morgan v. Stevens, 78 Ill. 287; Appeal of Taylor, 47 Pa. 31; Lucas v. Goff, 33 Miss. 629. The testator must be in extremis, overtaken by violent sickness, in contemplation of death, and without time to make a written will; 1 Addams 389; Prince v. Hazleton, 20 Johns.

(N. Y.) 502, 11 Am. Dec. 307; Werkheiser v. Werkheiser, 6 W. & S. (Pa.) 184; Scaife v. Emmons, 84 Ga. 619, 10 S. E. 1097, 20 Am. St. Rep. 383; but see Johnston v. Glasscock, 2 Ala. 242; Harrington v. Stees, 82 Ill. 50, 25 Am. Rep. 290; the deceased must have clearly intimated by word or sign to those present that he intended to make the will; Dockum v. Robinson, 26 N. H. 372; Babinéau's Heirs v. Le Blanc, 14 La. Ann. 729; Biddle v. Biddle, 36 Md. 630; Morgan v. Stevens, 78 Ill. 287; Mulligan v. Leonard, 46 Ia. 694; Smith v. Smith, 63 N. C. 637; testamentary capacity must be most clearly proved; Dorsey v. Sheppard, 12 Gill. & J. 192, 37 Am. Dec. 77; Morgan v. Stevens, 78 Ill. 287. In "actual military service," is held to mean during warfare, and while on an expedition; 3 Curt. 531; Leathers v. Greenacre, 53 Me. 561; but this rule has been somewhat freely treated; Gould v. Safford's Estate, 39 Vt. 498. Sailors must be servant on shipboard; 2 Curt. 339; Warren v. Harding, 2 R. I. 133. The term mariner applies to every one in the naval or mercantile service; Ex parte Thompson, 4 Bradf. (N. Y.) 154. See note to Sykes v. Sykes, 20 Am. Dec. 44; Male's Case, 49 N. J. Eq. 266, 24 Atl. 370. See MILITARY TESTAMENT.

NUNDINÆ (Law Lat.). In Civil and Old English Law. Fair or fairs. Dion. Halicarnass. lib. 2, p. 98; Law Fr. & Lat. Dict. Hence Nundination, traffic at fairs.

NUNQUAM INDEBITATUS (Lat. never indebted). In Pleading. A plea to an action of indebitatus assumpsit, by which the defendant asserts that he is not indebted to the plaintiff. McKelv. Pl. 31; 6 C. & P. 545; 1 M. & W. 542; 1 Q. B. 77.

In England, this plea has been substituted for nil debet, q. v., as the general issue in debt on a simple contract.

NUNTIUS, NUNCIUS. In Old English Practice. One who made excuse for absence of one summoned. An apparitor, beadle, or sergeant. Cowell. A messenger or legate: e. g. pope's nuncio. Jacob, L. Dict. Essonator was sometimes wrongly used for nuntius in the first sense. Bracton, fol. 345, § 2.

NUPER OBIT (Lat. he or she lately died). In Practice. The name of a writ which in the English law lay for a sister coheirress dispossessed by her coparcener of lands and tenements whereof their father, brother, or any common ancestor died seized of an estate in fee-simple. Fitzh. N. B. 197. Abolished in 1833.

NURSE. Statutes have been passed in many states providing for the regulation and registration of trained nurses. See also HOSPITAL; CHARITABLE USES.

NURSERY. On a sale of peach trees by a nurseryman which turned out to be the wrong variety, it was held, reversing the court below, that the real intent of a guarantee in the case of fruit trees, though not stated, is that the tree will produce a certain variety of fruit, and this cannot be determined until the tree begins bearing. Supreme Court of Washington (newspaper of February, 1914). See MEASURE OF DAMAGES.

NURTURE. The act of taking care of children and educating them. See CHILD.

NURUS (Lat.). A daughter-in-law. Dig. 50. 16. 50.

O. K. These letters, followed by the signature of the person writing them, written on an order for goods, held sufficient contract to pay for them; Penn Tobacco Co. v. Leman, 109 Ga. 428, 34 S. E. 679. Mere "O. K." indorsements on bills by architects are sufficient compliance with provisions of contract for payments on their written certificates; Getchell & M. L. Co. v. Peterson, 124 Ia. 599, 100 N. W. 550. A stipulation waiving a jury filed in court, signed by counsel after the characters O. K., is an agreement; Citizens' Bank of Wichita v. Farwell, 56 Fed. 571, 6 C. C. A. 24.

O. NI. In the exchequer, when the sheriff made up his account for issues, amercia-ments, etc., he marked upon each head O. NI., which denoted oneratur, nisi habeat sufficientem exonerationem, and presently he became the king's debtor, and a debt was set upon his head; whereupon the parties paravaile became debtors to the sheriff, and were discharged against the king, etc.; 4 Inst. 116. But sheriffs now account to the commissioners for auditing the public accounts; Whart. Lex.

OATH. An outward pledge given by the person taking it that his attestation or promise is made under an immediate sense of his responsibility to God. Tyler, Oaths 15.

The term has been variously defined: as, "a solemn invocation of the vengeance of the Deity upon the witness if he do not declare the whole truth, so far as he knows it;" 1 Stark. Ev. 22; or, "a religious asseveration by which a person renounces the mercy and imprecates the vengeance of Heaven if he do not speak the truth;" 2 Leach 482; or, as "a religious act by which the party invokes God not only to witness the truth and sincerity of his promise, but also to avenge his imposture or violated faith, or, in other words, to punish his perjury if he shall be guilty of it;" 10 Toullier, n. 343; Puffendorff, b. 4, c. 2, § 4. The essential idea of an oath would seem to be, however, that of a recognition of God's authority by the party taking it, and an undertaking to accomplish the transaction to which it refers as required by his laws.

In its broadest sense, the term is used to include all forms of attestation by which a party signifies that he is bound in conscience to perform the act faithfully and truly. In a more restricted sense, it excludes all those forms of attestation or promise which are not accompanied by an imprecation.

Assertory oaths are those required by law other than in judicial proceedings and upon induction to office: such, for example, as custom-house oaths.

Extra-judicial oaths are those taken without authority of law. Though binding in foro conscientiae, they do not, when false, render the party liable to punishment for perjury.

Judicial oaths are those administered in judicial proceedings.

Promissory or official oaths are oaths taken, by authority of law, by which the party declares that he will fulfil certain duties therein mentioned: as, the oath which an alien takes, on becoming naturalized, that he will support the constitution of the United States: the oath which a judge takes that he will perform the duties of his office. The breach of this does not involve the party in the legal crime or punishment of perjury; State v. Dayton, 23 N. J. L. 49, 53 Am. Dec. 270. Where an appointee neglects to take an oath of office when required by statute to do so, he cannot be considered qualified, nor justify his doings as an officer; Johnston v. Wilson, 2 N. H. 202, 9 Am. Dec. 50.

Qualified oaths are circumstantial oaths. Rap. & L. Dict.

The form of administering the oath may be varied to conform to the religious belief of the individual, so as to make it binding upon his conscience; 4 Bla. Com. 43; 1 Whart. Ev. §§ 386-8; Com. v. Buzzell, 16 Pick. (Mass.) 154; McKinney v. People, 2 Gilman (Ill.) 540, 43 Am. Dec. 65; 7 Ill. Ry. & M. 77. The most common form is upon the gospel, by taking the book in the hand: the words commonly used are, "You do swear that," etc., "so help you God," and then kissing the book; 9 C. & P. 137. The oath was in common use long prior to the Christian era; Willes 545, 1744; the oath and Christianity became associated during the reign of Henry VIII. in England; 3 Robertson's Charles V. 257. The origin of this oath may be traced to the Roman law; Nov. 8, tit. 3; Nov. 74, cap. 5; Nov. 124, cap. 1. In ancient times a Bible containing the Gospels was placed upon a stand in view of the prisoner. The jurors placed their hands upon the book, and then the accused had a full view of "the peer" who was to try him. This was called the "corporal oath" because the hand of the person sworn touched the book. Probably, out of reverence, the book may have been kissed sometimes, as a Catholic priest now kisses it in a mass; but it is doubtful if kissing the book was ever essential to the validity of the "corporal oath"; 22 Law Mag. & Rev. 59.

The terms "corporal oath" and "solemn oath" are synonymous, and an oath taken with the uplifted hand is properly described by either term in an indictment for perjury; Jackson v. State, 1 Ind. 184. In New England, New York, and in Scotland the gospels are not generally used, but the party taking the oath holds up his right hand and repeats the words here given; 1 Leach 412, 498.

Kissing the book has been abolished by statute (1895) in Pennsylvania.

Where a justice asks affiant if he swears to the affidavit, and he replies that he does, the oath is sufficient though he does not hold up his hands and swear; Dunlap v. Clay, 65 Miss. 454, 4 South. 118.

Another form is by the witness or party promising holding up his right hand while the officer repeats to him, "You do swear by Almighty God, the searcher of hearts, that," etc., "and this as you shall answer to God at the great day."

In another form of attestation, commonly called an affirmation (q. v.), the officer repeats, "You do solemnly, sincerely, and truly declare and affirm that;" which is the form prescribed in England by 8 Geo. I. ch. 6.

A general oath that the evidence "shall be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth," etc., is all that is necessary for a witness who testifies to the signing of an instrument in his presence, and translates the language of such instrument for the benefit of the jury; Krewson v. Purdom, 13 Or. 563, 11 Pac. 281.

A Jew is sworn on the Pentateuch, or Old Testament, with his head covered; Stra. 821, 1113; a Mohammedan, on the Koran; 1 Leach 54; a Gentoo, by touching with his hand the foot of a Brahmin or priest of his religion; a Brahmin, by touching the hand of another such priest; Wils. 549; 1 Atk. 21; a Chinaman, by breaking a china saucer; 1 C. & M. 248. See State v. Chyo Chiagk, 92 Mo. 395, 4 S. W. 704.

After a witness has taken the oath according to the custom and religion of his country, it is not error to require him to take the statutory oath; State v. Gin Pon, 16 Wash. 425, 47 Pac. 961.

The requirement of an "oath" as used in any act or resolution of congress shall be deemed complied with by making affirmation in the judicial form; U. S. R. S. § 1.

The form and time of administering oaths, as well as the person authorized to administer, are usually fixed by statute. See Herman v. Herman, 4 Wash. C. C. 555, Fed. Cas. No. 6,407; U. S. v. Bailey, 9 Pet. (U. S.) 238, 9 L. Ed. 113; Oaks v. Rodgers, 48 Cal. 197; Arnold v. Middletown, 41 Conn. 206. The administering of unlawful oaths is an offence against the government; Whart. Lex.

By the Promissory Oaths Act (31 & 32 Vict. c. 72) a number of unnecessary oaths have been abolished, and declarations substituted. The same act provides a new form of the oath of allegiance, and forms of a judicial oath and an official oath to be taken by particular officers. See also Promissory Oaths Act of 1871.

In Arkansas, California, Florida, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Michigan, Minnesota, Nebraska, Nevada, New York, Ohio, Oregon, and Wisconsin there are constitutional provisions intended to exclude any religious test for the competency of witnesses.

The Bible is not an indispensable requisite in the administration of an oath; People v. Cook, 8 N. Y. 67, 59 Am. Dec. 451.

See KISSING THE BOOK.

OATH AGAINST BRIBERY. One which could have been administered to a voter at an election for members of parliament. Abolished in 1854. Whart. Lex.

OATH OF CALUMNY. In Civil Law. An oath which a plaintiff was obliged to take that he was not actuated by a spirit of chicanery in commencing his action, but that he had bona fide a good cause of action. Pothier, Pand. lib. 5, tt. 16, 17, s. 124. This oath is somewhat similar to our affidavit of a cause of action. See Dunl. Adm. Pr. 289, 290; JURAMENTUM CALUMNIÆ.

OATH DECISORY. In Civil Law. An oath which one of the parties defers or refers back to the other for the decision of the cause.

It may be deferred in any kind of civil contest whatever, in questions of possession or of claim, in personal actions, and in real. The plaintiff may defer the oath to the defendant whenever he conceives he has not sufficient proof of the fact which is the foundation of his claim; and in like manner the defendant may defer it to the plaintiff when he has not sufficient proof of his defence. The person to whom the oath is deferred ought either to take it or refer it back; and if he will not do either, the cause should be decided against him. Pothier, Obl. pt. 4, c. 3, s. 4.

The decisory oath has been practically adopted in the district court of the United States for the district of Massachusetts; and admiralty causes have been determined in that court by the oath decisory. But the cases in which this oath has been adopted have been where the tender has been accepted; and no case is known to have occurred there in which the oath has been refused and tendered back to the adversary. Dunl. Adm. Pr. 290.

It was familiar to the Roman tribunals, and could be administered by the court to either party for the satisfaction of his conscience, when in doubt. 3 Greenl. Ev., Lewis ed. § 412.

OATH EX OFFICIO. The oath by which a clergyman charged with a criminal offence was formerly allowed to swear himself to be innocent; also the oath by which the compurgators swore that they believed in his innocence. 3 Bla. Com. 101, 447; Moz. & W.

OATH IN LITEM. An oath which in the civil law was deferred to the complainant as to the value of the thing in dispute, on failure of other proof, particularly when there was a fraud on the part of the defendant and he suppressed proof in his possession. See Greenl. Ev. § 348; 1 Eq. Cas. Abr. 229; Herman v. Drinkwater, 1 Greenl. (Me.) 27; Sneider v. Geiss, 1 Yeates (Pa.) 34.

In general, the oath of the party cannot, by the common law, be received to establish his claim, but is admitted in two classes of cases: first, where it has been already proved that the party against whom it is offered has been guilty of some fraud or other tortious or unwarrantable act of intermeddling with the complainant's goods, and no other evidence can be had of the amount of damages. See Smiley v. Dewey, 17 Ohio, 156; as, for example, where a trunk of goods was delivered to a shipmaster at one port to be carried to another, and on the passage he broke the trunk open and rifled it of its contents, in an action by the owners of the goods against the shipmaster, the facts above mentioned having been proved aliunde, the plaintiff was held a competent witness to testify as to the contents of the trunk; Herman v. Drinkwater, 1 Greenl. (Me.) 27. And see Clark v. Spence, 10 Watts (Pa.) 335; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 348. Second, the oath in litem is also admitted on the ground of public policy where it is deemed essential to the purposes of justice; Tayloe v. Riggs, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 596, 7 L. Ed. 275; 6 Mood. 137. But this oath is admitted only on the ground of necessity. An example may be mentioned of a case where a statute can receive no execution unless the party interested be admitted as a witness; U. S. v. Murphy, 16 Pet. (U. S.) 203, 10 L. Ed. 937. Parties in interest are now everywhere, and in most cases, permitted to testify.

OATH PURGATORY. An oath by which one destroys the presumptions which were against him, for he is then said to purge himself, when he removes the suspicions which were against him: as, when a man is in contempt for not attending court as a witness, he may purge himself of the contempt, by swearing to a fact which is an ample excuse. See PURGATION.

OATH SUPPLETORY. In Civil and Ecclesiastical Law. An oath required by the judge from either party in a cause, upon half-proof already made, which being joined to half-proof, supplies the evidence required to enable the judge to pass upon the subject. See 3 Bla. Com. 270.

OBEDIENCE. The performance of a command.

Officers who obey the command of their superiors, having jurisdiction of the subject-matter, are not responsible for their acts. A sheriff may, therefore, justify a trespass under an execution, when the court has jurisdiction, although irregularly issued; 3 Chitty, Pr. 75; Hamm. N. P. 48.

A child, an apprentice, a pupil, a mariner, and a soldier owe respectively obedience to the lawful commands of the parent, the master, the teacher, the captain of the ship, and the military officer having command; and in case of disobedience submission may be enforced by correction. See ASSAULT; CORRECTION.

OBEDIENTARIUS. A monastic officer. Du Cange. See 1 Poll. & Maitl. 417.

OBEDIENTIAL OBLIGATION. See OBLIGATION.

OBIT. That particular solemnity or office for the dead which the Roman Catholic church appoints to be read or performed over the body of a deceased member of that communion before interment; also, the office which upon the anniversary of his death was frequently used as a commemoration or observance of the day. Dy. 313.

OBITER DICTUM. See DICTUM.

OBJECT. That which is perceived, known, thought of, or signified; that toward which a cognitive act is directed. Cent. Dict. The term includes whatever may be presented to the mind as well as to the senses; whatever also is acted upon or operated upon affirmatively or intentionally influenced by anything done, moved, or applied thereto; Wells v. Shook, 8 Blatchf. 257, Fed. Cas. No. 17,406; it may be used as having the sense of effect; Harland v. Territory, 3 Wash. T. 131, 13 Pac. 453; and for all practical purposes the words subject and object are synonymous; id. But the subject of action cannot be the object of action; the latter is the remedy demanded, the relief prayed for, and is no part of the subject of action or the causes of action; Scarborough v. Smith, 18 Kan. 406.

OBJECTION. Where evidence is objected to at the trial, the nature of the objections must be distinctly stated, whether an exception be entered on the record or not, and, on either moving for a new trial on account of its improper admission, or on arguing the exception, the counsel will not be permitted to rely on any other objections than those taken at nisi prius; 3 Tayl. Ev., Chamb. ed. § 1881 d; objections must state the specific ground; Carroll v. Benicia, 40 Cal. 390; Forbing v. Weber, 99 Ind. 588; Massenberg v. Denison, 107 Fed. 18, 46 C. C. A. 120; and counsel cannot change his ground on the argument in the appellate court; Tooley v. Bacon, 70 N. Y. 34; general objections, such as irrelevant, incompetent, and the like, are said to be too general in their terms; Peck v. Chouteau, 91 Mo. 138, 3 S. W. 577, 60 Am. Rep. 236; Bundy v. Hyde, 50 N. H. 121; the general objection that evidence is incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial is sufficient when the reason for the objection is readily discernible. But where the ground for the objection is not suggested thereby, it will not avail; Sparks v. Oklahoma, 146 Fed. 371, 76 C. C. A. 594; evidence to which such objections are made will be held in the appellate court to have been properly admitted, if admissible for any purpose; Voorman v. Voight, 46 Cal. 397; one who has not objected to evidence when introduced is not entitled to have the court instruct the jury to disregard it; Maxwell v. R. Co., 85 Mo. 106; nor will an objection be heard if made for the first time on the motion for a new trial; Harvey v. State, 40 Ind. 516; or in the appellate court; Clark v. Fredericks, 105 U. S. 4, 26 L. Ed. 938.

When testimony was received without objection, the court should not sign a bill of exceptions; if it does, it will be disregarded above; Duvall's Ex'r v. Darby, 38 Pa. 56; the court may refuse to strike out the answer to a question asked a witness where no objection was made to it when it was asked; Bailey v. Warner, 118 Fed. 395, 55 C. C. A. 329.

Ordinarily, where an objection has been made and overruled, it is not necessary to repeat it to each succeeding question open to the same objection; Thomp. Trials § 705.

Objecting to a judge's instruction is said to be regarded as having the same force as excepting; Elsner v. K. & L. of Honor, 98 Mo. 640, 11 S. W. 991. See BILL OF EXCEPTIONS.

Where objections have been twice presented and regularly allowed, it is not necessary that they should be renewed at the termination of the testimony of a witness; Bram v. U. S., 168 U. S. 532, 18 Sup. Ct. 183, 42 L. Ed. 568.

OBJECTS OF A POWER. The persons who are intended to be benefited by the distribution of property settled subject to a power.

OBJURGATRICES. Scolds or unquiet women punished with the cucking stool (q. v.).

OBLATE ROLLS. Chancery Rolls (1199-1641), called also Fine Rolls, containing records of payments to the king by way of oblate or fine for the grant of privileges, or by way of amercement for breach of duty. 2 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 141.

OBLATIO (Lat.). In Civil Law. A tender of money in payment of debt made by debtor to creditor. L. 9, C. de solut. Whatever is offered to the church by the pious. Calv. Lex.; Vicat, Voc. Jur.

OBLATION. In Ecclesiastical Law. Offerings; obventions. See OVENTIONS.

OBLIGATIO. In Roman Law. A legal bond which obliges us to the performance of something in accordance with the law of the land. Ortolan, Inst. 2, § 1179.

It corresponded nearly to our word contract. Justinian says, "Obligatio est juris vinculum quo necessitate adstringimur alicujus solvendæ rei, secundum nostræ civitatis jura." Pr. J. 3. 13.

The Romans considered that obligations derived their validity solely from positive law. At first the only ones recognized were those established in special cases in accordance with the forms prescribed by the strict jus civilis. In the course of time, however, the prætorian jurisdiction, in mitigation of the primitive rigor of the law, introduced new modes of contracting obligations and provided the means of enforcing them: hence the twofold division made by Justinian of obligationes civiles and obligationes prætoriæ. Inst. 1. 3. 13. But there was a third class, the obligationes naturales, which derived their validity from the law of nature and nations, or the natural reason of mankind. These had not the binding force of the other classes, not being capable of enforcement by action, and are, therefore, not noticed by Justinian in his classification; but they had, nevertheless, a certain efficacy even in the civil law: for instance, though a debt founded upon a natural obligation could not be recovered by an action, yet if it was voluntarily paid by the debtor he could not recover it back, as he might do in the case of money paid by mistake, etc., where no natural obligation existed. L. 38, pr. D. 12. 6. And see Ortolan 2, § 1180.

The second classification of obligations made by Justinian has regard to the way in which they arise. They were, in this aspect, either ex contractu or quasi ex contractu, or ex maleficio or quasi ex maleficio; Inst. 2. 3. 13. These will be discussed separately.

Obligationes ex contractu, those founded upon an express contract, are again subdivided into four classes, with reference to the mode in which they are contracted. The contract might be entered into re, verbis, litteris, or consensu.

A contract was entered into re by the actual transfer of a thing from one party to the other. Though in such cases the understanding of the parties as to the object of the transfer, and the conditions accompanying it, formed an essential part of the contract, yet it was only by the actual delivery of the thing that the contract was generated. The only contracts which could be entered into in this way were those known to our law as bailments,—a term derived from the French word bailler, to deliver, and evidently pointing to the same characteristic feature in the translation which the Romans indicated by the word re. These were the mutuum, or loan of a thing to be consumed in the using and to be returned in kind, the commodatum, or gratuitous loan of a thing to be used and returned, the depositum, or delivery of a thing to be kept in safety for the benefit of the depositor, and the pignus, or delivery of a thing in pledge to a creditor, as security for his debt. See MUTUUM; COMMODATUM; DEPOSITUM; PIGNUS; Ortolan, Inst. § 1208; Mackeldey, Röm. Recht § 396. Besides the above named contractus reales, a large class of contracts which had no special names, and were thence called contractus innominati, were included under this head, from the fact that they, like the former, gave rise to the actio præscriptis verbis. Some of these were the contracts of exchange, of mutual compromise, of doubtful or contested claims (somewhat resembling our accord and satisfaction), of factorship, etc. See Mackeldey § 409.

Contracts were entered into verbis, by a formal interrogation by one party and response by the other. The interrogation was called stipulatio, and the party making it, reus stipulandi. The response was called promissio, and the respondent, reus promittendi. The contract itself, consisting of the interrogation and response, was often called stipulatio. In the time of the earlier jurists, the stipulation could only be entered into by the use of certain formulary words by the parties: as, for instance, Spondes? do you promise? Spondeo, I promise; Dabis? will you give? Dabo, I will give; Facies? will you do this? Faciam, I will do it, etc., etc. But by a constitution of the emperor Leo, A. D. 469, the obligation to use these particular words was done away, and any words which expressed the meaning of the parties were allowed to create a valid stipulation, and any language understood by the parties might be used with as much effect as Latin. Such contracts were called verbis, because their validity depended entirely upon the use of the words. The mere agreement of the parties without using the question and response could not beget a stipulation; and, on the other hand, if the question and response had been used, the obligation was created although there might be an absence of consent. In this latter case, however, equitable relief would be granted by the prætor; Ortolan, Inst. § 1250. Stipulations, and, indeed, all other forms of contracts, might be made either pure, i. e. absolutely, or in diem, i. e. to take effect at a future day, or sub conditione, i. e. conditionally. But some kinds of conditions, such as those physically impossible, were inadmissible, and invalidated the contract; while others, such as those which were absurd, were themselves invalidated, and the contract was considered as having been made absolutely. Mackeldey §§ 415-421; Ortolan, Inst. § 1235; Inst. 3. 13.

Contracts entered into litteris were obsolete in the reign of Justinian. In the earlier days of Roman jurisprudence, every citizen kept a private account-book. If a creditor, at the request of his debtor, entered in such book his charge against his debtor, such entry, in pursuance of the request, constituted not merely evidence of a contract, but the contract itself. This was the contract formed litteris, in writing. The debtor, on his part, might also make a corresponding entry of the transaction in his own book. This was in fact, expected of him, and was generally done; but it seems not to have been necessary to the validity of the contract. The entry was made in the form of a fictitious payment; it was allowable only in pecuniary transactions; it must be simple and unconditional, and could not be made to take effect at a future day. The charge might be made against the original debtor, a re in personam, or against a third person who agreed to take his place, a persona in personam. This species of literal contract was called nomina, nomina transcriptitia or acceptilatio et expensilatio. Ortolan, Inst. § 1414. This species of contract seems never to have been of great importance; they had disappeared entirely before the time of Justinian; Hadley, Rom. Law 216.

There were two other literal contracts known to the early jurisprudence, called syngraphia and chirographia; but these even in the times of Gaius had become so nearly obsolete that very little is known about them. All these, it must be borne in mind, were contracts themselves, not merely evidences of a contract; and this distinguishes them from the instruments of writing in use during the latter ages of the civil law. Ortolan, Inst. § 1414; Mackeldey § 422.

Contracts were made consensu, by the mere agreement of the contracting parties. Although such agreement might be proved by a written instrument, as well as in other ways, yet the writing was only evidence of the contract, not the contract itself. This species of consensual contracts are emptio et venditio, or sale, locatio et conductio, or hiring, emphyteusis, or conveyance of land reserving a rent, societas, or partnership, and mandatum, or agency. See these words; HIRE.

Obligaciones quasi ex contractu. In the Roman law, persons who had not in fact entered into a contract were sometimes treated as if they had done so. Their legal position in such cases had considerable resemblance to that of the parties to a contract, and is called an obligatio quasi ex contractu. Such an obligation was engendered in the cases of negotiorum gestio, or unauthorized agency, of communio incidens, a sort of tenancy in common not originating in a contract, of solutio indebiti, or the payment of money to one not entitled to it, of the tutela and cura, resembling the relation of guardian and ward, of the additio hereditatis and agnitio bonorum possessionis, or the acceptance of an heirship, and many others. Some include in this class the constitutio dotis, settlement of a dower. Ortolan, Inst. § 1522; Mackelvey § 457.

Obligaciones ex maleficio or ex delicto. The terms maleficio, delictum, embraced most of the injuries which the common law denominates torts, as well as others which are now considered crimes. This class includes furtum, theft, rapina, robbery, damnum, or injury to property, whether direct or consequential, and injuria, or injury to the person or reputation. The definitions here given of damnum and injuria are not strictly accurate, but will serve to convey an idea of the distinction between them. All such acts, from the instant of their commission, rendered the perpetrator liable for damages to the party injured, and were, therefore, considered to originate an obligatio. Inst. 4. 1; Ortolan, Inst. § 1715.

Obligaciones quasi ex delicto. This class embraces all torts not coming under the denomination of delicta and not having a special form of action provided for them by law. They differed widely in character, and at common law would in some cases give rise to an action on the case, in others to an action on an implied contract. Ortolan, Inst. § 1781.

Obligaciones ex variis causarum figuris. Although Justinian confined the divisions of obligations to the four classes which have been enumerated, there are many species of obligations which cannot properly be reduced within any of these classes. Some authorities have, consequently, established a fifth class, to receive the odds and ends which belonged nowhere else, and have given to this class the above designation, borrowed from Gaius, l. 1, pr. § 1, D. 44, 7. See Mackelvey § 474. See, generally, Hadley, Rom. Law 209, etc.

OBLIGATION (from Lat. obligo, ligo, to bind). A duty.

A tie which binds us to pay or do something agreeably to the laws and customs of the country in which the obligation is made. Inst. 3, 14.

"The relation which exists between two persons of whom one has a private and peculiar right (that is not a mere public or official right, or a right incidental to ownership or a family relation) to control the other's action by calling upon him to do or forbear some particular thing." Poll. Contr. 4.

The obligation is the bond or chain with which the law joins together persons or groups of persons in consequence of certain voluntary acts. The acts which have the effect of attracting an obligation are chiefly those classed under the heads of Contract and Delict, of agreement and crime. Maine, Anc. Law 323.

A bond containing a penalty, with a condition annexed, for the payment of money, performance of covenants, or the like, and which differs from a bill, which is generally without a penalty or condition, though it may be obligatory. Co. Litt. 172.

A deed whereby a man binds himself under a penalty to do a thing. Com. Dig. Obligation (A); Taylor v. Glaser, 2 S. & R. (Pa.) 502; Denton v. Adams, 6 Vt. 40; Deming v. Bullitt, 1 Blackf. (Ind.) 241; Cantey v. Duren, Harp. (S. C.) 434; Harman v. Harman, Baldw. 129, Fed. Cas. No. 6,071. The word has a very broad and comprehensive legal signification and embraces all instruments of writing, however informal, whereby one party contracts with another for the payment of money or the delivery of specific articles. State v. Campbell, 103 N. C. 344, 9 S. E. 410; Morrison v. Lovejoy, 6 Minn. 353 (Gil. 224); Sinton v. Carter Co., 23 Fed. 535.

An absolute obligation is one which gives no alternative to the obligor, but requires fulfilment according to the engagement.

An accessory obligation is one which is dependent on the principal obligation; for example, if I sell you a house and lot of ground, the principal obligation on my part is to make you a title for it; the accessory obligation is to deliver you all the title-papers which I have relating to it, to take care of the estate till it is delivered to you, and the like.

An alternative obligation is where a person engages to do or to give several things in such a manner that the payment of one will acquit him of all.

Thus, if A agrees to give B, upon a sufficient consideration, a horse, or one hundred dollars, it is an alternative obligation. Pothier, Obl. pt. 2, c. 3, art. 6, no. 245.

In order to constitute an alternative obligation it is necessary that two or more things should be promised disjunctively; where they are promised conjunctively, there are as many obligations as the things which are enumerated; but where they are in the alternative, though they are all due, there is but one obligation, which may be discharged by the payment of any of them.

The choice of performing one of the obligations belongs to the obligor, unless it is expressly agreed that it shall belong to the creditor; Dougl. 14; 1 Ld. Raym. 279; Galloway v. Legan, 4 Mart. N. S. (La.) 167. If one of the acts is prevented by the obligee or the act of God, the obligor is discharged from both. See 2 Evans, Pothier, Obl. 52; Viner, Abr. Condition (S b); CONJUNCTIVE; DISJUNCTIVE; ELECTION.

A civil obligation is one which has a binding operation in law, and which gives to the obligee the right of enforcing it in a court of justice; in other words, it is an engagement binding on the obligor. Sturges v. Crowninshield, 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 197, 4 L. Ed. 529; Ogden v. Saunders, 12 Wheat. (U. S.) 318, 337, 6 L. Ed. 606.

Civil obligations are divided into express and implied, pure and conditional, primitive and secondary, principal and accessory, absolute and alternative, determinate and indeterminate, divisible and indivisible, single and penal, and joint and several. They are also purely personal, purely real, or mixed.

A conditional obligation is one the execution of which is suspended by a condition which has not been accomplished, and subject to which it has been contracted.

A contractual obligation is one which arises from a contract or agreement. See that title.

A determinate obligation is one which has for its object a certain thing: as, an obligation to deliver a certain horse named Bucephalus. In this case the obligation can only be discharged by delivering the identical horse.

A divisible obligation is one which, being a unit, may nevertheless be lawfully divided, with or without the consent of the parties.

It is clear that it may be divided by consent, as those who made it may modify or change it as they please. But some obligations may be divided without the consent of the obligor: as where a tenant is bound to pay two hundred dollars a year rent to his landlord, the obligation is entire; yet, if his landlord dies and leaves two sons, each will be entitled to one hundred dollars; or if the landlord sells one undivided half of the estate yielding the rent, the purchaser will be entitled to receive one hundred dollars and the seller the other hundred. See AP-PORTIONMENT.

Express or conventional obligations are those by which the obligor binds himself in express terms to perform his obligation.

Imperfect obligations are those which are not binding on us as between man and man, and for the non-performance of which we are accountable to God only: such as charity or gratitude. In this sense an obligation is a mere duty. Pothier, Obl. art. prélim. n. 1.

An implied obligation is one which arises by operation of law: as, for example, if I send you daily a loaf of bread, without any express authority, and you make use of it in your family, the law raises an obligation on your part to pay me the value of the bread.

An indeterminate obligation is one where the obligor binds himself to deliver one of a certain species: as, to deliver a horse, where the delivery of any horse will discharge the obligation.

An indivisible obligation is one which is not susceptible of division: as, for example, if I promise to pay you one hundred dollars, you cannot assign one-half of this to another, so as to give him a right of action against me for his share. See DIVISIBLE.

A joint obligation is one by which several obligors promise to the obligee to perform the obligation. When the obligation is only joint, and the obligors do not promise separately to fulfil their engagement, they must be all sued, if living, to compel the performance: or, if any be dead, the survivors must all be sued. See PARTIES.

A natural or moral obligation is one which cannot be enforced by action, but which is binding on the party who makes it in conscience and according to natural justice.

As, for instance, when the action is barred by the act of limitation, a natural obligation still subsists, although the civil obligation is extinguished; Jones v. Moore, 5 Binn. (Pa.) 573, 6 Am. Dec. 428. Although natural obligations cannot be enforced by action, they have the following effect. first, no suit will lie to recover back what has been paid or given in compliance with a natural obligation; 1 Term 285; Rosenda v. Zabriskie, 4 Rob. (La.) 493; second, a natural obligation has been held to be a sufficient consideration for a new contract; Greeves v. McAllister, 2 Binn. (Pa.) 591; Clark v. Herring, 5 id. 33; Yelv. 41 a, n. 1; Cowp. 290; 2 Bla. Com. 445; 3 Bos. & P. 249, n.; 2 East 506; 3 Taunt. 311; 5 id. 36; Mills v. Wyman, 3 Pick. (Mass.) 207; Chitty, Contr., 12th ed. 38; Hare, Contr. 264; Poll. Contr. 168; but see MORAL OBLIGATION; CONSIDERATION.

Obediential obligations. Such obligations as are incumbent on parties in consequence of the situation or relationship in which they are placed. Ersk. Prin. 60.

A penal obligation is one to which is attached a penal clause, which is to be enforced if the principal obligation be not performed. See LIQUIDATED DAMAGES.

A perfect obligation is one which gives a right to another to require us to give him something or not to do something. These obligations are either natural or moral, or they are civil.

A personal obligation is one by which the obligor binds himself to perform an act, without directly binding his property for its performance.

It also denotes an obligation in which the obligor binds himself only, not including his heirs or representatives.

A primitive obligation, which in one sense may also be called a principal obligation, is one which is contracted with a design that it should itself be the first fulfilled.

A principal obligation is one which is the most important object of the engagement of the contracting parties.

A pure or simple obligation is one which is not suspended by any condition, either because it has been contracted without condition, or, having been contracted with one, it has been fulfilled.

A real obligation is one by which real estate, and not the person, is liable to the obligee for the performance.

A familiar example will explain this. When an estate owes an easement as a right of way, it is the thing, and not the owner, who owes the easement. Another instance occurs when a person buys an estate which has been mortgaged, subject to the mortgage; he is not liable for the debt, though the estate is. In these cases the owner has an interest only because he is seized of the servient estate or the mortgaged premises, and he may discharge himself by abandoning or parting with the property. The obligation is both personal and real when the obligor has bound himself and pledged his estate for the fulfillment of the obligations.

A secondary obligation is one which is contracted and is to be performed in case the primitive cannot be. For example, if I sell you my house, I bind myself to give a title: but I find I cannot, as the title is in another: then my secondary obligation is to pay you damages for my non-performance of my obligation.

A several obligation is one by which one individual, or, if there be more, several individuals, bind themselves separately to perform the engagement. In this case each obligor may be sued separately; and if one or more be dead, their respective executors may be sued. See PARTIES.

A single obligation is one without any penalty: as where I simply promise to pay you one hundred dollars. This is called a single bill, when it is under seal.

OBLIGATION OF CONTRACTS. A state statute which authorizes the redemption of property sold upon foreclosure of a mortgage, where no right of redemption previously existed, or which extends the period of redemption beyond the time formerly allowed, cannot constitutionally apply to a sale under a mortgage executed before its passage; Barnitz v. Beverly, 163 U. S. 118, 16 Sup. Ct. 1042, 41 L. Ed. 93. The subject is treated under IMPAIRING THE OBLIGATIONS OF CONTRACTS.

OBLIGATORY PACT. In Civil Law. An informal obligatory declaration of consensus, which the Roman law refused to acknowledge. Sohm, Rom. L. 321.

OBLIGATORY RIGHTS. In the Civil Law. One class of private rights between debtors and creditors.

OBLIGEE. The persons in favor of whom some obligation is contracted, whether such obligation be to pay money or to do or not to do something. La. Code, art. 3522, no. 11.

Obligees are either several or joint. An obligee is several when the obligation is made to him alone; obligees are joint when the obligation is made to two or more; and in that event each is not a creditor for his separate share, unless the nature of the subject or the particularity of the expression in the instrument lead to a different conclusion. 2 Pothier, Obl., Evans ed. 56; Hob. 172; Cro. Jac. 251. The words obligee and payee have been held to have a technical and definite meaning under an act relative to promissory notes, bonds, etc., and apply only to notes, bonds, or bills whether given for the payment of money or for the performance of covenants and conditions, and not to mortgages; Hall v. Byrne, 1 Scam. (Ill.) 142.

OBLIGOR. The person who has engaged to perform some obligation. La. Code, art. 3522, no. 12. One who makes a bond.

Obligors are joint and several. They are joint when they agree to pay the obligation jointly: and then the survivors only are liable upon it at law, but in equity the assets of a deceased joint obligor may be reached; 1 Bro. C. C. 29; 2 Ves. 101, 371. They are several when one or more bind themselves and each of them separately to perform the obligation. In order to become an obligor, the party must actually, either himself or by his attorney, enter into the obligation and execute it as his own. If a man sign and seal a bond as his own and deliver it, he will be bound by it although his name be not mentioned in the bond; Williams v. Greers' Adm'rs, 4 Hayw. (Tenn.) 239; Stone v. Wilson, 4 McCord (S. C.) 203; Smith v. Crooker, 5 Mass. 538; Blakey v. Blakey, 2 Dana (Ky.) 463; Vanhook v. Barnett, 15 N. C. 272. When the obligor signs between the penal part and the condition, still the latter will be a part of the instrument; Reed v. Drake, 7 Wend. (N. Y.) 345; Argenbright v. Campbell, 3 Hen. & M. (Va.) 144.

The execution of a bond by the obligor, in blank, with verbal authority to fill it up, does not bind the obligor, though it is afterwards filled up, unless the bond is redelivered or acknowledged or adopted; Boyd v. Boyd, 2 N. & M'C. (S. C.) 125; U. S. v. Nelson, 2 Brock. 64, Fed. Cas. No. 15,862; Ayres v. Harness, 1 Ohio 368, 13 Am. Dec. 629; Peebles v. Mason, 13 N. C. 369; Byers v. McClanahan, 6 Gill & J. (Md.) 250. But see, contra, Wiley v. Moor, 17 S. & R. (Pa.) 438, 17 Am. Dec. 696; and see Sigfried v. Levan, 6 S. & R. (Pa.) 308, 9 Am. Dec. 427; Franklin Bk. v. Bartlet, Wright (Ohio) 742; BLANK.

All obligors in a joint bond are presumed to be principals, except such as have the word "security" opposite their names; Harper's Adm'r v. McVeigh's Adm'r, 82 Va. 751, 1 S. E. 193.

OBLITERATION. In the absence of statutory provisions to the contrary, the obliteration of part of a will, leaving it otherwise complete, with the intention by the testator to annul only what was cancelled, leaves the residue valid; Bigelow v. Gillott, 123 Mass. 102, 25 Am. Rep. 32. A line drawn through the writing is, doubtless, an obliteration, though it may leave it as legible as it was before; Appeal of Evans, 58 Pa. 244. See note to 25 Am. Rep. 35; WILLS.

OBLOQUY. Censure; reproach. Bettner v. Holt, 70 Cal. 275, 11 Pac. 713.

OBREPTION. Acquisition of escheats, etc., from a sovereign, by making false representations. Bell, Dic. Subreption; Calv. Lex.

OBROGATION. The annulling a law, in whole or in part, by passing a law contrary to it. The alteration of a law. Calv. Lex.

OBSCENE. Something which is offensive to chastity; something that is foul and filthy, and for that reason is offensive to a pure-minded person. U. S. v. Clarke, 38 Fed. 732. That which is offensive to chastity and modesty. U. S. v. Harmon, 45 Fed. 414; U. S. v. Martin, 50 id. 918. See OBSCENITY.

OBSCENITY. In Criminal Law. Such indecency as is calculated to promote the violation of the law and the general corruption of morals. It is that form of indecency which is calculated to promote the general corruption of morals. U. S. v. Males, 51 Fed. 41. In all cases an indictment for obscenity must aver exposure and offence to the community generally; mere private indecency is not indictable at common law; 2 Whart. Cr. L. § 1431.

The test is: "Whether the tendency of the matter charged as obscenity is to deprave and corrupt those whose minds are open to such immoral influences, and into whose hands a publication of this sort may fall;" L. R. 3 Q. B. 371; it is no defence that it was done with the idea of accomplishing a good purpose; id.; L. R. 7 C. P. 261; or that the matter is an accurate report of a judicial proceeding; id.

The exhibition of an obscene picture is an indictable offence at common law, although not charged to have been exhibited in public, if it be averred that the picture was exhibited to sundry persons for money; Arch. Cr. Pr. 1034; Com. v. Sharpless, 2 S. & R. (Pa.) 91, 7 Am. Dec. 632. The stat. 20 and 21 Vict. c. 83, gives summary powers for the searching of houses in which obscene books, etc., are suspected to be kept, and for the seizure and destruction of such books. By various acts of congress, the importation and circulation, through the mails or in interstate commerce, of obscene literature or articles of any kind is rendered punishable with fine or imprisonment; R. S. §§ 2491, 3893, 5389; Act of Aug. 5, 1909; Act of March 4, 1909. See Com. v. Landis, 8 Phila. (Pa.) 453; Com. v. Dejardin, 126 Mass. 46, 30 Am. Rep. 652; Fuller v. People, 92 Ill. 182; U. S. v. Males, 51 Fed. 41. R. S. § 3893, as amended by act of congress (19 Stat. L. p. 90), prohibiting the mailing of obscene papers, is not in contravention of the first amendment to the constitution providing that the freedom of the press shall not be abridged; Re Jackson, 96 U. S. 727, 24 L. Ed. 877; Harman v. U. S., 50 Fed. 921. An obscene book or paper within the act relating to nonmailable matter means one which contains immodest and indecent matter, the reading whereof would have a tendency to deprave and corrupt the minds of those in whose hands the publication might fall, and whose minds are open to such immoral influences; U. S. v. Clarke, 38 Fed. 732. Mailing a private sealed letter containing obscene matter is an offence within the statute; Andrews v. U. S., 162 U. S. 420, 16 Sup. Ct. 798, 40 L. Ed. 1023; U. S. v. Gaylord, 50 Fed. 410.

It is not essential to the commission of the offence that the defendant personally mailed the objectionable matter; Burton v. U. S., 142 Fed. 57, 73 C. C. A. 243; nor that the entire contents of a newspaper or parcel deposited in the mail be objectionable; Demolli v. U. S., 144 Fed. 363, 75 C. C. A. 365, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 424, 7 Ann. Cas. 121.

Where the necessary inference from the language used in a letter was obscene, it was held immaterial that the words used were not themselves obscene; U. S. v. Moore, 129 Fed. 159.

The character of a publication as to whether obscene or otherwise is not to be determined by the motives of the author or sender in making or sending it; U. S. v. Clarke, 38 Fed. 500. An indictment for selling an obscene book need not set out the obscene matter nor even describe the same in general terms, if it identifies the book and states that the contents are too indecent to be placed upon the record; People v. Kaufman, 14 App. Div. 305, 43 N. Y. Supp. 1046.

The fact that a woman, in whose presence obscene language is used, is herself in the habit of using such language, can in no case constitute a justification, but may mitigate the offence; Golson v. State, 86 Ala. 601, 5 South. 799.

See INDECENT EXPOSURE; LETTER.

OBSERVE. In Civil Law. To perform that which has been prescribed by some law or usage. Dig. l. 3. 32.

OBSELETE. A term applied to laws which have lost their efficacy without being repealed.

A positive statute, unrepealed, can never be repealed by non-user alone; Respublica v. County Com'rs, 4 Yeates (Pa.) 181; Wright v. Crane, 13 S. & R. (Pa.) 447. The disuse of a law is at most only presumptive evidence that society has consented to such a repeal; however this presumption may operate on an unwritten law, it cannot, in general, act upon one which remains as a legislative act on the statute-book; because no presumption can set aside a certainty. A written law may indeed become obsolete when the object to which it was intended to apply, or the occasion for which it was enacted, no longer exists; 1 P. A. Bro. App. 28; Williamson v. Racot, 1 Bay 62. "It must be a very strong case," says Tilghman, C. J., "to justify the court in deciding that an act standing on the statute-book, unrepealed, is obsolete and invalid. I will not say that such case may not exist,—where there has been a non-user for a great number of years,—where, from a change of times and manners, an ancient sleeping statute would do great mischief if suddenly brought into action,—where a long practice inconsistent with it has prevailed, and especially where from other and later statutes it might be inferred that in the apprehension of the legislature the old one was not in force." Wright v. Crane, 13 S. & R. (Pa.) 452; Rutherford, Inst. b. 2, c. 6, s. 19; Merlin, Répert. Desuetude. In Appeal of Porter, 30 Pa. 496, it was held that a statute is not repealed by non-user, but that the usage and customs of an advancing people may displace a statute which has become unfitted for modern use. It may be repealed by long non-user, especially where the current of legislation shows that it was regarded by the legislature as being no longer in force; Pearson v. Distillery, 72 Ia. 348, 34 N. W. 1; contra, Snowden v. Snowden, 1 Bland (Md.) 550. An act of Congress enacted in 1874 cannot be regarded as obsolete because recourse has not often been had to it since its passage; Costello v. Palmer, 20 App. D. C. 210. The fact that a penal statute has been on the statute books for over 40 years, and has not been applied in a particular manner, does not preclude the application and enforcement of the statute in that manner if it may properly be so applied and enforced; State v. Nease, 46 Or. 433, 80 Pac. 897.

"Neither contrary practice nor disuse can repeal the positive enactment of a statute; L. R. 3 P. C. 650, per Hatherly, L. C.; whatever be the law in Scotland; McCl. & Y. 119. In the civil law, according to Julianus, laws were abrogated through disuse; Taylor, Jurispr. 491.

OBSTA PRINCIPIIS. Withstand beginnings. It is the duty of the court to be watchful for the constitutional rights of the citizen and against any stealthy encroachments thereon. Their motto should be obsta principiis. Boyd v. U. S., 116 U. S. 635, 6 Sup. Ct. 524, 29 L. Ed. 746.

OBSTANTE. Withstanding; hindering. See NON OBSTANTE.

OBSTRUCTING A STREET. To block up; to hinder or impede. To omit, after notice, to remove an obstruction, is to wilfully obstruct a highway; 12 Q. B. D. 121; as is the leaving on the side of a highway anything calculated to frighten horses; 12 Id. 110.

See STREET NUISANCE; HIGHWAY.

OBSTRUCTING JUSTICE. The act by which one or more persons attempts to prevent, or do prevent, the execution of lawful process. It applies also to obstructing the administration of justice in any way—as by hindering witnesses from appearing.

The officer must be prevented by actual violence, or by threatened violence accompanied by the exercise of force, or by those having capacity to employ it, by which the officer is prevented from executing his writ. The officer is not required to expose his person by a personal conflict with the offender; U. S. v. Lowry, 2 Wash. C. C. 169, Fed. Cas. No. 15,636. See Crumpton v. Newman, 12 Ala. 199, 46 Am. Dec. 251; State v. Welch, 37 Wis. 196; Pierce v. State, 17 Tex. App. 232; Whart. Cr. L. § 652.

This is an offence against public justice of a very high and presumptuous nature; and more particularly so where the obstruction is of an arrest upon criminal process. A person opposing an arrest upon criminal process becomes thereby particeps criminis; that is, an accessory in felony, and a principal in high treason; 4 Bla. Com. 128; 1 Russ. Cr. 360. See U. S. v. Bachelder, 2 Gall. 15, Fed. Cas. No. 14,490; State v. Noyes, 25 Vt. 415; State v. Hailey, 2 Strobb. (S. C.) 73; State v. Henderson, 15 Mo. 486; Pettibone v. U. S., 148 U. S. 197, 13 Sup. Ct. 542, 37 L. Ed. 419.

The fact that a person whom a mayor attempts to arrest does not know that he is authorized by the charter of the city to make arrests, does not change his responsibility for acts committed in resisting arrest; State v. Williams, 36 S. C. 493, 15 S. E. 554; one who resists an officer trying to arrest him, knowing him to be such, does so at his peril; State v. Russell (Ia.) 76 N. W. 653; if a peace officer making an arrest use undue force, yet if the person resist, not in self-defence, but to escape arrest, it is an offence; State v. Dennis, 2 Marv. (Del.) 433, 43 Atl. 261; so is pointing an unloaded gun at an officer making an arrest; State v. Russell (Ia.) 76 N. W. 653; but where a person, who is not vested by law with authority to make an arrest, attempts to do so, he acts as a private citizen, and one who opposes him therein is not guilty of opposing an officer; U. S. v. Baird, 48 Fed. 554.

Witnesses may be hindered by persuasion, advice or threats; State v. Bringgold, 40 Wash. 12, 82 Pac. 132, 5 Ann. Cas. 716.

OBSTRUCTING THE MAIL. See POSTAL SERVICE.

OBSTRUCTING PUBLIC WORSHIP. See DISTURBANCE OF PUBLIC WORSHIP.

OBSTRUCTING RAILWAYS. Acts constituting the obstruction of railroad tracks a crime exist in many states, e. g. Alabama, California, Indiana, Iowa, Massachusetts, Minnesota, Mississippi, Nebraska, New Hampshire, New York, and Tennessee and in England. The motive with which it is done is not material; Clifton v. State, 73 Ala. 473; it need not appear that an obstruction maliciously placed on the track did actually hinder the trains; State v. Clemens, 38 Ia. 257. It is the intent of the act and not the natural consequences which makes a crime; 25 Alb. L. J. 419. A driver of a vehicle who refuses to turn off a street railway track, when notified, may be guilty of obstructing a railway track; Com. v. Temple, 14 Gray (Mass.) 69. In Texas it must be shown that the obstruction was such as would endanger human life; Bullion v. State, 7 Tex. App. 462. If a person's wagon accidentally becomes caught in a crossing, he is not liable on an indictment for obstructing the track, though he was negligent; 3 L. T. 665.

Permitting cars to remain for an unnecessarily long time on a highway is a nuisance; State v. R. Co., 95 N. C. 602; whether it be in bad faith or not; State v. R. Co., 120 Ind. 298, 22 N. E. 307.

See NUISANCE; RAILROAD.

OBVENTIO (Lat. obvenire, to fall in). In Civil Law. Rent or profit accruing from a thing, or from industry. It is generally used in the plural.

In Old English Law. The revenue of spiritual living, so called. Cowell. Also, in the plural, offerings. Co. 2d Inst. 661.

OBVIOUS. Apparent; evident; manifest. An obvious imitation of a patent does not mean obvious to an uneducated or unskilled eye, but obvious to a judge or jury, sitting as experts; 15 Ch. D. 181; 50 L. T. 420. See 15 Ct. Sess. Cas., 4th ser. 660.

OCCASIO. A tribute imposed by the lord on his vassals or tenants.

OCCUPANCY. The taking possession of those things corporeal which are without an owner, with an intention of appropriating them to one's own use.

Pothier defines it to be the title by which one acquires property in a thing which belongs to nobody, by taking possession of it with design of acquiring it. Tr. du Dr. de Propriété, n. 20. The Civil Code of Louisiana, art. 3375, nearly following Pothier, defines occupancy to be "a mode of acquiring property by which a thing which belongs to nobody becomes the property of the person who took possession of it with an intention of acquiring a right of ownership in it." The basis of its origin seems to be not an instinctive bias towards the institution of property, but a presumption, arising out of the long continuation of that institution, that everything should have an owner. Maine, Anc. L. 249. Occupancy is sometimes used in the sense of occupation or holding possession; indeed it has come to be very generally so used in this country in homestead laws, public-land laws, and the like; Walters v. People, 21 Ill. 178; Redfield v. R. Co., 25 Barb. (N.

Y.) 54; Act of Cong. May 29, 1830 (4 Stat. at L. 420); Weisbrod v. Daenicke, 36 Wis. 73; see Quehl v. Peterson, 47 Minn. 13, 49 N. W. 390; 12 Q. B. Div. 356; 2 id. 558; but this does not appear to be a common legal use of the term, as recognized by English authorities.

To constitute occupancy, there must be a taking of a thing corporeal, belonging to nobody, with an intention of becoming the owner of it; Co. Litt. 416.

A right by occupancy attaches in the finder of lost goods unreclaimed by the owner; in the captor of beasts feræ naturæ, so long as he retains possession; 2 Bla. Com. 403; the owner of lands by accession, and the owner of goods acquired by confusion.

It was formerly considered, also, that the captor of goods contraband of war acquired a right by occupancy; but it is now held otherwise, such goods being now held to be primarily vested in the sovereign, and as belonging to individual captors only to the extent and under such regulations as positive laws may prescribe; 2 Kent 290. See PRIZE.

OCCUPANT. One who has the actual use or possession of a thing. See Lechler v. Chapin, 12 Nev. 65.

When the occupiers of a house are entitled to a privilege in consequence of such occupation, as to pass along a way, to enjoy a pew, and the like, a person who occupies a part of such house, however small, is entitled to some right, and cannot be deprived of it; 2 B. & Ald. 164; 1 Chitty, Pr. 209; 4 Comyns, Dig. 64; 5 id. 199. See Fleming v. Maddox, 30 Ia. 242; 3 Q. B. 449.

OCCUPATIO. "The advisedly taking possession of that which is at the moment the property of no man, with a view of acquiring property in it for yourself." Maine, Anc. L. 245. The advised assumption of physical possession. Id. 256.

OCCUPATION. Use or tenure: as, the house is in the occupation of A. B. A trade, business, or mystery: as, the occupation of a printer. See Schuchardt v. People, 99 Ill. 506, 39 Am. Rep. 34.

It is synonymous with possession as commonly used, but as used in a fire insurance policy the word unoccupied, is not synonymous with vacant, but is that condition where no one has the actual use or possession of the thing or property in question; Yost v. Ins. Co., 38 Pa. Super. Ct. 594; Hardin v. Fire Ass'n, 212 Pa. 383, 61 Atl. 990.

A putting out of a man's freehold in time of war. Co. Litt. s. 412. See MILITARY OCCUPATION.

OCCUPATION TAX. See TAX.

OCCUPAVIT (Lat.). In Old Practice. The name of a writ which lies to recover the possession of lands when they have been taken from the possession of the owner by occupation. (q. v.)

OCCUPIER. One who is in the enjoyment of a thing.

A tenant, though absent, is, generally speaking, the occupier of premises; 1 B. & C. 178; but not a servant or other person who may be there virtute officii; 26 L. J. C. P. 12; 47 L. J. EX. 112; L. R. 1 Q. B. 72.

OCCUPY. To hold in possession; to hold or keep for use: as, to occupy an apartment. Missionary Society v. Dalles, 107 U. S. 343, 2 Sup. Ct. 672, 27 L. Ed. 545. In legal acceptance, actual use, possession, and cultivation. Jackson v. Sill, 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 202, 6 Am. Dec. 363; Inhabitants of Phillipsburgh v. Bruch's Ex'r, 37 N. J. Eq. 486.

OCCUR. To happen. Johnson v. Ins. Co., 91 Ill. 95, 33 Am. Rep. 47.

OCHLOCRACY. A government where the authority is in the hands of the multitude; the abuse of a democracy. Vaumène, Dict. du Langage Politique. Mob rule. See GOVERNMENT.

OCTAVE (Law Lat. utis). In Old English Practice. The eighth day inclusive after a feast. 3 Bla. Com. 277.

OCTO TALES (Lat. eight such). If, when a trial at bar is called on, the number of jurors in attendance is too small, the trial must be adjourned, and a decem or octo tales awarded, according to the number deficient; as, at common law, namely, a writ to the sheriff to summon eight more such men as were originally summoned. 3 Bla. Com. 364.

OCTROI (Fr.). Toll or a duty paid on entering a city.

ODIO ET ATIA. See DE ODIO ET ATIA.

OF. The word has been held equivalent to after; 10 L. J. Q. B. 10; at; belonging to; Davis v. State, 38 Ohio St. 506; manufactured by; 2 Bing. N. C. 668; by; Hannum v. Kingsley, 107 Mass. 355; residing at; Porter v. Miller, 3 Wend. (N. Y.) 329; 8 A. & E. 232.

OF COUNSEL. A phrase commonly applied in practice to the counsel employed by a party in a cause.

OF COURSE. That which may be done in the course of legal proceedings without making any application to the court; that which is granted by the court, without further inquiry, upon its being asked: as, a rule to plead is a matter of course.

OFFENCE. The doing that which a penal law forbids to be done, or omitting to do what it commands. In this sense, it is nearly synonymous with crime. In a more confined sense, it may be considered as having the same meaning with misdemeanor; but it differs from it in this, that it is not indictable, but punishable summarily by the forfeiture of a penalty; 1 Chitty, Pr. 14.

OFFER. A proposal to do a thing.

An offer, as an element of a contract, is a proposal to make a contract. It must be made by the person who is to make the promise, and it must be made to the person to whom the promise is made. It may be made either by words or by signs, either orally or in writing, and either personally or by a messenger; but in whatever way it is made, it is not in law an offer until it comes to the knowledge of the person to whom it is made; Langd. Contr. § 151; 6 H. L. Cas. 112. While an offer remains in force, it confers upon the offeree the power to convert it into a promise by accepting it. The offeror may state how long it shall remain in force; and it will then remain in force during the time so stated, unless sooner revoked; Boston & M. R. Co. v. Bartlett, 3 Cush. (Mass.) 224. But see infra. In the absence of any specification by the offeror, an offer will remain in force a reasonable time unless sooner revoked; Leake, Contr. 33; Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Rolling Mill, 119 U. S. 151, 7 Sup. Ct. 168, 30 L. Ed. 376. As to what will be a reasonable time, no uniform positive rule can be laid down. When an offer is made personally, it will prima facie continue until the interview or negotiation terminates, and longer; Mactier's Adm'rs v. Frith, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 103, 21 Am. Dec. 262. In commercial transactions, when an offer is made by mail, the general rule is that the offeror is entitled to an answer by return mail; but this will not apply in all cases, e. g. when there are several mails each day. In transactions which are not commercial, much less promptitude in answering is required; Langd. Contr. § 152.

Where the offer contemplates a unilateral contract, the length of time that the offer will continue in force depends upon different considerations. The question is no longer one of accepting the offer orally or by letter, but of performing the consideration. The duration of such an offer, therefore, in the absence of any express limitation, will be measured by the length of time which may be reasonably required for the performance of the consideration. When performance of the consideration has been begun in good faith, it seems that the offer will continue, in the absence of actual revocation, until the performance is either completed or abandoned, especially when the performance of the consideration is constantly within the knowledge of the offeror; Langd. Contr. § 155. An offer which contains no stipulation as to how long it shall continue is revocable at any moment; Poll. Contr. 27. A stipulation that an offer shall remain open for a specified time must be supported by a sufficient consideration, or be contained in an instrument under seal, in order to be binding; Langd. Contr. § 178; 3 Term 653. When thus made binding, the offer is not irrevocable, but the only effect is to give the offerer a claim for damages if the stipulation be broken by revoking the offer. When an offer is made for a time limited in the offer itself, no acceptance afterwards will make it binding; an offer which in its terms limits the time of acceptance is withdrawn by the expiration of the time; Waterman v. Banks, 144 U. S. 394, 12 Sup. Ct. 646, 36 L. Ed. 479.

As an offer can only be made by communication from the offerer to the offeree, so it can only be revoked in the same manner. But the death or insanity of the offerer during the pendency of the offer, revokes it; Langd. Contr. § 180.

An offer can only be accepted in the terms in which it is made; an acceptance, therefore, which modifies the offer in any particular, goes for nothing; L. R. 7 Ch. App. 587; Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Rolling Mill Co., 119 U. S. 151, 7 Sup. Ct. 168, 30 L. Ed. 376. The other party having once rejected the offer, cannot afterwards revive it by tendering an acceptance of it; First N. Bk. v. Hall, 101 U. S. 50, 25 L. Ed. 822; Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Rolling Mill Co., 119 U. S. 151, 7 Sup. Ct. 168, 30 L. Ed. 376.

A mere proposal to sell may be revoked at any time before acceptance; Miller v. Douville, 45 La. Ann. 214, 12 South. 132. It is withdrawn by the death of the maker; 2 Ch. Div. 475.

Where an offer of sale of land stands for twenty years, and until after the death of the party to whom it is made, without compliance with its terms, the widow and sole devisee of such party cannot accept the proposition, and offer to perform it, and thereby make a contract binding on the proposer; Marr v. Shaw, 51 Fed. 860.

A man may change his mind at any time, if it is not to the injury of another; he may, therefore, revoke or recall his offers at any time before they have been accepted; and, in order to deprive him of this right, the offer must have been accepted on the terms in which it was made; 10 Ves. 438; 2 C. & P. 553. See Ans. Contr. 31.

A general proposal by public advertisement may be effectually revoked by an announcement in the same newspaper, even as against a person who afterwards acts on the proposal not knowing that it had been revoked; Shuey v. U. S., 92 U. S. 73, 23 L. Ed. 697; said in Poll. Contr. 23, to be judicial legislation.

Any qualification of, or departure from, those terms invalidates the offer, unless the same be agreed to by the party who made it; Ellison v. Henshaw, 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 225, 4 L. Ed. 556; Mactier's Adm'r's v. Frith, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 103, 21 Am. Dec. 262; Poll. Contr. 38; i. e. there is no contract entered into.

When the offer has been made, the party is presumed to be willing for the time limited, to enter into the contract and, if the time be not fixed by the offer, then until it be expressly revoked or rendered nugatory by a contrary presumption; Mactier's Adm'r's v. Frith, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 103, 21 Am. Dec. 262. See McCulloch v. Ins. Co., 1 Pick. (Mass.) 278; Tucker v. Woods, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 190, 7 Am. Dec. 305; Watson v. Coast, 35 W. Va. 463, 14 S. E. 249; 1 Bell, Com. 326; an offer is considered as continuously made until it is brought to the notice of the person to whom it was made that it is withdrawn. That person's refusal or counter-offer puts an end to the original offer; Poll. Contr. 30.

And see ASSENT; BID; OPTION; LETTER.

An offer must be communicated, but in many classes of contracts it need not be made to an ascertained person: as, auction sales; an offer of a reward (whether the service must have been rendered after knowledge of the offer of a reward is unsettled; see *Ans. Contr. 24); an advertisement in railroad time-tables; letters of credit; offers to receive subscriptions for stocks or bonds. An offer of a stock of goods for sale on bids is not such an offer that a person who makes the highest bid is entitled to them (L. R. 5 C. P. 561). An offer may be determined—by lapse of a specified time; by lapse of a reasonable time for accepting; by failure to comply with the terms of the offer as to the mode of acceptance; by the death of either party before acceptance; by revocation before acceptance; Hollingsworth, Contr. 11.

The announcement of a scholarship competition is not an offer; [1895] 1 Ch. 480. A quotation of a price is not, ordinarily, an offer, but an invitation to make one; [1905] 2 Ir. 617; see [1893] A. C. 552.

A signed order for goods given to a traveling salesman and sent to his employers, who had the right to accept or reject it, was, until acceptance, merely an offer to buy, and the shipment of the goods alone with an invoice making different terms of payment did not constitute a contract; Baird v. Pratt, 148 Fed. 825, 78 C. C. A. 515, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1116; Northwest Thresher Co. v. Kubicek, 82 Neb. 485, 118 N. W. 94.

A mental determination to accept an offer, and acts done in pursuance thereof, do not constitute an acceptance; New v. Ins. Co., 171 Ind. 33, 85 N. E. 703, 131 Am. St. Rep. 245.

If a person making an offer expressly or impliedly intimates in his offer that it will be sufficient to act on the proposal without communicating acceptance to him, performance of the condition is acceptance without notification; [1877] 2 A. C. 690.

The ordinary rules of proposal and acceptance do not apply to promises embodied in a deed; Poll. Contr. 52; such promise is operactive without acceptance; L. R. 2 H. L. 296; but if the promisee refuses his assent without formality when the promise comes to his knowledge, the contract is avoided; Poll. Contr. 53, on the authority of 3 Co. Rep. 26; L. R. 2 H. L. 312. If the proposer dies before his proposal is accepted, that is a revocation of the offer; Poll. Contr. 41; though there is said to be no distinct authority to show whether notice to the other party is material or not; id.

There is a material distinction between the acceptance of an offer which asks for a promise and of an offer which asks for an act as the condition for the offer becoming a promise; the acceptance of the former must be communicated to the proposer, but the latter, it seems, need not. In the former case the proposed contract is called bilateral, in the latter unilateral; Poll. Contr. 34.

The settled rule of law is said to be that if a person communicates his acceptance of an offer within a reasonable time after the offer has been made, and if within a reasonable time of the acceptance being communicated no variation has been made by either party in the terms of the offer so made and accepted, the acceptance must be taken to be simultaneous with the offer, and both together as constituting such an agreement as the court will execute; 3 Mer. 441, per Lord Eldon, quoted in the preface to 6th Edition, Leake, Contracts.

OFFERINGS. See OBVENTIO.

OFFICE. A right to exercise a public function or employment, and to take the fees and emoluments belonging to it. Shelf. Mortm. 797; Cruise, Dig. Index; Com. v. Sutherland, 3 S. & R. (Pa.) 149. An office is a public charge or employment; U. S. v. Maurice, 2 Brock. 102, Fed. Cas. No. 15,747, per Marshall, C. J. An office may exist without an incumbent; People v. Stratton, 28 Cal. 382.

An office is a legal entity and may exist in fact although it be without an incumbent; Childs v. State, 4 Okl. Cr. 474, 113 Pac. 545, 33 L. R. A. (N. S.) 563. Compensation is no part of an office; it is merely incident thereto; id.

Judicial offices are those which relate to the administration of justice, and which should be exercised by persons of sufficient skill and experience in the duties which appertain to them.

Military offices are such as are held by soldiers and sailors for military purposes.

Ministerial offices are those which give the officer no discretion as to the matter to be done, and require him to obey the mandates of a superior. Vose v. Deane, 7 Mass. 280. See Savacool v. Boughton, 5 Wend. (N. Y.) 170, 21 Am. Dec. 181; Waldo v. Wallace, 12 Ind. 569. It is a general rule that a judicial office cannot be exercised by deputy, while a ministerial may.

Bouv.—151

Political offices are such as are not connected immediately with the administration of justice or the execution of the mandates of a superior officer: the offices of the president of the United States, of the heads of departments, of the members of the legislature, are of this number.

In the United States, all offices, according to the above definition, are public; but in another sense employments of a private nature are also called offices: for example, the office of president of a bank, the office of director of a corporation.

Subject to constitutional provisions or prohibitions the authority of the legislature over public offices is complete and absolute; Lee v. Board of Com'rs, 3 Wyo. 52, 31 Pac. 1045.

Where the appointment or election is made for a definite term or during good behavior and the removal is to be for cause, it is said that the power of removal cannot, except by clear statutory authority, be exercised without notice and hearing; but that the existence of the cause for which the power is to be exercised must first be determined after notice has been given to the officer of the charges made against him, and he has been given an opportunity to be heard; Mechem, Pub. Officers, § 454; Coleman v. Glenn, 103 Ga. 458, 30 S. E. 297, 68 Am. St. Rep. 108; Dullam v. Willson, 53 Mich. 392, 19 N. W. 112, 51 Am. Rep. 128. But, where the statute gives such authority, officers may be removed without notice; Trainor v. Board of Auditors, 89 Mich. 162, 50 N. W. 809, 15 L. R. A. 95; Trimble v. People, 19 Colo. 187, 34 Pac. 981, 41 Am. St. Rep. 236; People v. Whitlock, 92 N. Y. 191; State v. McGarry, 21 Wis. 496; State v. Cheetham, 19 Wash. 330, 53 Pac. 349.

The prevailing rule is that title to a public office will not be tried by mandamus; State v. Callahan, 4 N. D. 481, 61 N. W. 1025; People v. Infant Asylum, 122 N. Y. 190, 25 N. E. 241, 10 L. R. A. 381; State v. John, 81 Mo. 13; Hartwig v. Manistee, 134 Mich. 615, 96 N. W. 1067; Gorley v. Louisville, 104 Ky. 372, 47 S. W. 263; Hagan v. Brooklyn, 126 N. Y. 643, 27 N. E. 265; but contra, Keough v. Board of Aldermen, 156 Mass. 403, 31 N. E. 387; Eastman v. Householder, 54 Kan. 63, 37 Pac. 989; Harwood v. Marshall, 9 Md. 83. Where the writ is invoked to enforce a specific duty and remedies at law are not adequate, aid will not be refused merely because occupancy or incumbency or title is incidentally involved. The court will act under such circumstances as does equity and inquire into and determine rights so far as, but no further than, may be necessary to the relief sought; Morton v. Broderick, 118 Cal. 474, 50 Pac. 644.

For the incompatibility of office, see INCOMPATIBILITY; OFFICER.

See 3 Kent 362; MANDAMUS; QUO WARRANTO.

For word "office" as used of a place for transacting public business, see Com. v. White, 6 Cush. (Mass.) 181.

See RANK.

OFFICE-BOOK. A book kept in a public office, not appertaining to a court, authorized by the law of any state.

An exemplification of any such office-book, when authenticated under the act of congress of 27th March, 1804, is to have such faith and credit given to it in every court and office within the United States as such exemplification has by law or usage in the courts or offices of the state from whence the same has been taken. See FOREIGN LAWS; FOREIGN JUDGMENT.

OFFICE-COPY. A transcript of a record or proceeding filed in an office established by law, certified under the seal of the proper officer.

A copy made by an officer of the court, bound by law to make it, is equivalent to an exemplification, though it is sometimes called an "office copy"; Steph. Dig. Ev. art. 77. Copies of public records, whether judicial or otherwise, made by a public officer authorized by law to make them, are often termed "office copies," e. g. copies of recorded deeds; Elwell v. Cunningham, 74 Me. 127.

A copy made by an officer of the court, who is authorized to make it by a rule of court, but not required by law to make it, is equivalent to an exemplification in the same cause and court, but in other causes or courts is not admissible unless it can be proved as an examined copy; Steph. Dig. Ev. art. 78. These are called "office copies"; Kellogg v. Kellogg, 6 Barb. (N. Y.) 130. Office copies are said to be secondary evidence; Steph. Dig. Ev.

OFFICE FOUND. In English Law. When an inquisition is made to the king's use of anything, by virtue of office of him who inquires, and the inquisition is found, it is said to be office found. See Phillips v. Moore, 100 U. S. 212, 25 L. Ed. 603; Hauenstein v. Lynham, 100 U. S. 484, 25 L. Ed. 628; INQUEST OF OFFICE.

OFFICE GRANT. See GRANT.

OFFICE OF A JUDGE. In English Law. A criminal suit in an ecclesiastical court, not being directed to the reparation of a private injury, is regarded as a proceeding emanating from the office of the judge, and may be instituted by the mere motion of the judge. But in practice these suits are instituted by private individuals, with the permission of the judge or his surrogate; and the private prosecutor in any such case is, accordingly, said to promote the office of the judge. Coote's Eccl. Practice; Moz. & W.

OFFICER. One who is lawfully invested with an office.

An office is a public charge or employment; and one who performs the duties of an office is an officer. Marshall, C. J., in U. S. v. Maurice, 2 Brock. 102, Fed. Cas. No. 15,747.

Executive officers are those whose duties are mainly to cause the laws to be executed.

Legislative officers are those whose duties relate mainly to the enactment of laws, such as members of congress and of the several state legislatures. These officers are confined in their duties by the constitution generally to make laws, though sometimes, in cases of impeachment, one of the houses of the legislature exercises judicial functions somewhat similar to those of a grand jury, by presenting to the other articles of impeachment, and the other house acts as a court in trying such impeachment.

Judicial officers are those whose duties are to decide controversies between individuals, and accusations made in the name of the public against persons charged with violations of the law.

Ministerial officers are those whose duty it is to execute the mandates, lawfully issued, of their superiors.

Military officers are those who have command in the army. Non-commissioned officers are not officers in the sense in which that word is generally used; Babbitt v. U. S., 16 Ct. Cls. 214.

Naval officers are those who are in command in the navy.

Officers are also divided into public officers and those who are not public. Some officers may bear both characters: for example, a clergyman is a public officer when he acts in the performance of such a public duty as the marriage of two individuals; Goshen v. Stonington, 4 Conn. 209, 10 Am. Dec. 121; and he is merely a private person when he acts in his more ordinary calling of teaching his congregation. See Kibbe v. Antram, 4 Conn. 134.

Officers are required to exercise the functions which belong to their respective offices. The neglect to do so may, in some cases, subject the offender to an indictment; Respublica v. Montgomery, 1 Yeates (Pa.) 419; and in others he will be liable to the party injured; Work v. Hoofnagle, 1 Yeates (Pa.) 506.

Public office in the constitution means a permanent public trust or employment, not merely transient, occasional, or incidental; In re Hathaway, 71 N. Y. 238. The term embraces the ideas of tenure, duration, emoluments, and duties; U. S. v. Hartwell, 6 Wall. (U. S.) 385, 18 L. Ed. 830; but it has been held that duration and salary are not of the essence of public office, and that the duty of acting for and on behalf of the state constitutes an office; People v. Bledsoe, 68 N. C. 457; even though it expires as soon as a single act is done; State v. Stanley, 66 N. C. 59, 8 Am. Rep. 488. The true test is that it is a parcel of the administration of government; Eliason v. Coleman, 86 N. C. 241; though it is a clerkship in a department and the duties are confined within narrow limits; Vaughn v. English, 8 Cal. 39.

An office commonly requires something more than a single transitory act or transaction to call it into being; Carrington v. U. S., 208 U. S. 1, 28 Sup. Ct. 203, 52 L. Ed. 367, where an army officer received $3,500 from civil sources to be used by him in connection with his military duties; it was held that he was not amenable to the Philippine penal code punishing a public official for falsification of a public document.

A public officer is one who renders a public service—a service in which the general public is interested; Schmitt v. Dooling, 145 Ky. 240, 140 S. W. 197, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 881, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 1078. One who exercises some portion of the sovereign power of the state, either in making, administering or executing the laws; Olmstead v. New York, 10 Jones & S. (N. Y.) 481; Eliason v. Coleman, 86 N. C. 235. It is said to depend upon the greater importance and dignity of the position; the requirement of an oath and perhaps of a bond, and usually upon the tenure; People v. Langdon, 40 Mich. 673.

Officers of the United States are those nominated by the president and confirmed by the senate or those who are appointed under an act of congress, by the president alone, a court of law, or a head of a department; U. S. v. Germaine, 99 U. S. 508, 25 L. Ed. 482; see U. S. v. Mouat, 124 U. S. 303, 8 Sup. Ct. 505, 31 L. Ed. 463. The notification of the secretary of the navy is a valid appointment as a passed assistant surgeon; U. S. v. Moore, 95 U. S. 762, 24 L. Ed. 588. It is generally true that a relation arising out of a contract and dependent for its duration and extent upon the terms thereof is never considered an office; Shelby v. Alcorn, 36 Miss. 273, 72 Am. Dec. 169. Not every employment under the government is an office; U. S. v. Maurice, 2 Brock. 96, Fed. Cas. No. 15,747. The distinction between officer and placeman is that the former must take an oath of office, the latter not; Worthy v. Barrett, 63 N. C. 199.

Who are officers. The following have been held to be officers: All persons entrusted with the receipt of public money; Com. v. Evans, 74 Pa. 124; the receiver of a national bank; Platt v. Beach, 2 Ben. 303, Fed. Cas. No. 11,215; clerks in an executive department of the federal government; Talbot v. U. S., 10 Ct. Cl. 426; a collector of city taxes, within the bankruptcy act of 1841; Morse v. Lowell, 7 Metc. (Mass.) 152; a representative in a state legislature; Morrill v. Haines, 2 N. H. 246 (see infra); members of the boards of public safety and public works; secretaries of such boards; assistant bailiff of the police court; and the stenographer of the said court, within the meaning of a constitutional provision that the salaries of public officers shall be neither increased nor diminished during their term of office; Louisville v. Wilson, 99 Ky. 598, 36 S. W. 944; a notary public, within the meaning of a constitutional provision that any public officer who shall travel on a free pass shall forfeit his office; People v. Rathbone, 11 Misc. 98, 32 N. Y. Supp. 108, affirmed in 145 N. Y. 434, 40 N. E. 395, 28 L. R. A. 384; a representative in congress; People v. Brooklyn, 77 N. Y. 503, 33 Am. Rep. 659; a selectman; State v. Boody, 53 N. H. 610; the president of a city council; State v. Anderson, 45 Ohio St. 196, 12 N. E. 656; a city superintendent of streets; State v. May, 106 Mo. 483, 17 S. W. 600; an assistant of the board of aldermen; Collins v. New York, 3 Hun (N. Y.) 680; a deputy county clerk; Gibbs v. Morgan, 39 N. J. Eq. 126; a county solicitor duly elected; Lancaster County v. Fulton, 128 Pa. 48, 18 Atl. 384, 5 L. R. A. 436; notary public; Governor v. Langdon, 40 Mich. 673; a mail carrier; Sawyer v. Corse, 17 Gratt. (Va.) 243, 94 Am. Dec. 445 (contra, Conwell v. Voorhees, 13 Ohio 523, 42 Am. Dec. 206); an agent appointed by a state to receive an extradited person; Robb v. Connolly, 111 U. S. 624, 4 Sup. Ct. 544, 28 L. Ed. 542; patrolmen on the police force of a city; Shanley v. Brooklyn, 30 Hun (N. Y.) 396 (semble); firemen of cities and villages; People v. Pinckney, 32 N. Y. 377; State v. Jennings, 57 Ohio St. 415, 49 N. E. 404, 63 Am. St. Rep. 723; a pilot; Dean v. Healy, 66 Ga. 503; a night watchman of a post-office building; Doyle v. Aldermen of Raleigh, 89 N. C. 133, 45 Am. Rep. 677; members of the legislature; Worthy v. Barrett, 63 N. C. 199; a college professor; Union County v. James, 21 Pa. 525. Nine-tenths of the employes of the United States government are said not to be officers; U. S. v. Germaine, 99 U. S. 509, 25 L. Ed. 482. So of a special officer appointed to suppress the liquor traffic among the Indians; U. S. v. Van Wert, 195 Fed. 974. County commissioners are not officers for the purpose of impeachment; In re Opinion of the Justices, 167 Mass. 599, 46 N. E. 118. A United States senator elect is not a member of congress until he has assumed the duties of his office; U. S. v. Dietrich, 126 Fed. 676.

See McCornick v. Thatcher, 8 Utah 294, 30 Pac. 1091, 17 L. R. A. 243.

Public officers are public agents or trustees and have no proprietary interest or property in their office beyond the lawful term and salary (if any) prescribed; State v. Hawkins, 44 Ohio St. 98, 5 N. E. 228; Reals v. Smith, 8 Wyo. 159, 56 Pac. 690. Their official rights and duties may be changed at the discretion of the legislature during their term of office; State v. Dews, R. M. Charl. (Ga.) 397; but it has been held that a clerk's office, to be held during good behavior, and many other public offices are, under certain limitations, the subject of property; Hoke v. Henderson, 15 N. C. 18, 25 Am. Dec. 677; the emoluments are private property; id.

The profits of a public office cannot be assigned for the benefit of creditors; 8 Cl. & F. 295.

The buying and selling of offices was forbidden by 5 & 6 Edw. VI. c. 15, under which it has been held that an officer having a certain salary or certain annual profits may make a deputation of it, reserving a sum not exceeding the amount of his profits, or the deputy may lawfully agree to pay so much out of the uncertain fees of an office; but if the office have uncertain fees or profits, an agreement by the deputy to pay a fixed sum annually is a sale within the statute; and so is an agreement to give the deputy all the profits; 3 Kent 456.

An agreement by an applicant for an office to divide the fees with another applicant if the latter withdraw his application for it, is void; Gray v. Hook, 4 N. Y. 449; so is a contract for the sale of an office; Engle v. Chipman, 51 Mich. 524, 16 N. W. 886; whether made by the appointing power or the incumbent; Hall v. Gavitt, 18 Ind. 390. An agreement for compensation for procuring the appointment or resignation of a public officer is void; Basket v. Moss, 115 N. C. 448, 20 S. E. 733, 48 L. R. A. 842, 44 Am. St. Rep. 463. So is the sale by the owners of a vessel of the position of master; 2 B. & C. 661; and the promises of a stockholder that he will secure to the buyer of his stock the office of treasurer; Guernsey v. Cook, 120 Mass. 501.

Any bargain whereby, in advance of his appointment to an office with a salary, the appointee agreed with the individual making the appointment that he would waive all salary or accept something less than the statutory sum, is contrary to public policy and void; Miller v. U. S., 103 Fed. 413; Glavney v. U. S., 182 U. S. 595, 21 Sup. Ct. 891, 45 L. Ed. 1247; People v. Board of Police, 75 N. Y. 38.

The eligibility of an officer is ordinarily to be determined at the time of taking the office; State v. Moores, 52 Neb. 770, 73 N. W. 299; Hoy v. State, 168 Ind. 506, 81 N. E. 509, 11 Ann. Cas. 944; Kirkpatrick v. Brownfield, 97 Ky. 558, 31 S. W. 137, 29

L. R. A. 703, 53 Am. St. Rep. 422; State v. Van Beek, 87 Ia. 569, 54 N. W. 525, 19 L. R. A. 622, 43 Am. St. Rep. 397 (where naturalization intervened after election and before induction). That the election is the test, see Ronne v. Matthews, 75 Miss. 94, 21 South. 665; State v. Lake, 16 R. I. 511, 17 Atl. 552. Where residence in a district was required, it was held that this qualification must exist at the time of election; State v. Holman, 58 Minn. 219, 59 N. W. 1006.

The tenure of office is never more permanent than during good behavior; 3 Kent 454; if not protected by the constitution, it may be changed by the legislature; Com. v. Weir, 165 Pa. 284, 30 Atl. 835; but its term cannot be extended when fixed by the constitution; State v. Brewster, 44 Ohio St. 589, 9 N. E. 849. In England, servants of the crown, civil as well as military, except in special cases otherwise provided by law, hold their office only during the pleasure of the crown; [1896] 1 Q. B. 116, 121.

The right to appoint to a public office, when no term of office is fixed by law, carries with it as an incident the absolute power of removal at any time, without notice or charges or hearing; State v. Archibald, 5 N. D. 359, 66 N. W. 234.

The suspension of an officer by the governor does not deny him the equal protection of the laws because the governor refuses to produce to him the evidence against him, or to confront him with his accusers. He is not entitled to a jury trial; Wilson v. North Carolina, 169 U. S. 586, 18 Sup. Ct. 435, 42 L. Ed. 865.

An officer cannot be removed from office during his second term for a violation of duty committed during his first term; Thurston v. Clark, 107 Cal. 285, 40 Pac. 435.

The power to remove a corporate officer for reasonable and just cause is one of the common-law incidents of all corporations; Dill. Mun. Corp. § 179; L. R. 23 Ch. D. 1; but not for pre-existing cause affecting his capacity to hold the office; id.

The subject is generally regulated by legislation, though there are cases in which the rule has been applied to officers of municipal corporations in the absence of statutory provisions; Richards v. Clarksburg, 30 W. Va. 491, 4 S. E. 774; Savannah v. Grayson, 104 Ga. 105, 30 S. E. 693; State v. New Orleans, 107 La. 632, 32 South. 22; State v. Noblesville, 157 Ind. 31, 60 N. E. 704.

It was held that, in the absence of statutory provisions relating to their removal, public officers could not be removed by a vote of the town either with or without a hearing before the town or a committee thereof; Attorney General v. Stratton, 194 Mass. 51, 79 N. E. 1073, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 572, 120 Am. St. Rep. 527, 10 Ann. Cas. 883. Where the charter of a borough provided that its president be elected by the electors, and that officer was removed by the governor and afterwards was appointed by the board of aldermen to fill the vacancy caused by his own removal, he was held eligible to fill it; People v. Ahearn, 60 Misc. 613, 113 N. Y. Supp. 876.

The act of a de facto officer is binding on the public; McDowell v. U. S., 159 U. S. 596, 16 Sup. Ct. 111, 40 L. Ed. 271. Persons coming into a public office to transact business, who find a person in charge of it, are not bound to ascertain his authority so to act. To them he is an officer de facto, and so far as they are concerned, de jure; Nofire v. U. S., 164 U. S. 657, 17 Sup. Ct. 212, 41 L. Ed. 588; though there was no power to appoint him; Erwin v. Jersey City, 60 N. J. L. 141, 37 Atl. 732, 64 Am. St. Rep. 584. A municipal corporation who has paid a salary to a de facto officer who has performed the duties of an office while the right to it was in litigation, cannot be held liable therefor again to one who may thereafter establish his title to the office; Fuller v. Roberts Co., 9 S. D. 216, 68 N. W. Rep. 308; the remedy is against the de facto officer; id.; Com'rs of Saline Co. v. Anderson, 20 Kan. 298, 27 Am. Rep. 171. See Dolan v. New York, 68 N. Y. 279, 23 Am. Rep. 168; but see Mayfield v. Moore, 53 Ill. 428, 5 Am. Rep. 52. It is no defence to a prosecution for bribery that the act under which the officer was bribed was unconstitutional; State v. Gardner, 54 Ohio St. 24, 42 N. E. 999, 31 L. R. A. 660. See DE FACTO.

Where the settlement of a question involves the exercise of discretion and judgment, the duty is not ministerial and is beyond the review of the judicial department; Enterprise Sav. Ass'n v. Zumstein, 67 Fed. 1000, 15 C. C. A. 153, 37 U. S. App. 71.

A town collector is responsible as a debtor and not merely as a bailee; Muzzy v. Shattuck, 1 Den. (N. Y.) 233. It is the policy of public laws to hold all receivers of public money to a very strict accountability; U. S. v. Thomas, 15 Wall. (U. S.) 346, 21 L. Ed. 89. The obligation to keep safely the public money was said to be absolute, without any condition express or implied; U. S. v. Prescott, 3 How. (U. S.) 587, 11 L. Ed. 734; but this was considered in U. S. v. Thomas, 15 Wall. (U. S.) 347, 21 L. Ed. 89; as being too generally expressed, the court intimating there that loss of funds under special circumstances, as by an earthquake, would probably exonerate the official. In the same case it was said that it appears from all the cases (except that in Muzzy v. Shattuck, 1 Den. [N. Y.] 233) that the official bond of an officer is regarded as laying the foundation of a more stringent responsibility; but the court held that the forcible seizure by the rebel authorities in 1861 of public moneys in the hands of a loyal government agent, against his will and without fault on his part, was a discharge from his obligation in reference to such moneys, three judges dissented.

The responsibility of a public officer is determined, not by the law of bailment, but by the condition of his bond; Com. v. Comly, 3 Pa. 372.

Where public money is lost by the failure of a bank; State v. Copeland, 96 Tenn. 296, 34 S. W. 427, 31 L. R. A. 844, 54 Am. St. Rep. 840; (contra, Tillinghast v. Merrill, 151 N. Y. 135, 45 N. E. 375, 34 L. R. A. 678, 56 Am. St. Rep. 612); or a city treasurer is robbed; Healdsburg v. Mulligan, 113 Cal. 205, 45 Pac. 337, 33 L. R. A. 461; (contra, Board of Education v. Jewell, 44 Minn. 427, 46 N. W. 914, 20 Am. St. Rep. 586); the official being free from fault is not liable; but in Fairchild v. Hedges, 14 Wash. 117, 44 Pac. 125, 31 L. R. A. 851; an officer was held liable for the safety of public moneys, lost in an insolvent bank, even though he was not negligent; and in New York the liability is very strictly maintained; Tillinghast v. Merrill, 151 N. Y. 135, 45 N. E. 375, 34 L. R. A. 678, 56 Am. St. Rep. 612. The weight of authority seems to be in favor of a strict accountability; Bush v. Johnson County, 48 Neb. 1, 66 N. W. 1023, 32 L. R. A. 223, 58 Am. St. Rep. 673; Fairchild v. Hedges, 14 Wash. 117, 44 Pac. 125, 31 L. R. A. 851.

A United States officer giving a bond for the safe-keeping of public moneys is liable in case of loss, unless it was due to overruling necessities or the public enemy; loss by fire is no defence; his obligation determined by his bond; it is not a bailment; Smythe v. U. S., 188 U. S. 156, 23 Sup. Ct. 279, 47 L. Ed. 425.

Where a subordinate officer takes the place of his superior in the case of death or disability, he is entitled to the same salary; State v. La Grave, 23 Nev. 216, 45 Pac. 243, 35 L. R. A. 233.

There is no federal statute expressly bearing upon removals from office, except § 13 of the act of January 16, 1883—the Civil Service Act, relating to removal, etc., by reason of giving or refusing political contributions. The civil service rules of the executive are but regulations imposed by him upon his own actions or those of heads of departments, and do not confer upon an employé any property right in his office; Morgan v. Nunn, 84 Fed. 551. Equity has no jurisdiction over the appointment and removal of public officers, whether the power is vested in executive or administrative boards or officers, or in a judicial tribunal; jurisdiction belongs exclusively to courts of law; White v. Berry, 171 U. S. 366, 18 Sup. Ct. 917, 43 L. Ed. 199.

Equity has no jurisdiction over the appointment or removal of public officers; the jurisdiction belongs exclusively to courts of law; In re Sawyer, 124 U. S. 200, 8 Sup. Ct. 482, 31 L. Ed. 402; Moulton v. Reid, 54 Ala.

320; Fletcher v. Tuttle, 151 Ill. 41, 37 N. E. 683, 25 L. R. A. 143, 42 Am. St. Rep. 220; Muhler v. Hedekin, 119 Ind. 481, 20 N. E. 700. But equity will prevent a breach of trust affecting public franchises, or some illegal act, under color or claim of right, affecting injuriously the property rights of individuals, and falling under one of the acknowledged heads of equity jurisprudence; People v. Canal Board, 55 N. Y. 390; Morgan v. Nunn, 84 Fed. 554; and it is said that equity will protect the position of officers de facto against the interference of adverse claimants; High, Inj. § 1315; as by enjoining the dispossession of an officer, by force and unlawfully, and compelling the defendant to resort to a remedy at law; Morgan v. Nunn, 84 Fed. 555.

The president may remove a district attorney within four years of his appointment; Parsons v. U. S., 167 U. S. 324, 17 Sup. Ct. 880, 42 L. Ed. 185; where the history of the question is reviewed. By the repeal (act of 1887) of the Tenure of Office Act, congress intended to concede to the president the power of removal, if it ever took it from him; id.

In the absence of constitutional or statutory regulation, the power of appointment carries with it, as an incident, the power of removal; Parsons v. U. S., 167 U. S. 324, 17 Sup. Ct. 880, 42 L. Ed. 185.

The Civil Service Act of 1891 is constitutional; Butler v. White, 83 Fed. 578.

Department regulations cannot enlarge or restrict the liability of an officer on his bond; Meads v. U. S., 81 Fed. 684, 26 C. C. A. 229.

The postmaster-general, when in the discharge of his duties, is not liable for damages on account of official communications made by him within those duties, by reason of any personal motive that might be alleged to have prompted his action; Spalding v. Vilas, 161 U. S. 483, 16 Sup. Ct. 631, 40 L. Ed. 780.

The United States is not liable for the non-feasance or misfeasance or neglect of its officers; German Bk. v. U. S., 148 U. S. 573, 13 Sup. Ct. 702, 37 L. Ed. 564.

A person holding two different federal offices cannot draw pay for both for the same period; Talbot v. U. S., 10 Ct. Cls. 426.

Congress cannot exercise the power of appointment to office; Shoemaker v. U. S., 147 U. S. 282, 13 Sup. Ct. 361, 37 L. Ed. 170. It may vest in the president the power to appoint a vice-consul; U. S. v. Eaton, 169 U. S. 331, 18 Sup. Ct. 374, 42 L. Ed. 767.

The act, however tortious, of an executive officer of a court, done under color of its process, is to be regarded as a proceeding of the court, with which courts of concurrent jurisdiction will not interfere; American Ass'n v. Hurst, 59 Fed. 1, 7 C. C. A. 598, 16 U. S. App. 325.

An act directing the employment of veterans in the labor service of the commonwealth, etc., in preference to other persons, if such veterans are qualified for the work, is constitutional; Opinion of the Justices, 166 Mass. 589, 44 N. E. 625, 34 L. R. A. 58, three judges dissenting.

One who accepts an office incompatible with one already held, ipso facto vacates the first office; Northway v. Sheridan, 111 Mich. 18, 69 N. W. 82; People v. Board of Fire Com'rs, 76 Hun 146, 27 N. Y. Supp. 548. Where the mayor of Detroit was elected governor of Michigan, it was held that he thereby vacated the former office; Attorney General v. Common Council, 112 Mich. 145, 70 N. W. 450, 37 L. R. A. 211. In Louisiana a constitutional officer may also hold a municipal office; State v. Montgomery, 25 La. Ann. 138. See OFFICE.

A woman is eligible to the office of court clerk where there is no provision expressly requiring such clerk to be a man, though the word "he" is used in the constitution of the state in declaring who is eligible to office; State v. Hostetter, 137 Mo. 636, 39 S. W. 270, 38 L. R. A. 208, 59 Am. St. Rep. 515.

The officers of a corporation are not, as regards their criminal liability, a single person in respect to corporate acts, and therefore they may be guilty of conspiracy; People v. Duke, 19 Misc. 292, 44 N. Y. Supp. 330.

The word "vacant" has no technical nor peculiar meaning; it means empty, unoccupied; as applied to an office—without an incumbent. An existing office without an incumbent is vacant, whether it be an old or a new one; Stocking v. State, 7 Ind. 326; Com. v. McAfee, 232 Pa. 36, 81 Atl. 85. Where a new office has been created and has not been filled, a vacancy exists; State v. Irwin, 5 Nev. 111; Stocking v. State, 7 Ind. 326; but see O'Leary v. Adler, 51 Miss. 28. Where a newly appointed officer fails to qualify as required by law, there is usually not a vacancy, if, by law, the last incumbent holds over; State v. Brewster, 44 Ohio St. 589, 9 N. E. 849; State v. Bowden, 92 S. C. 399, 75 S. E. 866; but it has been held that in such case there is a vacancy; State v. Beard, 34 La. Ann. 273.

Statutory provisions requiring a bond and oath of office are usually only directory; it will suffice if the oath be taken and the bond given before a vacancy has been declared; Sprowl v. Lawrence, 33 Ala. 674; Cawley v. People, 95 Ill. 249; Chicago v. Gage, 95 Ill. 593, 35 Am. Rep. 182; but see People v. McKinney, 52 N. Y. 374; Johnson v. Mann, 77 Va. 265; State v. Ruff, 4 Wash. 234, 29 Pac. 999, 16 L. R. A. 140.

At common law, the refusal of a public officer to accept office was indictable; 4 Term 778; such is still the rule; People v. Williams, 145 Ill. 573. Mandamus will lie to compel a person to enter upon the discharge of the duties of an office; Edwards v. U. S., 103 U. S. 471, 26 L. Ed. 314; People v. Williams, 145 Ill. 573, 33 N. E. 849, 24 L. R. A. 492, 36 Am. St. Rep. 514.

The term of office and the functions of a public officer may be ended by resignation but he cannot resign until he is qualified; Miller v. Board of Sup'rs, 25 Cal. 93. A resignation of an office should be tendered to the officer or body having authority to fill the vacancy by appointing a successor; Edwards v. U. S., 103 U. S. 471, 26 L. Ed. 314; Thompson v. U. S., 103 U. S. 480, 26 L. Ed. 521; State v. Pollner, 18 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 304; State v. Super. Ct., 46 Wash. 616, 91 Pac. 4, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1010, 123 Am. St. Rep. 948, 13 Ann. Cas. 870; People v. Williams, 145 Ill. 573, 33 N. E. 849, 24 L. R. A. 492, 36 Am. St. Rep. 514; and it is held in many cases that an acceptance of the resignation is necessary; id.; State v. Stickley, 80 S. C. 64, 61 S. E. 211, 128 Am. St. Rep. 855, 15 Ann. Cas. 136; Coleman v. Sands, 87 Va. 689, 13 S. E. 148 (this was a registrar of elections who after resignation not being accepted was compelled by mandamus to register a voter); U. S. v. Green, 53 Fed. 769 (where an alderman resigned after service of mandamus to secure payment of a judgment against the city and as the constitution provided that all elective and appointive officers should hold until their successors were appointed and qualified, the alderman was held guilty of contempt); Patrick v. Hagins, 41 S. W. 31, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 482 (police judge, who after resignation appeared not to have been accepted, was compelled by mandamus to put a name on the official ballot); so it was held under a Kentucky statute that a resignation not tendered to one having power to appoint the successor is a nullity; Shacklett v. Island, 146 Ky. 798, 143 S. W. 369, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 602; and in another jurisdiction that it is the general rule that to make a resignation effective, in the absence of statute, it should be tendered to the appointing power, or if the office is elective to the power authorized to call an election to fill the vacancy; Nome v. Rice, 3 Alaska 602; and a resignation implies an expression by the incumbent in some form, express or implied of the intention to surrender, renounce, or relinquish the office, and an acceptance by competent and lawful authority; id.

The common law rule that the resignation of a public officer is not complete until the proper authority accepts it or does something equivalent thereto, is held to be the rule; State v. Clayton, 27 Kan. 442, 41 Am. Rep. 418. Where no particular mode of resignation is prescribed by statute and the appointment is not by deed, a resignation may be by parol; Clark v. Board of Education, 112 Mich. 656, 71 N. W. 177; Van Orsdall v. Hazard, 3 Hill (N. Y.) 243; State v. Ferguson, 31 N. J. L. 107 (overseer of highways), where Beasley, C. J., referring to U. S. v. Wright, 1 McLean 512, Fed. Cas. No. 16,775, said that the remark of McLean, J., to the effect that a civil officer could resign at any time and the executive could not compel him to remain in office, could hardly be applied "to the class of officers who are elected by the people and whose services are absolutely necessary to carry on local government." He considered that the common law rule was in force that a person elected could not decline to serve. The view that a resignation must be accepted by "the proper authority" was followed in Fryer v. Norton, 67 N. J. L. 537, 52 Atl. 476, where the officer was a member of a borough council, an elective office, with power in the mayor to fill vacancies with concurrence of the council. It was held that both must concur in accepting the resignation. The appointment of a successor will be deemed an acceptance of the resignation; Gates v. Delaware County, 12 Ia. 405.

On the other hand it is held in many cases that the acceptance is not necessary and that a civil officer has the right to resign at any time, without consent of the President, who has no power to refuse it and to require the officer to continue in office; U. S. v. Wright, 1 McLean 509, Fed. Cas. No. 16,775. It is said that an unconditional resignation of an officer, transmitted with the intent that it be delivered to the authority entitled to receive it, becomes complete without any acceptance; State v. Fitts, 49 Ala. 402; People v. Porter, 6 Cal. 26; and that such an unconditional resignation to take effect immediately becomes effective when deposited in the post office properly addressed to the person authorized to receive it; State v. Clarke, 3 Nev. 566 (United States district attorney). In the case of a drainage commissioner (appointed by a county judge) who resigned, no acceptance was required and the law continuing an officer until his successor is qualified was held to apply only to the expiration of the term and not to the resignation; Olmsted v. Dennis, 77 N. Y. 378. The moment his resignation was given to the officer who appointed him it was effective and the office became vacant; id.

A civil officer has the right to resign his office and had such right at common law and it is recognized in the constitution; State v. Blakemore, 104 Mo. 340, 15 S. W. 960, reversing 40 Mo. App. 406; and any doubt in other jurisdictions as to the right to resign without concurrence of the officer or body which has the power to act upon it is removed in this state by the constitutional recognition of the right of resignation; State v. Bus, 135 Mo. 325, 36 S. W. 636, 33 L. R. A. 616. In that case a school director was appointed a deputy sheriff and it was held that the acceptance of a second office operated as a resignation of the first if they were incompatible. Whether they were so was the main question and it was decided that they were not.

In most of the cases which hold that an acceptance is necessary to complete the resignation stress is laid upon the common law doctrine that not only offices of local character, the creation of a vacancy in which would cause public inconvenience, were not lightly to be abandoned at the mere will of the incumbent but frequent allusion is made to the fact that it was compulsory to serve in such offices and that not only was it made difficult to resign an office but also to decline accepting one. This view is strongly presented by the United States Supreme Court in Edwards v. U. S., supra, and also in the New Jersey cases.

In the cases which hold that an acceptance is not necessary, the offices in question were both elective, as of a county judge, and appointive, as United States district attorney or collector of internal revenue, and there seems to be no distinction drawn between them, nor is any expressed with respect to the character or importance of the office since the cases which adhere to the right of resignation without acceptance include such offices as school director and drainage commissioners. No distinct theory therefore can be evolved from the cases which will reconcile them though it has been suggested by one writer on the subject that the rule requiring acceptance is usually applied to local offices in which vacancies would occasion special public inconvenience and that the acceptance is not necessary where the public interest is not directly involved; Am. & Engl. Enc. 1403. While this suggestion has the merit of plausibility, it cannot be said to have the support of any judicial authority and the cases cannot be aligned in accordance with it or indeed with any general rule.

An unconditional resignation transmitted with intent that it be delivered to the proper authority cannot be recalled; State v. Fitts, 49 Ala. 402; or withdrawn after it has been received; State v. Hauss, 43 Ind. 105, 13 Am. Rep. 384; but a contingent or prospective resignation can be withdrawn at any time before acceptance; State v. Fowler, 160 Ala. 186, 48 South. 985, 135 Am. St. Rep. 91; State v. Murphy, 30 Nev. 409, 97 Pac. 391, 720, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1210; or after acceptance, with the consent of the authority accepting, where no new rights have intervened; Biddle v. Willard, 10 Ind. 62; Bunting v. Willis, 27 Grat. (Va.) 144, 21 Am. Rep. 338; State v. McGrath, 64 Mo. 139; State v. Beck, 24 Nev. 92, 49 Pac. 1035; but where the office is once surrendered or vacated by the acceptance of a second office in violation of law the officer cannot be restored by resigning the second; Bishop v. State, 149 Ind. 223, 48 N. E. 1038, 39 L. R. A. 279, 63 Am. St. Rep. 270.

A resignation may be withdrawn if not accepted, and is not effective though a successor has been appointed, if transmitted without the officer's consent, and a conditional resignation cannot be accepted except on the terms made by it, and in the absence of a corrupt bargain an officer may attach, as a condition, the appointment of a certain other person as his successor; State v. Huff, 172 Ind. 1, 87 N. E. 141, 139 Am. St. Rep. 355. One who resigns an office, manifesting his intention by an unequivocal act, may retract or withdraw it before it is accepted or any act done to fill the vacancy; People v. Board of Police, 26 Barb. (N. Y.) 487; and where there is no formal resignation there must be some conduct inconsistent with the retention of office and a formal acceptance of the resignation or the appointment of another to fill the vacancy; id. A mere intention to resign is ineffective until properly manifested; State v. Pollner, supra. There must be an intention to relinquish a part of the term, accompanying the act of relinquishment; State v. Ladeem, 104 Minn. 252, 116 N. W. 486, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1058; and if obtained by duress the resignation is voidable and may be repudiated by an immediate refusal to surrender the office; id.

A resignation of a public office by implication may take place by abandonment of official duties and to complete it the acceptance may be manifested by an appointment of another to fill the place; People v. Spencer, 101 Ill. App. 61. An officer may resign pending proceedings for his removal for malfeasance in office; State v. Dart, 57 Minn. 261, 59 N. W. 190; Roberts v. Paul, 50 W. Va. 528, 40 S. E. 470.

Term of office means "a fixed and definite period of time;" 30 Am. & E. Corp. Cas. 351. When no time is mentioned in the law from which the term of office begins, it runs from the date of election; State v. Constable, 7 Ohio 7, pt. 1.

Officers who are compelled to rely upon and act through subordinate officers and employers are not ordinarily responsible to the government for their misfeasance or nonfeasance; People v. Coler, 31 App. Div. 523, 52 N. Y. Supp. 197.

It is now generally agreed that, in the absence of any statute to the contrary, the president, together with the secretary or cashier, are presumed, in favor of third persons purchasing in good faith and for value, to have power to convey property of the corporation in its name, in the ordinary course of its business. Other officers have not this power; Abbott's Trial Evidence 52; Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Louisville Trust Co., 174 U. S. 552, 19 Sup. Ct. 817, 43 L. Ed. 1081. The president of a corporation is recognized as its business head, and any contracts pertaining to its affairs, within the general power of such officer, executed by him on its behalf, will, in the absence of proof to the contrary, be presumed to have been done by authority; Lloyd & Co. v.

Matthews, 223 Ill. 477, 79 N. E. 172, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 376, 114 Am. St. Rep. 346; Little Sawmill Val. T. or P. Road Co., 194 Pa. 144, 45 Atl. 66, 75 Am. St. Rep. 690. But in some cases it is held that general authority to act for the corporation must be shown; Lyndon Mill Co. v. Biblical Inst., 63 Vt. 581, 22 Atl. 575, 25 Am. St. Rep. 783; Mathias v. Springs Ass'n, 19 Mont. 359, 48 Pac. 624.

OFFICER DE FACTO. One who has the reputation of being the officer he assumes to be, and yet is not a good officer in point of law; 6 East 368. See DE FACTO.

OFFICIAL. In Old Civil Law. The person who was the minister of, or attendant upon, a magistrate.

In Canon Law. The person to whom the bishop generally commits the charge of his spiritual jurisdiction bears this name. Wood, Inst. 30, 505; Merlin, Répert.

OFFICIAL PRINCIPAL. See COURT OF ARCHES.

OFFICIAL SOLICITOR TO THE COURT OF CHANCERY. An officer in England whose function is to protect the suitors' fund, and to administer under the direction of the court, so much of it as comes under the spending power of the court.

OFFICIAL TRUSTEES OF CHARITIES. Charity commissioners in England, created by 16 & 17 Vict. c. 137, and amended by 18 & 19 Vict. c. 24.

OFFICIAL USE. An active use before the statute of uses, which imposed some duty on the legal owner or feoffee to uses, as a conveyance to A with directions for him to sell the estate and distribute the proceeds amongst B, C, and D. To enable A to perform this duty he had the legal possession of the estate to be sold. Wharton.

OFFICIARIIS NON FACIENDIS VEL AMOVENDIS. A writ addressed to the magistrates of a corporation, requiring them not to make such a man an officer, or to put one out of the office he has, until inquiry is made of his manners, etc. Reg. Orig. 126.

OFFICINA JUSTITIÆ. The workshop or office of justice. In English Law. The chancery was formerly so called, because all writs issued from it, under the great seal, returnable into the courts of common law. See CHANCERY.

OFFICIO, EX, OATH OF. An oath whereby a person might be obliged to make any presentment of any crime or offence, or to confess or accuse himself of any criminal matter whereby he might be liable to any censure, penalty, or punishment. 3 Bla. Com. 447.

OFFICIOUS WILL. A testament by which a testator leaves his property to his family. Sand. Just. Inst. 207.

OFFSET. See SET-OFF.

OFFSPRING. The word offspring in its proper and natural sense extends to any degree of lineal descendants and has the same meaning as issue. 32 L. J. Ch. 373.

OHIO. One of the states of the American Union.

Massachusetts, Connecticut and Virginia claimed, under their respective charters, the territory lying northwest of the river Ohio. At the solicitation of the continental congress, these claims were, soon after the close of the war of independence, ceded to the United States. Virginia, however, reserved the ownership of the soil of three million seven hundred thousand acres between the Scioto and the Little Miami rivers, for military bounties to the soldiers of her line who had served in the revolutionary war; and Connecticut reserved three million six hundred and sixty-six thousand acres in northern Ohio, now usually called the "Western Reserve." The history of these reservations, and of the several "purchases" under which land-titles have been acquired in various parts of the state, will be found in Albachi's Annals of the West, in the Preliminary Sketch of the History of Ohio, in the first volume of Chase's Statutes of Ohio, and in Swan's Land Laws of Ohio. The conflicting titles of the states having been extinguished, congress, on July 13, 1787, passed the celebrated ordinance for the government of the territory northwest of the river Ohio. 1 Curw. Rev. Stat. of Ohio 86. It provided for the equal distribution of the estates of intestates among their children, gave the widow dower as at common law, regulated the execution of wills and deeds, secured perfect religious toleration, the right of trial by jury, judicial proceedings according to the course of the common law, the benefits of the writ of habeas corpus, security against cruel and unusual punishments, the right of reasonable bail, the inviolability of contracts and of private property, and declared that "there shall be neither slavery nor involuntary servitude in the said territory, otherwise than in the punishment of crimes whereof the party shall have been duly convicted."

These provisions have been, in substance, incorporated into the constitution and laws of Ohio, as well as of the other states which have since been formed within "the territory." The ordinance has been held to be a mere temporary statute, which was abrogated by the adoption of the constitution of the United States. Palmer v. Cuyahoga Co., 3 McLean 226, Fed. Cas. No. 10,688; Pollard v. Hagan, 3 How. (U. S.) 212, 11 L. Ed. 565; Strader v. Graham, 10 How. (U. S.) 82, 13 L. Ed. 337. See ORDINANCE OF 1787.

On the 30th of October, 1802, congress passed an act making provision for the formation of a state constitution, under which, in 1803, Ohio was admitted into the Union, under the name of "the State of Ohio." This constitution was never submitted to a vote of the people. It continued to be the organic law of Ohio until September 1, 1851, when it was abrogated by the adoption of the present constitution.

The bill of rights which forms a part of this constitution contains the provisions common to such instruments in the constitutions of the different states. Such are the prohibitions against any laws impairing the right of peaceably assembling to consult for the common good, to bear arms, to have a trial by jury, to worship according to the dictates of one's own conscience, to have the benefit of the writ of habeas corpus, to be allowed reasonable bail, to be exempt from excessive fines and cruel and unusual punishment, not to be held to answer for a capital or otherwise infamous crime unless on presentment or indictment of a grand jury, to have a copy of the indictment, the aid of counsel, compulsory process for witnesses, a speedy and public trial, to be privileged from testifying against one's self, or from being twice put in jeopardy for the same offence. Provision is also made against the existence of slavery, against transporting offenders out of the state, against imprisonment for debt unless in cases of fraud, against granting hereditary honors, against quartering soldiers in private houses, for the security of persons from unreasonable arrest or searches, and for the freedom of speech and the press. Extensively amended in 1912.

OIL. Petroleum or rock oil is a mineral substance obtained from the earth by process of mining, and the land from which it is obtained is called mining land; Kelly v. Oil Co., 57 Ohio St. 317, 49 N. E. 399, 39 L. R. A. 765, 63 Am. St. Rep. 721; Gill v. Weston, 110 Pa. 313, 1 Atl. 921. It is a part of the realty; id.; Appeal of Stoughton, 88 Pa. 198. It was held not a mineral; 23 L. D. 222. This was reversed by act of congress which made oil lands patentable the same as placers; 23 L. D. 222, reversed by 25 L. D. 351.

But it is held that a reservation of "all timber suitable for sawing, also all minerals," will not include petroleum, the ordinary meaning of the word mineral overcoming the technical meaning; Dunham v. Kirkpatrick, 101 Pa. 36, 47 Am. Rep. 696.

A property owner has a right to drill for oil through a stratum of coal belonging to another; Chartiers B. C. Co. v. Mellon, 152 Pa. 286, 25 Atl. 597, 18 L. R. A. 702, 34 Am. St. Rep. 645. A contract giving the right to explore for oil, and if any be found, to sink wells, is a license only; Dark v. Johnston, 55 Pa. 164, 93 Am. Dec. 732. A lease of land with the right to bore for oil is a lease and not a sale of the oil; Duffield v. Hue, 129 Pa. 94, 18 Atl. 566.

Title under an oil and gas lease is inchoate and for purposes of exploration only until oil or gas is found. If none is found no estate vests in the lessee, and his title ends when the unsuccessful search is abandoned. If found then the right to produce becomes a vested right.

Where a lessee drilled a dry well, and removed substantially all his machinery therefrom, and did nothing further in the search, and asserted no title for nine years, until after a lease has been made to other parties, it was assumed as matter of law that the first lease was abandoned; Calhoon v. Neely, 201 Pa. 97, 50 Atl. 967.

Oil produced from wells on lands leased for oil purposes during the owner's life is income; Woodburn's Estate, 138 Pa. 606, 21 Atl. 16, 21 Am. St. Rep. 932. Where a life tenant united with a remainder-man in leasing new oil territory, the court appointed a trustee to hold and invest the royalties and pay the income to the life tenant, and at her death, the principal to the remainderman; Blakley v. Marshall, 174 Pa. 425, 34 Atl. 564. A life tenant cannot lease new oil territory, never operated before her title accrued; Marshall v. Mellon, 179 Pa. 371, 30 Atl. 201, 35 L. R. A. 816, 57 Am. St. Rep. 601.

When oil reaches a well and is produced at the surface, it becomes personal property; Kelly v. Oil Co., 57 Ohio St. 317, 49 N. E. 399, 39 L. R. A. 765, 63 Am. St. Rep. 721. As to whether one holding oil on storage who converts it to his use is guilty of larceny as bailee, see Hutchison v. Com., 82 Pa. 472.

It is a proper subject for police regulation; Red "C" Oil Co. v. Board of Agriculture, 222 U. S. 380, 32 Sup. Ct. 152, 56 L. Ed. 240.

OKLAHOMA. One of the United States, admitted to the Union November 16, 1907.

By the enabling Act of June 16, 1906, a constitution was adopted and a state government established covering the territory previously known as Oklahoma and the Indian Territory. The enabling act contains the provision that nothing contained in the state constitution shall be construed to limit or affect the right or authority of the government of the United States to make any law or regulation respecting the Indians, their lands, property or other rights by treaties, agreement, law or otherwise which it would have been competent to make if the act had never been passed. The purpose of this proviso was held not to repeal by implication existing laws made for Indian Territory; Ex parte Webb, 225 U. S. 683, 32 Sup. Ct. 769, 56 L. Ed. 1248. The portion of the state which had been called Indian Territory did not cease to be Indian country; U. S. Exp. Co. v. Friedman, 191 Fed. 679, 112 C. C. A. 219; Hallowell v. U. S., 221 U. S. 317, 31 Sup. Ct. 587, 55 L. Ed. 750. It includes all that portion of the United States known as the Indian Territory.

See INDIAN TRIBE.

OLD AGE PENSIONS. See PENSION.

OLD BAILEY. A prison in London, so called from the ancient bailey between Ludgate and Newgate. Bailey was the external wall of defence about a feudal castle.

OLD NATURA BREVIVM. The title of an English book, so called to distinguish it from Fitzherbert's work entitled Natura Brevium, after the publication of the latter. The Old Natura Brevium contains the writs most in use in the reign of Edward III., together with a short comment on the application and properties of each of them.

OLD STYLE. The mode of reckoning time in England until the year 1752, when the New Style, at present in use, and which had prevailed in the Roman Catholic countries of the continent since 1582, was introduced. According to the O. S., the year commenced on the 25th of March and every fourth year was a leap-year, instead of, as now, but 97 leap years in 400 years; Moz. & W.

OLD TENURES. The title of a small tract, which contains an account of the various tenures by which land was holden in the reign of Edward III. It was published in 1719, with notes and additions, with the 11th edition of the First Institutes, and reprinted in 8vo in 1764, by Serjeant Hawkins, in a selection of Coke's Law Tracts.

OLEOMARGARINE. Artificial butter made out of animal fat, milk, and other substances; imitation butter. Anderson's L. Dict.

Oleomargarine is a recognized article of food and commerce, and being thus a lawful article of commerce it cannot be wholly excluded from importation into a state from another state where it was manufactured, though the former state may so regulate the introduction as to insure purity, without having the power totally to exclude it; Schollenberger v. Pennsylvania, 171 U. S. 1, 18 Sup. Ct. 757, 43 L. Ed. 49. This case was followed in People v. Crawford Co., 62 Misc. 240, 114 N. Y. Supp. 945, where it was held that the law may validly prescribe that it shall be sold for what it actually is and that the introduction of substances merely to make it resemble butter and sell therefor may be prohibited.

The New Hampshire act prohibiting the sale of oleomargarine unless it is of a pink color is invalid as being, in necessary effect, prohibitory. The act is not an inspection law, it provides for no inspection, and apparently none was intended. It is an absolute prohibition of the sale of an article of commerce; Collins v. New Hampshire, 171 U. S. 30, 18 Sup. Ct. 768, 43 L. Ed. 60.

The Massachusetts act of March 10th, 1891, "to prevent deception in the manufacture and sale of imitation butter," in its application to the sales of oleomargarine artificially colored and brought into Massachusetts, is in conflict with the commerce clause of the federal constitution; Plumley v. Massachusetts, 155 U. S. 461, 15 Sup. Ct. 154, 39 L. Ed. 223.

An act prohibiting the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine of any shade or tint of yellow is invalid, it appearing that the product was perfectly healthful and free from coloring matter and that the result of the act was not to prevent fraud or to aid the public health, but to prohibit making a wholesome article; State v. Hanson, 118 Minn. 85, 136 N. W. 412, 40 L. R. A. (N. S.) 865, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 405.

An act forbidding the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine, made in imitation of yellow butter, is a valid exercise of the police power; Com. v. Huntley, 156 Mass. 236, 30 N. E. 1127, 15 L. R. A. 839.

A state has the power to determine whether to permit the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine within the state or entirely to forbid the same, so long as the legislation is therein confined; Powell v. Pennsylvania, 127 U. S. 678, 8 Sup. Ct. 992, 1257, 32 L. Ed. 253, explained in Schollenberger v. Pennsylvania, 171 U. S. 16, 18 Sup. Ct. 757, 43 L. Ed. 49.

Under its taxing power and in connection with the internal revenue system, congress has passed a law defining butter and oleomargarine and imposing a tax upon and regulating the sale, etc., of oleomargarine. See U. S. v. Eaton, 144 U. S. 677, 12 Sup. Ct. 764, 38 L. Ed. 591.

Such legislation does not infringe the constitutional guaranty of due process of law because its effect may be to suppress the manufacture of the article; McCray v. U. S., 195 U. S. 27, 24 Sup. Ct. 769, 49 L. Ed. 78, 1 Ann. Cas. 561; Cliff v. U. S., 195 U. S. 159, 25 Sup. Ct. 1, 49 L. Ed. 139.

In many of the states the manufacture and sale of this substance are prohibited by statute, unless made in a specified form and in such manner as will inform the buyer as to its real character.

In England, all packages must be marked, as must each parcel exposed for sale. See [1895] 2 Q. B. 657.

OLIGARCHY (Gr. ὀλίγος and ἀρχή. The government of a few). A name given to designate the power which a few citizens of a state have usurped, which ought by the constitution to reside in the people. Among the Romans, the government degenerated several times into an oligarchy,—for example, under the decemvirs, when they became the only magistrates in the commonwealth. See GOVERNMENT.

OLOGRAPH. See HOLOGRAPH; WILL.

OMISSION. The neglect to perform what the law requires.

When a public law enjoins on certain officers duties to be performed by them for the public, and they omit to perform them, they may be indicted: for example, supervisors of the highways are required to repair the public roads; the neglect to do so will render them liable to be indicted.

When a nuisance arises in consequence of an omission, it cannot be abated, if it be a private nuisance, without giving notice, when such notice can be given. See COMMISSION; NUISANCE.

OMNIA PERFORMAVIT (Lat. he has done all). In Pleading. A good plea in bar where all the covenants are in the affirmative. Bailey v. Rogers, 1 Greenl. (Me.) 189.

OMNIBUS. For all; containing two or more independent matters. Applied to a count in a declaration, and to a bill of legislation, and perhaps to a clause in a will, which comprises more than one general subject. Yeager v. Weaver, 64 Pa. 428; Parkinson v. State, 14 Md. 193, 74 Am. Dec. 522. See IN OMNIBUS.

OMNIUM (Lat.). In Mercantile Law. A term used to express the aggregate value of the different stock in which a loan is usually funded. 2 Esp. 361; 7 Term 630.

ON. As denoting contiguity or neighborhood, it may denote near to as well as at; Burnam v. Banks, 45 Mo. 349; and has been held to be interchangeable with upon. Sutton v. Com., 85 Va. 128, 7 S. E. 323. It is not equivalent to immediately on; Masters v. McHolland, 12 Kan. 25.

ON ACCOUNT OF WHOM IT MAY CONCERN, FOR WHOM IT MAY CONCERN. A clause in policies of insurance, under which all are insured who have an insurable interest at the time of effecting the insurance and who were then contemplated by the party effecting the insurance. 2 Pars. Marit. Law 30.

ON ALL FOURS. A phrase used to express the idea that a case at bar is in all points similar to another. The one is said to be on all fours with the other when the facts are similar and the same questions of law are involved. See IN OMNIBUS.

ON BEHALF. Where security is to be given on behalf of a person it cannot be given by the person himself. L. R. 4 C. P. 235.

ON BOARD. A devise of goods on board a ship may pass goods on board at the date of the will, but afterwards removed. 1 Ves. Sen. 271.

ON CALL. There is no legal difference between an obligation payable "on demand" and one payable "on call." Bowman v. McChesney, 22 Gratt. (Va.) 609.

ON DEMAND. A promissory note payable on demand is a present debt and is payable without demand. Young v. Weston, 39 Me. 494. It is payable the instant the note is signed; no demand is necessary prior to bringing an action; 2 M. & W. 461; 34 Ch. D. 566.

ON STAND. A term used in the law of landlord and tenant. A tenant of a farm who cannot carry away manure but has the right to sell it to his successor, is said to have the right of on stand on the farm for it till he can sell it; he may maintain trespass for the taking of it by the incoming tenant before it is sold. See 16 East 116.

ONE MAN COMPANY. See PROMOTERS.

ONERANDO PRO RATA PORTIONIS. A writ that lay for a joint tenant, or tenant in common, who was distrained for more rent than his proportion of the land came to. Reg. Orig. 182.

ONERARI NON (Lat. ought not to be burdened). In Pleading. The name of a plea by which the defendant says that he ought not to be charged. It is used in an action of debt; 1 Saund. 290, n. a.

ONERATIO. A lading; a cargo.

ONERIS FERENDI JUS (Lat. of bearing a burden). In Civil Law. The name of a servitude by which the wall or pillar of one house is bound to sustain the weight of the buildings of the neighbor.

The owner of the servient building is bound to repair and keep it sufficiently strong for the weight it has to bear. Dig. 8. 2. 23.

ONEROUS CAUSE. In Civil Law. A valuable consideration.

ONEROUS CONTRACT. In Civil Law. One made for a consideration given or promised, however small. La. Civ. Code, art. 1767.

ONEROUS GIFT. The gift of a thing subject to certain charges imposed by the giver on the donee. Pothier, Obl.

ONEROUS TITLE. Under the Spanish and Mexican law that which was created by a valuable consideration, as the payment of money, the rendition of services, and the like, or by the performance of conditions or payment of charges to which the property was subject. See Scott v. Ward, 13 Cal. 453.

ONOMASTIC. A term applied to a signature which is in a different handwriting from the body of the instrument. 2 Benth. Jud. Ev. 460.

ONUS EPISCOPALE. Ancient customary payments from the clergy to their diocesan bishop, of synods, pentacostals, etc.

ONUS IMPORTANDI. The charge of importing merchandise, mentioned in 12 Car. II. c. 28.

ONUS PROBANDI (Lat.). In Evidence. The burden of proof.

It is a general rule that the party who alleges the affirmative of any proposition shall prove it. It is also a general rule that the onus probandi lies upon the party who seeks to support his case by a particular fact: for example, when to a plea of infancy the plaintiff replies a promise after the defendant had attained his age, it is sufficient for the plaintiff to prove the promise, and it lies on the defendant to show that he was not of age at the time; 1 Term 648. But where the negative involves a criminal omission by the party, and, consequently, where the law, by virtue of the general principle, presumes his innocence, the affirmative of the fact is also presumed. See Hartwell v. Root, 19 Johns. (N. Y.) 345, 10 Am. Dec. 232; Hicks v. Martin, 9 Mart. O. S. (La.) 48, 13 Am. Dec. 304; Morgan v. Mitchell, 3 Mart. N. S. (La.) 576. The burden of proof of the want of mental capacity of a person at the time of his marriage is on those asserting it, in the absence of proof of a confirmed condition of lunacy or idiocy prior to such marriage; Nonnemacher v. Nonnemacher, 159 Pa. 634, 28 Atl. 439.

In general, wherever the law presumes the affirmative, it lies on the party who denies the fact to prove the negative; as when the law raises a presumption as to the continuance of life, the legitimacy of children born in wedlock, or the satisfaction of a debt.

The party on whom the onus probandi lies is entitled to begin, notwithstanding the technical form of the proceedings; 1 Stark. Ev. 584. See BURDEN OF PROOF; OPENING AND CLOSING; NEGATIVE.

OÖPHORECTOMY. The removal of the ovaries in which the female germinal element or ovum is produced. See VASECTOMY.

OPEN. To begin. He begins or opens who has the affirmative of an issue. 1 Greenl. Ev. § 74.

To open a case is to make a statement of the pleadings in a case, which is called the opening. This should be concise, very distinct, and perspicuous. Its use is to enable the judge and jury to direct their attention to the real merits of the case and the points in issue; 1 Stark. 439; 2 id. 317.

To vacate; to relieve a party who has an equitable right to such relief against a proceeding which is to him a formal or legal bar; to allow a re-discussion on the merits.

For example, to open a rule of court. 2 Chitty, Bail 265; 1 Mann. & G. 555; 7 Ad. & E. 519. To open a judgment or default; Taylor v. Place, 4 R. I. 324; Rogan v. Walker, 1 Wis. 631. See OPENING A JUDGMENT. To open an account; to make a judicial announcement, that a party, e. g. an executor, shall not be absolutely bound by the account he has rendered, but may show that it contains errors to his prejudice. To open a marriage settlement or an estate-tail; i. e. to allow a new settlement of the estate. To open biddings; i. e. to allow a re-sale. See OPENING BIDDINGS. To open a contract; Tucker v. Madden, 44 Me. 206; a highway; State v. County Ave. Com'rs, 37 N. J. L. 14.

OPEN A CREDIT. To accept or pay the draft of a correspondent who has not furnished funds. Pardessus, n. 296.

OPEN ACCOUNT. A running or unsettled account; not completely settled, but subject to future adjustment. Sheppard v. Wilkins, 1 Ala. 62; Dolhonde v. Laurans, 21 La. Ann. 406; Purvis v. Kroner, 18 Or. 414, 23 Pac 260.

OPEN COMMISSION. A commission without written interrogatories issued out of any one of certain courts of record, an issue of fact having been joined in that court, to take the testimony of witnesses, not within the state, but within the United States and Canada; N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 893, 894, 897. The application for an open commission will be denied where there is reason to believe that a commission with interrogatories will develop all the facts bearing upon the case. Dickinson v. Bush, 17 Weekly Dig. (N. Y.) 17.

OPEN COURT. A court formally opened and engaged in the transaction of all judicial functions. Hobart v. Hobart, 45 Ia. 501.

A court to which all persons have free access as spectators while they conduct themselves in an orderly manner.

The term is used in the first sense as distinguishing a court from a judge sitting in chambers or informally for the transaction of such matters as may be thus transacted. See CHAMBERS; COURT.

In the second sense, all courts in the United States are open; but in England, formerly, while the parties and probably their witnesses were admitted freely in the courts, all other persons were required to pay in order to obtain admittance. Stat. 13 Edw. I. cc. 42, 44; Barr. on the Stat. 126, 127. See Prin. of Pen. Law 165.

In most of the states the constitution provides that persons accused shall have a speedy public trial; Stimson, Am. Stat. L. § 131. This has been construed to mean that "the doors of the court-room are expected to be kept open, the public are entitled to be admitted, and the trial is to be public in all respects . . . with due regard to the size of the court-room and the conveniences of the court, the right to exclude objectionable characters and youth of tender years, and to do other things which may facilitate the proper conduct of the trial;" People v. Hartman, 103 Cal. 242, 37 Pac. 153, 42 Am. St. Rep. 108; in this case a conviction of assault with intent to commit rape was reversed because against defendant's objection all persons were excluded except the officers of the court and the defendant; id. In a trial of a civil case of trespass for adultery the judgment was reversed because all but parties and witnesses were excluded; Williamson v. Lacy, 86 Me. 80, 29 Atl. 943, 25 L. R. A. 506.

In California the court may direct the trial of issues of fact in private; Cal. Code, C. P. § 125; but this act does not authorize the court to forbid the publication of the testimony, and when such an order was made, an order of contempt against a newspaper publisher was reversed; In re Shortridge, 99 Cal. 526, 34 Pac. 227, 21 L. R. A. 755, 37 Am. St. Rep. 78. On a trial for assault with intent to kill, all persons were excluded except officers of the court, press reporters, and friends of defendant; the order was made on behalf of defendant, who was liable to be excited by a crowd, as well as to preserve order, and it was held that her right to a public trial was not violated; People v. Kerrigan, 73 Cal. 222, 14 Pac. 849.

In a suit for an injunction against the use of secret processes it was held error to exclude evidence of the details, as accurate knowledge on the subject is required before granting an injunction, but the embodiment of the secret in the injunction is not necessary; testimony taken in camera may be sealed, and used only when it becomes necessary to determine whether there has been a violation; Taylor I. & S. Co. v. Nichols, 73 N. J. Eq. 684, 69 Atl. 186, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 933, 133 Am. St. Rep. 753.

It was said by Lord Eldon that it was the uniform practice in chancery, as long as the court had existed, in the case of family disputes, on the application of counsel on both sides, to hear the same in the chancellor's private room, and that what was so done was not the act of the judge but of the parties; Coop. t. Eldon 106; in a later case, on application for a private hearing relating to the custody of a young lady who was a ward of the court, Lord Brougham directed the case to be heard in private on the assurance of counsel that such course was proper, notwithstanding that one party withheld his consent; 2 Russ. & M. 688; and it is noted that this course was frequently followed by the same judge; id. In a patent case, the court being of opinion that the patent was valid, permitted the defendant to state his secret process in camera; 24 Ch. D. 156; an application for an injunction to restrain a solicitor from disclosing confidential information was ordered to be heard in private without consent of defendant, upon the statement of plaintiff's counsel that in his opinion a public hearing would defeat the object of the action; 31 Ch. D. 55; 9 Ch. App. 522; but this will not be done without consent of both parties unless it is clear that such would be the result of a public hearing; id.

It has been held that suits for nullity of marriage or judicial separation may be heard in camera, but not a petition for dissolution of marriage; L. R. 1 P. & D. 640; this case was put upon the ground that the matter was controlled, to that result, by 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, § 22; but in a later case there was a distinct disapproval of the limitation, and it was said that as the ecclesiastical courts had the power to hear nullity suits in private when it was desirable for the sake of public decency, the same power must exist in other cases where it was required for the same reason; L. R. 3 P. & M. 230. It was held that under the English practice, a law court had power to try a case in camera, without a jury, when the parties consent; 53 J. P. 822.

In 4 Ch. D. 174, Jessel, M. R., considered "that the High Court of Justice had no power to hear cases in private even with the consent of the parties, except cases affecting lunatics or wards of court, or where a public trial would defeat the object of the action." The report of the case contains many interesting interpellations of the court during the argument.

Lord Esher, M. R., said in Pittard v. Oliver that as to proceedings in courts of justice it was for the interest of all the public to hear what takes place in court; [1891] 1 Q. B. 474, where it was held that where matters discussed in camera were privileged, the presence of reporters did not take away the privilege. And in another case the same judge said that "public policy requires that some hardship should be suffered by individuals rather than that judicial proceedings should be held in secret;" [1893] 1 Q. B. 65. Again, it was said by North, J., in holding the publication of proceedings in open court to be privileged, that "the general rule is an excellent one, that legal proceedings should be in public;" [1894] 3 Ch. 193, where it was held contempt to publish any account however meagre, and whether accurate or inaccurate, of a hearing in camera.

As long ago as 1829, Mr. Justice Bayley declared "that it is one of the essential qualities of a court of justice that its proceedings should be public, and that all parties who may be desirous of hearing what is going on, if there be room in the place for that purpose,—provided they do not interrupt the proceedings, and provided there is no specific reason why they should be removed,—have a right to be present for the purpose of hearing what is going on"; 10 B. & C. 237; it was there held that an action would be against a justice of the peace for excluding from his court the attorney of an absent defendant.

The subject was fully argued and considered in Scott v. Scott, [1913] A. C. 417, in the House of Lords and certain questions were finally settled. It was there held that a suit for nullity of marriage cannot be heard in camera. The only exceptions to the general rule prescribing publicity of courts are suits affecting wards, those in relation to lunatics, and thirdly, those where secrecy (as a secret process or discovery) is of the essence of the cause. The consent of the parties to try a case in camera does not give jurisdiction. Here, after a hearing in camera in the court below, one of the parties had exhibited to three persons copies of the testimony, and was adjudged to be in contempt. This judgment was reversed above. In his opinion Lord Shaw quoted Hallam as saying that "he ranks the publicity of judicial proceedings even higher than the rights of Parliament as a guaranty of public security" and proceeds: "There is no greater danger than that which proceeds little by little, under cover of rules of procedure, and at the instance of the judges themselves."

It has been pointed out that as to two of the exceptions above stated, infancy and lunacy, the jurisdiction of the court is parental or administrative. Even here Lord Shaw, partially disagreeing with the other judges, was of opinion that neither infants nor lunatics should be prohibited from publishing facts relating to themselves merely because they were elicited at a trial in camera. The English Children's Act 1908 and the Incest Act 1908 both provide that certain criminal trials under those acts should be held in camera.

The settled judgment of our ancestors and ourselves is that publicity in the administration of the law is on the whole worth more to society than it costs. Pollock, Expansion of C. L. 32.

A hearing in camera differs from one at chambers (q. v.); the former being a private hearing by a court and the latter a hearing by a judge not in a regular session of court.

See 15 Am. L. Rev. 427; People v. Murray, 89 Mich. 276, 50 N. W. 995, 14 L. R. A. 809, 28 Am. St. Rep. 294, where the subject is fully discussed. See IN CAMERA.

The subject is further treated under TRIAL.

OPEN ENTRY. See ENTRY.

OPEN FOR BUSINESS. A store is open for business when, according to custom, the door is locked after dark, but customers can get in by knocking. Sun Ins. Co. v. Jones, 54 Ark. 376, 15 S. W. 1034.

OPEN INSOLVENCY. The condition of a person having no property, within the reach of the law, applicable to the payment of any debt. Hardesty v. Kinworthy, 8 Blackf. (Ind.) 305.

OPEN LAW. The waging of law. Magna Carta, c. 21.

OPEN POLICY. An open policy is one in which the amount of the interest of the insured is not fixed by the policy, and is to be ascertained in case of loss. See POLICY.

OPEN SHOP. See LABOR UNION.

OPENING. In American Practice. The beginning. The commencement. The first address of the counsel.

The opening is made immediately upon the impanelling of the jury: it embraces the reading of such of the pleadings as may be necessary, and a brief outline of the case as the party expects to prove it, where there is a trial, or of the argument, where it is addressed to the court.

OPENING A COMMISSION. See COURTS OF ASSIZE AND NISI PRIUS.

OPENING A JUDGMENT. An act of the court by which a judgment is so far annulled that it cannot be executed, although it still retains some qualities of a judgment: as, for example, its binding operation or lien upon the real estate of the defendant.

The opening of the judgment takes place when some person having an interest makes affidavit to facts which, if true, would render the execution of such judgment inequitable. The judgment is opened so as to be in effect an award of a collateral issue to try the facts alleged in the affidavit; Lowrey v. Tracey, 6 W. & S. (Pa.) 493.

The rule to open judgment and let defendant into a defence is peculiar to Pennsylvania practice, and is a clear example of the system of administering equity under common-law forms. By practice it is confined to judgments by default and those entered on warrants of attorney to confess, etc. It was, however, devised in the absence of a court of chancery, as a substitute for a bill in equity, to enjoin proceedings at law; Mitchell's Motions and Rules; Cochran v. Eldridge, 49 Pa. 365.

OPENING A RULE. The act of restoring or recalling a rule which has been made absolute to its conditional state, as a rule nisi, so as to re-admit of cause being shown against the rule. Brown.

OPENING AND CLOSING. After the evidence is all in, the plaintiff has the privilege of the opening and closing or summing up speeches to the jury; in the closing address he should confine himself to a reply to defendant's speech. It seems doubtful whether it is within the discretion of the court to interfere with this established mode of procedure; at least it should only be done with great caution; Barden v. Briscoe, 36 Mich. 254; Millerd v. Thorn, 56 N. Y. 402; Royal Ins. Co. v. Schwing, 87 Ky. 410, 9 S. W. 242. But in some courts it is the practice for the defendant's counsel to open to the jury, followed by the plaintiff's counsel.

Under the federal practice the right rests in the discretion of the court and is not the subject of error; where the defendant pleaded a partial defense in an action for the price of machinery, but did not, in his answer, unequivocally admit its sale and delivery, it was not an abuse of discretion to permit the plaintiff to open and close; Florence Oil & R. Co. v. Farrar, 109 Fed. 254, 48 C. C. A. 345, Caldwell and Sanborn, C. JJ., and Adams, D. J. Where the burden of proof was upon one of two defendants, and as to the other it was on the plaintiff, the right to open was in the discretion of the trial judge; Simons v. Pearson, 61 S. W. 259, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 1707; so in the distribution of an intestate's estate where several claimed as next of kin, to the exclusion of all others; Sorensen v. Sorensen, 68 Neb. 483, 94 N. W. 540, 98 N. W. 837, 100 N. W. 930, 103 N. W. 455; where defendant offers no proof, he is entitled to open and close; Moore v. Carey, 116 Ga. 28, 42 S. E. 258; contra, in a personal injury case; De Maria v. Cramer, 70 N. J. L. 682, 58 Atl. 341.

See Best's Right to Begin and Reply; 14 Yale L. J. 54; TRIAL; Steinkuehler v. Wempner, 169 Ind. 154, 81 N. E. 482, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 674 (will cases).

In English Practice. The address made immediately after the evidence is closed. Such address usually states—first, the full extent of the plaintiff's claims, and the circumstances under which they are made, to show that they are just and reasonable; second, at least an outline of the evidence by which those claims are to be established; third, the legal grounds and authorities in favor of the claim or of the proposed evidence; fourth, an anticipation of the expected defence, and statement of the grounds on which it is futile, either in law or justice, and the reasons why it ought to fail. But the court will sometimes restrict counsel from an anticipation of the defence; 3 Chitty, Pr. 881.

OPENING BIDDINGS. Ordering a re-sale. When estates are sold under decree of equity to the highest bidder, the court will, on notice of an offer of a sufficient advance on the price obtained, open the biddings, i. e. order a re-sale. But this will not generally be done after the confirmation of the certificate of the highest bidder. So, by analogy, a re-sale has been ordered of an estate sold under bankruptcy. Sugd. Vend. 90; Lefevre v. Laraway, 22 Barb. (N. Y.) 167; Wright v. Cantzon, 31 Miss. 514.

In England, by stat. 30 & 31 Vict. c. 48, s. 7, the opening of biddings is now allowed only in cases of fraud or misconduct in the sale; Wms. R.-P. The courts of this country also will not generally open the biddings merely to obtain a higher price, but require irregularity, fraud, or gross inadequacy of price to be shown.

OPENING OF A POLICY OF INSURANCE. The question has been made whether, and in what cases, if any, the valuation in a valued policy shall be opened. The valuation, being a part of the agreement of the parties, is not to be set aside as between them in any case. The question is, how shall it be treated where only a part of the subject insured and valued is put at a risk, and also in the settlement of a particular average? and the answer is the same in both cases: viz., when the proportion or rate per centum put at risk or lost is ascertained, the agreed valuation of the whole is to be applied to the part put at risk or the proportion lost, pro rata. 2 Phill. Ins. 1203.

OPERA. See COPYRIGHT; MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS.

OPERARI. Such tenants under feudal tenures, as held some portion of land by the duty of performing bodily labor and servile works for their lord.

OPERATING EXPENSES. They are, broadly speaking, those which it is reasonably necessary to incur for the purpose of keeping up a railroad (to which the term is commonly applied) as a going concern, or, as it is sometimes expressed, those which conduce to the conservation of the property. Short, Railw. Bonds § 653.

The term, when used in a reorganization plan, does not include money spent on steel rail betterments, or on steamers owned by the company to make them more efficient, or on the purchase of freight engines and coal cars; Mackintosh v. R. Co., 34 Fed. 582. Under a Massachusetts statute, it was held that damage to property at a railroad crossing must be considered as operating expenses; Smith v. R. Co., 124 Mass. 154. Judgments against a receiver for damages to persons by negligence are a part of the operating expenses; St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Holbrook, 73 Fed. 112, 19 C. C. A. 385. All outlays made by a receiver in the ordinary course, with a view to advance and promote the business of the road and render it profitable and successful, are fairly within the receiver's discretion; this will include not only keeping the road and rolling stock in repair, but also providing such additional accommodations, stock, and instrumentalities as the necessities of the business may require; Cowdrey v. R. Co., 1 Woods 331, Fed. Cas. No. 3,293. The court will authorize the purchase of new rails; Phinizy v. R. Co., 62 Fed. 771; and the payment of reasonable office rent; Cowdrey v. R. Co., 1 Woods 331, Fed. Cas. No. 3,293; and the payment of interest on money which a receiver has been obliged to borrow; id.; and of traffic balances on connecting roads; Meyer v. Johnston, 64 Ala. 603; and rebates on freight; Cowdrey v. R. Co., 1 Woods 331, Fed. Cas. No. 3,293.

Damages paid to the owners of goods lost in transportation and for injury to property during a receivership will be allowed in the receiver's account of earnings; Cowdrey v. R. Co., 93 U. S. 352, 23 L. Ed. 950; such claims stand upon the same footing as the other expenses of administration; Short, Railw. Bonds § 669; Mobile & O. R. Co. v. Davis, 62 Miss. 271; Kain v. Smith, 80 N. Y. 458.

Earnings diverted to the payment of interest on receiver's certificates made payable out of the corpus, or to the costs or allowances in the foreclosure suit or any other matter not properly operating expenses, must be returned to the current earnings fund; Blair v. R. Co., 25 Fed. 232. See MORTGAGE; REORGANIZATION.

OPERATION OF LAW. The obligation of law. U. S. v. Hammond, 1 Cra. C. C. 19; Fed. Cas. No. 15,293; its practical working and effect. Geebrick v. State, 5 Ia. 496. A term applied to indicate the manner in which a party acquires rights without any act of his own: as, the right to an estate of one who dies intestate is cast upon the heir at law, by operation of law; when a lessee for life enfeoffs him in reversion, or when the lessee and lessor join in a feoffment, or when a lessee for life or years accepts a new lease or demise from the lessor, there is a surrender of the first lease by operation of law; 5 B. & C. 269; 2 B. & Ad. 119. See DESCENT; PURCHASE.

OPERATIVE. A workman; one employed to perform labor for another. See 3 C. Rob. 237; Mason v. The Blaireau, 2 Cra. (U. S.) 240, 270, 2 L. Ed. 266. See FACTORY ACTS; MASTER AND SERVANT.

OPERATIVE PART. That part of a conveyance, lease, mortgage or other instrument, which carries out its main object.

OPERATIVE WORDS. In a deed, or lease, the words which effect the transaction of which the instrument is the evidence; the terms generally used in a lease are "demise and lease," but any words clearly indicating an intention of making a present demise will suffice; Wms. R. P. 196; Bacon, Abr. (K) 161.

OPINION. In Evidence. An inference or conclusion drawn by a witness as distinguished from facts known to him as facts.

It is the province of the jury to draw inferences and conclusions; and if witnesses were in general allowed to testify what they believe as well as what they know, the verdict would sometimes prove not the decision of the jury, but that of the witnesses. Hence the rule that, in general, the witness cannot be asked his opinion upon a particular question; Patterson v. Colebrook, 29 N. H. 94; Dawson v. Callaway, 18 Ga. 573; Morehouse v. Mathews, 2 N. Y. 514; De Witt v. Barly, 17 N. Y. 340.

Where all the facts of a transaction are clearly stated by a witness, his inference therefrom is inadmissible; Gentry v. Singleton, 128 Fed. 679, 63 C. C. A. 231.

While it is incompetent for a witness to state his opinion upon a question of law, where the intent with which an act done by him is drawn in question he may testify as to such intent; 12 Repr. 664.

Some confusion in the application of this rule arises from the delicacy of the line which divides that which is to be regarded as matter of observation from that which is matter of judgment founded upon observation. Thus, it is held that an unprofessional witness may testify to the fact that a person whom he saw was intoxicated, whether he is able to state all the constituent facts which amount to drunkenness or not; People v. Eastwood, 14 N. Y. 562; Stanley v. State, 26 Ala. 26; McKillop v. Ry. Co., 53 Minn. 532, 55 N. W. 739; he may also testify as to the apparent condition of a party as to sobriety, shortly before the commission of an offence; People v. Monteith, 73 Cal. 7, 14 Pac. 373. He is also competent to testify whether a person with whom he is familiarly associated is in good or bad health and hearing, is lame or has the natural use of his limbs, and also whether on certain occasions he was unconscious; Chicago City Ry. Co. v. Van Vleck, 143 Ill. 480, 32 N. E. 262; also whether a certain person has African blood in his veins; Hare v. Board of Education, 113 N. C. 9, 18 S. E. 55. But, on the other hand, insanity or mental incapacity cannot, in general, be proved by the mere assertion of an unprofessional witness; De Witt v. Barly, 17 N. Y. 340; Gehrke v. State, 13 Tex. 568; but the opinion of non-expert witnesses may be given as to mental capacity where the facts upon which the opinions are based are disclosed; Johnson v. Culver, 116 Ind. 278, 19 N. E. 129; Keithley v. Stafford, 126 Ill. 507, 18 N. E. 740; State v. Potts, 100 N. C. 457, 6 S. E. 657; Frizzell v. Reed, 77 Ga. 724; Fishburne v. Ferguson's Heirs, 84 Va. 87, 4 S. E. 575.

So handwriting may be proved by being recognized by a witness who has seen other writings of the party in the usual course of business, or who has seen him write; Steph. Ev. § 51; Titford v. Knott, 2 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 211; Snider v. Burks, 84 Ala. 53, 4 South. 225. See Brown v. Hall, 85 Va. 146, 7 S. E. 182. But, on the other hand, the authorship of an anonymous article in a newspaper cannot be proved by one professing to have a knowledge of the author's style; Lee v. Bennett, How. App. Cas. 187.

The mere opinions of witnesses, without the facts on which they are based, are of very little value, especially where the witnesses are constitutionally or by interest biased and not impartial; Pannell v. Tobacco Warehouse Co., 113 Ky. 630, 68 S. W. 662, 82 S. W. 1141; Kerr v. Lunsford, 31 W. Va. 659, 8 S. E. 493, 2 L. R. A. 668.

From necessity, an exception to the rule of excluding opinions is made in questions involving matters of science, art, or trade, where skill and knowledge possessed by a witness, peculiar to the subject, give a value to his opinion above that of any inference which the jury could draw from facts which he might state; People v. Bodine, 1 Denio (N. Y.) 281; Reed v. Hobbs, 2 Scam. (Ill.) 297; Woodman v. Barker, 2 N. H. 480; Alfonso v. U. S., 2 Story 421, Fed. Cas. No. 188. Such a witness is termed an expert; and he may give his opinion in evidence; Whart. Ev. 440. Experts alone can give an opinion based on facts shown by others, assuming them to be true; State v. Potts, 100 N. C. 457, 6 S. E. 657.

The following reference to some of the matters in which the opinions of expert witnesses have been held admissible will illustrate this principle. The unwritten or common law of foreign countries may be proved by the opinion of witnesses possessing professional knowledge; Strother v. Lucas, 6

Pet. (U. S.) 763, 8 L. Ed. 573; Packard v. Hill, 2 Wend. (N. Y.) 411; Raynham v. Canton, 3 Pick. (Mass.) 293; Frith v. Sprague, 14 Mass. 455; Dennison v. Hyde, 6 Conn. 508; Dougherty v. Snyder, 15 S. & R. (Pa.) 87, 16 Am. Dec. 520; the degree of hazard of property insured against fire; Hobby v. Dana, 17 Barb. (N. Y.) 111; whether a picture is a good likeness or not; Barnes v. Ingalls, 39 Ala. 193; handwriting; Hopkins v. Meguire, 35 Me. 78; Bowman v. Sanborn, 25 N. H. 87; mechanical operations, the proper way of conducting a particular manufacture, and the effect of a certain method; Price v. Powell, 3 N. Y. 322; negligence of a navigator, and its effect in producing a collision; Cook v. Parham, 24 Ala. 21; sanity; Stuckey v. Bellah, 41 Ala. 700; People v. Lake, 12 N. Y. 358; impotency; 3 Phill. Eccl. 14; value of chattels; Dixon v. Barclay, 22 Ala. 370; Carpenter v. Wait, 11 Cush. (Mass.) 257; Nickley v. Thomas, 22 Barb. (N. Y.) 652; value of land; Dwight v. County Com'rs, 11 Cush. (Mass.) 201; Clark v. Baird, 9 N. Y. 183; value of services; Beekman v. Platner, 15 Barb. (N. Y.) 550; speed of a railway train; Salter v. R. Co., 59 N. Y. 631; benefit to real property by laying out a street adjacent thereto; Shaw v. Charlestown, 2 Gray (Mass.) 107; survey marks identified as being those made by United States surveyors; Brantly v. Swift, 24 Ala. 390; as to the location of surveys; Jackson v. Lambert, 121 Pa. 182, 15 Atl. 502; Hockmoth v. Des Grand Champs, 71 Mich. 520, 39 N. W. 737; seaworthiness; 10 Bingh. 57; whether a person appeared sick or well; Higbie v. Ins. Co., 53 N. Y. 603; of the effect of a personal injury; Evansville & T. H. R. Co. v. Crist, 116 Ind. 446, 19 N. E. 310, 2 L. R. A. 450, 9 Am. St. Rep. 865; Reed v. R. Co., 56 Fed. 184; whether fright would produce heart trouble; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Latimer, 128 Ill. 163, 21 N. E. 7; whether a child would have been born alive if he had received medical assistance in time; Western U. Tel. Co. v. Cooper, 71 Tex. 507, 9 S. W. 598, 1 L. R. A. 728, 10 Am. St. Rep. 772; as to the distance at which it is safe to stop before going upon a crossing; New York, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. R. Co., 116 Ind. 60, 18 N. E. 182. So an engineer may be called to say what, in his opinion, is the cause of a harbor having been blocked up; 3 Dougl. 158. Opinion evidence as to the age of a person, from his appearance, is not admissible; Morse v. State, 6 Conn. 9; but see Walker v. State, 25 Tex. App. 448, 8 S. W. 644; Elsner v. K. & L. of Honor, 98 Mo. 640, 11 S. W. 991; nor is it in cases involving adultery, on the question of guilt or guilty intent; see Cox's Adm'r v. Whitfield, 18 Ala. 738; nor can an opinion be given as to the meaning of an instrument where the words or phrases are not technical; Hill v. Mfg. Co., 79 Ga. 105, 3 S. E. 445; Brendon v. Worley, 8 Misc. 253, 28 N. Y. Supp. 557; nor in a matter requiring no peculiar knowledge or experience; Ft. Pitt Gas Co. v. Contract Co., 123 Fed. 63, 59 C. C. A. 281; nor as to the technical meaning of a word used in a written instrument; Butte & B. C. M. Co. v. Ore Purchasing Co., 121 Fed. 524, 58 C. C. A. 634.

It is to be observed, however, that the principle of admitting such opinions is taken with the qualifications necessary to make, as far as possible, the judgment of the jury, and not that of the witness, the final means of determining the issue. Thus opinions of experts are not admissible upon the question of damages; Lincoln v. R. Co., 23 Wend. (N. Y.) 425; Chandler v. Bush, 84 Ala. 102, 4 South. 207; nor whether damages were occasioned by negligence; East Tennessee, V. & G. R. R. v. Wright, 76 Ga. 532; Hughes v. Doyle, 91 Tex. 422, 44 S. W. 64; National Biscuit Co. v. Nolan, 138 Fed. 6, 70 C. C. A. 436; and experts are always confined to opinions within the scope of their professions, and are not allowed to give opinions on things of which the jury can as well judge; Gibson v. Williams, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 320; Kinne v. Kinne, 9 Conn. 102, 21 Am. Dec. 732; Rochester v. Chester, 3 N. H. 349; Law v. Scott, 5 Harr. & J. (Md.) 438; Lynch v. U. S., 138 Fed. 536, 71 C. C. A. 59; a physician will not be permitted to give his opinion based entirely on statements out of court made to him by persons other than the patient; Heald v. Thing, 45 Me. 392; Wetherbee's Ex'rs v. Wetherbee's Heirs, 38 Vt. 454.

A distinction is also to be observed between a feeble impression and a mere opinion or belief; Crowell v. Bank, 3 Ohio St. 406; Brown v. Cady, 19 Wend. (N. Y.) 477. The testimony of experts is not admissible upon matters of judgment within the knowledge and experience of ordinary jurymen; De Berry v. R. Co., 100 N. C. 310, 6 S. E. 723. The opinions of a witness are not admissible as to one's agency; Larson v. Inv. Co., 51 Minn. 141, 53 N. W. 179.

Upon an issue, in a suit upon a life insurance policy, as to the insanity of the insured at the time he took his own life, the opinion of a non-professional witness as to his mental condition, in connection with a statement of the facts and circumstances, within his personal knowledge, upon which that opinion is based, is competent evidence; Connecticut M. L. Ins. Co. v. Lathrop, 111 U. S. 613, 4 Sup. Ct. 533, 28 L. Ed. 536; and also to disprove a representation in an insurance policy that applicant was temperate, witnesses may state whether he was temperate or intemperate, after giving the source of their information; Taylor v. Annuity Co., 145 N. C. 383, 59 S. E. 139, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 583, 13 Ann. Cas. 248.

Opinion evidence is not admissible as to whether the mode of coupling cars was careless and not the best way of performing the act; Seese v. R. Co., 39 Fed. 487. There are cases where the opinion of witnesses may be asked as to distance and other circumstances, but such questions are not permissible when it is practicable to draw out with exactness the data upon which a judgment must be founded; Slack v. Black, 109 Mass. 499. It must be left somewhat to the trial court; Manufacturers' Acc. Indemnity Co. v. Dorgan, 58 Fed. 948, 7 C. C. A. 581, 22 L. R. A. 620. Whether a particular position on a wharf is a safe place for a wharfinger to stand while a steamboat is approaching is not matter for expert testimony; Inland & S. Coasting Co. v. Tolson, 139 U. S. 551, 11 Sup. Ct. 653, 35 L. Ed. 270.

Opinion evidence is admissible upon a question concerning the effect of grading a street on the value of the abutting property; Swift & Co. v. Newport News, 105 Va. 108, 52 S. E. 821, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 404; so as to the opening of a public highway; Lowe v. Ryan, 94 Ind. 450.

Mere declarations of opinion, which would be inadmissible if the declarant were a witness, are inadmissible as dying declarations; State v. Burnett, 47 W. Va. 731, 35 S. E. 983; State v. O'Shea, 60 Kan. 772, 57 Pac. 970.

See EXPERTS.

In Practice. The statement of reasons delivered by a judge or court for giving the judgment which is pronounced upon a case. The judgment itself is sometimes called an opinion; and sometimes the opinion is spoken of as the judgment of the court.

The ultimate step taken by the court is commonly called a decision, or, in common law cases, a judgment; and in equity cases, a decree; where the opinion is unanimous it is, in America, often termed a "per curiam opinion."

In England judgment is commonly used for opinion, and "per curiam" is sometimes applied to any opinion of the whole court. Brief Making, by Lile and others, 2d Ed. by R. W. Cooley, 102.

A declaration, usually in writing, made by a counsel to the client of what the law is, according to his judgment, on a statement of facts admitted to him.

An opinion is in both the above cases a decision of what principles of law are to be applied in the particular case, with the difference that judicial opinions pronounced by the court are law and of authority, while the opinions of counsel, however eminent are merely advice to his client or argument to the court.

Where there are several judges, and they do not all agree in the disposition of the cause, the opinion of the majority is termed the opinion of the court. The opinion of the minority is termed the dissenting opinion. The opinions of the courts, collected and provided with such preliminary statements of facts and of the arguments of counsel as may be necessary in each case to an understanding of the decision, make up the books of reports.

Opinions are said to be judicial or extra-judicial. A judicial opinion is one which is given on a question which is actually involved in the matter brought before the judge for his decision; an extra-judicial opinion is one which, although given by a judge in deciding a case, is not necessary to the judgment; Vaugh. 382; 1 Hale, Hist. 141; and, whether given in or out of court, is no more than the prolatum of him who gives it, and has no legal efficacy; Steiner v. Coxe, 4 Pa. 28. Where a point is essential to the decision rendered, it will be presumed that it was duly considered, and that all that could be urged for or against it was presented to the court. But if it appears from the report of the case that such point was not taken or inquired into at all, there is no ground for this presumption, and the authority of the case is proportionably weakened; Molony v. Dows, 8 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 316.

Where two or more points are discussed in the opinions delivered on the decision of a cause, and the determination of either point in the manner indicated in such opinions would sustain the judgment pronounced by the court, the judges concurring in the judgment must be presumed to have concurred in such opinions upon all the points so discussed, unless some dissent is expressed or the circumstances necessarily lead to a different conclusion; James v. Patten, 6 N. Y. 9, 55 Am. Dec. 376. Where a judgment is reversed upon a part only of the grounds on which it went, it is still deemed an authority as to other grounds not questioned.

The opinion of the court assigning reasons for its conclusions cannot be treated as a special finding; British Q. Min. Co. v. Min. Co., 139 U. S. 222, 11 Sup. Ct. 523, 35 L. Ed. 147.

Counsel should, in giving an opinion, as far as practicable, give, first, a direct and positive opinion, meeting the point and effect of the question, and, if the question proposed is properly divisible into several, treating it accordingly. Second, his reasons, succinctly stated, in support of such opinion. Third, a reference to the statutes or decisions on the subject. Fourth, when the facts are susceptible of a material difference in statement, a suggestion of the probability of such variation. When an opinion is sought as a guide in respect to maintaining an action or defence, some other matters should be noticed: as, Fifth, any necessary precautionary suggestions in reference to the possibility of a fatal defect in the evidence, arising from the nature of the case. Thus, where some important fact is stated as resting principally on the statement of the party interested, if by the law of the place such party is incompetent to testify respecting it, a suggestion ought to be made to inquire how that fact is to be proved. Sixth, a suggestion of the proper mode of proceeding, or the process or pleadings to be adopted.

In English and American law, the opinions of counsel, however eminent, are not entitled to any weight with the court, as evidence of the law. While the court will deem it their duty to receive such opinions as arguments, and as such entitled to whatever weight they may have, they will not yield to them any authority; Steiner v. Coxe, 4 Pa. 28, per Gibson, C. J. In many cases, where a client acts in good faith under the advice of counsel, he may on that ground be protected from a liability which the law might otherwise have imposed upon him.

The attorney-general of the United States gives to the president his opinion and advice upon questions of law whenever required; and upon the request of the head of any of the executive departments of the government, he is required to give his opinion on questions of law arising in the administration of the department; R. S. §§ 354, 356. See JUDGE; EXPERT; OPINION OF JUDGES; PRECEDENT; LEGISLATIVE POWER.

OPINION OF JUDGES. The federal judiciary can be called upon only to decide controversies brought before them in legal form.

The constitution of Massachusetts authorizes each branch of the legislature and the governor and council to call on the supreme court justices for opinions "upon important questions, and upon solemn occasions," and substantially the same provision occurs in the constitutions of Colorado, Florida, Maine, New Hampshire, Rhode Island, South Dakota and Hawaii. Such opinions have been given with reluctance; 63 Mass. 604; and they are generally held to be purely advisory and not binding as precedents, although they have been held such; In re Constitutionality of Senate Bill No. 65, 12 Colo. 466, 21 Pac. 478. A Minnesota statute authorizing advisory opinions was held unconstitutional as devolving upon the judges duties not strictly judicial; In re Senate of State, 10 Minn. 78 (Gil. 56).

There have been refusals by the courts to give opinions even where required by the constitution of the state; In re Construction of Constitution, 3 S. D. 548, 54 N. W. 650, 19 L. R. A. 575; In re Constitutionality of Senate Bill No. 65, 12 Colo. 466, 21 Pac. 478; Answer of Justices, 122 Mass. 600; id., 148 Mass. 623, 21 N. E. 439; id., 150 Mass. 598, 24 N. E. 1086. The general basis of these refusals has been that it is for the judges to determine whether the occasion is within the constitutional provision.

The Delaware constitution formerly had a provision authorizing the governor to enquire of the judges touching questions of constitutional law; the legislature, by reso-tion, asked their opinion as to its powers to change the basis of representation for the legislature. The judges gave separate opinions (Laws 1883), but one or more of them stated that they did so only out of respect.

Where a coroner came into court and asked the opinion of the court as to his official duties, Thayer, P. J., said: "I have no hesitation in expressing my opinion in regard to the question which the coroner has propounded to the court." Com. v. Taylor, 11 Phila. (Pa.) 387. This was followed in Coroners Duties, 20 D. R. (Pa.) 685, by Sulzberger, P. J.

In Idaho, the constitution requires the supreme court judges to report annually to the governor as to defects and omissions in existing laws.

It has been held that the courts are the judges of whether the questions presented to them for their opinion fall within the scope of the law, and, generally, whether the exigency requires them to act. The court usually require that the questions shall be matters of public law and not those involving merely private rights; see Thayer, Leg. Essays 45; Story, Const.; 6 A. & E. Encyc. 1065.

See LEGISLATIVE POWER.

They have no judicial force and cannot bind the body receiving them; Green v. Com., 12 Allen (Mass.) 163; Taylor v. Place, 4 R. I. 362. A contrary view was taken in 70 Me. 583; but see, contra, State v. Cleveland, 58 Me. 573; Opinion of the Justices, 72 Me. 562; and see In re Senate Bill No. 65, 12 Colo. 466, 21 Pac. 478; 24 Am. L. Rev. 369, a full article by Hugo A. Dubuque.

The Judicial Committee of the Privy Council may be asked questions by authority of the Crown. The House of Lords, when exercising judicial functions, may summon the judges and ask them questions; though its right to do so in its legislative capacity probably has ceased to exist. Any practice by which the Crown could question the judges, even if it ever existed, is now almost, or altogether, obsolete. The last instance was in 1760, when Lord Mansfield furnished answers to questions with reluctance. 106 L. T. 916 (Privy Council).

It is said that it is not easy to see how the opinion of the judges could govern the opinion of the House of Lords; MacQueen, App. Jurisd. of H. of L. 49.

A Canadian statute authorizing the Governor in Council to call upon the Supreme Court to answer questions of law or fact is not ultra vires. 106 L. T. 916 (Privy Council).

In an interesting article in 13 Harv. L. Rev. 358, by Mr. Veeder, he states that from 1827 to 1899 there were 125 cases in which the judges assisted the House of Lords and that of this number there are hardly more than a score of cases which are in any sense landmarks. Though the judges are called upon to advise, yet the decision rests with the House alone; 10 Cl. & F. 413, citing an instance where the 12 judges had given their opinion, and the Lord Chancellor satisfied the House that they were all wrong.

OPIUM. The importation of opium into the United States is made unlawful after April 1, 1909, except for medicinal purposes.

The prohibition or regulation of the sale of opium is within the police power of a state; State v. Lee, 137 Mo. 143, 38 S. W. 583.

OPPOSITE. Over against, standing in front or facing. Bradley v. Wilson, 58 Me. 360. See Sunbury S. F. & T. B. Co. v. Grant (Pa.) 15 Atl. 706; 23 L. J. Ch. 45.

OPPRESSION. An act of cruelty, severity, unlawful exaction, domination, or excessive use of authority. U. S. v. Deaver, 14 Fed. 597.

OPPRESSOR. One who having public authority uses it unlawfully to tyrannize over another: as, if he keep him in prison until he shall do something which he is not lawfully bound to do. To charge a magistrate with being an oppressor is actionable; 1 Stark. Sl. 185.

OPPROBRIUM. In Civil Law. Ignominy; shame; infamy.

OPTION. Choice; election.

A contract by which A, in consideration of the payment of a certain sum to B, acquires the privilege of buying from or selling to B, specified securities or property at a fixed price within a certain time. Story v. Salomon, 71 N. Y. 420; Harris v. Tumbridge, 83 N. Y. 93, 38 Am. Rep. 398.

"A unilateral agreement, binding upon the optioner from the date of its execution, but [which] does not become a contract inter partes, in the sense of an absolute contract to convey on the one side and to purchase on the other, until exercised by the optionee;" Barnes v. Rea, 219 Pa. 279, 68 Atl. 836. An option is not a sale, but a right to exercise a privilege, and only when that privilege has been exercised in the manner provided in the agreement does it become a binding contract; id. It is said that options have been universally construed by the courts as binding agreements to keep an offer open; 18 Harv. L. Rev. 457; Perry v. Paschal, 103 Ga. 134, 29 S. E. 703; but Prof. Langdell takes the view that an option is a complete unilateral contract, which can never become a bilateral contract, and differs entirely from an offer; 18 Harv. L. Rev. 1, 11.

As to how far an option to buy land works a conversion, see id. 1.

Where notes are given to cover losses on deals in options in grain, a part of which is to be delivered, the illegality of a part taints the whole, the consideration being entire; Miles v. Andrews, 40 Ill. App. 153. See Dwight v. Badgley, 75 Hun 174, 27 N. Y.

Supp. 107; [1892] 2 Q. B. 484; Scott v. Brown, 54 Mo. App. 606. The sale of commodities to be delivered at a future day is not per se unlawful where the parties intend in good faith to comply with the terms of the contract; Mohr v. Miesen, 47 Minn. 228, 49 N. W. 862; Morrissey v. Broomal, 37 Neb. 766, 56 N. W. 383. See WAGER; CONTRACTS.

These options are of three kinds, viz.: "calls," "puts," and "straddles," or "spread eagles." A call gives A the option of calling or buying from B or not certain securities. A put gives A the option of selling or delivering to B or not. A straddle is a combination of a put and a call, and secures to A the right to buy of, or sell to, B or not. Where neither party, at the time of making the contract, intends to deliver or accept the shares, but merely to pay differences according to the rise or fall of the market, the contract is void either by virtue of statute or as contrary to public policy; 11 C. B. 538. In each transaction the law looks primarily at the intention of the parties; and the form of the transaction is not conclusive; Story v. Salomon, 71 N. Y. 420; 5 M. & W. 466; North v. Phillips, 89 Pa. 250. Option contracts are not prima facie gambling contracts; Story v. Salomon, 71 N. Y. 420. But see Lyon v. Culbertson, 83 Ill. 33, 25 Am. Rep. 349. See Dos Passos, Stock-Brokers.

OPTIONAL WRIT. An original writ in the alternative, commanding either to do a thing or show cause why it has not been done. 3 Bla. Com. 274; Finch, Law 257.

OPUS LOCATUM (Lat.). In Civil Law. A work (i. e. the result of work) let to another to be used. A work (i. e. something to be completed by work) hired to be done by another. Vicat, Voc. Jur. Opus, Locare; L. 51, § 1, D. Locat.; L. 1, § 1, D. ad leg. Rhod.

OPUS MANIFICIUM (from Lat. opus, work, manus, hand). Manual labor. Fleta, l. 2, c. 48, § 3.

OR. A disjunctive particle.

As a particle, or is often construed and, and and construed or, to further the intent of the parties, in legacies, devises, deeds, bonds, and writings; Watkins v. Sears, 3 Gill (Md.) 492; 3 Greenl. Ev. §§ 18, 25; 1 Wills. Exrs. 932; 5 Co. 112 a; Cro. Jac. 322; Courter v. Stagg, 27 N. J. Eq. 305; Dumont v. U. S., 98 U. S. 143, 25 L. Ed. 65; Kanne v. R. Co., 33 Minn. 419, 23 N. W. 854; but its more natural meaning, when used as a connective, is to mark an alternative and present a choice, implying an election to do one of two things; New Haven Young Men's Institute v. New Haven, 60 Conn. 32, 22 Atl. 447. It sometimes has the same effect as the word "nor"; In re Cody's Estate, 20 N. Y. Supp. 16.

Where an indictment is in the alternative, as forged or caused to be forged, it is bad for uncertainty; 1 Y. & J. 22. But a description of a horse as of a brown or bay color, in an indictment for larceny of such horse, is good; State v. Gilbert, 13 Vt. 647; and so an indictment describing a nuisance as in the highway or road; Respublica v. Caldwell, 1 Dall. (Pa.) 150, 1 L. Ed. 77. See State v. R. Co., 28 Vt. 583. So, "break or enter," in a statute defining burglary, means "break and enter"; Rolland v. Com., 82 Pa. 326, 22 Am. Rep. 758; Com. v. Griffin, 105 Mass. 185.

The word or is used in the sense of to wit, that is, in explanation of what precedes, and making it signify the same thing. Thus, in an indictment, bank bills or promissory notes, they meant the same thing; Brown v. Com., 8 Mass. 59.

ORACULUM (Lat.). In Civil Law. The name of a kind of decision given by the Roman emperors. Thus, adoption by the emperor's divine wisdom (per sacrum oraculum).

ORAL. Spoken, in contradistinction to written: as, oral evidence, which is evidence delivered verbally by a witness. Steph. Ev. 135. Formerly pleadings were put in viva voce, or orally; Kerr's Act. Law. When a pleading sets up a contract, and does not allege it was in writing, it will be taken to be oral; Schreiber v. Butler, 84 Ind. 583.

ORANDO PRO REGE ET REGNO. An ancient writ which issued, while there was no regular collect for a sitting parliament, to pray for the peace and good government of the realm.

ORATOR. The party who files a bill. Oratrix, is used of a female plaintiff. These words are disused in England, the customary phrases now being plaintiff and petitioner.

In Roman Law. An advocate. Code l. 3. 33. 1.

ORCINUS LIBERTUS. In Roman Law. A freedman who obtained his liberty by the direct operation of the will or testament of his deceased master was so called, being the freedman of the deceased (orcinus), not of the hæres. Hunter, Rom. L. 176.

ORDAIN. To make an ordinance, to enact a law.

The preamble to the constitution of the United States declares that the people "do ordain and establish this constitution for the United States of America." The third article of the same constitution declares that "the judicial power shall be vested in one supreme court, and in such inferior courts as the congress may from time to time ordain and establish." See Martin v. Hunter, 1 Wheat. (U. S.) 304, 324, 4 L. Ed. 97; McCulloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 316, 403, 4 L. Ed. 579.

To confer on a person the holy orders of priest or deacon. Kibbe v. Antram, 4 Conn. 134.

ORDAINERS. An elected body of 21 members appointed by Parliament in 1310 to make ordinances for the good of the realm. The whole administration passed into their hands. Stubbs, Early Plantagenets.

ORDEAL. An ancient superstitious mode of trial.

When in a criminal case the accused was arraigned, he might select the mode of trial either by God and his country, that is, by jury, or by God only, that is, by ordeal.

The trial by ordeal was either by fire or by water, and perhaps in less important forms. Those who were tried by the former passed barefooted and blindfolded over nine hot glowing ploughshares, or were to carry burning irons in their hands, and accordingly as they escaped or not they were acquitted or condemned. The water ordeal was performed either in hot or cold water. In cold water, the parties suspected were adjudged innocent if their bodies were not borne up by the water contrary to the course of nature; and if after putting their bare arms or legs into scalding water they came out unhurt, they were taken to be innocent of the crime.

It was supposed that God would, by the mere contrivance of man, exercise his power in favor of the innocent. 4 Bla. Com. 342; See Hurtado v. California, 110 U. S. 529, 4 Sup. Ct. 111, 292, 28 L. Ed. 232.

It is said to have opened the door to corruption, and that convictions were hard to get. It was condemned by the Lateran Council of 1215 and prohibited in England by writ addressed to certain itinerant justices in 1219. 1 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 143.

For a detailed account of the trial by ordeal, see Herbert, Antiq. of Inns of Court 146.

See Lea, Superstition and Force; Thayer, Evidence; 2 Poll. & Maitl. Hist. E. L.; 2 Besant, London.

A man of good repute could usually clear himself by oath; but circumstances of grave suspicion or previous bad character would drive the defendant to stand trial by ordeal. Trial by battle was a late, or Norman institution. Pollock, Sel. Essays in Anglo-Amer. L. Hist. 93.

ORDEFFE or ORDELFE. A liberty whereby a man claims the ore found in his own land; also, the ore lying under land. Cowell.

ORDELS. A kind of purgation, one by fire and one by water. Cowell.

ORDENAMIENTO. In Spanish Law. An order from the sovereign and differing from a cedula in form and in the mode of its promulgation. Schm. Civ. L. Introd. 93, n.

ORDER. Command; direction.

An informal bill of exchange or letter of request requiring the party to whom it is addressed to deliver property of the person making the order to some one therein described.

A designation of the person to whom a bill of exchange or negotiable promissory note is to be paid. See Treat v. Stanton, 14 Conn. 445; Dakin v. Graves, 48 N. H. 45; Hinnemann v. Rosenback, 39 N. Y. 98. This order, in the case of negotiable paper, is usually by indorsement, and may be either express, as, "Pay to C D," or implied merely, as by writing A B [the payee's name].

See INDORSEMENT; STORE ORDERS.

In French Law. The act by which the rank of preferences of claim, among creditors who have liens over the price which arises out of the sale of an immovable subject, is ascertained. Dalloz, Dict.

In the Practice of Courts. An order is any direction of a court or judge made or entered in writing, and not included in a judgment. N. Y. Code of Proc. § 400; Berryhill v. Smith, 51 Ia. 127, 50 N. W. 495. But a decree is often called an order. See DECREE. For distinction between order and requisition, see Mills v. Martin, 19 Johns. (N. Y.) 7.

In Governmental Law. By this expression is understood the several bodies which compose the state. In ancient Rome, for example, there were three distinct orders: namely, that of the senators, that of the patricians, and that of the plebeians.

In the United States there are no orders of men; all men are equal in the eye of the law. See RANK.

ORDER IN COUNCIL. An order by the sovereign with the advice of the privy council.

Orders in council are either prerogative, or issued under parliamentary authority. The former, if derogating from an act of parliament, are void, but, subject to this rule, the ancient rights of the crown, so far as they have actually been exercised with fairly definite continuity, still remain. Any exercise of the prerogative in new directions might not be tolerated by parliament. As to the other class, statutes frequently delegate either to the crown (the executive) or even to the minister of a department charged with carrying out an act, the power to make rules and orders under it. The difference between orders in council and those made by a single minister is more apparent than real; the form and contents are usually settled by the departments concerned; the approval by the privy council is a pure formality. Jenks, Hist. E. L. 187.

See PRIVY COUNCIL.

ORDER NISI. A conditional order, which is to be confirmed unless something be done, which has been required, by a time specified. Eden, Inj. 122.

ORDER OF DISCHARGE. In England, an order made under the Bankruptcy Act of 1869, by a court of bankruptcy, the effect of which is to discharge a bankrupt from all debts, claims, or demands provable under the bankruptcy. Robson, Bkcy.; Whart. Lex.

ORDER OF FILIATION. The name of a judgment rendered by two justices, having jurisdiction in such case, in which a man therein named is adjudged to be the putative father of a bastard child, and it is further adjudged that he pay a certain sum for its support.

The order must bear upon its face—first, that it was made upon the complaint of the township, parish, or other place where the child was born and is chargeable; second, that it was made by justices of the peace having jurisdiction; 1 Salk. 122, pl. 6; 2 Ld. Raym. 1197; third, the birthplace of the child; fourth, the examination of the putative father and of the mother, but it is said the presence of the putative father is not requisite if he has been summoned; Cald. 308; fifth, the judgment that the defendant is the putative father of the child; Dougl. 662; sixth, that he shall maintain the child as long as he shall be chargeable to the township, parish, or other place, which must be named; 1 Salk. 121, pl. 2; but the order may be that the father shall pay a certain sum weekly as long as the child is chargeable to the public; Vent. 210; seventh, it must be dated, signed, and sealed by the justices. Such order cannot be vacated by two other justices; Carpenter v. Whitman, 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 208. See Donely v. Rockefeller, 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 253; Harrington v. Ferguson, 2 Blackf. (Ind.) 42.

ORDER OF REVIVOR. In English Practice. An order as of course for the continuance of an abated suit. It superseded the bill of revivor. See 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 52. Whart. Lex.

ORDERS. Rules made by a court or other competent jurisdiction. The formula is generally in these words: It is ordered, etc.

The instructions given by the owner to the captain or commander of a ship, which he is to follow in the course of the voyage.

Rules regulating the procedure of the High Court of Justice in England. They were made by judges under statutory powers and have the force of a statute.

ORDERS OF THE DAY. Matters which the house of commons may have agreed beforehand to consider on any particular day, are called the "orders of the day," as opposed to original motions. May's Parl. Prac. Orders of the day are also known to the parliamentary practice of this country; Cush. Pr. Leg. Assemblies 1512.

ORDINANCE. A law; a statute; a decree.

Municipal ordinances are laws passed by the governing body of a municipal corporation for the regulation of the affairs of the corporation. The term ordinance is now the usual denomination of such acts, although in England and in some states, the technically more correct term by-law is in common and approved use. The main feature of such enactments is that they are local, as distinguished from the general applicability of the state laws; hence, the word law, with the prefix by, should in strictness be preferred to the word ordinance; Horr. & Bemis, Mun., Pol. Ord. 1. See Bills v. Goshen, 117 Ind. 221, 20 N. E. 115, 3 L. R. A. 261; BY-LAWS.

They are not in a constitutional sense, public laws, but mere local rules or by-laws, police or domestic regulations, devoid in many respects of the characteristics of public or general laws; McInerney v. Denver, 17 Colo. 302, 29 Pac. 516.

This word is more usually applied to the laws of a corporation than to the acts of the legislature. The following account of the difference between a statute and an ordinance is from Bacon's Abridgment, Statute (A). "Where the proceeding consisted only of a petition from parliament and an answer from the king, these were entered on the parliament roll; and if the matter was of a public nature, the whole was then styled an ordinance; if, however, the petition and answer were not only of a public but a novel nature, they were then formed into an act by the king, with the aid of his council and judges, and entered on the statute roll." See Co. Litt. 159 b, Butler's note; 3 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law 146.

According to Lord Coke, the difference between a statute and an ordinance is that the latter has not had the assent of the king, lords, and commons, but is made merely by two of these powers. Co. 4th Inst. 25. See Barrington, Stat. 41, note (x).

A resolution of a council is but another name for an ordinance, and if it is a legislative act it is immaterial whether it is called a resolution or an ordinance, so long as the requirements essential to the validity of an ordinance be observed; Waln's Heirs v. Philadelphia, 99 Pa. 330; but if the action is merely declaratory of the will of the corporation, it is proper to act by resolution, which is more in the nature of a ministerial act; Alma v. Bank, 60 Fed. 203. 8 C. C. A. 564, 19 U. S. App. 622.

A municipal ordinance not passed under legislative authority, is not a law of the state within the meaning of the constitutional prohibition against state laws impairing the obligation of contracts; Hamilton G. L. & C. Co. v. Hamilton, 146 U. S. 258, 13 Sup. Ct. 90, 36 L. Ed. 963; but if properly adopted under a power granted by the state legislature, it is to be regarded as an act of the state within the fourteenth amendment; North American C. S. Co. v. Chicago, 211 U.

S. 306, 29 Sup. Ct. 101, 53 L. Ed. 195, 15 Ann. Cas. 276.

Equity will not restrain a city council from passing an ordinance allowing a gas company to lay pipes in its streets, although it has granted the exclusive privilege to do so to another company; Montgomery G.-L. Co. v. Montgomery, 87 Ala. 245, 6 South. 113, 4 L. R. A. 616. An illegal ordinance may be enjoined before passage; Roberts v. Louisville, 92 Ky. 95; 17 S. W. 216, 13 L. R. A. 844; or the enforcement of an invalid ordinance; Rushville v. Gas Co., 132 Ind. 575, 28 N. E. 853, 15 L. R. A. 321.

While it is not per se negligence for a railroad company to run its cars at a higher rate of speed than the limit specified in a city ordinance, yet the fact that it did so in the particular case may be taken into consideration by the jury, with other evidence, in ascertaining whether or not the defendant was negligent; Lederman v. R. Co., 165 Pa. 118, 30 Atl. 725, 44 Am. St. Rep. 644. In Mahan v. Transfer Co., 34 Minn. 29, 24 N. W. 293, it was held that running a railroad train at a speed exceeding the limit fixed by ordinance was evidence of negligence which should go to the jury. That it is negligence per se is held in Schlereth v. R. Co., 96 Mo. 509, 10 S. W. 66; South & N. A. R. Co. v. Donovan, 84 Ala. 141, 4 South. 142; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Esten, 178 Ill. 197, 52 N. E. 954. (Also where the rate of speed is fixed by statute; Dodge v. R. Co., 34 Ia. 276.) An ordinance as to the right of way between two street cars is not conclusive of the question of negligence; it is merely evidence of negligence on the part of the driver of a car whose duty under it was to give way; Connor v. Traction Co., 173 Pa. 602, 34 Atl. 238.

An ordinance requiring an opening in a street to be guarded is admissible in evidence in an action against a city for injuries sustained by falling into such opening; McNerney v. Reading City, 150 Pa. 611, 25 Atl. 57.

An ordinance which has the effect of denying to the owner of property the right to conduct a lawful business thereon is invalid, unless the business is of such a noxious or offensive character that the health, safety, or comfort of the community require its exclusion from the neighborhood; Ex parte Whitwell, 98 Cal. 73, 32 Pac. 870, 19 L. R. A. 727, 35 Am. St. Rep. 152; this does not extend to an asylum for the treatment of mild forms of insanity; id.; or to a laundry; In re Hong Wah, 82 Fed. 623.

The burden of proving the unreasonableness of an ordinance is upon him who denies its validity; Trenton Horse R. Co. v. Trenton, 53 N. J. L. 132, 20 Atl. 1076, 11 L. R. A. 410; Twilley v. Perkins, 77 Md. 252, 26 Atl. 286, 19 L. R. A. 632, 39 Am. St. Rep. 408.

A copy of an ordinance having the seal of the city attached is admissible in evidence without further proof; 113 Mo. 395.

See MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS; NUISANCE; POLICE POWERS; McQuillin, Ordinances.

ORDINANCE OF 1647. A law passed by the Colony of Massachusetts, still in force, in a modified form, whereby the state owns the great ponds within its confines, which are held in trust for public uses. Watuppa Reservoir Co. v. Fall River, 147 Mass. 548, 18 N. E. 465, 1 L. R. A. 466. See LAKE.

ORDINANCE OF 1648. A law of England relating to admiralty jurisdiction. See Bened. Adm. § 99. It expired in 1660.

ORDINANCE OF 1681. An ordinance of France relating to maritime affairs. See Bened. Adm. § 173.

ORDINANCE OF 1787. A statute for the government of the Northwest Territory. See OHIO.

It has no force in Illinois except as incorporated in its constitution; Dixon v. People, 168 Ill. 179, 48 N. E. 108, 39 L. R. A. 116.

ORDINANCES OF EDWARD I. Two laws and ordinances published by Edward I. in the second year of his reign, at Hastings, relating to admiralty jurisdiction. These are said to have been the foundation of a consistent usage for a long time. See Bened. Adm. § 55.

ORDINARY. In Ecclesiastical Law. An officer who had original jurisdiction in his own right, and not by deputation.

In England, the ordinary was an officer who has immediate jurisdiction in ecclesiastical causes. Co. Litt. 344. A bishop is an ordinary, and archbishops are the ordinaries of the whole province. Also an archdeacon; and an officer of the royal household.

The executor legitimus "deriveth his authoritie from the law," who is the bishop or ordinary of every diocese. The executor dativus "deriveth his authoritie from the bishop or ordinarie," who is the person usually known as the administrator. 2 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 447. It was not the ordinary who administered the estate, but his representative.

See EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

In the United States, the ordinary possesses, in those states where such officer exists, powers identical with those usually vested in the courts of probate. In South Carolina, the ordinary was a judicial officer; Hays v. Harley, 1 Mill, Const. (S. C.) 267; Boggs v. Hamilton, 2 Mill, Const. (S. C.) 384; but the office no longer exists in South Carolina, where they have now a probate court. Georgia retains courts of ordinary; also New Jersey. See COURTS OF ORDINARY.

ORDINARY CALLING. Those things which are repeated daily or weekly in the course of business. Ellis v. State, 5 Ga. App. 615, 63 S. E. 588.

ORDINARY CARE. That degree of care which men of ordinary prudence exercise in taking care of their own persons or property. Story, Bailm. 11; Smith v. Whittier, 95 Cal. 279, 30 Pac. 529; Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Thillman, 143 Ill. 127, 32 N. E. 529, 36 Am. St. Rep. 359; Cohn v. Kansas City, 108 Mo. 387, 18 S. W. 973; Cronk v. R. Co., 3 S. D. 93, 52 N. W. 420. It can only be determined by the circumstances of each particular case whether ordinary care was used. This degree of care is said to be required of bailees for the mutual benefit of bailor and bailee; Whitney v. Lee, 8 Metc. (Mass.) 91; Bizzell v. Booker, 16 Ark. 308; Neal v. Gillett, 23 Conn. 437, 443; Foster v. Goddard, 40 Me. 64; The Farmer v. McCraw, 26 Ala. 203, 72 Am. Dec. 718; 36 E. L. & E. 506. See Bird v. Everard, 4 Misc. 104, 23 N. Y. Supp. 1008; Zell v. Dunkle, 156 Pa. 353, 27 Atl. 38; BAILEE; NEGLIGENCE; CARE.

ORDINARY NEGLIGENCE. The want of such care and diligence as reasonably prudent men, generally, in regard to the subject-matter of inquiry, would use to prevent or avoid an injury. Chicago, K. & W. R. Co. v. Fisher, 49 Kan. 460, 30 Pac. 462. See GROSS NEGLIGENCE.

ORDINARY SKILL. Such skill as a person conversant with the matter undertaken might be reasonably supposed to have. 11 M. & W. 113; Percy v. Millaudon, 8 Mart. N. S. (La.) 68, 75; Boon v. Murphy, 108 N. C. 187, 12 S. E. 1032. See NEGLIGENCE.

One who undertakes to act in a professional or other clearly defined capacity is bound to exercise the skill appropriate to such capacity; Webb, Pollock, Torts 26; though the undertaking be gratuitous; Leighton v. Sargent, 31 N. H. 119, 64 Am. Dec. 323.

ORDINATION. The act of conferring the orders of the church upon an individual. See ORDAIN.

ORDINATIONE CONTRA SERVIENTES. A writ that lay against a servant for leaving his master contrary to the ordinance of 23 & 24 Edw. III.

ORDINIS BENEFICIUM. See BENEFICIUM ORDINIS.

ORDINUM FUGITIVI. Those of the religious who deserted their houses, and, throwing off the habits, renounced their particular order in contempt of their oath and other obligations. Par. Antiq. 388.

ORDNANCE DEBENTURES. Bills which were issued by the Board of Ordnance on the treasurer of that office for the payment of stores, etc.

ORDO JUDICIORUM. The order of judgment; the rule by which the due course of hearing each cause was prescribed. 4 Reeves, Hist. Eng. L. 17.

ORDONNANCE DE LA MARINE. See CODE.

ORE LEAVE. A right to dig and take ore from land. Ege v. Kille, 84 Pa. 340.

ORE TENUS (Lat.). Verbally; orally.

Formerly the pleadings of the parties were ore tenus; and the practice is said to have been retained till the reign of Edward III. 3 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law 95; Steph. Pl., Andr. ed. § 59. And see Bracton 372 b.

In chancery practice, a defendant may demur at the bar ore tenus; 3 P. Wms. 370; if he has not sustained the demurrer on the record; 1 Swanst. 288; Mitf. Pl., Tyler's ed. 310; 6 Ves. 779; 8 id. 405; 17 id. 215.

OREGON. One of the Pacific coast states of the American Union, and the thirty-third state admitted therein.

The territory called Oregon from the early name of its principal river—now called the Columbia—originally included all the country on the Pacific coast west of the Rocky mountains, and north of the 42d and south of the 49th parallel of north latitude. From 1818 to 1846, this country was subject to the joint occupancy of the subjects and citizens of Great Britain and the United States, under a disputed claim of title, which was settled by the treaty of June 15, of the latter year, in favor of the United States.

As early as 1841 the American and British occupants west of the Cascade mountains commenced to organize a government for their protection. These efforts resulted in the establishment of the "Provisional Government of Oregon" by a popular vote on July 5, 1845, consisting of an executive, legislative (one house), and judicial department, the officers of which were chosen and supported by the voluntary action of the citizens and subjects of both nations. On March 3, 1849, this government was superseded by the territorial government provided by congress in the act of August 14, 1848. On September 27, 1850, congress passed the "donation act," giving the settlers the land held by them under the provisional government—640 acres to a married man and his wife, and 320 to a single man.

In 1857 a state constitution was formed and ratified by the people, under which a portion of the territory was admitted into the Union on February 14, 1859, on an equal footing with the other states. There were amendments in 1902, 1906 and 1908. The initiative, referendum and recall are adopted.

ORFGILD (Sax. orf, cattle, gild, payment. Also called cheappgild). A payment for cattle, or the restoring them. Cowell.

A restitution made by the hundred or county of any wrong done by one that was in pledge. Lambard, Archaion 125, 126.

A penalty for taking away cattle. Blount.

ORGANIC LAW. The fundamental law or constitution of a state or nation. See LAW. An act of congress providing for the admission of a new state is usually termed an organic act, and sometimes an enabling act.

ORIGINAL. An authentic instrument which is to serve as a model or example to be copied or imitated.

Originals are single or duplicate: single when there is but one; duplicate, when there are two. In the case of printed documents, all the impressions are originals, or in the nature of duplicate originals, and any copy will be primary evidence; 2 Stark. 130. But see Swelgart v. Lowmarter, 14 S. & R. (Pa.) 200. See TELEGRAPH; PHOTOGRAPH; PRESS COPY.

When an original document is not evidence at common law, and a copy of such original is made evidence by an act of the legislature, the original is not therefore made admissible evidence by implication; 2 Campb. 121, n.

Not deriving authority from any other source: as, original jurisdiction, original writ, original bill, and the like.

ORIGINAL AND DERIVATIVE ESTATES.

An original estate is the first of several estates, bearing to each other the relation of a particular estate and a reversion. It is contrasted with a derivative estate, which is a particular interest carved out of another estate of larger extent. 1 Pres. Est. *123.

ORIGINAL BILL. A bill relating to a matter not before brought before the court by the same parties, standing in the same interests. Mitf. Eq. Pl. 33.

Proceedings in a court of chancery are either commenced by way of information, when the matter concerns the state or those under its protection, or by original petition or bill when the matter does not concern the state or those under its protection. The original bill states simply the cause of complaint, and asks for relief. It is composed of nine parts; Story, Eq. Pl. 7; and is the foundation of all subsequent proceedings before the court. See 1 Dan. Ch. Pr., 6th Am. ed. *314; BILL.

ORIGINAL CONSTRUCTION. This term, as distinguished from repairs, has a technical meaning in relation to railroads, and is that construction of bridges, etc., that is necessary to be done before the railroad can be opened, not such structures as are intended to replace worn-out counterparts. Cleveland, C. & S. Ry. Co. v. Trust Co., 86 Fed. 73.

ORIGINAL CONVEYANCES (sometimes called primary conveyances). Those conveyances by means whereof the benefit or estate is created or first arises: viz. feoffment, gift, grant, lease, exchange, partition. 2 Bla. Com. 309; 1 Steph. Com., 11th ed. 464.

ORIGINAL ENTRY, BOOKS OF. The first entry made by a merchant, tradesman, or other person in his account-books, charging another with merchandise, materials, work, or labor, or cash, on a contract made between them.

Such an entry, to be admissible as evidence, must be made in a proper book. In general, the books in which the first entries are made, belonging to a merchant, tradesman, or mechanic, in which are charged goods sold and delivered or work and labor done, are received in evidence. There are many books which are not evidence, a few of which will be here enumerated. A book made up by transcribing entries made on a slate by a journeyman, the transcript being made on the same evening, or sometimes not until nearly two weeks after the work was done, was considered as not being a book of original entries; Kessler v. McConachy, 1 Rawle (Pa.) 435; Hartley v. Brookes, 6 Whart. (Pa.) 189. A book purporting to be a book of original entries, containing an entry of the sale of goods when they were ordered, but before delivery, is not a book of original entries; Rhoads v. Gaul, 4 Rawle (Pa.) 404, 27 Am. Dec. 277. And unconnected scraps of paper, containing, as alleged, original entries of sales by an agent, on account of his principal, and appearing on their face to be irregularly kept, are not to be considered as a book of original entries; Thomson v. McKelvey, 13 S. & R. (Pa.) 126; contra, Smith v. Smith's Ex'x, 4 Harring. (Del.) 532. A notched stick kept as a tally was admitted to prove items of different amounts indicated by different cuts and notches; Rowland v. Burton, 2 Harring. (Del.) 288.

The entry must be made in the course of business, and with the intention of making a charge for goods sold or work done; it ought not to be made after the lapse of one day; Petrie v. Lynch's Adm'r, 1 N. & McC. (S. C.) 130; Curren v. Crawford, 4 S. & R. (Pa.) 5. Memoranda of sales found in an account-book are competent, when made contemporaneously with orders, by a witness knowing them to state correctly the facts; The Sylvan Stream, 35 Fed. 314.

The entry must be made in an intelligible manner and not in figures or hieroglyphics which are understood by the seller only; Rhoads v. Gaul, 4 Rawle (Pa.) 404, 27 Am. Dec. 277. A charge made in the gross as "190 days work;" Petrie v. Lynch's Adm'r, 1 N. & McC. (S. C.) 130; or "for medicine and attendance," or "thirteen dollars for medicine and attendance on one of the General's daughters in curing the whooping-cough;" Hughes v. Hampton, 2 Tread. Const. (S. C.) 745, were rejected. An entry of goods without carrying out any prices proves, at most, only a sale; and the jury cannot, without other evidence, fix any price; Hagaman v. Case, 4 N. J. L. 370. The charges should be specific and denote the particular work or service charged as it arises daily, and the quantity, number, weight, or other distinct designation of the materials or articles sold or furnished, and attach the price and value to each item; Hughes v. Hampton, 2 Tread. Const. (S. C.) 745; Petrie v. Lynch's Adm'r, 1 N. & McC. (S. C.) 130.

The entry must, of course, have been made by a person having authority to make it; Rhoads v. Gaul, 4 Rawle (Pa.) 404, 27 Am. Dec. 277; and with a view to charge the party; Walter v. Bollman, 8 Watts (Pa.) 545.

The entry must be made contemporaneously with the delivery of the goods; Burley v. Bank, 111 U. S. 216, 4 Sup. Ct. 341, 28 L. Ed. 406; Wells v. Hobson, 91 Mo. App. 379; McKnight v. Newell, 207 Pa. 562, 57 Atl. 39; Schnellbacher v. Plumbing Co., 108 Ill. App. 486; if made before the property in the goods has passed, the book is not admissible in evidence; Laird v. Campbell, 100 Pa. 159; nor is it if made subsequently; Schnellbacher v. Plumbing Co., 108 Ill. App. 486.

The proof of the entry must be made by the person who made it. If made by the seller, he is competent to prove it from the necessity of the case, although he has an interest in the matter in dispute; Beach v. Mills, 5 Conn. 496; Vosburgh v. Thayer, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 461; Poultney v. Ross, 1 Dall. (Pa.) 239, 1 L. Ed. 117. When made by a clerk, it must be proved by him. But in either case, when the person who made the entry is out of the reach of the process of the court, as in the case of death, or absence from the state, the handwriting may be proved by a person acquainted with the handwriting of the person who made the entry; Hay v. Kramer, 2 W. & S. (Pa.) 137; if he is absent, proof must first be made that he cannot be found; Railway Co. v. Henderson, 57 Ark. 402, 21 S. W. 878. But the plaintiff was not competent to prove the handwriting of a deceased clerk who made the entries; 1 Bro. App. liii. A book containing entries in defendant's handwriting of payments by him to payee in her lifetime, on the note in action, is not admissible as evidence in defendant's favor; Wells' Adm'r v. Ayers, 84 Va. 341, 5 S. E. 21.

The books and original entries, when proved by the supplementary oath of the party, are prima facie evidence of the sale and delivery of goods, or of work and labor done; Ducoign v. Schreppel, 1 Yeates (Pa.) 347; May v. Brownell, 3 Vt. 463; Herlock's Adm'r v. Riser, 1 McCord (S. C.) 481; Bowers v. Dunn, 2 Root (Conn.) 59. But they are not evidence of money lent or cash paid; Bradley v. Goodyear, 1 Day (Conn.) 104; or of the time a vessel lay at the plaintiff's wharf; Wilmer v. Israel, 1 Browne (Pa.) 257; or of the delivery of goods to be sold on commission; Murphy v. Cress, 2 Whart. (Pa.) 33.

These entries are sometimes evidence in suits between third parties; Nicholls v. Webb, 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 326, 5 L. Ed. 628; 2 P. & D. 573; Welsh v. Barrett, 15 Mass. 380; Halliday v. Martinet, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 168, 11 Am. Dec. 262; New-Haven County Bk. v. Mitchell, 15 Conn. 206; Patton's Adm'r v. Ash, 7 S. & R. (Pa.) 116; 1 Y. & C. 53; and also in favor of the party himself; Cogswell v. Dolliver, 2 Mass. 217, 3 Am. Dec. 45; Slade v. Teasdale, 2 Bay (S. C.) 172; Lamb v. Hart, id. 362; Burnham's Adm'r v. Adams, 5 Vt. 313; Anchor Mill Co. v. Walsh, 108 Mo. 277, 18 S. W. 904, 32 Am. St. Rep. 600.

ORIGINAL JURISDICTION. See JURISDICTION.

ORIGINAL PACKAGE. The casing in which imported merchandise is kept and handled in course of transportation, whether hogsheads, bales, bottles, or boxes.

The package delivered by the shipper to the carrier at the initial point of shipment in the exact condition in which it was shipped. In the case of liquors in bottles, if the bottles are shipped singly, each is an original package, but if a number are fastened together and marked, or are together in a box, etc., such box, etc., constitutes the original package; Guckenheimer v. Sellers, 81 Fed. 997; State v. Winters, 44 Kan. 723, 25 Pac. 235, 10 L. R. A. 616.

An original package is a bundle put up for transportation and usually consists of a number of things bound together and convenient for handling; State v. Board of Assessors, 46 La. Ann. 145, 15 South. 10, 49 Am. St. Rep. 318, a case of imports and not of interstate commerce.

An original package, trade in which is protected by the federal constitution, is such form and size of package as is used by purchasers or shippers for the purpose of securing both convenience in handling and security in transportation of merchandise between dealers in the ordinary course of commerce; Com. v. Schollenberger, 156 Pa. 201, 27 Atl. 30, 22 L. R. A. 155, 36 Am. St. Rep. 32.

"The term original package is not defined by any statute and is simply a convenient form of expression * * * to indicate that a license tax could not be exacted of an importer of goods from a foreign country, who disposes of such goods in the form in which they were imported." Cook v. Marshall Co., 196 U. S. 261, 25 Sup. Ct. 233, 49 L. Ed. 471. The size of the package does not seem to be capable of definition, but it cannot be held that any package which could not be commercially transported from one state to another as a separate importation could be considered as an original package. Id.

A definition which is quoted as "commonly accepted and believed by us to be correct" is that "It is a bundle put up for transportation or commercial handling and usually consisting of a number of things bound together convenient for handling and conveyance"; McGregor v. Cone, 104 Ia. 465, 73 N. W. 1041, 39 L. R. A. 484, 65 Am. St. Rep. 522; where there is possibly as good an expression of the matter as may be found: "The original package then, is that package which is delivered by the importer to the carrier at the initial point of shipment in the exact condition in which it was shipped."

The phrase "original package," though more in common use in connection with litigation over the state liquor laws, was in fact originated by Marshall, C. J., in Brown v.

Maryland, where it was held that a "license tax could not be exacted of an importer of goods from a foreign country who disposes of such goods in the form in which they were imported"; Brown v. Maryland, 12 Wheat. (U. S.) 419, 442, 6 L. Ed. 678, where it was held that a license tax for disposing of the property "in the original form or package in which it was imported is a duty on imports and unconstitutional."

That case related to imports from a foreign country, and it was also held that the thing imported did not lose its distinctive character as an import until it had become "incorporated and mixed up with the mass of property in the country." The same doctrine was afterwards applied to interstate commerce and was expressed in very nearly the same terms in Vance v. Vandercook Co., 170 U. S. 438, 18 Sup. Ct. 674, 42 L. Ed. 1100. In that case the court stated as elementary propositions, entirely concluded by previous adjudications: (a) The states have plenary power to regulate the sale of intoxicating liquors within their borders depending solely on the judgment of the legislatures, provided always they do not invade rights secured by the United States constitution, or discriminate against the rights of residents or citizens of other states. (b) The right to send liquors from one state into another, and the act of sending the same, is interstate commerce, the regulation whereof is committed to congress, and, hence, a state law which denies such a right, or substantially interferes with or hampers the same, is unconstitutional. (c) An incident of the power to ship merchandise from one state into another is the right, in the receiver of the goods, to sell them in the original packages, any state regulation to the contrary notwithstanding; that is to say, the goods received by interstate commerce remain under the shelter of the commerce clause until by a sale in the original package they have been commingled with the general mass of property in the state. This last phraseology, first expressed by Marshall, C. J., and repeated almost in the same words 70 years after, has been criticised as unsatisfactory; Cooke, Commerce Clause, sec. 17. But the expression would seem to have been repeated in effect too often to make it probable that it would be abandoned. It occurs as late as 1906 in Rearick v. Pennsylvania, 203 U. S. 507, 27 Sup. Ct. 159, 51 L. Ed. 595.

The form and size of a package the importer determines for himself, and its size has no bearing on the question whether it is "original"; In re Beine, 42 Fed. 545; State v. Winters, 44 Kan. 723, 25 Pac. 235, 10 L. R. A. 616. It has varied from the small boxes containing ten cigarettes; Iowa v. McGregor, 76 Fed. 956; McGregor v. Cone, 104 Ia. 465, 73 N. W. 1041, 39 L. R. A. 484, 65 Am. St. Rep. 522; In re May, 82 Fed. 422; to carload lots of coal; McNeill v. R. Co., 202 U. S. 543, 26 Sup. Ct. 722, 50 L. Ed. 1142; but where liquor in casks was shipped in carload lots the cask was the original package; U. S. v. Liquid Extracts, 170 Fed. 449, where it was said: "The idea of the original package may well be made to cover certain forms of property which do not ordinarily admit of being packed or incased in any other manner than in the car or vessel in which they are transported, such, for instance, as steel beams, threshing machines and other bulky articles."

Where an agent procured orders for enlarging photographs and delivered them with frames fitted to them which he tried to sell, the pictures having been ordered and the frames not, he was convicted of peddling without a license, the picture and frame together not being an original package; State v. Montgomery, 92 Me. 433, 43 Atl. 13.

Labelling a bottle or small bundle "original package" has no effect; Keith v. State, 91 Ala. 2, 8 South. 353, 10 L. R. A. 430, where small bottles of liquor, wrapped in paper and so labelled, were packed in an open box, the box was the original package and not the bottle. But where cigarettes were transported in small paper packages containing ten each not being boxed but thrown loosely into baskets, held that such paper parcels were not original packages, and that the importations were made for the purpose of evading the law of the state prohibiting their sale; Austin v. Tennessee, 179 U. S. 343, 21 Sup. Ct. 132, 45 L. Ed. 224, where it was established that the court may consider the bona fides of the construction of the packages and refuse to permit an intentional invasion of the state law; and to the same effect; Com. v. Zelt, 138 Pa. 615, 21 Atl. 7, 11 L. R. A. 602; Haley v. State, 42 Neb. 556, 60 N. W. 962, 47 Am. St. Rep. 718; State v. Chapman, 1 S. D. 414, 47 N. W. 411, 10 L. R. A. 432; Smith v. State, 54 Ark. 248, 15 S. W. 882. The case of Austin v. Tennessee, 179 U. S. 343, 21 Sup. Ct. 132, 45 L. Ed. 224, affirmed Blaufield v. State, 103 Tenn. 593, 53 S. W. 1090, on the point stated supra, but disagreed with the decision of the Tennessee court that cigarettes are not legitimate objects of commerce and their sale in original packages is not protected by the commerce clause; on this point it was also held contra in State v. Lowry, 166 Ind. 372, 77 N. E. 728, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 528, 9 Ann. Cas. 350.

Where the goods are in bottles, or small packages contained in boxes or crates, the bottles were held to be the original packages in Com. v. Bishman, 138 Pa. 642, 21 Atl. 12; State v. Coouan, 82 Ia. 400, 48 N. W. 921 (sealed bottles in open barrels and boxes); State v. Miller, 86 Ia. 638, 53 N. W. 330 (the same; in both cases the act was prior to Aug. 14, 1890, date of Wilson Act); and the small packages in Re May, 82 Fed. 422;

Sawrie v. Tennessee, 82 Fed. 615 (all cases applying to cigarettes in small boxes); but the cases generally hold that the box is the original package; Guckenheimer v. Sellers, 81 Fed. 997; Smith v. State, 54 Ark. 248, 15 S. W. 882 (bottles of liquor in open and closed boxes); Haley v. State, 42 Neb. 556, 60 N. W. 962, 47 Am. St. Rep. 718 (small bottles of liquor in closed boxes); State v. Chapman, 1 S. D. 414, 47 N. W. 411, 10 L. R. A. 432 (open box); In re Harmon, 43 Fed. 372; May v. New Orleans, 51 La. Ann. 1064, 25 South. 959 (small packages in packing boxes, box furnished by carrier and to be returned); State v. Parsons, 124 Mo. 436, 27 S. W. 1102, 46 Am. St. Rep. 457 (medicine); McGregor v. Cone, 104 Ia. 465, 73 N. W. 1041, 39 L. R. A. 484, 65 Am. St. Rep. 522 (cigarettes). In the case of patent medicines, it is the small individual package or bottle and not the box in which they are packed; Kentucky Board of Pharmacy v. Cassidy, 115 Ky. 690, 74 S. W. 730, 25 Ky. L. Rep. 102. There is said to be no difference whether the box be covered or uncovered; Keith v. State, 91 Ala. 2, 8 South. 353, 10 L. R. A. 430 (supra); and if the shipment is in bottles, its character is not changed by the carrier's putting it in a box or boxes for his own accommodation; Tinker v. State, 96 Ala. 115, 11 South. 383. The fact that the box was owned by the carrier is immaterial; Austin v. State, 101 Tenn. 563, 48 S. W. 305, 50 L. R. A. 478, 70 Am. St. Rep. 703; id., 179 U. S. 343, 21 Sup. Ct. 132, 45 L. Ed. 224, where packages of cigarettes were shipped in open baskets, the latter held the original package. A ten pound package of oleomargarine, made and packed in one state and sent into another, is an original package, and the importer may sell it personally or by an agent directly to the consumer. The protection of the commerce clause does not depend on whether the package is suitable for retail trade or not; Schollenberger v. Pennsylvania, 171 U. S. 1, 18 Sup. Ct. 757, 43 L. Ed. 49, reversing Com. v. Paul, 170 Pa. 284, 33 Atl. 82, 30 L. R. A. 396, 50 Am. St. Rep. 776. The right to import a lawful article of commerce from another state continues until the sale in the original package; Schollenberger v. Pennsylvania, 171 U. S. 1, 23, 18 Sup. Ct. 757, 43 L. Ed. 49.

The interstate commerce protection ceases when the package is opened, and separate packages removed before sale; May v. New Orleans, 178 U. S. 496, 20 Sup. Ct. 976, 44 L. Ed. 1165; People v. Roberts, 158 N. Y. 162, 52 N. E. 1102; In re Wilson, 8 Mackey (D. C.) 341, 12 L. R. A. 624; In re Pringle, 67 Kan. 364, 72 Pac. 864; Kimmell v. State, 104 Tenn. 184, 56 S. W. 854; Com. v. Paul, 148 Pa. 559, 24 Atl. 78; State v. Parsons, 124 Mo. 436, 27 S. W. 1102, 46 Am. St. Rep. 457; Hopkins v. Lewis, 84 Ia. 690, 51 N. W. 255, 15 L. R. A. 397, where it was held that liquor sold over a bar from a bottle handed to a customer, with a glass to help himself, was not a sale in the original package; it was a sale of the contents of the original packages and not the packages themselves. But in another case, where, before the date of the Wilson Act, beer in sealed bottles packed in boxes was sent into the state, consigned to an agent, who removed the bottles from the box, furnished corkscrew and tumbler, and allowed the customer to help himself, the sale was held to be in the original package; State v. Miller, 86 Ia. 638, 53 N. W. 330. A sale of the package for ten days' trial and the privilege of return if not satisfactory, destroys its "original" character; Wasserboehr v. Boulter, 84 Me. 165, 24 Atl. 808, 30 Am. St. Rep. 344.

The rule that the protection is ended by breaking does not apply where it is merely for the purpose of inspection by the purchaser; Greek-American Sponge Co. v. Drug Co., 124 Wis. 469, 102 N. W. 888, 109 Am. St. Rep. 961; In re McAllister, 51 Fed. 282; Wind v. Iler, 93 Ia. 316, 61 N. W. 1001, 27 L. R. A. 219.

Goods brought in original packages from another state after they have arrived at their destination and are at rest within the state may be taxed without discrimination like other property within the state, although stored for distribution and delivery in the same packages to purchasers in various states; American S. & W. Co. v. Speed, 192 U. S. 500, 24 Sup. Ct. 365, 48 L. Ed. 538; Woodruff v. Parham, 8 Wall. (U. S.) 123, 19 L. Ed. 382; Leisy v. Hardin, 135 U. S. 100, 10 Sup. Ct. 681, 34 L. Ed. 128; which was followed and applied in Merchants' Transfer Co. v. Board of Review, 128 Ia. 732, 105 N. W. 211, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 662, 5 Ann. Cas. 1016. It is otherwise as to imports. See that title.

A state tax on all sales of goods brought from another state is valid; Woodruff v. Parham, 8 Wall. (U. S.) 123, 19 L. Ed. 382; otherwise as to imports of foreign goods; Cook v. Pennsylvania, 97 U. S. 566, 24 L. Ed. 1015. So a general state tax laid upon all property may include commodities received from another state and held for sale; Brown v. Houston, 114 U. S. 622, 5 Sup. Ct. 1091, 29 L. Ed. 257. Credits or bills receivable, the proceeds of sale of imported goods in original packages, are taxable by the state as invested capital; People v. Wells, 208 U. S. 14, 28 Sup. Ct. 193, 52 L. Ed. 370, affirming 184 N. Y. 275, 77 N. E. 19, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 905, 121 Am. St. Rep. 840.

State regulations as to labels (stating contents) as applied to original packages do not interfere with interstate commerce as to contents; McDermott v. State, 143 Wis. 18, 126 N. W. 888, 21 Ann. Cas. 1315; or weight; In re Agnew, 89 Neb. 306, 131 N. W. 817, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 836, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 676; otherwise, as to protecting domestic manufacturers against lawful competition in other states by discriminating regulations; as by requiring the marking of convict-made goods brought into the state; Opinion of Justices, 211 Mass. 605, 98 N. E. 334, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 815.

The use of the words "original package" in a state statute forbidding the sale of black powder except in original sealed packages of a certain weight, does not prohibit the importation from other states of packages of other weights; Williams v. Walsh, 222 U. S. 415, 32 Sup. Ct. 137, 56 L. Ed. 253; but the state may forbid the sale of it except in original packages; In re Williams, 79 Kan. 212, 98 Pac. 777.

Congress may lawfully provide for the confiscation of adulterated food, by a proceeding in rem in federal courts, while in the hands of consignees in unbroken packages; Hipolite Egg Co. v. U. S., 220 U. S. 45, 31 Sup. Ct. 364, 55 L. Ed. 364.

As to the correct use of the word "imports" as meaning only goods brought from a foreign country and not from another state, see IMPORTS.

The power to regulate or forbid the sale of a commodity after it has been brought into a state does not carry with it the right and power to prevent its introduction by transportation from another state; Bowman v. R. Co., 125 U. S. 465, 8 Sup. Ct. 689, 1062, 31 L. Ed. 700. This was followed by Leisy v. Hardin, 135 U. S. 100, 10 Sup. Ct. 681, 34 L. Ed. 128, where it was held (three judges dissenting), that a state statute prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors, except for medicinal, etc., purposes, and under a license, is, as applied to a sale by an importer and in the original packages or kegs unbroken and unopened, of such liquor brought from another state, unconstitutional and void as repugnant to the commerce clause of the constitution. See 4 Harv. L. Rev. 221, for a criticism of this case. The rule established in Leisy v. Hardin, does not justify the contention that a state is powerless to prevent the sale of foods made in or brought from another state, if their sale may cheat the people into buying something they do not intend to buy, and which is wholly different from what its condition and appearance import; Plumley v. Massachusetts, 155 U. S. 461, 15 Sup. Ct. 154, 39 L. Ed. 223, upholding the Massachusetts Oleomargarine Act.

Subsequently the passage of the Wilson Act secured the right of state regulation after the breaking or sale of the original package. See supra and also LIQUOR, where that act is treated.

A state may regulate or prohibit the sale of liquor even in the original package; Vance v. Vandercook Co., 170 U. S. 438, 18 Sup. Ct. 674, 42 L. Ed. 1100; but it cannot impose a penalty on a carrier for transporting such goods within the state and before their delivery; Rhodes v. Iowa, 170 U. S. 412, 18 Sup. Ct. 664, 42 L. Ed. 1088.

See COMMERCE; LIQUOR LAWS; OLEOMARGARINE.

ORIGINAL PROCESS. Process to compel an appearance by the defendant.

ORIGINAL WRIT. In English Practice. A mandatory letter issued in the king's name, sealed with his great seal, and directed to the sheriff of the county wherein the injury was committed or supposed to have been done, requiring him to command the wrongdoer, or party accused, either to do justice to the complainant, or else to appear in court and answer the accusation against him. This writ is deemed necessary to give the courts of law jurisdiction. Andr. Steph. Pl. 62; Gould, Pl. 14.

This writ is now disused, the writ of summons being the process prescribed by the Uniformity of Process Act for commencing personal actions; and under the Judicature Act, 1873, all suits, even in the court of chancery, are to be commenced by such writs of summons; Brown. But before this, in modern English practice, the original writ was often dispensed with, by recourse to a fiction and a proceeding by bill substituted. In this country, our courts derive their jurisdiction from the constitution, and require no original writ to confer it. Improperly speaking, the first writ which is issued in a case is sometimes called an original writ; but it is not so in the English sense of the word. See 3 Bla. Com. 273; Walker, Am. Law, passim.

ORIGINALIA (Lat.). In English Law. The transcripts and other documents sent to the office of the treasurer-remembrancer in exchequer are called by this name to distinguish them from recorda, which contain the judgments of the barons. The treasurer-remembrancer's office was abolished in 1833.

ORIGINALITY. In Patent Law. The finding out, the contriving, the creating of something which did not exist and was not known before, and which can be made useful and advantageous in the pursuits of life, or which can add to the enjoyment of mankind. Conover v. Roach, 4 Fish. Pat. Cas. 16, Fed. Cas. No. 3,125.

ORPHAN. A minor or infant who has lost both of his or her parents. Sometimes the term is applied to a person who has lost only one of his or her parents. 2 S. & S. 93; Heiss v. Murphey, 40 Wis. 276. See 14 Hazard, Penn. Reg. 188, 189, for a correspondence between Joseph Hopkinson and ex-president J. Q. Adams as to the meaning of the word orphan; see also, Hob. 247; Jackman v. Nelson, 147 Mass. 300, 17 N. E. 529.

ORPHANAGE. The share reserved to an orphan by the custom of London. See LEGITIME; DEAD'S PART.

ORPHANOTROPHI. In Civil Law. Persons who have the charge of administering the affairs of houses destined for the use of orphans. Clef des Lois Rom. Administrateurs.

ORPHANS' COURT. Courts of more or less extended jurisdiction, relating to probate, estates of decedents, etc., in Delaware, Maryland, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania.

OSCULI, JUS. The right to kiss. According to the old phraseology there could be no marriage within the circle of the jus osculi—the seventh degree. Second cousins (sixth degree) could not marry. Muirhead, Rom. L. 26.

OSTENSIBLE PARTNER. One whose name appears in a firm as a partner, and who is really such. Pars. Part. 27. See PARTNERS.

OSTEOPATHY. See PHYSICIAN.

OSWALD'S LAW. The law by which was effected the ejection of married priests, and the introduction of monks into churches. Named from Oswald, Bishop of Worcester, about 964. Whart. Lex.

OTHER CASUALTY. In a lease providing that rent shall cease if the premises become untenable by fire or other casualty, it refers to some fortuitous interruption of the use. Crystal Spring Distillery Co. v. Cox, 49 Fed. 555, 1 C. C. A. 365, 6 U. S. App. 42.

OTHER WRONGS. See ALIA ENORMIA.

OTHESWORTHE (Sax. eoeth, oath). Worthy to make oath. Bract. 185, 192.

UGHT. The word is generally directory, but may be taken as mandatory if the context requires it. Bract. fol. 185, 292 b.

OUSTER (L. Fr. oultre, oultre; Lat. ultra, beyond). Out; beyond; besides; farther; also; over and more. Le ouster, the uppermost. Over; respondeat ouster, let him answer over. Britton, c. 29. Ouster le mer, over the sea. Jacob, L. Dict. Ouster eit, he went away. 6 Co. 41 b; 9 id. 120.

To put out; to oust. Il oust, he put out or ousted. Oustes, ousted. 6 Co. 41 b.

In Torts. The actual turning out or keeping excluded the party entitled to possession of any real property corporeal.

It is the wrongful dispossession or exclusion from real property of a party entitled to the possession thereof; ouster of one co-tenant by another is produced by the same acts as any other ouster; Winterburn v. Chambers, 91 Cal. 170, 27 Pac. 658.

An ouster can properly be only from real property corporeal, and cannot be committed of anything movable; 1 C. & P. 123; 1 Chitty, Pr. 148; nor is a mere temporary trespass considered as an ouster. Any continuing act of exclusion from the enjoyment constitutes an ouster, even by one tenant in common of his co-tenant; Co. Litt. 199 b, 200 a. See 3 Bla. Com. 167; Webb, Poll. Torts 447; 1 Chitty, Pr. 374, where the remedies for an ouster are pointed out. A demand of possession by a tenant in common from his co-tenant, and refusal by the latter, constitutes an ouster from the joint possession; Jordan v. Surghnor, 107 Mo. 520, 17 S. W. 1009. In an action of quo warranto, the judgment rendered, if against an officer or individuals, is called judgment of ouster; if against a corporation by its corporate name, it is ouster and seizure. See JUDGMENT; RESPONDEAT OUSTER; 2 Crabb, R. P. § 2454 a; Washb. R. P.

OUSTER LE MAIN (L. Fr. to take out of the hand). In Old English Law. A delivery of lands out of the hands of the lord after the tenant came of age. If the lord refused to deliver such lands, the tenant was entitled to a writ to recover the same from the lord: this recovery out of the hands of the lord was called ouster le main. Abolished by 12 Car. II. c. 24. Also, a livery of land out of the king's hands by judgment given in favor of the petitioner in a monstrans de droit; 3 Steph. Com. 657.

OUSTER LE MER. Beyond the sea. A cause of excuse, if a person, being summoned, did not appear in court. Cowell.

OUT OF COURT. A plaintiff in an action at common law must have declared within one year after the service of the summons, otherwise he was out of court unless the court had, by special order, enlarged the time for declaring. See Jud. Act. 1875, Ord. xxi. r. 1. Whart. Lex.

Also used as a colloquial phrase applied to a litigant party when his case breaks down, equivalent to saying, "he has not a leg to stand on;" Moz. & W.

OUT OF THE STATE. Beyond sea, which title see.

OUT OF TIME. Generally speaking, a ship may be said to be missing or out of time when she has not been heard of after the longest ordinary time in which the voyage is safely performed. 1 Arn. Ins., 6th ed. 536; 2 Duer, Ins. 469, n.

OUTER BAR. See UTTER BARRISTER.

OUTER HOUSE. See COURTS OF SCOTLAND.

OUTFANGTHEF. A liberty in the ancient common law, whereby a lord was enabled to call any man dwelling in his manor and taken for felony in another place out of his fee, to judgment in his own court. Du Cange. See INFANGTHEF.

OUTFIT. An allowance made by the government of the United States to an ambassador, a minister plenipotentiary, or chargé d'affaires, on going from the United States to any foreign country.

The outfit can in no case exceed one year's full salary. No outfit is allowed to a consul. See MINISTER.

As to the meaning of "outfit" in the whaling business, see Macy v. Ins. Co., 9 Metc. (Mass.) 354.

OUTBUILDING. Something used in connection with a main building. Com. v. Intoxicating Liquors, 140 Mass. 287, 3 N. E. 4. While a stable may be a necessary outbuilding, yet when erected for use in connection with a tent placed temporarily on land, it is not so, within a restriction against the erection of a building other than dwellings of a specified value with necessary outbuildings; Blakemore v. Stanley, 159 Mass. 6, 33 N. E. 689. See OUTHOUSES.

OUTHOUSES. Buildings adjoining or belonging to dwelling-houses.

Buildings subservient to, yet distinct from, the principal mansion-house, located either within or without the curtilage. State v. Brooks, 4 Conn. 446; Jones v. Hungerford, 4 Gill & J. (Md.) 402; 2 Cr. & D. 479.

It is not easy to say what comes within and what is excluded from the meaning of outhouse. It has been decided that a school-room, separated from the dwelling-house by a narrow passage about a yard wide, the roof of which was partly upheld by that of the dwelling-house (the two buildings, together with some other, and the court which inclosed them, being rented by the same person), was properly described as an outhouse; Russ. & R. Cr. Cas. 295. See, for other cases, Co. 3d Inst. 67; 1 Leach 49; 2 East Pl. Cr. 1020; 5 C. & P. 555; 8 B. & C. 461; 1 Mood. Cr. Cas. 323, 336; State v. Brooks, 4 Conn. 446; Swallow v. State, 20 Ala. 30; White v. Com., 87 Ky. 454, 9 S. W. 303; Price v. Com. (Ky.) 25 S. W. 1062.

OUTLAND. Land lying beyond the demesnes and granted out to tenants at the will of the lord, like copyholds. Spelman.

OUTLAW. In English Law. One who is put out of the protection or aid of the law. 22 Viner, Abr. 316; 1 Phill. Ev. Index; Bacon Abr. Outlawry; 2 Sell. Pr. 277; Doctr. Plac. 331; 3 Bla. Com. 283, 284.

As used in the Alabama act of December 28, 1868, § 1, declaring counties liable for persons killed by an "outlaw," it is not used in the strict common-law sense of the term, but merely refers in a loose sense to the disorderly persons then roving through the state, committing acts of violence; Dale Co. v. Gunter, 46 Ala. 118, 137. See Drew v. Drew, 37 Me. 389.

If a party, after indictment, could not be found, the first process against him was a capias, in cases of treason or felony, or in misdemeanors, a venire facias, and then a capias. Following this is an alias and then a pluries writ. After this the offender is put in the "exigent" and is proclaimed four times in four successive county courts. Upon the fifth, he is adjudged an outlaw. It is said that no man may kill an outlaw wilfully, but only in an effort to arrest him. A judgment of outlawry was a grave matter; it involved, not merely escheat and forfeiture, but a sentence of death. If the outlaw was captured, the justices sent him to the gallows upon proof of the mere fact of outlawry. There were all manner of cases in which a man might be outlawed without being guilty of any crime or any intentional contumacy. The exaction might take place in a county distant from his home. There was therefore great need for royal writs for inlawing an outlaw and many were issued. 2 Poll. & Maitl. 581. Outlawry for a misdemeanor does not amount to a conviction for the offense itself. 4 Steph. Com. 317. The "minor outlawry" for "trespasses" did not involve sentence of death; otherwise of the higher crimes. 2 Poll. & Maitl. 581. See EXIGENT.

It is still possible in England for a person accused of a criminal charge to be made an "outlaw"; Odgers, C. L. 1418; in civil actions it is abolished (1879); 4 Steph. Com. 317.

When used with reference to a claim, as, a debt due on a promissory note, "outlawed" means barred by the statute of limitations; Drew v. Drew, 37 Me. 392.

OUTLAWRY. In English Law. The act of being put out of the protection of the law, by process regularly sued out against a person who is in contempt in refusing to become amenable to the court having jurisdiction. The proceedings themselves are also called the outlawry.

Outlawry may take place in criminal or in civil cases; 3 Bla. Com. 283; Co. Litt. 128.

In the United States, outlawry in civil cases is unknown, and if there are any cases of outlawry in criminal cases they are very rare; Dane, Abr. ch. 193 a, 34.

OUTPARTERS. Stealers of cattle. Cowell.

OUTPUTERS. Such as set watches for the robbing any manor house. Cowell.

OUTRAGE. A grave injury; a serious wrong. This is a generic word which is applied to everything which is injurious in a great degree to the honor or rights of another. McKinley v. R. Co., 44 Ia. 314, 24 Am. Rep. 748.

OUTRIDERS. In English Practice. Bailiffs employed by the sheriffs and their deputies to ride to the farthest places of their counties or hundreds, to summon such as they thought good to attend their county or hundred court. Jacob.

OUTROPER. A person to whom the business of selling by auction was confined by statute. 2 H. Bla. 557.

OUTSTANDING. Unpaid; uncollected; remaining undischarged.

OUTSTANDING CROP. One not harvested or gathered. It is outstanding from the day it commences to grow until gathered and taken away. Sullins v. State, 53 Ala. 474.

OUTSTANDING DEBT. Due but not paid; overdue; uncollected, as an outstanding draft, bond, premium, or other demand or indebtedness.

OUTSTANDING TERM. A term in gross at law, which, in equity, may be made attendant upon the inheritance, either by express declaration or by implication.

OUTSUCKEN MULTURES. Quantities of corn paid by persons voluntarily grinding corn at any mill to which they are not thirled or bound by tenure. Jacob.

OUVERTURE DES SUCCESSIONS. In French Law. The right of succession which arises to one upon the death, whether natural or civil, of another. Brown.

OVERCYTED; OVERCHYSED. Proved guilty or convicted. Blount.

OVERDRAFT. See OVERDRAW.

OVERDRAW. To draw bills or checks upon an individual, bank, or other corporation, for a greater amount of funds than the party who draws is entitled to. See State v. Jackson, 21 S. D. 494, 113 N. W. 880, 16 Ann. Cas. 87.

When a person has overdrawn his account without any intention to do so, and afterwards gives a check on a bank, the holder is required to present it; and on refusal of payment to give notice to the maker, in order to hold him bound for it; but when the maker has overdrawn the bank knowingly, having no funds there between the time the check is given and its presentment, the notice is not requisite; Edwards v. Moses, 2 N. & McC. (S. C.) 433, 10 Am. Dec. 615; True v. Thomas, 16 Me. 36. A bank may properly refuse to pay a check which will overdraw the depositor's account, though on the bank books his balance seems to be larger than the amount of the check, because a check of his, paid by the bank two days before, had not yet been charged to such depositor; American Exch. N. Bk. v. Gregg, 138 Ill. 596, 28 N. E. 839, 32 Am. St. Rep. 171. The president of a bank who directs the payment of checks of a customer who has no money in the bank, drawn in payment of property purchased by the customer, has no such interest in the property as will support an action by him for its conversion; Kollock v. Emmert, 43 Mo. App. 566.

An overdraft on a bank is in the nature of a loan; it is considered a fraud on the part of the depositor; Peterson v. Bank, 52 Pa. 206, 91 Am. Dec. 146. See Merchants'

Bank v. Bank, 10 Wall. (U. S.) 647, 19 L. Ed. 1008. Indebitatus assumpsit will lie against the depositor to recover the overdraft; Bank of U. S. v. Macalester, 9 Pa. 475; Thomas v. Bank, 46 Ill. App. 461.

A cashier who knowingly permits an overdraft is guilty of a breach of trust, and liable to an action to make good the amount, even though the directors had been wont to countenance him in a custom of allowing good depositors to overdraw; Morse, Bank, 3d ed. § 357.

If an overdraft on a national bank is properly made and allowed, or even if improperly allowed, the entry of the transaction on the books of the bank just as it occurred is not a false entry, under R. S. § 5209; Dow v. U. S., 82 Fed. 904, 27 C. C. A. 140. The mere payment of a check which creates an overdraft is not a fraudulent misapplication of the funds; id.; and where a national bank officer arranges with a depositor in good faith to give him credit beyond his deposit and makes proper entries of his overdrafts, it is not a false entry under R. S. § 5209; Graves v. U. S., 165 U. S. 323, 17 Sup. Ct. 393, 41 L. Ed. 732. But where the president of a bank, not acting in good faith, permitted overdrafts which he did not believe and had no reasonable ground to believe would be repaid, and it appeared that he intended by the transaction to injure and defraud the bank, the act becomes a crime; Coffin v. U. S., 162 U. S. 664, 16 Sup. Ct. 943, 40 L. Ed. 1109.

It is not an overdraft, if the bank owes the depositor more money than is standing to his credit; Hubbard v. Pettey, 37 Tex. Civ. App. 453, 85 S. W. 509, affirmed without opinion 101 Tex. 643.

A bank may refuse to pay a check if it overdraws; Spokane & E. T. Co. v. Huff, 63 Wash. 225, 115 Pac. 80, 33 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1023, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 491. One who has been permitted to overdraw in the past acquires no right to do so; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Johnston, 133 U. S. 566, 574, 10 Sup. Ct. 390, 33 L. Ed. 683. It is not required to pay a check which overdraws; but if it pays out the credit balance on such check it may take up the check as evidence of such payment; Harrington v. Bank, 85 Ill. App. 212. The holder of a check which overdraws has no right to the actual balance unless the bank agrees to pay it; Dana v. Bank, 13 Allen (Mass.) 445, 90 Am. Dec. 216.

OVERDUE. A bill, note, bond, or other contract for the payment of money at a particular day, when not paid upon the day, is overdue.

The indorsement of a note or bill overdue is equivalent to drawing a new bill payable at sight; Bishop v. Dexter, 2 Conn. 419; Colt v. Barnard, 18 Pick. (Mass.) 260, 29 Am. Dec. 584.

A note when passed or assigned after it is overdue, is subject to all the equities between the original contracting parties; Nevins v. Townsend, 6 Conn. 5; Cumberland Bk. v. Hann, 18 N. J. L. 222; Byles, Bills 190.

The transferor's legal title passes and maturity acts as notice of such equities; see Fisher v. Leland, 4 Cush. (Mass.) 456, 50 Am. Dec. 805. The creation of a better title than that of the transferor is prevented; 4 B. & C. 330; Northampton N. Bk. v. Kidder, 106 N. Y. 221, 12 N. E. 577, 60 Am. Rep. 443; where five out of nine successively maturing notes were transferred after their maturity, it was held that a counterclaim for breach of warranty by the payee could be set up against them all; Rowe v. Scott, 28 S. D. 145, 132 N. W. 695.

OVERHAUL. To inquire into. The merits of a judgment can never be overhauled by an original suit. 2 H. Bla. 414.

OVER-INSURANCE. See DOUBLE INSURANCE.

OVERISSUE. Bonds. Where there is an agreement that a railroad company shall issue only a fixed number of bonds per mile, bonds issued in excess of the limit will be postponed in lien and payment to those within the limit; McMurray v. Moran, 134 U. S. 159, 10 Sup. Ct. 427, 33 L. Ed. 814; and one who buys bonds within the limit upon the faith of this agreement is fully entitled to the benefit of it; id.; where bonds are issued, secured by a mortgage which recites the amount of the bonds and that part of them were to be used to take up bonds of a prior issue, the lien of the mortgage will be confined to an amount of bonds which, added to the specified incumbrances, shall not exceed the limit fixed; Clafin v. R. Co., 8 Fed. 118; where the question was raised by subsequent bondholders.

Where an issue of railroad bonds was limited in amount, and the governor of a state indorsed on them a recital that they were issued in pursuance of law, it was held that a bona fide purchaser was not bound to look beyond his certificate and that the bonds so certified in excess of the authorized issue were entitled to share pro rata with the other bonds; Stanton v. R. Co., 2 Woods 523, Fed. Cas. No. 13,297. Bonds are numbered for mere convenience, and holders of those of a higher number stand on the same footing, in a distribution of a fund, as those of lower numbers; id.

Where a mortgage was given to secure a specified issue of bonds and by mistake a larger number were issued and the excess came into the hands of a bona fide holder, there being nothing to put him on inquiry, the company was held estopped to set up that they were not secured by the mortgage, and it was held that the excess bonds had a prior lien as against income bonds not secured by a recorded mortgage, but not against a subsequent recorded mortgage; Stephens v. Benton, 1 Duv. (Ky.) 112. Where a statute limited the issue of bonds to the amount of the capital stock actually paid in, it was held that bonds issued in excess of this amount were illegal, and that a second mortgage bondholder could take advantage of their illegality, though the company itself did not seek to repudiate them; Com. v. Smith, 10 Allen (Mass.) 448, 87 Am. Dec. 672; but see Peatman v. Power Co., 100 Ia. 245, 60 N. W. 541; where bonds issued in excess were held to be valid to the extent of the consideration received for them. Where a railroad company was authorized to issue bonds to a certain amount in relation to the amount of the capital stock, and a mortgage was executed for a larger amount than was authorized, it was held that between bona fide holders of the mortgage bonds and the company, the bonds were entitled to the lien of the mortgage, and that subsequent creditors with notice of the bonds occupied no better position than the company; Fidelity Co. v. R. Co., 138 Pa. 494, 21 Atl. 21, 21 Am. St. Rep. 911. A constitutional provision forbidding the fictitious increase of corporate indebtedness will not be enforced where mortgage bonds are sold at par to innocent purchasers, for construction and equipment; id.

Stock. Any issue of stock of a corporation in excess of that authorized by statute or charter is void; New York & N. H. R. Co. v. Schuyler, 34 N. Y. 30; even in the hands of a bona fide purchaser; People's Bank v. Kurtz, 99 Pa. 344, 44 Am. Rep. 112; Appeal of Mount Holly Paper Co., 99 Pa. 513. A bona fide holder of overissued stock, purporting to be signed by an authorized corporate officer, and actually issued by the corporation, may sue the corporation in tort and recover damages; New York & N. H. R. Co. v. Schuyler, 34 N. Y. 30 (the leading case); Appeal of Mt. Holly Paper Co., 99 Pa. 513; Bank of Kentucky v. Bank, 1 Pars. Eq. Cas. (Pa.) 180, 216; the doctrine of estoppel applying; Kisterbock's Appeal, 127 Pa. 601, 18 Atl. 383, 14 Am. St. Rep. 868; and the same rule applies where the overissued stock is held as collateral for notes; Appeal of Mt. Holly Paper Co., 99 Pa. 513; not so, as to a purchaser not in good faith for full value; Ryder v. R. Co., 134 N. Y. 83, 31 N. E. 251; although the signature of one corporate officer had been forged by another; Fifth Ave. Bank v. R. Co., 137 N. Y. 231, 33 N. E. 378, 19 L. R. A. 331, 33 Am. St. Rep. 712.

If statutory or charter provisions authorize an increase of the capital stock, but the formalities prescribed for making the increase are not complied with, it is termed an irregular issue, and is voidable; Scovill v. Thayer, 105 U. S. 143, 26 L. Ed. 968.

The authorized corporate officers and the corporation are jointly and severally liable to immediate or subsequent purchasers (buying upon the faith of certificates) of an overissue or irregular issue of stock, who have sustained damage thereby; Bruff v. Mali, 36 N. Y. 200; Windram v. French, 151 Mass. 547, 24 N. E. 914, 8 L. R. A. 750.

Equity will enjoin the transfer of spurious stock, the payment of dividends thereon, or the voting thereof by the pretended owners; Kent v. Min. Co., 78 N. Y. 159. Such stock is a cloud upon the title of the genuine stock, which a court of equity will remove at the suit of the corporation or the stockholders; Dewing v. Perdicaries, 96 U. S. 193, 24 L. Ed. 654; and the holder thereof who knew it to be overissued, at the time of the subscription, can defeat an action at law on his subscription therefor; Scovill v. Thayer, 105 U. S. 143, 26 L. Ed. 908; or an action upon a promissory note given therefor; Merrill v. Reaver, 50 Ia. 404.

Failure by a holder of valid stock for six years to complain of an overissue of stock is laches; Jutte v. Hutchinson, 189 Pa. 218, 42 Atl. 123.

Whatever might be the rule as to a bona fide purchaser of or subscriber for an overissue of shares of stock in a corporation, one who procures the overissue without consideration by false representations will not be heard to assert that a stockholder who voted therefor relying on such representations is estopped to question the validity of the shares; Haskell v. Read, 68 Neb. 107, 93 N. W. 997, 96 N. W. 1007.

OVERPLUS. What is left beyond a certain amount; the residue; the remainder of a thing. The same as surplus.

The overplus may be certain or uncertain. It is certain, for example, when an estate is worth three thousand dollars, and the owner asserts it to be so in his will, and devises of the proceeds one thousand dollars to A, one thousand dollars to B, and the overplus to C, and in consequence of the deterioration of the estate, or from some other cause, it sells for less than three thousand dollars, each of the legatees, A, B, and C, shall take one-third. The overplus is uncertain where, for example, a testator does not know the value of his estate and gives various legacies, and the overplus to another legatee: the latter will be entitled only to what may be left; 18 Ves. 466. See RESIDUE; SURPLUS.

OVERRATE. In its strictest signification, a rating by way of excess and not one which ought not to have been made at all. 2 Ex. 352.

OVERREACHING CLAUSE. In a resettlement, a clause which saves the powers of sale and leasing annexed to the estate for life created by the original settlement, when it is desired to give the tenant for life the same estate and powers under the resettlement.

OVERRULE. To annul; to make void.

This word is frequently used to signify that a case has been decided directly opposite to a former case; when this takes place, the first-decided case is said to be overruled as a precedent, and cannot any longer be considered as of binding authority.

It also signifies that a majority of the judges of a court having decided against the opinion of the minority, in which case the latter are said to be overruled.

See PRECEDENTS.

OVERSAMESSA. A forfeiture for contempt or neglect in not pursuing a malefactor. 3 Inst. 116.

OVERSEERS OF HIGHWAYS. Officers having supervision of highways in some of the states. See COMMISSIONERS OF HIGHWAYS.

OVERSEERS OF THE POOR. Persons appointed or elected to take care of the poor with moneys furnished to them by the public authority.

The duties of these officers are regulated by local statutes. In general, the overseers are bound to perform those duties, and the neglect of them will subject them to an indictment. See 1 Bla. Com. 360; 16 Vintr. Abr. 150; Freeport v. Edgecumbe, 1 Mass. 459; Gould v. Bailey, 2 N. J. L. 6; Shotwell v. Thornall, id. 136; Com. Dig. Justice of the Peace (B 63).

OVERT. Open.

An overt act in treason is proof of the intention of the traitor, because it opens his designs: without an overt act, treason cannot be committed; 2 Chitty, Cr. Law 40. An overt act is one which manifests the intention of the traitor to commit treason; Archb. Cr. Pl. 379; 4 Bla. Com. 79; Co. 3d Inst. 12; Respublica v. Malin, 1 Dall. (U. S.) 33, 1 L. Ed. 25; U. S. v. Vigol, 2 Dall. (U. S.) 346, 1 L. Ed. 409; Re Bollman, 4 Cra. (U. S.) 75, 2 L. Ed. 554; U. S. v. Pryor, 3 Wash. C. C. 234, Fed. Cas. No. 16,096. In order to sustain a conviction for treason under the U. S. constitution, there must be the testimony of two witnesses to the same overt act or a confession in open court. A conspirator can be tried in any place where his co-conspirators perform an overt act; R. S. § 440. The phrase is used in relation to the Fugitive Slave Act in Jones v. Van Zandt, 5 How. (U. S.) 215, 12 L. Ed. 122.

In conspiracy, no overt act is needed to complete the offence; 11 Cl. & F. 155; Landringham v. State, 49 Ind. 186. See U. S. v. Goldberg, 7 Biss. 175, Fed. Cas. No. 15,223.

The mere contemplation or intention to commit a crime, although a sin in the sight of Heaven, is not an act amenable to human laws. The mere speculative wantonness of a licentious imagination, however dangerous or even sanguinary in its object, can in no case amount to a crime. But the moment that any overt act is manifest, the offender becomes amenable to the laws. See Cro. Car. 577; ATTEMPT; CONSPIRACY; SOLICITATION.

OWELTY. The difference which is paid or secured by one coparcener or cotenant to another for the purpose of equalizing a partition. Littleton § 251; Co. Litt. 169 a; Long v. Long, 1 Watts (Pa.) 265; 16 Viner, Abr. 223, pl. 3. See Barkley v. Adams, 158 Pa. 396, 27 Atl. 868; Reed v. Deposit Co., 113 Pa. 578, 6 Atl. 163.

A charge on land for owelty of partition follows the land into the hands of a purchaser from the person to whom it was allotted; and the statute of limitation does not run against it, as the possession is not adverse; Dobbin v. Rex, 106 N. C. 444, 11 S. E. 260.

OWING. Something unpaid. A debt, for example, is owing while it is unpaid, and whether it be due or not. See Succession of Guidry, 40 La. Ann. 671, 4 South. 893.

In affidavits to hold to bail it is usual to state that the debt on which the action is founded is due, owing, and unpaid; 1 Pa. L. J. 210.

OWLING. The offence of transporting wool or sheep out of the kingdom. The name is said to owe its origin to the fact that this offence was carried on in the night, when the owl was abroad.

OWNER. He who has dominion of a thing, real or personal, corporeal or incorporeal, which he has a right to enjoy and do with as he pleases,—even to spoil or destroy it, as far as the law permits, unless he be prevented by some agreement or covenant which restrains his right. See Turner v. Cross, 83 Tex. 218, 18 S. W. 578, 15 L. R. A. 262; Johnson v. Crookshanks, 21 Or. 329, 28 Pac. 78.

Although there can be but one absolute owner of a thing, there may be a qualified ownership of the same thing by many. Thus, a bailor has the general ownership of the thing bailed, the bailee the special ownership. See Park v. Willis, 2 Cra. C. C. 83, Fed. Cas. No. 10717. The right of the absolute owner is more extended than that of him who has only a qualified ownership: as, for example, the use of the thing. Thus, the absolute owner of an estate, that is, an owner in fee, may cut the wood, demolish the buildings, build new ones, and dig wherever he may deem proper for minerals, stone, plaster, and similar things, which would be considered waste and would not be allowed in a qualified owner of the estate, as a lessee or a tenant for life. The word owner, when used alone, imports an absolute owner; but it has been held in Ohio that the word owner, in the mechanic's lien law of that state, includes the owner of the leasehold as well as of the reversion, on the ground that any other construction would be subversive of the policy and intent of the statute. Choteau v. Thompson, 2 Ohio St. 123.

The owner continues to have the same right although he perform no acts of ownership or be disabled from performing them, and although another perform such acts without the knowledge or against the will of the owner. But the owner may lose his right in a thing if he permit it to remain in the possession of a third person for a sufficient time to enable the latter to acquire a title to it by prescription or under the statute of limitations. See La. Civ. Code, b. 2, tit. 2, c. 1; Encyclopédie d'Alembert, Propriétaire.

When there are several joint owners of a thing,—as, for example, of a ship,—the majority of them have the right to make contracts in respect of such thing in the usual course of business or repair, and the like, and the minority will be bound by such contracts; Holt 586; Schott v. Harvey, 105 Pa. 222, 51 Am. Rep. 201. See PART-OWNER.

OWNERSHIP. The right by which a thing belongs to some one in particular, to the exclusion of all others. La. Civ. Code, art. 480.

The entirety of the powers of use and disposal allowed by law. It implies that there is some power of disposal; but the owner of a thing is not necessarily the person who at a given time has the whole power of use and disposal. Owner is not strictly a technical term in the common law. Pollock, First Book of Jurispr. 175. Ownership is broader than both or possession; Fleming v. Sherwood, 24 N. D. 144, 139 N. W. 101, 43 L. R. A. (N. S.) 945. See J. B. Ames on The Nature of Ownership, in Lect. Leg. Hist. 192.

OWNER'S RISK. An expression employed by carriers with the object of relieving them from responsibility. The carrier is held not to be liable if he uses ordinary diligence; otherwise, if he displays gross negligence or malfeasance; [1906] T. S. 973 (So. Afr.).

OXGANG (fr. Sax. gang, going, and ox; Law Lat. bovata). So much land as an ox could till. In the north of England a division of a carucate. According to some, fifteen acres. Co. Litt. 69 a; Crompton, Jurisd. 220. According to Balfour, the Scotch oxen-gang, or oxgate, contained twelve acres; but this does not correspond with ancient charters. See Bell, Dict. Ploughgate. Skene says thirteen acres. Cowell. See 1 Poll. & Maitl. 347.

OYER (Lat. audire; through L. French oyer, to hear).

A prayer or petition to the court that the party may hear read to him the deed, etc., stated in the pleadings of the opposite party, and which deed is by intendment of law in court when it is pleaded with a profert. The same end is now generally attained by giving a copy of the deed of which oyer is asked, or, in other instances, by setting forth the instrument in full in the plaintiff's statement of his case. Oyer as it existed at common law seems to be abolished in England; 1 B. & P. 646; 3 id. 398; 25 E. L. & E. 304. Oyer may be demanded of any specialty or other written instrument, as, bonds of all sorts, deeds-poll, indentures, letters testamentary and of administration, and the like, which the adverse party is obliged to plead with a profert in curia; Gould, Pl. 408. But pleading with a profert unnecessarily does not give a right to demand oyer; 1 Salk. 497; and it may not be had except when profert is made; Hempst. 265. Denial of oyer when it should be granted is ground for error; Andr. Steph. Pl. 59; Osborne v. Reed, 1 Blackf. (Ind.) 126. In such cases the party making the claim should move the court to have it entered on record, which is in the nature of a plea, and the plaintiff may counterplead the right of oyer, or strike out the rest of the pleading following the oyer, and demur; 1 Saund. 9 b, n. 1; Bac. Abr. Pleas 1; upon which the judgment of the court is either that the defendant have oyer, or that he answer without it; id.; 2 Lev. 142; 6 Mod. 28. See PROFERT IN CURIA.

After craving oyer, the defendant may set forth the deed or a part thereof, or not, at his election; 1 Chitty, Pl. 372; and may afterwards plead non est factum, or any other plea, without stating the oyer; 2 Stra. 1241; 1 Wils. 97; and may demur if a material variance appear between the oyer and declaration; 2 Saund. 366, n.

See, generally, Com. Dig. Pleader (P), Abatement (I 22); 3 Bouvier, Inst. n. 2890.

OYER AND TERMINER. See ASSIZE; COURT OF OYER AND TERMINER.

OYEZ (Fr. hear ye). The introduction to any proclamation or advertisement by public crier. Used also by court officers in opening court. It is wrongly and usually pronounced oh yes. 4 Bla. Com. 340, n.

OYSTER. The right to take shell fish below high water mark from natural beds in tide waters is common to all citizens of the state, except as restrained by positive law or grants from the state; Brown v. De Groff, 50 N. J. L. 409, 14 Atl. 219, 7 Am. St. Rep. 794; Allen v. Allen, 19 R. I. 114, 32 Atl. 166, 30 L. R. A. 497, 61 Am. St. Rep. 738; Cook v. Raymond, 66 Conn. 285, 33 Atl. 1006. "A natural oyster-bed" is one not planted by man; State v. Willis, 104 N. C. 764, 10 S. E. 764. There is a right of property in artificial oyster beds planted in public or navigable waters, in spots designated by stakes or otherwise; State v. Taylor, 27 N. J. L. 117, 72 Am. Dec. 347; McCarty v. Holman, 22 Hun (N. Y.) 53; the owner must clearly mark out and define his beds; Brinckerhoff v. Starkins, 11 Barb. (N. Y.) 248; this right is in the nature of a license from the state, which the state may revoke; Fleet v. Hegeman, 14 Wend. (N. Y.) 42; Hess v. Muir, 65 Md. 586, 5 Atl. 540, 6 Atl. 673.

A state has power to regulate the oyster industry although carried on under its tidal waters; Lee v. New Jersey, 207 U. S. 67, 28 Sup. Ct. 22, 52 L. Ed. 106. It may forbid the lease of oyster beds lying under certain tidal waters within the state to any person not a citizen and resident of such state unless he was using such bed at the time of the passage of the act, the right to cultivate and plant oysters not being a privilege or immunity, but a property right; State v. Corson, 67 N. J. L. 178, 50 Atl. 780; but it was held that an act making it a misdemeanor for one not a citizen of the United States and a resident and tax payer of the state to take oysters was invalid as in violation of the Texas bill of rights; Gustafson v. State, 40 Tex. Cr. R. 67, 45 S. W. 717, 48 S. W. 518, 43 L. R. A. 615.

An act requiring everyone engaged in packing oysters to pay a tax, which applies to oysters taken in and shipped from another state, is within the police power of the state. It is not an interference with interstate commerce; Applegarth v. State, 89 Md. 140, 42 Atl. 941. Deepening the channel, by which oyster beds were injured, is not a taking of the oyster beds within the fifth amendment of the United States constitution; Lewis B. P. O. Co. v. Briggs, 229 U. S. 82, 33 Sup. Ct. 679, 57 L. Ed. 1083.

The state, subject to the paramount right of navigation, is the owner of the oyster beds in its waters and can prohibit their taking by any but its own citizens, and prescribe the times, instruments, and conditions of taking them; Dize v. Lloyd, 36 Fed. 652; Boggs v. Com., 76 Va. 989.

One who plants oysters on a natural bed cannot recover against one who removes them with the natural growth; Cook v. Raymond, 66 Conn. 285, 33 Atl. 1006.

One who plants a bed of oysters in a bay on an arm of the sea, designating the bed, does not interfere with the common right of fishing, and may maintain trespass for an invasion of his property; Robins v. Ackerly, 91 N. Y. 98; 7 Q. B. D. 106. Oysters deposited artificially may obstruct navigation and be a nuisance; 7 Q. B. 339.

An act requiring oyster packers to pay a tax is constitutional, though they are shipped from another state; Applegarth v. State, 89 Md. 140, 42 Atl. 941.

An act authorizing the state oyster commission to fix the license tax imposed on boats entitled to engage in oyster planting in certain tidal waters within the state according to the tonnage measurement of the boats does not violate the constitutional prohibition against levying tonnage duties, the tax being imposed on the business of oyster planting and not on the ship as an instrument of commerce; State v. Corson, 67 N. J. L. 178, 50 Atl. 780; so in Maryland; Dize v. Lloyd, 36 Fed. 651.

Oysters, although shipped unopened, as taken from the water, may come within the prohibition of the Food and Drugs Act, sec. 2, when, by reason of the condition of the waters in which they are grown, they contain harmful bacteria which constitutes adulteration within the act; U. S. v. Sprague, 208 Fed. 419.

A riparian owner has not the right to bed oysters along his entire water front; Hess v. Muir, 65 Md. 586, 5 Atl. 540, 6 Atl. 673.

See FISHERY; NAVIGABLE WATERS; INSPECTION LAWS; LICENSE.

P

P. P. See PER PROCURATIONEM; IN PROPRIA PERSONA.

PAAGE. A toll for passage through another's land.

PACARE. To pay. Jacob.

PACE. A measure of length, containing two feet and a half. The geometrical pace is five feet long. The common pace is the length of a step; the geometrical is the length of two steps, or the whole space passed over by the same foot from one step to another.

PACIFIC BLOCKADE. A means of coercion short of war, usually adopted by the joint action of several nations. An instance of it occurred when Great Britain and Germany united to prevent the slave traffic and stop the importation of arms on the east coast of Africa; Snow, Int. Law 79. In 1827 Greece was blockaded by France, Russia, and Great Britain; in 1850 the Greek ports were blockaded by Great Britain, and again in 1855 by the combined fleets of the five Great Powers.

In the blockade of Mexico by France in 1838, neutral vessels as well as Mexican were both seized and condemned. In other cases both classes of ships were seized, but were restored without compensation at the termination of conflict. In the blockades of Greece in 1850 and 1886, only Greek vessels were sequestered.

In 1887 the Institute of International Law unanimously declared in favor of the legality of pacific blockade, subject to these conditions: "(1) That the neutral flag can enter freely; (2) that there must, of course, be formal notice and a sufficient force; and (3) that ships of the blockaded country may be sequestered, but should be restored with their cargoes at the end of the blockade, but without compensation." See 21 L. Mag. & Rev. 285; 2 Oppen. §§ 40-49; BLOCKADE.

PACIFICATION (Lat. pax, peace, facere, to make). The act of making peace between two countries which have been at war; the restoration of public tranquillity.

PACK. To deceive by false appearances; to counterfeit; to delude.

PACKAGE. A bundle put up for transportation or commercial handling. A parcel is a small package; U. S. v. Goldback, 1 Hugh. 529, Fed. Cas. No. 15,222; Southern Exp. Co. v. Crook, 44 Ala. 468, 4 Am. Rep. 140; where a bale of cotton was held not a package; contra, Lamb v. Transp. Co., 2 Daly (N. Y.) 454. See L. R. 9 Ex. 67.

The word as used in the federal Food and Drugs Act refers to the immediate container of the article which is intended for consumption by the public; McDermott v. State, 228 U. S. 115, 33 Sup. Ct. 431, 57 L. Ed. 754.

Certain duties charged in the port of London on the goods imported and exported by aliens. Now abolished. Whart. Lex. See ORIGINAL PACKAGE.

PACKED PARCELS. The name for a consignment of goods consisting of one large parcel made up of several small ones, collected from different persons by the immediate consignor, who united them into one for his own profit, at the expense of the carrier. Whart.

PACKER. A person employed in England by merchants to receive and (in some instances) to select goods from manufacturers, dyers, calenders, etc., and pack the same for exportation. Arch. Bankr., 11th ed. 37.

In the United States, one engaged in the business of slaughtering and packing cattle, sheep and hogs preparing their products for sale.

Their business is not interstate commerce; U. S. v. Boyer, 85 Fed. 425; merely because the yards are located in two states and it does business in both, though, as to stock shipped from one state to another, it may be interstate commerce and to that extent exempt from state regulation; Cotting v. Stock Yards Co., 79 Fed. 679.

The acts of congress (1 Supp. Rev. Stat. 937, and 2 Supp. Rev. Stat. 403) whereby the Secretary of Agriculture is empowered to have made a careful inspection of cattle, etc., at slaughter houses located in the several states, the products of which are intended for sale in other states or in foreign countries, were held unconstitutional in U. S. v. Boyer, 85 Fed. 425.

They may be subjected to a license tax by a state for doing business therein; Kehrer v. Stewart, 197 U. S. 60, 25 Sup. Ct. 403, 49 L. Ed. 663; Armour Packing Co. v. Lacy, 200 U. S. 226, 26 Sup. Ct. 232, 50 L. Ed. 451; though the greater portion of the business may be interstate in its character; id.; Smith v. Clark, 122 Ga. 528, 50 S. E. 480. Their business is of such a nature as to justify a state in imposing rules for their government; Cotting v. Stock Yards Co., 79 Fed. 679.

PACKING A JURY. Improperly and corruptly selecting a jury to be sworn and impanelled for the trial of a cause. Mix v. Woodward, 12 Conn. 289.

PACIONS. In International Law. Contracts between nations which are to be performed by a single act, which done, the contract is at an end.

PACTUM. In Civil Law. An agreement made by two or more persons on the same subject, in order to form some engagement, or to dissolve or modify one already made: Conventio est duorum in idem placitum consensus de re solvenda, id est facienda vel prestanda. Dig. 2. 14: Clef des Lois Rom.; Ayliffe, Pand. 558; Merlin, Rép. Pacte.

PACTUM COMMISSORIUM. An agreement of forfeiture. See LEX COMMISSORIA.

PACTUM CONSTITUTÆ PECUNIÆ (Lat.). In Civil Law. An agreement by which a person appointed to his creditor a certain day, or a certain time, at which he promised to pay; or it may be defined simply an agreement by which a person promises a creditor to pay him.

When a person by this pact promises his own creditor to pay him, there arises a new obligation, which does not destroy the former by which he was already bound, but which is accessory to it; and by this multiplicity of obligations the right of the creditor is strengthened. Pothier, Obl. pt. 2, c. 6, s. 9.

There is a striking conformity between the pactum constitutæ pecuniæ, as above defined, and our indebitatus assumpsit. The pactum constitutæ pecuniæ was a promise to pay a subsisting debt, whether natural or civil, made in such a manner as not to extinguish the preceding debt, and introduced by the prætor to obviate some formal difficulties. The action of indebitatus assumpsit was brought upon a promise for the payment of a debt; it is not subject to the wager of law and other technical difficulties of the regular action of debt; but by such promise the right to the action of debt was not extinguished nor varied; 4 Co. 91, 95. See 1 H. Bla. 550, 650; Brooke, Abr. Action sur le Case (pl. 7, 69, 72); 4 B. & B. 295; 1 Chitty, Pl. 89.

PACTUM DE NON ALIENANDO. A clause inserted in mortgages in Louisiana which secures to the mortgage creditor the right to foreclose his mortgage by executory process directed solely against the mortgagor, and gives him the right to seize and sell the mortgaged property, regardless of any subsequent alienations. Avegno v. Schmidt, 35 La. Ann. 585; Shields v. Schiff, 124 U. S. 355, 8 Sup. Ct. 510, 31 L. Ed. 445. This rule applies to an alienation by condemnation in proceedings for confiscation, and as against the heirs-at-law of the person whose property is confiscated; Avegno v. Schmidt, 113 U. S. 293, 5 Sup. Ct. 487, 28 L. Ed. 976. If a mortgage debtor in Louisiana, in a suit to foreclose a mortgage containing this clause, waives the benefit of prescription, those who take through him are estopped from pressing it, as effectually as he is estopped; Shields v. Schiff, 124 U. S. 351, 8 Sup. Ct. 510, 31 L. Ed. 445.

PACTUM DE NON PETENDO (Lat.). In Civil Law. An agreement made between a creditor and his debtor that the former will not demand from the latter the debt due. By this agreement the debtor is freed from his obligation. This is not unlike the covenant not to sue, of the common law. Wolff, Dr. de la Nat. § 755; Leake, Contr., 3d ed. 798.

PACTUM DE QUOTA LITIS (Lat.). In Civil Law. An agreement by which a creditor of a sum difficult to recover promises a portion—for example, one-third—to the person who will undertake to recover it. In general attorneys should abstain from making such a contract: yet it is not unlawful at common law. See CHAMPERTY.

PAIN FORTE ET DURE. See PEINE FORTE ET DURE.

PAINS AND PENALTIES. See BILL OF PAINS AND PENALTIES.

PAINTING. A likeness, image, or scene depicted with paints. Cent. Dict. The term does not necessarily mean anything upon which painting has been done by a workman, but rather something of value as a painting and something on which skill has been bestowed in producing it; 3 Exch. Div. 121. Whether certain articles fall within the description of paintings as used in a statute is a question of fact for a jury; id.

As to copyright in paintings, see COPYRIGHT.

PAIRING-OFF. A system in vogue both in parliament and in legislative bodies in this country, whereby a member agrees with a member on the opposite side that they shall both be absent from voting during a given time, or upon a particular question. It is said to have originated in the house of commons in Cromwell's time. In the House of Commons, it may be arranged by the "whips." See MAY, Parl. Prac.

PAIS, PAYS. A French word, signifying country. In law, matter in pais is matter of fact, in opposition to matter of record; a trial per pais is a trial by the country,—that is, by a jury. See IN PAIS.

PALACE CAR. See SLEEPING CAR.

PALACE COURT. See COURT OF THE STEWARD AND MARSHALL.

PALAGIUM. A duty to lords of manors for exporting and importing vessels of wine at any of their ports. Jacob.

PALATINE. See COUNTY PALATINE; COURTS OF COUNTY PALATINE.

PALLIO COOPERIRE. (To cover with a cloak.) See LEGITIMATION; MANTLE CHILDREN.

PALMARIUM. In Civil Law. A conditional fee for professional services in addition to the lawful charge. See ADVOCATE.

PALMISTRY. The art or practice of telling fortunes by a feigned interpretation of the lines and marks on the hand. The word is used by good writers in the sense of a trick with the hand. 2 Exch. Div. 268.

PAMPHLET. A small book usually printed in octavo form and stitched.

Pamphlet laws. The name given in some states to the publication of the acts of the legislature. In Pennsylvania and Delaware they are originally published from session to session, unbound, with continuous paging, and indexed and bound after a number of sessions.

PANAMA CANAL. The act of June 28, 1902, authorized (section 1) the purchase of the French Panama Canal Company and (section 2) the acquisition from the Republic of Colombia of the perpetual control of a strip of land not less than six miles in width, extending from the Caribbean Sea to the Pacific Ocean, with the right to build and maintain a canal thereon, and the right to operate and maintain perpetually the Panama railroad, if its ownership or a control thereof shall have been acquired by the United States, and also jurisdiction over the same and the ports at the end thereof, etc. The President is authorized to acquire additional territory and rights from Colombia, in his discretion. By section 3, the President is authorized to construct the canal. Section 7 creates the Isthmian Canal Commission of seven members appointed by the President, with the consent of the Senate, to serve until the completion of the canal, or unless sooner removed by the President. (By act of Aug. 24, 1912, the President is authorized to discontinue the commission and to complete, govern and operate the canal by a governor, who shall serve for four years.)

The act of April 28, 1904, authorized the President to take possession of the "Canal Zone" of the width of four miles on each side of the centre line of the canal, and extending three marine miles from low water mark at each end of the Zone, also a group of islands in the Bay of Panama. Ratifications of the treaty with the Republic of Panama were exchanged February 26, 1904. By act of Aug. 24, 1912, the Zone was made ten miles in width, excluding Panama and Colon and their harbors.

The title of the United States to the Canal Zone is not imperfect because the treaty does not contain technical terms of conveyance, or because the boundaries are not sufficient for identification, the ceded territory having been practically identified by the concurrent action of the two nations; Wilson v. Shaw, 204 U. S. 24, 27 Sup. Ct. 233, 51 L. Ed. 351. Congress has power to create interstate highways, including canals, and also those within territories and outside of state lines; id.

PANDECTS. In Civil Law. The name of an abridgment or compilation of the civil law, made by Tribonian and others, by order of the emperor Justinian, and to which he gave the force of law, A. D. 533.

It is also known by the name of the Digest, because in his compilation the writings of the jurists were reduced to order and condensed quasi digestis.

The emperor, in 530, published an ordinance entitled De Conceptione Digestorum, which was addressed to Tribonian, and by which he was required to select some of the most distinguished lawyers to assist him in composing a collection of the best decisions of the ancient lawyers, and compile them in fifty books, without confusion or contradiction. The instructions of the emperor were to select what was useful, to omit what was antiquated or superfluous, to avoid contradictions, and by the necessary changes, to produce a complete body of law. This work was a companion to the Code of Justinian, and was to be governed in its arrangement of topics by the method of the Code. Justinian allowed the commissioners, who were sixteen in number, ten years to compile it; but the work was completed in three years, and promulgated in 533. A list of the writers from whose works the collection was made, and an account of the method pursued by the commissioners, will be found in Smith's Dict. of Gr. & Rom. Antiq. About a third of the collection is taken from Ulpian; Julius Paulus, a contemporary of Ulpian, stands next: these two contributed one-half of the Digest. Papinian comes next. The Digest, although compiled in Constantinople, was originally written in Latin, and afterwards translated into Greek.

The Digest is divided in two different ways: the first into fifty books, each book in several titles, and each title into several extracts or leges, and at the head of each series of extracts is the name of the lawyer from whose work they were taken. The fifty books are allotted in seven parts.

The division into digestum vetus (book first to and including title second of book twenty-fourth), digestum infortiatum (title third of book twenty-fourth, to and including book thirty-eighth), and digestum novum (from book thirty-ninth to the end), has reference to the order in which these three parts appeared. As to the methods of citing them, see CITATION OF AUTHORITIES.

The style of the work is very grave and pure, and contrasts in this respect with that of the Code, which is very far from classical. On the other hand, the learning of the Digest stands rather in the discussing of subtle questions of law, and enumerations of the variety of opinions of ancient lawyers thereupon, than in practical matters of daily use, of which the Code so simply and directly treats. See Ridley, View, pt. 1. ch. 1, 2.

While the Pandects form much the largest fraction of the Corpus Juris, their relative value and importance are far more than proportional to their extent. They are, in fact, the soul of the Corpus Juris. Hadley, Rom. L. 11.

It covered the domain of private law and the dealings of men with each other. "Its design was noble, but its execution was exceedingly imperfect." James C. Carter, The Law, etc., 288.

See CIVIL LAW.

PANEL (diminutive from either pane, apart, or page, pagella. Cowell). In Practice. A schedule or roll, containing the names of jurors summoned by virtue of a writ of venire facias, and annexed to the writ. It is returned into court whence the venire issued. Co. Litt. 158 b; 3 Bla. Com. 353; People v. Coyodo, 40 Cal. 586. See Beasley v. People, 89 Ill. 575. The word may be used to designate either the whole number of jurors summoned or those selected by the clerk by lot according to the connection in which it is used. State v. Gurlagh, 76 Ia. 141, 40 N. W. 141.

PANTOMIME. A dramatic performance in which gestures take the place of words. 3 C. B. 871.

PAPACY. See PAPIST; ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH; PAPAL SUPREMACY.

PAPAL SUPREMACY. The supremacy which the Pope claimed not only over the Emperor of the Holy Roman Empire, but over all other Christian princes. The theory was that they stood to the Pope as feudal vassals to a supreme lord; as such, the Pope claimed the right to enforce the duties due to him from his feudal subordinates through an ascending scale of penalties culminating in the absolution of the prince's subjects from the bonds of allegiance, and in the disposition of the sovereign himself. The papal supremacy was overthrown in England by acts of the Parliament which met in 1529 and was dissolved in 1536, ending in the Act of Supremacy. See Hannis Taylor, Science of Jurispr.; Boyce, Holy Rom. Emp.; Freeman, Sel. Hist. Essays; 2 Phill. Intern. Law.

PAPER. A manufactured substance composed of fibres (whether vegetable or animal) adhering together in forms consisting of sheets of various sizes and of different thicknesses, used for writing or printing or other purposes to which flexible sheets are applicable. 4 H. & N. 470. Books are not paper within the meaning of the tariff act; Pott v. Arthur, 104 U. S. 735, 26 L. Ed. 909.

In English Practice. The list of cases intended for argument. See PAPER-DAYS.

PAPER BLOCKADE. An ineffective blockade. See BLOCKADE.

PAPER-BOOK. In Practice. A book or paper containing an abstract of all the facts and pleadings necessary to the full understanding of a case.

The issues in actions, etc., upon special pleadings, made up by the clerk of the papers, who is an officer for that purpose. Upon an issue in law, it is termed the demurrer-book. The clerks of the papers of the court of K. B., in all copies of pleas and paper-books by them made up, shall subscribe to such paper-books the names of the counsel who have signed such pleas, as well on behalf of the plaintiff as defendant; and in all paper-books delivered to the judges of the court, the names of the counsel who did sign those pleas are to be subscribed to the books by the clerks or attorneys who deliver the same. Jac. L. Dict.; 2 Hill, Abr. 268.

The courts of error, and other courts, on arguments, require that the judges shall each be furnished with such a paper-book; Tr. & H. Pr. 867. In Pennsylvania the printed copy of the record, the argument, etc., used in the supreme and superior courts is so called.

In the court of king's bench, in England, the transcript containing the whole of the proceedings filed or delivered between the parties, when the issue joined is an issue in fact, is called the paper-book. Steph. Pl.

95; 3 Bla. Com. 317; 3 Chitt. Pr. 521; 2 Stra. 1131, 1266; 2 Wils. 243.

PAPER CREDIT. Credit given on the security of any written obligation purporting to represent property.

PAPER-DAYS. In English Law. Days on which special arguments are to take place. Tuesdays and Fridays in termtime were paper-days appointed by the court. Lee, Dict. of Pr.; Archb. Pr. 101.

PAPER MONEY. The engagements to pay money which are issued by governments and banks, and which pass as money, Pardessus, Droit. Com. n. 9. Bank-notes are generally considered as cash, and will answer all the purposes of currency; but paper money is not a legal tender if objected to. But see LEGAL TENDER.

See NATIONAL BANKS; MONEY; GOLD.

PAPER OFFICE. An ancient office in the palace of Whitehall, wherein state papers are kept. Also an ancient office for the court records in the court of queen's bench, sometimes called the paper-mill, Moz. & W. See Jac. L. Dict.

PAPER TITLE. A title to land evidenced by one or more conveyances, the term generally implying that such title, while it has color or plausibility, is without substantial validity. See COLORED TITLE.

PAPERS. The term does not mean newspapers or perhaps even include them within the meaning of a statute, the object of which is to prevent a jury from receiving any evidence, papers, or documents not authorized by the court. State v. Jackson, 9 Mont. 508, 24 Pac. 216. In a will, "all my books and papers" include a promissory note; Perkins v. Mathes, 49 N. H. 107.

The constitution of the United States provides that the rights of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures shall not be violated. See SEARCH WARRANT.

PAPIST. A term formerly applied in Great Britain to Roman Catholics.

By the act of 10 Geo. IV. c. 7, known as the Catholic Emancipation Act, Roman Catholics were restored in general to the full enjoyment of all civil rights, except that of holding ecclesiastical offices and certain high appointments in the state. Before that act their condition had been much ameliorated by various statutes, beginning with 18 Geo. III. c. 60. As to the right of holding property for religious purposes, the 2 & 3 Wm. IV. c. 115, placed them on a level with Protestant dissenters, and the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 102, and 9 & 10 Vict. c. 49, repealed all enactments oppressive to Roman Catholics. See Whart. Lex.

See PAPAL SUPREMACY; ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH.

PAR. Equal. It is used to denote a state of equality or equal value. Bills of exchange, stocks, and the like, are at par when they sell for their nominal value; above par, or below par, when they sell for more or less; State of Illinois v. Delafield, 8 Paige (N. Y.) 527.

PAR DELICTUM. Equal guilt. See IN PARI DELICTO; PARI DELICTO.

PAR OF EXCHANGE. The par of the currencies of any two countries means the equivalence of a certain amount of the currency of the one in the currency of the other, supposing the currency of both to be of the precise weight and purity fixed by their respective mints. Delafield v. Illinois, 26 Wend. (N. Y.) 224. The exchange between the two countries is said to be at par when bills are negotiated on this footing. Bowen, Pol. Econ. 321. See 11 East 267.

PAR ONERI. Equal to the burden or charge, or to the detriment or damage.

PAR VALUE. A current phrase having no other meaning than the value of the pound sterling formerly fixed by law for the purposes of revenue. Com. v. Haupt, 10 Allen (Mass.) 44. It is commonly used to indicate the face value of bonds or stock.

PARAGE. Equality of blood, name, or dignity, but more especially of land in the partition of an inheritance between co-heirs. Co. Litt. 166 b. See TENURE.

In Feudal Law. Where heirs took of the same stock and by same title, but, from right of primogeniture, or some other cause, the shares were unequal, the younger was said to hold of the elder, jure et titulo paragii, by right and title of parage being equal in everything but the quantity, and owing no homage or fealty. Calv. Lex. See 2 Poll. & Maitl. 261, 274, 289.

PARAGIUM (from the Latin adjective par, equal; made a substantive by the addition of agium; 1 Thomas Co. Litt. 681). Equality.

In Ecclesiastical Law. The portion which a woman gets on her marriage. Ayl. Par. 336.

In Domesday Book there are many instances in which slaves or soldiers held manors or fractions of manors 'pariter' or 'in paragio.' This feudal tenancy was fully developed on the continent. Seebohm, Tribal Customs in Anglo-Sax. Law 513.

PARAGRAPH. A distinct part of a discourse or writing relating to a particular point.

An entire or integral statement of a cause of action equivalent to a count at common law. Bailey v. Mosher, 63 Fed. 488, 11 C. C. A. 304.

The term paragraph in an act of congress will be construed to mean section whenever to do so accords with the legislative intent; Alfrey v. Colbert, 168 Fed. 231, 93 C. C. A. 517.

PARALLEL. Extending in the same direction, and in all parts equidistant; having the same direction or tendency. Postal Tel. C. Co. v. R. Co., 88 Va. 920, 14 S. E. 803.

See Cronin v. R. Co., 144 Mass. 254, 10 N. E. 833.

In the specification of a patent the word was construed in its popular sense of going side by side and not in its purely mathematical sense; 2 App. Cas. 423; and so in Fratt v. Woodward, 32 Cal. 231, 91 Am. Dec. 573; Williams v. Jackson, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 489; where it was held that parallel lines were not necessarily straight lines.

As to parallel and competing railroads, see MERGER; RAILROADS; RESTRAINT OF TRADE.

PARAMOUNT (par, by, mounter, to ascend). Above; upwards. Kelh. Norm. Dict. Paramount especifié, above specified. Plowd. 209 a.

That which is superior: usually applied to the highest lord of the fee of lands, tenements, or hereditaments. Fitzh. N. B. 135. Where A lets land to B, and he underlets them to C, in this case A is the paramount and B is the mesne landlord. See 2 Bla. Com. 90; 1 Thomas, Co. Litt. 484, n. 79, 485, n. 81; MESNE.

PARANOIA. A form of insanity which comes under the class of degenerative diseases. The main fundamental characteristic of this disease is a delusion which has become a part of the belief of the individual, and which he believes himself able to explain and defend. 3 Withth. & Beck. Med. Jur. 288.

It is sometimes characterized as logical perversion, and is said to have "misplaced the antiquated term monomania, which not only implied that the delusion was restricted to one subject, but was otherwise insufficient and misleading;" 2 Clevenger, Med. Jur. 860. The memory, emotions, judgment, and conceptions are in most cases unimpaired, though each of these mental divisions may be involved; id. It is characterized by systematized delusions, the term taking the place of "monomania" or "partial insanity"; Taylor v. McClintock, 87 Ark. 243, 112 S. W. 405.

The intellect is rarely much involved. In all other relations the individual may be able to carry on his business in life. There is little doubt but that they are thoroughly responsible for their own actions. But if the act be the result of their delusion it is not so much a question of their ability to control their actions, as that they do not attempt to do so. 3 Withth. & Beck. 289.

A belief in witches is not such an insane delusion as to excuse one from the consequences of his act in killing one he believed to be a witch responsible for deaths among his people and his tribe; Hotema v. U. S., 186 U. S. 413, 22 Sup. Ct. 895, 46 L. Ed. 1225.

Where a charge presents the general rule applicable to the defence of insanity, it is not necessary to use the term "paranoia," or "delusional insanity"; Minder v. Georgia, 183 U. S. 559, 22 Sup. Ct. 224, 46 L. Ed. 328.

PARAPHERNA (Lat.). In Civil Law. Goods brought by wife to husband over and above her dower (dos). Voc. Jur. Utr.; Fleta, lib. 5, c. 23, § 6; Mack. C. L. § 529.

In mediæval times the "res parapherna" were all the goods other than the "dos." These the husband did not own and of them the wife could make her will. 3 Holdsw. Hist. B. L. 426.

PARAPHERNALIA. Apparel and ornaments of a wife, suitable to her rank and degree. 2 Bla. Com. 435.

Those goods which a wife could bequeath by her testament. 2 Poll. & Maitl. 427.

It is property brought to the marriage by one of the spouses. There can be no such thing as paraphernal property prior to marriage; Le Boeuf v. Melancon, 131 La. 148, 59 South. 102.

These are subject to the control of the husband during his lifetime; 3 Atk. 394; but go to the wife upon his death, in preference to all other representatives; Cro. Car. 343; and cannot be devised away by the husband; Noy. Max. They are liable to be sold to pay debts on a failure of assets; 1 P. Wms. 730. See, also, 2 Atk. 642; 11 Vin. Abr. 176.

While a married woman may acquire title to articles of apparel by gift from her husband, yet her mere use and enjoyment of such articles purchased by her husband does not give title thereto as her separate property; State v. Pitts, 12 S. C. 180, 32 Am. Rep. 508. See, also, Pratt v. State, 35 Ohio St. 514, 35 Am. Rep. 617. The wearing apparel purchased by a married woman after her marriage, with her husband's money, or upon his credit, belongs to him as against her creditors; Smith v. Abair, 87 Mich. 62, 49 N. W. 509. In New York, by statute, a married woman may sue in her own name for injury to her paraphernalia; Rawson v. R. Co., 48 N. Y. 212, 8 Am. Rep. 543; but in the absence of proof of a gift to her, the husband can sue; Curtis v. R. Co., 74 N. Y. 116, 30 Am. Rep. 271.

In some states, the paraphernalia of a wife is protected by statute (in Georgia by name, and in Rhode Island and Colorado by description). The articles covered by one or more of the statutes are: wearing apparel of the wife and such ornaments, jewelry, silver, table ware, plate, and such articles of property as have been given to her for her own use and comfort. In Louisiana the property not declared to be brought in marriage by the wife, or given to her in consideration of the marriage, is paraphernalia, and she has a right to administer it without the assistance of her husband; but as to any which is administered by her husband without her opposition, he is accountable for it. See MARRIED WOMAN. These rules are largely changed by the married women's acts.

PARAPHERNAUX BIENS. In French Law. All the property of the wife which is not subject to the régime dotal.

PARATITLA (Lat.). In Civil Law. An abbreviated explanation of some titles or books of the Code or Digest.

PARATUM HABEO (Lat. I have ready). A return made by the sheriff to a capias ad respondendum, which signified that he had the defendant ready to bring into court. This was a fiction, where the defendant was at large. Afterwards he was required, by statute, to take bail from the defendant, and he returned cepi corpus and bail-bond. But still he might be ruled to bring in the body; White v. Fidler, 7 Pa. 535.

PARAVAIL. Tenant paravail is the lowest tenant of the fee, or he who is the immediate tenant to one who holds of another. He is called tenant paravail because it is presumed he has the avails or profits of the land. Fitzh. N. B. 135; Co. 2d Inst. 296.

PARCEL. A part of an estate. Martin v. Cole, 38 Ia. 141; 1 Comyns, Dig. Abatement (H 51), Grant (E 10). Under a statute providing for an assessment of unplatted lands, synonymous with lot. Terre Haute v. Mack, 139 Ind. 99, 38 N. E. 468. To parcel is to divide an estate. Bac. Abr. Conditions (O).

The word "parcel" is not a sufficient description of the property alleged in an indictment to have been stolen. The prisoner was indicted for stealing "one parcel, of the value of one shilling, of the goods," etc. The parcel in question was taken from the hold of a vessel, out of a box broken open by the prisoner. Held an insufficient description; 7 Cox, C. C. 13. See PACKAGE.

PARCEL MAKERS. Two officers in the exchequer who formerly made the parcels of the escheator's accounts, wherein they charged them for everything they had levied for the sovereign's use within the time of their being in office, and delivered the same to the auditors to make up their accounts therewith. Whart. Law Lex.

PARCEL POST. It was provided for by act of August 24, 1912 (in effect January 1, 1913). It includes in fourth-class mail matter farm and factory products and all other mail matter not included in the first, second and third classes, not exceeding 11 pounds in weight nor 72 inches in length and girth combined. The rates of postage are fixed by eight zones of radial distances: 50 miles; 150; 300; 600; 1000; 1400; 1800; all beyond.

The postmaster general may, subject to the consent of the interstate commerce commission, reform the classification, weight limits, rates, zones or conditions, in order to promote the service or to insure revenue adequate to pay the cost of the service.

He may make regulations indemnifying shippers for shipments injured or lost, and for the collection on delivery of the postage and price of the article.

PARCELS, BILL OF. See BILL OF PARCELS.

PARCENARY. The state or condition of holding title to lands jointly by parceners, before the common inheritance has been divided.

PARCENERS. The daughters of a man or woman seised of lands and tenements in fee-simple or fee-tail, on whom, after the death of such ancestor, such lands and tenements descend, and they enter. See ESTATE IN CO-PARCENARY.

PARCHMENT. Sheepskins dressed for writing, so called from Pergamus, Asia Minor, where they were invented. Used for deeds, and for writs of summons in England previous to the Judicature Act, 1875. Whart. Lex.

PARCO FRACTO (Lat.). In English Law. The name of a writ against one who violently breaks a pound and takes from thence beasts which, for some trespass done, or some other just cause, were lawfully impounded.

PARDON. An act of grace, usually proceeding from the power intrusted with the execution of the laws, which exempts the individual on whom it is bestowed from the punishment which the law inflicts for a crime he has committed. U. S. v. Wilson, 7 Pet. (U. S.) 160, 8 L. Ed. 640; People v. Court of Sessions, 19 N. Y. Supp. 508.

It is a remission of guilt and a declaration of record by the authorized authority that a particular individual is to be relieved from the legal consequences of a particular crime; Territory v. Richardson, 9 Okl. 579, 60 Pac. 244, 49 L. R. A. 440.

Every pardon granted to the guilty is in derogation of the law; if the pardon be just, the law is bad; for where legislation and the administration of the law are perfect, pardons must be a violation of the law. But, as human actions are necessarily imperfect, the pardoning power must be vested somewhere, in order to prevent injustice when it is ascertained that an error has been committed.

An absolute pardon is one which frees the criminal without any condition whatever.

A conditional pardon is one to which a condition is annexed, performance of which is necessary to the validity of the pardon. Ex parte Hunt, 10 Ark. 284; State v. Fuller, 1 McCord (S. C.) 178.

A general pardon is one which extends to all offenders of the same kind. It may be express, as when a general declaration is made that all offenders of a certain class shall be pardoned, or implied, as in case of the repeal of a penal statute. Roberts v. State, 2 Over. (Tenn.) 423. See AMNESTY.

The pardoning power is lodged in the executive of the United States and of the various states, and extends to all offences except in cases of impeachment. In some states a concurrence of one of the legislative bodies is required; in other states, boards of pardon have been provided, whose recommendation of a pardon to the executive is a prerequisite to the exercise of the power. The constitutional power of pardon vested in the executive is not subject to legislative control, either to limit the effect of a pardon, or to exclude from its operation any class of offenders; Re Garland, 4 Wall. (U. S.) 333, 18 L. Ed. 366; State v. Todd, 26 Mo. 175; Diehl v. Rodgers, 169 Pa. 316, 32 Atl. 424, 47 Am. St. Rep. 908. In Pennsylvania, the act of March 31, 1860, provides that when any person convicted of a felony, etc., has endured his punishment, it shall have the same effect as a pardon, and he becomes a competent witness; this is a legislative pardon and has the same effect as an executive pardon; U. S. v. Hall, 53 Fed. 352. The pardoning power is by no means confined to the executive; it was possessed by parliament (4 Bla. Com. 401; U. S. v. Wilson, 7 Pet. [U. S.] 162, 8 L. Ed. 640); and from the very nature of government, in Pennsylvania it is vested in the legislative branch by the inherent supreme law-making power, and in the executive by constitutional provision; U. S. v. Hall, 53 Fed. 352.

The power of pardon conferred by the constitution upon the president is unlimited, except in cases of impeachment. It extends to every offence known to the law, and may be exercised at any time after its commission, either before legal proceedings are taken, or during their pendency, or after conviction and judgment. A pardon reaches the punishment prescribed for an offence, and the guilt of the offender. If granted before conviction, it prevents any of the penalties and disabilities consequent upon conviction from attaching; if granted after conviction, it removes the penalties and disabilities, and restores him to all his civil rights. It gives him a new credit and capacity. It blots out his guilt and makes him, in the eye of the law, as innocent as if he had never committed the offence. There is only this limitation to its operation; it does not restore offices forfeited, or property or interests vested in others, in consequence of the conviction and judgment; Re Garland, 4 Wall. (U. S.) 333, 18 L. Ed. 366. See Cowan v. Prowse, 93 Ky. 156, 19 S. W. 407; Cook v. Board of Chosen Freeholders, 26 N. J. L. 326; Territory v. Richardson, 9 Okl. 579, 60 Pac. 244, 49 L. R. A. 440. It may be granted after conviction and before sentence while exceptions are pending; Com. v. Lockwood, 109 Mass. 323, 12 Am. Rep. 699, where there is an extended discussion of the pardoning power by Gray, J., or before being charged with the crime; U. S. v. Burdick, 211 Fed. 492.

The granting of a full and unconditional pardon by the president to a person convicted of a felony restores his competency as a witness, and this result is not affected by a recital in a pardon that it was granted for the reason, among others, that his testimony was desired by the government in a cause then pending in a federal court; Boyd v. U. S., 142 U. S. 450, 12 Sup. Ct. 292, 35 L. Ed. 1077; and a pardon granted after the person has served his term of imprisonment has the same effect; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Howell (Tex.) 30 S. W. 98.

There are several ways (as given by Judge Cooley) in which the pardoning power of the president may be exercised: 1. A pardon may be given to a person under conviction by name, and this will take effect from its delivery, unless otherwise provided therein. 2. It may be given to one or more persons named, or to a class of persons, before conviction, and even before prosecution begun. Such a pardon is rather in the nature of an amnesty. 3. It may be given by proclamation, forgiving all persons who may have been guilty of the specified offence, or offences; Re Garland, 4 Wall. (U. S.) 380, 18 L. Ed. 366; U. S. v. Klein, 13 Wall. (U. S.) 128, 20 L. Ed. 519; and in this case the pardon takes effect from the time the proclamation is signed; Lapeyre v. U. S., 17 Wall. (U. S.) 191, 21 L. Ed. 606. See infra. 4. It may in any of these ways be made a pardon on conditions to be first performed, in which case it has effect only on performance; or on conditions to be thereafter performed, in which case a breach of the condition will place the offender in the position occupied by him before the pardon was issued; U. S. v. Wilson, 7 Pet. (U. S.) 150, 8 L. Ed. 640; People v. James, 2 Caines (N. Y.) 57; Ex parte Marks, 64 Cal. 29, 28 Pac. 109, 49 Am. Rep. 684.

In Michigan it has been held that a pardoned convict charged with having violated the conditions of his release must be arrested and tried in the same manner as other offenders against the law; People v. Moore, 62 Mich. 496, 29 N. W. 80; but in South Carolina a convict who has broken the conditions of his pardon may be remanded to the penitentiary to serve out the remainder of his sentence, though the time in which he was to serve has expired; State v. Barnes, 32 S. C. 14, 10 S. E. 611, 6 L. R. A. 743, 17 Am. St. Rep. 832. A power to grant pardons on condition that the person pardoned shall leave the state and not return to it, is not in conflict with a constitutional provision which provides that no one shall be exiled from the state; Ex parte Hawkins, 61 Ark. 321, 33 S. W. 106, 30 L. R. A. 736, 54 Am. St. Rep. 209.

Conditions attached to a parole or pardon by the board of pardons that are to extend beyond, or be performed after the expiration of, the term of the sentence are illegal; In re Prout, 12 Idaho, 494, 86 Pac. 275, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1064, 10 Ann. Cas. 199. An unconditional pardon is irrevocable; Ex parte Rice (Tex.) 162 S. W. 891.

It is to be exercised in the discretion of the power with whom it is lodged.

As to promises of pardon to accomplices, see 1 Chitty, Cr. L. 83; 1 Leach 115.

In order to render a pardon valid, it must express with accuracy the crime intended to be forgiven; 4 Bla. Com. 400; State v. McIntire, 46 N. C. 1, 59 Am. Dec. 566.

The effect of a pardon is to protect the criminal from punishment for the offence pardoned; Armstrong's Foundry, 6 Wall. (U. S.) 766, 18 L. Ed. 882, Osborn v. U. S., 91 U. S. 474, 23 L. Ed. 388; but for no other; State v. McCarty, 1 Bay (S. C.) 334. It seems that the pardon of an assault and battery, which afterwards becomes murder by the death of the person beaten, would not operate as a pardon of the murder; Com. v. Roby, 12 Pick. (Mass.) 496. See Plowd. 401; People v. McLeod, 1 Hill (N. Y.) 426, 37 Am. Dec. 328. In general, the effect of a full pardon is to restore the convict to all his rights; Diehl v. Rodgers, 169 Pa. 319, 32 Atl. 424, 47 Am. St. Rep. 908; even though granted after he has served out his sentence, it restores his competency to testify; Boyd v. U. S., 142 U. S. 450, 12 Sup. Ct. 292, 35 L. Ed. 1077; but to this there are some exceptions. First, it does not restore civil capacity; Com. v. Fugate, 2 Leigh (Va.) 724. See Jones v. Harris, 1 Strobb. (S. C.) 160; State v. Blaisdell, 33 N. H. 388. Second, it does not affect a status of other persons which has been altered or a right which has accrued in consequence of the commission of the crime or its punishment; In re Deming, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 232; State v. Rowe, 2 Bay (S. C.) 565; Holliday v. People, 5 Gilman (Ill.) 214; or third persons who, by the prosecution of judicial proceedings, may have acquired rights to a share in penalties or to property forfeited and actually sold; Kirk v. Lewis, 9 Fed. 645; but see U. S. v. Thomasson, 4 Biss. 336, Fed. Cas. No. 16,479; Armstrong's Foundry, 6 Wall. (U. S.) 766, 18 L. Ed. 882 (as to forfeiture to United States).

In England a pardon removes not only the punishment but the legal disabilities consequent on the crime, wherever the latter are the consequence of the judgment, but where it is declared by act of parliament to be a part of the punishment, as in case of perjury under the 5 Eliz. c. 9, pardon will not make the person competent; 2 Russ. Cr. 975, followed in Houghtaling v. Kelderhouse, 1 Park. Cr. Rep. (N. Y.) 241; Foreman v. Baldwin, 24 Ill. 298. But this distinction does not obtain here; Diehl v. Rodgers, 169 Pa. 316, 32 Atl. 424, 47 Am. St. Rep. 908; Re Garland, 4 Wall. (U. S.) 333, 18 L. Ed. 366. It has been held in Ohio that a prisoner could not be tried on the charge of being a habitual criminal after having been pardoned by the governor for the previous offence; 56 Alb. L. J. 5.

When the pardon is general, either by an act of amnesty, or by the repeal of a penal law, it is not necessary to plead it; because the court is bound to take notice of it; Jenkins v. Collard, 145 U. S. 546, 12 Sup. Ct. 868, 36 L. Ed. 812. A criminal cannot even waive such pardon, because by his admittance no one can give the court power to punish him when it judicially appears there is no law to do it. But when the pardon is special, to avail the criminal it must judicially appear that it has been accepted; and for this reason it must be specially pleaded; 4 Bla. Com. 401; U. S. v. Wilson, 7 Pet. (U. S.) 150, 8 L. Ed. 640; and if he has obtained a pardon before arraignment, and, instead of pleading it in bar, he pleads the general issue, he shall be deemed to have waived the benefit of it, and cannot afterwards avail himself of it in arrest of judgment; 1 Rolle 297. See 1 Dy. 34 a; T. Raym. 13; Evans v. Com., 3 Metc. (Mass.) 453.

The power to pardon extends to punishments for contempt; In re Mullee, 7 Blatchf. 23, Fed. Cas. No. 9,911.

All contracts made for the buying or procuring a pardon for a convict are void.

The governor under his power to grant reprieves and pardons may grant a conditional pardon in the nature of a parole of the convict; Fuller v. State, 122 Ala. 32, 26 South. 146, 45 L. R. A. 502, 82 Am. St. Rep. 1. The board of pardons is a branch of the executive department of the state government and its powers and prerogatives as such are those of granting clemency to convicted prisoners, but it has no power to increase or extend penalties or punishments pronounced by sentence of the court; In re Prout, 12 Idaho, 494, 86 Pac. 275, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1064, 10 Ann. Cas. 199.

One convicted of fraud in obtaining patents to public lands was pardoned on condition that he would make restitution of the lands. He filed a relinquishment thereof. Held that no right was wrested from him; Bradford v. U. S., 228 U. S. 446, 33 Sup. Ct. 576, 57 L. Ed. 912.

A mayor of a city may be vested with power to pardon one convicted of the violation of an ordinance. See In re Monroe, 46 Fed. 52.

See AMNESTY; EXECUTIVE POWER.

PARDONERS. Persons who carried about the pope's indulgences and sold them. Whart. Law Lex.

PARENS PATRIÆ (Lat.). Father of his country. In England, the king; 3 Bla. Com. 427; 2 Steph. Com. 528; in the United States the state, as sovereign, has power of guardianship over persons under disabilities. See Fontain v. Ravenel, 17 How. (U. S.) 393, 15 L. Ed. 80.

The state and not the general government is parens patriæ; American L. & T. Co. v. Grand Rivers Co., 159 Fed. 775; and is such for all her citizens for the protection of their aggregate rights; Louisiana v. Texas, 176 U. S. 1, 19, 20 Sup. Ct. 251, 44 L. Ed. 347.

See ESCHEAT.

PARENT AND CHILD. Liability of either for support of the other. In England, by 43 Eliz. c. 2, the father and mother, grandfather and grandmother of poor, old, blind, and impotent persons are obliged to furnish them with necessaries, if of sufficient ability. But not after majority; 1 Ld. Raym. 699.

Statutes of the same tenor have been enacted in some states. The English statute may be considered as a part of the common law in the United States; Schoul. Dom. Rel. *320; and see Wertz v. Blair Co., 66 Pa. 19.

In some states the failure to support, or the abandonment of, a minor child is a penal offence. Except under this statute, there appears to be no civil obligation on a parent to support his minor child; 11 C. B. 452; L. R. 3 Q. B. 559; or to pay his debts; 6 M. & W. 482. To the same effect; White v. Mann, 110 Ind. 74, 10 N. E. 629; Freeman v. Robinson, 38 N. J. L. 383, 20 Am. Rep. 399; Chilcott v. Trimble, 13 Barb. (N. Y.) 502; but the contrary view is held in many cases; Porter v. Powell, 79 Ia. 151, 44 N. W. 295, 7 L. R. A. 176, 18 Am. St. Rep. 353. See Tiffany, Pers. & Dom. Rel. 233; 2 Kent 190. Where a parent, though able, neglects to provide the necessaries of life and necessary medical attendance for a minor child, and thereby causes its death, he is guilty of manslaughter, and, if wilfully done, of murder; Tiff. Pers. & Dom. Rel. 232; Clark, Cr. L. 177.

It is generally the duty of a mother to support her child when she is left a widow, until he becomes of age or is able to maintain himself; Cummings v. Cummings, 8 Watts (Pa.) 366; Dedham v. Natick, 16 Mass. 135; Riley v. Jameson, 3 N. H. 29, 14 Am. Dec. 325; Alling v. Alling, 52 N. J. Eq. 92, 27 Atl. 655; Furman v. Van Sise, 56 N. Y. 435, 15 Am. Rep. 441; Girls' Industrial Home v. Fritchey, 10 Mo. App. 344; contra, Englehardt v. Yung's Heirs, 76 Ala. 534; Mowbry v. Mowbry, 64 Ill. 383; and even after he becomes of age, if he be chargeable to the public, she may, perhaps in all the states, be compelled, when she has sufficient means, to support him. But when the child has property sufficient for his support, she is not, even during his minority, obliged to maintain him; 1 Bro. Ch. 387; Whipple v. Dow, 2 Mass. 415; but will be entitled to an allowance out of the income of his estate, and, if need be, out of the principal, for his maintenance; Osborne v. Van Horn, 2 Fla. 360; 5 Ves. 194. During the life of the father she is not bound to support her child, though she have property settled to her separate use and the father be destitute; 4 Cl. & F. 323; 11 Bligh, N. S. 62.

A child is not bound at common law to maintain his parents; Becker v. Gibson, 70 Ind. 239; Lebanon v. Griffin, 45 N. H. 558; Stone v. Stone, 32 Conn. 142; Herendeen v. De Witt, 49 Hun 53, 1 N. Y. Supp. 467; Dawson v. Dawson, 12 Ia. 512; though they are infirm and indigent; Edwards v. Davis, 16 Johns. (N. Y.) 281; any such liability must arise under statute; but under such statute an aged parent supported by one child with no threat of withdrawal cannot maintain an action against another child for support; Duffy v. Yordi, 149 Cal. 140, 84 Pac. 838, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1159, 117 Am. St. Rep. 125, 9 Ann. Cas. 1917.

But in many states a liability to support indigent parents is imposed by statute, where they have the ability to do so; 2 Kent 208; Pothier, Du Marriage, 384, 389; Ex parte Hunt, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 284; Howe v. Hyde, 88 Mich. 91, 50 N. W. 102; and in such case a third person may recover from the child for necessities furnished to such parent; Howe v. Hyde, 88 Mich. 91, 50 N. W. 102; McCook Co. v. Kammoss, 7 S. D. 558, 64 N. W. 1123, 31 L. R. A. 461, 58 Am. St. Rep. 854.

The parent is not liable for necessities furnished to a child unless he has refused to furnish them; Smith v. Gilbert, 80 Ark. 525, 98 S. W. 115, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1098; or has omitted his duty; Van Valkinburgh v. Watson, 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 480, 7 Am. Dec. 395; or has authorized it; Brown v. DeLoach, 28 Ga. 486; or there is a proper exigency; Keaton v. Davis, 18 Ga. 457. A parent is not criminally liable for his child's acts; Tiffany, Pers. & Dom. Rel. 241.

The child may justify an assault in defence of his parent; 3 Bla. Com. 3.

If the father be without means to maintain and educate his children according to their future expectations in life, courts of equity will make an allowance for these purposes out of the income of their estates, and, in an urgent case, will even break into the principal; Watts v. Steele, 19 Ala. N. S. 656; 1 P. Wms. 493; In re Bostwick, 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 100; Pearce v. Olney, 5 R. I. 269. The father is not bound, without some agreement, to pay another for maintaining his children; 9 C. & P. 497; nor is he bound by their contracts, even for necessities, unless an actual authority be proved, or a clear omission of his duty to furnish such necessities; 20 Eng. L. & Eq. 281; Lefils v. Sugg, 15 Ark. 137; Eitel v. Walter, 2 Bradf. Surr. (N. Y.) 287; Keaton v. Davis, 18 Ga. 457; Ewell, Lead. Cas. 61, n.; Miller v. Davis, 45 Ill. App. 447; Manning v. Wells, 8 Misc. 646, 29 N. Y. Supp. 1044; or unless he suffers them to remain away with their mother, or forces them from home by hard usage; Stanton v. Willson, 3 Day (Conn.) 37, 3 Am. Dec. 255; but, especially in America, very slight evidence may sometimes warrant the confidence that a contract for the infant's necessities is sanctioned by the father; Tiffany, Pers. & Dom. Rel. 233; thus he is held bound where he knows the circumstances and does not object; Swain v. Tyler, 26 Vt. 9; Thayer v. White, 12 Metc. (Mass.) 343; Fowlkes v. Baker, 29 Tex. 135, 94 Am. Dec. 270. Where the court takes away from the father the care and custody of the children, chancery directs maintenance out of their own fortunes, whatever may be their father's circumstances; 2 Russ. 1; Macphers. Inf. 224. And if their custody be given to the mother by a decree of divorce it has been held that the duty of supporting them devolves on her; Brow v. Brightman, 136 Mass. 187; but the father still remains liable; Pretzinger v. Pretzinger, 45 Ohio St. 452, 15 N. E. 471, 4 Am. St. Rep. 542. His obligation for support of minor children is not impaired by a decree of divorce at the suit of his wife for his misconduct which gives the custody of the children to her but which is silent as to their support; Spencer v. Spencer, 97 Minn. 56, 105 N. W. 483, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 851, 114 Am. St. Rep. 695, 7 Ann. Cas. 901; Keller v. St. Louis, 152 Mo. 596, 54 S. W. 438, 47 L. R. A. 391; Maddox v. Patterson, 80 Ga. 719, 6 S. E. 581; Dolloff v. Dolloff, 67 N. H. 512, 38 Atl. 19; Zilley v. Dunwiddie, 98 Wis. 428, 74 N. W. 126, 40 L. R. A. 579, 67 Am. St. Rep. 820; Gibson v. Gibson, 18 Wash. 489, 51 Pac. 1041, 40 L. R. A. 587; L. R. 3 Q. B. 559; contra, Dawson v. Dawson, 110 Ill. 279; Husband v. Husband, 67 Ind. 583, 33 Am. Rep. 107; Hall v. Green, 87 Me. 122, 32 Atl. 796, 47 Am. St. Rep. 311; McNees v. McNees, 97 Ky. 152, 30 S. W. 207; Brow v. Brightman, 136 Mass. 187; Rich v. Rich, 88 Hun 566, 34 N. Y. Supp. 854; Brown v. Smith, 19 R. I. 319, 33 Atl. 466, 30 L. R. A. 680. In a note to the Minnesota case first cited, where the cases are collected, it is said that they are "pretty evenly balanced, though more recent authorities seem to sustain the obligation of the father"; 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 851, note.

Where the wife was separated from her husband by reason of his fault and had legal custody of the child, the husband was held liable for its support as a part of her reasonable expenses, for which she could pledge his credit; L. R. 3 Q. B. 559.

The obligation of the father to maintain the child extends only to providing necessary support, and ceases as soon as the child is able to provide for itself, or it becomes of age, however wealthy the father may be; 2 Kent 190; unless the child becomes chargeable to the public as a pauper; 1 Ld. Raym. 699; or be physically or mentally incapable of self-support; Mt. Pleasant Overseers v. Wilcox, 12 Pa. C. C. R. 447. The obligation also ceases during the minority of the child, if the child voluntarily abandons the home of his father, either for the purpose of seeking his fortune in the world or to avoid parental discipline and restraint; Angel v. McLellan, 16 Mass. 28, 8 Am. Dec. 118; Hunt v. Thompson, 3 Scam. (Ill.) 179, 36 Am. Dec. 538. There is no legal obligation to educate the child, although some dicta and statements by textwriters are to the contrary; 1 Bla. Com. 150; 2 Kent 189; it is said that the duty is only a moral one, and that there is no case which enforces such an obligation; Tiff. Dom. Rel. 238; Huke v. Huke, 44 Mo. App. 308. See Schoul. Dom. Rel. 315. Where the child's fortune warrants a greater expenditure than the father's means will permit, or where the father is unable to support the child, an allowance to the father may be made by a court of equity out of the child's property for his maintenance and education; Coop. t. Eld. 52; In re Burke, 4 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 617; Ela v. Brand, 63 N. H. 14; 2 Kent, Com. 191.

During the lifetime of the father, he is guardian by nature or nurture of his children. As such, however, he has charge only of the person of the ward, and no right to the control or possession either of his real or personal estate; Miles v. Boyden, 3 Pick. (Mass.) 213.

When the father dies without leaving a testamentary guardian at common law, the mother is entitled to be the guardian of the person and estate of the infant until he arrives at fourteen years, when he is able to appoint a guardian; Littleton § 123; 2 Atk. 14; Com. Dig. Feme; 7 Ves. 348. See Burk v. Phips, 1 Root (Conn.) 487; People v. Wilcox, 22 Barb. (N. Y.) 178; State v. Reuff, 29 W. Va. 751, 2 S. E. 801, 6 Am. St. Rep. 676. The rights of the widowed mother to the earnings and services of her minor child does not appear to have been precisely determined; but it is by no means so absolute as that of the father; Pray v. Gorham, 31 Me. 240; Jenness v. Emerson, 15 N. H. 486; Com. v. Murray, 4 Binn. (Pa.) 487, 5 Am. Dec. 412; People v. Mercein, 3 Hill (N. Y.) 400, 38 Am. Dec. 644; Nightingale v. Withington, 15 Mass. 272, 8 Am. Dec. 101.

In Pennsylvania, when the father dies without leaving a testamentary guardian, the orphans' court will appoint a guardian until the infant shall attain his fourteenth year.

Custody. The father, in general, is entitled to the custody of minor children; Taylor v. R. Co., 41 W. Va. 704, 24 S. E. 631; People v. Sinclair, 47 Misc. 230, 95 N. Y. Supp. 861; Donk Bros. C. & C. Co. v. Leavitt, 109 Ill. App. 385; it belongs to him as against the mother and particularly as against third persons; Johnson v. Terry, 34 Conn. 259; but under certain circumstances the mother will be awarded custody when the father and mother have separated; Com. v. Addicks, 5 Binn. (Pa.) 520; see Luck v. Luck, 92 Cal. 653, 28 Pac. 787. The father is the natural guardian of his child; Donk Bros. C. & C.

Co. v. Leavitt, 109 Ill. App. 385; and as such, where there is no sufficient cause for depriving him of it, has the legal right to its custody; Hernandez v. Thomas, 50 Fla. 522, 39 South. 641, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 203, 111 Am. St. Rep. 137, 7 Ann. Cas. 446; and where the husband and wife have separated, the father's right will be recognized; People v. Sinclair, 47 Misc. 230, 95 N. Y. Supp. 861.

In special cases, as when they are of tender years, or when the habits of the father render him an unsuitable guardian, the mother is allowed to have possession of them; Com. v. Addicks, 2 S. & R. (Pa.) 174; In re Waldron, 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 418.

A child will not be taken from the custody of its father and given to its mother when it does not appear that his welfare required the change; Day v. Day, 4 Misc. 235, 24 N. Y. Supp. 873.

The mother of a bastard child, as natural guardian, has a right to the custody and control of such child, even as against the putative father, and is bound to maintain it; Somerset v. Dighton, 12 Mass. 387; Petersham v. Dana, id. 433; Com. v. Fee, 6 S. & R. (Pa.) 255; but after her death the court will, in its discretion, deliver such child to the father in opposition to the claims of the maternal grandfather; Com. v. Anderson, 1 Ashm. (Pa.) 55; Stra. 1162.

The father may lose the right by unfitness or voluntary transfer; Bently v. Terry, 59 Ga. 555, 27 Am. Rep. 399; or if the child is of tender age and the parents are separated; Gray v. Field, 10 Ohio Dec. 170. His right is not an absolute one and the court will deal with the custody of the children solely upon considerations relating to their own welfare; U. S. v. Green, 3 Mas. 482, Fed. Cas. No. 15,256; the right of custody of the parents is subject to the paramount right of the state to interpose whenever required for the interest of the child; Wadleigh v. Newhall, 136 Fed. 941; State v. Reuff, 29 W. Va. 751, 2 S. E. 801, 6 Am. St. Rep. 676; Merritt v. Swimley, 82 Va. 433, 3 Am. St. Rep. 115.

The unfitness which deprives a parent of the right of custody of the child must be positive and not comparative, and the mere fact that the child would be better cared for is not sufficient, but the degree of unfitness is a question for the court; Clarke v. Lyon, 82 Neb. 625, 118 N. W. 472, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 171.

The custody was given to paternal grandparents in comfortable circumstances and taken from the mother who had been deserted and was earning a scant living; Brown v. Brown, 2 Ala. App. 461, 56 South. 589. The English rule favoring the father has given place to the consideration of what is best for the child; Turner v. Turner, 93 Miss. 167, 46 South. 413. Between a parent and an outsider, the just claims of the parent and the child's duty to the parent must be considered, if the parent can give proper care and is not unsuitable; Moore v. Christian, 56 Miss. 408, 31 Am. Rep. 375; Stapleton v. Poynter, 111 Ky. 264, 62 S. W. 730, 53 L. R. A. 784, 98 Am. St. Rep. 411; contra, Wood v. Wood, 77 N. J. Eq. 593, 77 Atl. 91; a remarriage does not deprive a mother of her right; Moon v. Children's Home Soc., 112 Va. 737, 72 S. E. 707, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 418.

Considerations as to the age and condition of the child weigh with the court. The well-being of the child, rather than the supposed right of either parent, controls; McKim v. McKim, 12 R. I. 462, 34 Am. Rep. 694; State v. Baird, 21 N. J. Eq. 384; Irwin v. Irwin, 96 Ky. 318, 28 S. W. 664, 30 S. W. 417. The mother of an illegitimate child has a right to its custody; 10 Q. B. D. 454.

Agreements of a parent to transfer to another the custody of the child are in general against public policy and not binding; Hernandez v. Thomas, 50 Fla. 522, 39 South. 641, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 203, 111 Am. St. Rep. 137, 7 Ann. Cas. 446; contra, Proctor v. Rhoads, 4 Ky. L. Rep. 453; but such transfers have been held valid to an aunt; Bently v. Terry, 50 Ga. 555; 27 Am. Rep. 399; to a grandfather (when the parents were living apart); Clark v. Bayer, 32 Ohio St. 299; 30 Am. Rep. 593; to a grandmother; State v. Barney, 14 R. I. 62; to a charitable institution (the parents living apart); Dumain v. Gwynne, 10 Allen (Mass.) 270; but when the mother paid a weekly sum out of wages due from the institution, it was not an absolute surrender; People v. Paschal, 68 Hun 344, 22 N. Y. Supp. 881. In some states a transfer of the custody by the parent is held voidable for want of mutuality and as a delegation of power; People v. Mercen, 3 Hill (N. Y.) 399, 38 Am. Dec. 644; Foulke v. People, 4 Colo. App. 519, 36 Pac. 640; and a transfer has been held invalid of a child over fourteen and without his consent; State v. Smith, 6 Greenl. (Me.) 462, 20 Am. Dec. 324.

In one case it is held that where a transfer of custody is allowed, it is not revocable without sufficient cause shown; Janes v. Cleghorn, 54 Ga. 9; State v. Barney, 14 R. I. 62; or unless it is for the benefit of the child; People v. Erbert, 17 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 395; in such case the wish of the child is almost controlling unless it is of tender age, and then it must not be placed in jeopardy by immature judgment; Curtis v. Curtis, 5 Gray (Mass.) 535. When the child was placed in charge of the grandparents in infancy and educated and supported by them until the age of fourteen, there being no unfitness of either party, custody was refused to the parents and the child was left with the grandparents; Workman v. Watts, 74 S. C. 546, 54 S. E. 775; but an oral agreement by the father giving the child to its aunt to raise was held revocable by him; In re Gulleher, 2 Cal. App. 364, 84 Pac. 352.

By many courts it seems to be held that, while a parent may relinquish the custody of a child to another, in such case there is no implication of finality and of loss of the right to reclaim; Ex parte Reynolds, 73 S. C. 296, 53 S. E. 490, 114 Am. St. Rep. 86, 6 Ann. Cas. 936; Miller v. Wallace, 76 Ga. 479, 2 Am. St. Rep. 48; State v. Steel, 121 La. 215, 46 South. 215, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1004; but there is a very strong presumption that a parent will not give away the right to a child's custody; Ex parte Reynolds, 73 S. C. 296, 53 S. E. 490, 114 Am. St. Rep. 86, 6 Ann. Cas. 936; a contract of relinquishment must be established by a preponderance of evidence; Dunkin v. Seifert, 123 Ia. 64, 98 N. W. 558; the acquiescence of the parent may be considered with other facts tending to establish an express contract; Fletcher v. Hickman, 50 W. Va. 244, 40 S. E. 371, 55 L. R. A. 896, 88 Am. St. Rep. 862.

Some courts have recognized a right of contract as to the custody of the children as existing in the parents after divorce and enforceable against them; Courtright v. Courtright, 40 Mich. 633; Ackley v. Burchard, 11 Wash. 128, 39 Pac. 372; White v. White, 75 Ia. 218, 39 N. W. 277 (where the same custody was provided by the contract as by the decree); but such contracts are only enforced if deemed by the court consistent with the welfare of the children; Lowrey v. Lowrey, 108 Ga. 766, 33 S. E. 421; Slatery v. Slatery, 139 Ia. 419, 116 N. W. 608; Connett v. Connett, 81 Neb. 777, 116 N. W. 658; Pearce v. Pearce, 30 Mont. 269, 76 Pac. 289; but in other cases such contracts have not been treated as effectual to change the natural right of custody; Hunt v. Hunt, 4 G. Greene (Iowa) 216; Kremelberg v. Kremelberg, 52 Md. 553; Farr v. Emuy, 121 La. 91, 46 South. 112, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 744; or to control the action of the court with respect to care and custody; Cook v. Cook, 1 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 639; Norval v. Zinsmaster, 57 Neb. 158, 77 N. W. 373, 73 Am. St. Rep. 500.

Where, in divorce the custody of the child is awarded to the mother, after her death the right of the father has been held to be restored; In re Blackburn, 41 Mo. App. 622; People v. Erbert, 17 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 399; Schammel v. Schammel, 105 Cal. 258, 38 Pac. 729; but where the custody was given to the father who had obtained the divorce on the ground of adultery, the court refused to restore the child to the mother; In re Steele, 107 Mo. App. 567, 81 S. W. 1182. Where the mother having custody of the child under the decree of divorce died, she could not, by will, deprive the father of his right to resume the custody; McKinney v. Noble, 38 Tex. 195; In re Neff, 20 Wash. 652, 56 Pac. 383; contra, Wilkinson v. Deming, 80 Ill. 342, 22 Am. Rep.

192. Where the children are placed in the care of the husband, the court is not precluded from making an order giving the divorced wife access to them; [1891] P. 124.

A petition of a benevolent society averring that a boy of seven years living with his parent would become a cripple for life unless subjected to a surgical operation, and praying that he should be committed to the society for that purpose, was refused; In re Tony Tuttendario, 21 Pa. Dist. R. 561.

Where there was an ante-nuptial agreement that children should be trained in the religious faith of the mother and after her death two infant children were taken by relatives of the father and trained in his religious belief, and after four years the father died, and applications for guardianship were made by relatives of both father and mother representing opposing beliefs, it was held that the relatives of the father should keep the children, and that notwithstanding the agreement, the four year period of training with the father's relatives had created attachments it was not wise to break, the decision being put squarely upon the modern view that in questions of custody the welfare of the child is the paramount consideration; In re Luck, 7 Ohio N. P. 49.

The rights of the father, while his children remain in his custody, are to have authority over them, to enforce all his lawful commands, and to correct them with moderation for disobedience; Johnson v. State, 2 Humphr. (Tenn.) 283, 36 Am. Dec. 322; and these rights, the better to accomplish the purposes of their education, he may delegate to a tutor or instructor; 2 Kent 205. See ASSAULT; CORRECTION.

Rights of action. There is no common law liability of a parent for torts committed by an infant; 8 C. B. N. S. 611; Chastain v. Johns, 120 Ga. 977, 48 S. E. 343, 66 L. R. A. 958; Tift v. Tift, 4 Denio (N. Y.) 175; Shockley v. Shepherd, 9 Houst. (Del.) 270, 32 Atl. 173; unless there is proof of actual service or agency; Brohl v. Lingeman, 41 Mich. 711, 3 N. W. 199; Broadstreet v. Hall, 168 Ind. 192, 80 N. E. 145, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 933, 120 Am. St. Rep. 356; or there is shown to have been authority; Ferguson v. Terry, 1 B. Mon. (Ky.) 96; or acquiescence; Cameron v. Heister, 10 Ohio Dec. 651; Hower v. Ulrich, 156 Pa. 410, 27 Atl. 37; or ratification; Lamb v. Davidson, 69 Mo. App. 107; which, however, is not established by a voluntary offer of compromise; Paulin v. Hower, 63 Ill. 312; or compensation; Baker v. Morris, 33 Kan. 580, 7 Pac. 267.

But where a parent kept an automobile for the general use of his family, and plaintiff was injured by it while driven by his daughter for her own pleasure, it was held that the father was liable; Birch v. Abercrombie (Wash.) 133 Pac. 1020. To the same effect, Daily v. Maxwell, 152 Mo. App. 415, 133 S. W. 351; contra: Doran v. Thomson, 76 N. J. L. 754, 71 Atl. 296, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 335, 131 Am. St. Rep. 677. See note in 12 Mich. L. Rev. 153, which states that this doctrine appears never to have been recognized outside of automobile cases.

If the relation of master and servant exists, the law of that relation must be applied; Dunks v. Grey, 3 Fed. 862; Andrus v. Howard, 36 Vt. 248, 84 Am. Dec. 680. No presumption of service or agency results from the relation of parent and child; Kumba v. Gilham, 103 Wis. 312, 79 N. W. 325; 27 Ont. App. Rep. 468; contra, Hower v. Ulrich, 156 Pa. 410, 27 Atl. 37; Gerhardt v. Swaty, 57 Wis. 24, 14 N. W. 851; but probably this is to be considered a question for the jury; Adams v. Swift, 172 Mass. 521, 52 N. E. 1068; Sacker v. Waddell, 98 Md. 43, 56 Atl. 399, 103 Am. St. Rep. 374. The parent may be held liable if his negligence entered into the tortious act of the child; Johnson v. Glidden, 11 S. D. 237, 76 N. W. 933, 74 Am. St. Rep. 795; but allowing the latter to use fire arms is not necessarily negligent; Palm v. Iverson, 117 Ill. App. 535; nor is keeping them within his reach; Hagerty v. Powers, 66 Cal. 368, 5 Pac. 622, 56 Am. Rep. 101.

In some states, usually those where the civil law prevails, there are statutes making the parent liable for the torts of the child; Marionneaux v. Brugier, 35 La. Ann. 13; Coats v. Roberts, id. 891; Miller v. Meche, 111 La. 143, 35 South. 491; 30 Low. Can. Jur. 166. See as to parent's liability, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 933, note, and as to the liability of an infant for torts, see 57 L. R. A. 674, note.

The father may maintain an action for the seduction of his daughter, or for any injury to the person of his child, so long as he has a right to its services; 2 M. & W. 539; Lee v. Hodges, 13 Gratt. (Va.) 726; Bolton v. Miller, 6 Ind. 262; Bayles v. Burgard, 48 Ill. App. 371; and may even be justified in committing a homicide in protecting his child; 1 Bla. Com. 450; and the fact that a child by her father as next friend has recovered damages for a personal injury does not bar a subsequent action by him for loss of service occasioned by the same injury; Wilton v. R. Co., 125 Mass. 130; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Morin, 66 Tex. 225, 18 S. W. 503. The authorities are not uniform as to whether the right of the father to recover for a tort committed against the child is to be limited to the theory of loss of service and therefore based entirely upon the doctrine of an implied relation of master and servant. Such would seem to be the English rule, which gives no remedy, even for expenses, when the child is of such tender age as to be incapable of service; 7 D. & R. 133. Some American cases follow the same principle; Matthews v. R. Co., 26 Mo. App. 75; Whitaker v. War- ren. 60 N. H. 20, 49 Am. Rep. 302; but the trend of the authorities is otherwise, and as was said by the Circuit Court of Appeals, in a case of injury to a child of five years of age, "they approve a more reasonable doctrine, and, basing the right of action on the parental relation instead of that of master and servant, allow the father to recover his consequential loss, irrespective of the age of the minor;" Netherland-American Steam Nav. Co. v. Hollander, 8 C. C. A. 169, 59 Fed. 417; Cuning v. R. Co., 109 N. Y. 95, 16 N. E. 65; Sykes v. Lawlor, 49 Cal. 236; Clark v. Bayer, 32 Ohio St. 299, 30 Am. Rep. 593; and see SEDUCTION; ENTICE.

As a general rule the mother of an illegitimate cannot recover damages for his death, under a statute giving a right of action to the relatives or representatives of one killed through the negligence of another; 2 Ont. 658; Marshall v. R. Co., 46 Fed. 269. See, contra, Marshall v. R. Co., 120 Mo. 275, 25 S. W. 179. See BASTARD.

Right to earnings of the child. Generally, the father is entitled to the services or earnings of his children during their minority, so long as they remain members of his family; Plummer v. Webb, 4 Mas. 380, Fed. Cas. No. 11,233; Emery v. Kempton, 2 Gray (Mass.) 257; Stovall v. Johnson, 17 Ala. 14; 1 Bla. Com. 453; Allen v. Allen, 60 Mich. 635, 27 N. W. 702; but he may relinquish this right in favor of his children; Burlingame v. Burlingame, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 92; Lyon v. Bolling, 14 Ala. 753, 48 Am. Dec. 122; Bray v. Wheeler, 29 Vt. 514; Kauffelt v. Moderwell, 21 Pa. 222; and he will be presumed to have thus relinquished this right if he abandons or neglects to support and educate his children; Canovar v. Cooper, 3 Barb. (N. Y.) 115; Nightingale v. Withington, 15 Mass. 272, 8 Am. Dec. 101; Clay v. Shirley, 65 N. H. 644, 23 Atl. 521; Guardianship of Vance, 92 Cal. 195, 28 Pac. 229; but where a father verbally agrees that his daughter shall reside in a stranger's house as a servant, he does not thereby surrender his parental control, so as to bar his right to recover for her seduction; Mohry v. Hoffman, 86 Pa. 358. An infant husband is entitled to his own wages, so far as necessary for the support of himself and family, although he married without his father's consent; Com. v. Graham, 157 Mass. 73, 31 N. E. 706, 16 L. R. A. 578, 34 Am. St. Rep. 255.

The emancipation of a minor may be proved by the act of the father in allowing him to draw his own wages, as well as by other acts, and no proof of a formal contract is necessary; Haugh, Ketcham & Co. I. W. v. Duncan, 2 Ind. App. 264, 28 N. E. 334. Living at home does not interfere with emancipation; Wilson v. McMillan, 62 Ga. 16, 35 Am. Rep. 115; and the wages of an infant emancipated by his parent, though living at home, are not subject to claims of father's creditors; Wisner v. Osborne, 64 N. J. Eq. 614, 55 Atl. 51; Costello v. Brewing Co., 52 N. J. Eq. 557, 30 Atl. 682; (if there be no fraud; Elfelt v. Hinch, 5 Or. 255); Atwood v. Holcomb, 39 Conn. 270, 12 Am. Rep. 386; Stanley v. Bank, 115 N. Y. 122, 22 N. E. 29; Wambold v. Vick, 50 Wis. 456, 7 N. W. 438; contra, Stunbaugh v. Anderson, 46 Kan. 541, 26 Pac. 1045, 26 Am. St. Rep. 121; Bell v. Hallenback, 1 Wright (Ohio) 751.

As to his right to earnings and emancipation, see also Benson v. Remington, 2 Mass. 113; Atwood v. Holcomb, 39 Conn. 270, 12 Am. Rep. 386, 2 Am. L. Reg. (N. S.) 715, with note by Judge Redfield; White v. Henry, 24 Me. 531; Aldrich v. Bennett, 63 N. H. 415, 56 Am. Rep. 529. The father, as such, has no claim to any property acquired by the child other than earnings; Banks v. Conant, 14 Allen (Mass.) 497.

An agreement of the father, by which his minor child is put out to service, ceases to be binding upon the child after the father's death, unless made by indentures of apprenticeship; Campbell v. Cooper, 34 N. H. 49; De Garnett v. Harper, 45 Mo. App. 415; State v. Reuff, 29 W. Va. 751, 2 S. E. 801, 6 Am. St. Rep. 676. The power of the father ceases on the arrival of his children at the age of twenty-one; though if after that age they continue to live in the father's family, they will not be allowed to recover for their services to him upon an implied promise of payment; Munger v. Munger, 33 N. H. 581; Guenther v. Birkicht's Adm'r, 22 Mo. 439; House v. House, 6 Ind. 60; the presumption being that such services are gratuitous, but this may be rebutted; Grant v. Grant, 109 N. C. 710, 14 S. E. 90; but see Graves v. Davenport, 50 Fed. 881; McLaughlin v. McLaughlin, 145 Pa. 582, 23 Atl. 400.

A stepfather is not bound to support and educate his stepchildren; In re Besondy, 32 Minn. 385, 20 N. W. 366, 50 Am. Rep. 579; nor is he entitled to their custody, labor, or earnings, unless he assumes the relation of parent; Brush v. Blanchard, 18 Ill. 46; Williams v. Hutchinson, 3 N. Y. 312, 53 Am. Dec. 301; Mull v. Walker, 100 N. C. 46, 6 S. E. 685; Gerber v. Bauerline, 17 Or. 115, 19 Pac. 849; but see Ela v. Brand, 63 N. H. 14.

PARENTAGE. Kindred in the direct ascending line. See 2 Bouv. Inst. n. 1955. For a discussion of the subject in connection with citizenship, see 2 Kent 49; Morse, Citizenship; CITIZEN; NATURALIZATION.

PARENTELA. The sum of those persons who trace descent from one ancestor. 2 Poll. & Maitl. 296. "By a person's parentela is meant the sum of those persons who trace their blood from him." id.

See LINE.

PARENTS. The lawful father and mother of the party spoken of. Ex parte Mason, 5 N. C. 336.

The term parent differs from that of ancestor, the latter embracing not only the father and mother, but every person in an ascending line. It differs also from predecessor, which is applied to corporators. 7 Ves. Ch. 522; Ex parte Mason, 5 N. C. 336; Com. v. Callan, 6 Binn. (Pa.) 255. See INFANT; EMANCIPATION; PARENT AND CHILD; FATHER; MOTHER.

By the civil law, grandfathers and grandmothers, and other ascendants, were, in certain cases, considered parents. Dict. de Jur. Parents. See Com. v. Anderson, 1 Ashm. (Pa.) 55; 2 Kent 159; 5 East 223.

PARES (Lat.). A man's equals; his peers. 3 Bla. Com. 349.

PARES CURIÆ (Lat.). In Feudal Law. Those vassals who were bound to attend the lord's court. Erskine, Inst. b. 2, tit. 3, s. 17; 1 Washb. R. P., 5th ed. 1. See MAGNA CHARTA.

PAREISIS. General paralysis of the insane.

The term is applied to a group of mental and bodily symptoms, developing usually late in life and as a result of previous syphilis. The condition differs from the various insanities, in that definite alterations of the surface of the brain and its membranes are found, in the form of chronic inflammation. Loss of memory, passionate outbursts, delusions of grandeur, restlessness and insomnia, with final absolute dementia, are the chief mental symptoms, while physically muscular weakness, tremor, particularly of the lips and tongue, ataxia, and various convulsive seizures are seen.

PARI DELICTO (Lat.). In a similar offence or crime; equal in guilt or in legal fault.

A person who is in pari delicto with another differs from a particeps criminis in this, that the former term always includes the latter, but the latter does not always include the former. 8 East 381.

Ordinarily where two persons are in pari delicto the law will not relieve them; see CONTRIBUTION. But this doctrine does not apply where a president of a national bank has borrowed an amount exceeding twenty per cent. of its capital stock and suit is brought to recover the amount; Dunn v. O'Connor, 25 App. Div. 73, 49 N. Y. Supp. 270.

The rule that both parties to an ultra vires contract are in pari delicto, and therefore a court of equity will not interpose to restore to one of them rights which it has thus parted with, is inapplicable to a municipal corporation whose trustees attempt to make an invalid grant; Detroit v. R. Co., 56 Fed. 867.

See IN PARI DELICTO.

PARI MATERIA (Lat.). Of the same matter; on the same subject: as laws pari materia must be construed with reference to each other. Bacon, Abr. Statute (I 3).

PARI PASSU (Lat.). By the same gradation. Used especially of creditors who, in marshalling assets, are entitled to receive out of the same fund without any precedence over each other.

PARI PASSU BONDS. A name given in Scotland to certain bonds secured upon lands which share an equal benefit of the security. Where several securities are created over the same lands by separate bonds and dispositions in security, they would ordinarily have priority according to the date of registration of the sasine or bond, as the case may be. If it is intended to have them rank as pari passu, it is usual to insert a clause in each bond declaring that they shall be so ranked without regard to their priority of registration. 9 Jurid. Rev. 74.

PARIS, DECLARATION OF. See DECLARATION OF PARIS; BLOCKADE; NEUTRALITY.

PARISH. A district of country, of different extents. As used in the revised statutes, the word is synonymous with county; In re Sup'rs of Election, 28 Fed. 840; as also in Louisiana.

In Ecclesiastical Law. The territory committed to the charge of a parson, or vicar, or other minister. Ayl. Par. 404; 2 Bla. Com. 112; Hoffm. Eccl. Law.

Although, in the absence of a state church in this country, the status of parishes is comparatively unimportant, yet in the Protestant Episcopal Church, at least, their boundaries and the rights of the clergy therein are quite clearly defined by canon. In the leading case of Stubbs and Boggs v. Tyng, decided in New York, in March, 1868, the defendant was found guilty of violating a canon of the church, in having officiated, without the permission of plaintiffs within the corporate bounds of the city of New Brunswick, N. J., which then constituted the plaintiff's parochial cure. Baum 103. As to their origin, see 2 Hallam, Mid. Ages, c. 7, p. 144. See, also, 1 Poll. & Maitl. 560.

In New England. Divisions of a town, originally territorial, but which now constitute quasi-corporations, consisting of those connected with a certain church. See Weston v. Hunt, 2 Mass. 501; Milford v. Godfrey, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 91. Synonymous with church and used in the same sense as society. Ayres v. Weed, 16 Conn. 299.

PARISH APPRENTICES. The children of parents unable to maintain them, who are apprenticed by the overseers of the poor of their parish, to such persons as may be willing to receive them. 2 Steph. Com. 230.

PARISH CLERK. In English Law. An officer, in former times often in holy orders, and appointed to officiate at the altar; now his duty consists chiefly in making responses in church to the minister. By common law he has a freehold in his office, but it seems now to be falling into desuetude. 2 Steph. Com. 11th ed. 713.

PARISH CONSTABLE. See CONSTABLE.

PARISH COURT. In Louisiana the local courts in each parish, corresponding generally to county and probate courts, and, in some respects, justices' courts, in other states were formerly so called.

PARISH OFFICERS. Churchwardens, overseers, and constables.

PARISH PRIEST. The parson; a minister who holds a parish as a benefice.

PARISHIONERS. Members of a parish. In England, for many purposes they form a body politic. See PARISH.

PARITOR. A beadle; a summoner to the courts of civil law.

PARIUM JUDICIUM (Lat. the decision of equals). The right of trial by one's peers: i. e. by jury in the case of a commoner, by the house of peers in the case of a peer.

PARK (L. Lat. parcus). An inclosure. 2 Bla. Com. 38. A pound. Reg. Orig. 166; Cowell. An inclosed chase extending only over a man's own grounds. 13 Car. II. c. 10; Manw. For. Laws; 2 Bla. Com. 38.

Usually smaller than a chase; Encycl. Laws of Engl. (Forest Laws).

A pleasure-ground in or near a city, set apart for the recreation of the public; a piece of ground enclosed for purposes of pleasure, exercise, amusement, or ornament. Perrin v. R. Co., 36 N. Y. 120. A place for the resort of the public for recreation, air, and light; a place open for everyone. Price v. Plainfield, 40 N. J. L. 613. See Archer v. Salinas City, 93 Cal. 43, 28 Pac. 839, 16 L. R. A. 145.

Public parks may be dedicated to the public like highways; Abbott v. Cottage City, 143 Mass. 521, 10 N. E. 325, 58 Am. Rep. 143; Steel v. Portland, 23 Or. 176, 31 Pac. 479; and at common law, upon such dedication, the fee remains in the owners; Attorney General v. Abbott, 154 Mass. 323, 28 N. E. 346, 13 L. R. A. 251. Non-user by the public, however long continued, will not affect the public right or reversion the title in the donor; Chase v. Oshkosh, 81 Wis. 313, 51 N. W. 560, 15 L. R. A. 553, 29 Am. St. Rep. 898. The title is usually vested in municipalities by the legislature; Brooklyn v. Copeland, 106 N. Y. 496, 13 N. E. 451; Riggs v. Board of Education, 27 Mich. 262; Lincoln v. Boston, 148 Mass. 580, 20 N. E. 329, 3 L. R. A. 257, 12 Am. St. Rep. 601; and held by them in trust for the use of the public. The municipality cannot lease them; Macon v. Huff, 60 Ga. 221; nor can the legislature; Le Clercq v. Gallipolis, 7 Ohio 218, pt. 1, 28 Am. Dec. 641.

A city may own lands for a public park and cause them to be improved, not in its public capacity as an agency of the government and subject to state control, but as a corporate individual having private rights which the people have a constitutional right to enjoy undisturbed; Thompson v. Moran, 44 Mich. 602, 7 N. W. 180.

The lease of land for a public park is a lease for city purposes; Holder v. Yonkers, 39 App. Div. 1, 56 N. Y. Supp. 912. Taking land for a park is a public use; Shoemaker v. U. S., 147 U. S. 282, 13 Sup. Ct. 361, 37 L. Ed. 170.

The acquirement of lands for public parks for children's playgrounds is within the power of the municipal authorities; Law v. San Francisco, 144 Cal. 384, 77 Pac. 1014.

A public park may be crossed by a street railway where such use will not materially interfere with its enjoyment by the public; Philadelphia v. McManes, 175 Pa. 28, 34 Atl. 331; and compensation may not be demanded for the taking; Prince v. Crocker, 166 Mass. 347, 44 N. E. 446, 32 L. R. A. 610; but it is also held that parks dedicated to the public use are not subject to a right of way for a street railway, and that neither the municipality nor the legislature can divert them for that purpose; Jacksonville v. R. Co., 67 Ill. 540; Booth, St. Ry. L. § 11.

A park or public square may be enclosed, notwithstanding it has remained open many years; Corporation of Seguin v. Ireland, 58 Tex. 183; Langley v. Gallipolis, 2 Ohio St. 107; Guttery v. Glenn, 201 Ill. 275, 66 N. E. 305; contra, Com. v. Bowman, 3 Pa. 206, where it was held that a public square was as much a highway as though it were a street, and that neither the county nor the public could block it up, to the prejudice of the public or an individual. See, also, Springfield R. Co. v. Springfield, 85 Mo. 674.

The city of Boston is not bound to keep the Boston Common in safe condition; Lincoln v. Boston, 148 Mass. 580, 20 N. E. 329, 3 L. R. A. 257, 12 Am. St. Rep. 601; Steele v. Boston, 128 Mass. 584; and is not liable for injuries caused by a horse becoming, while driven along an adjoining street, frightened by the firing of a cannon on the Boston Common under a license; Lincoln v. Boston, 148 Mass. 580, 20 N. E. 329, 3 L. R. A. 257, 12 Am. St. Rep. 601; but it must contribute to an assessment for the improvement of streets by which a park is bounded in common with private owners benefited thereby; Scammon v. Chicago, 42 Ill. 192.

The construction of a subway under the Boston Common was held no diversion of land deeded for a training field and cow pasture; Codman v. Crocker, 203 Mass. 146, 89 N. E. 177, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 980.

Running a street through a park dedicated by an owner to the public is unlawful; Price v. Thompson, 48 Mo. 361; otherwise of a pleasure drive in a park reserved by the state; Com. v. Beaver Borough, 171 Pa. 542, 33 Atl. 112; and of a speedway; Holtz v. Diehl, 26 Misc. 224, 56 N. Y. Supp. 841. See Riverside v. MacLain, 210 Ill. 308, 71 N. E. 408, 66 L. R. A. 288, 102 Am. St. Rep. 164.

The erection of buildings in a park is unlawful: As barracks; Appeal of Meigs, 62 Pa. 28, 1 Am. Rep. 372; school buildings; Board of Education v. Kansas City, 62 Kan. 374, 63 Pac. 600; a jail; Flaten v. Moorehead, 51 Minn. 518, 53 N. W. 807, 19 L. R. A. 195. a city hall with a jail; Church v. Portland, 18 Or. 73, 22 Pac. 528, 6 L. R. A. 259; buildings; Fessler v. Town of Union, 68 N. J. Eq. 657, 60 Atl. 1134; a town hall; 45 L. J. Ch. N. S. 839; otherwise of a museum and library; id.; or a building for the public; Ross v. Long Branch, 73 N. J. L. 292, 63 Atl. 609. Monuments may be erected therein; Hoyt v. Gleason, 65 Fed. 685; and water pipes may be laid; Howe v. Lowell, 171 Mass. 575, 51 N. E. 536. Part of a park may be used for agricultural purposes; Huff v. Macon, 117 Ga. 428, 43 S. E. 708; and trees planted; Guttery v. Glenn, 201 Ill. 275, 66 N. E. 305; Burnet v. Bagg, 67 Barb. (N. Y.) 154.

It is held that individual dedications will be more strictly construed than those made by the public; Spires v. Los Angeles, 150 Cal. 64, 87 Pac. 1026, 11 Ann. Cas. 465; Riverside v. MacLain, 210 Ill. 308, 71 N. E. 408, 66 L. R. A. 288, 102 Am. St. Rep. 164.

The title in the municipality is said to be held in "a kind of trust relation to the people"; Codman v. Crocker, 203 Mass. 146, 89 N. E. 177, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 980.

A state may commit the management of property turned over to it by congress to park commissions rather than to the municipality within whose limits it is situated; Kerrigan v. Poole, 131 Mich. 305, 91 N. W. 163. Such commissioners may apportion the expenses of metropolitan parks among the towns in the park district; In re De las Casas, 180 Mass. 471, 62 N. E. 738. Its rules are valid only in so far as they are reasonable under the conditions existing at the time they are attacked; Whitney v. Com., 190 Mass. 531, 77 N. E. 516.

As to the right of the municipality to make regulations for the preservation of order in a park or public square, see POLICE POWER; LIBERTY OF SPEECH.

See, generally, DEDICATION; EMINENT DOMAIN; RAILROAD.

PARLE HILL (also called Parling Hill). A hill where courts were held in olden times. Cowell.

PARLIAMENT (said to be derived from parler la ment, to speak the mind, or parum lamentum).

In English Law. The legislative branch of the government of Great Britain, consisting of the house of lords and the house of commons.

The parliament is usually considered to consist of the king, lords, and commons. See 1 Bla. Com. 147*, 157*, Chitty's note; 2 Steph. Com., 11th ed. 341. In 1 Woodd. Lect. 30, the lords temporal, the lords spiritual, and the commons are called the three estates of the realm: yet the king is called a part of the parliament, in right of his prerogative of veto and the necessity of his approval to the passage of a bill. That the connection between the king and the lords temporal, the lords spiritual, and the commons, who when assembled in parliament form the three estates of the realm, is the same as that which subsists between the king and those estates—the people at large—out of parliament, the king not being in either case a member, branch, or co-estate, but standing solely in the relation of sovereign or head. See Colton, Record 710; Rot. Parl. vol. iii. 623 a; 2 M. & G. 457, n. Historically and properly speaking the absolute sovereign power in the kingdom is vested in the king in parliament. See Dicey, British Const. 141.

The House of Lords was formerly the supreme court of judicature in the kingdom. It had no original jurisdiction (except to a certain extent before the reign of Charles II.), but was the court of appeal in the last resort, with a few exceptions and under some limitations as to the right, from the inferior courts upon appeal or writ of error for mistakes of law. Appeals lay to this tribunal from Scotch and Irish courts, in some cases. See stat. 4 Geo. IV. c. 85, as to Scotch, and stat. 39 & 40 Geo. III. c. 67, art. 8, as to Irish, appeals.

This body, when sitting as a court of law, was presided over by the lord chancellor, whose attendance alone was in any respect compulsory, and was composed of as many of its members who had filled judicial stations as chose to attend. Three laymen also attended in rotation, but did not vote upon judicial matters; 11 Cl. & F. 421. In the absence of the chancellor, deputy speakers, who were members of the profession but not of the house, have been appointed; 3 Bla. Com. 56.

Before Henry III's time the distinction between legislative and administrative acts was not clearly drawn. The need of consulting the nation before that time had imposed a vague restraint upon the crown; before then the manner and form of consulting it was uncertain. But the distinction began to grow clear in Henry III's reign and statutes passed in parliament could not be repealed without its consent. As yet the king's council in parliament assisted by the judges was then the essence of the parliament and made the laws; the consent of the commons was not indispensable. The Chief Justices as members of the council had a real voice in making the laws, and the king and his justices might put an authoritative interpretation upon them. The legislative, executive and judicial authorities had not yet become so completely separated that they could not on occasion work together. In the following century parliament had become a body distinct from and even antagonistic to the council and the king. Enactments passed by parliament were the only ones that the common law courts would allow to be laws and the law could only be changed by parliamentary action and not as formerly by administrative acts.

But the crown did not cease to possess discretionary powers; the intervention between parliaments, the generality of the older statutes and the growing fixity of the jurisdiction of the common law courts made the existence of some such powers a necessity; and in Edward I's reign they were often exercised by the king's council in parliament. But this supreme court tended to separate into two bodies: Parliament, the legislative, and the council, the executive. And parliament as the maker of the laws strengthened its connection with the common law courts and weakened its connection with the crown and council. It was for this reason that parliament tended to assume its common law jurisdiction in error, while the council retained the discretionary powers which were still left to the crown.

As to the constitution of parliament there were the great tenants in chief, lay and executive, summoned by special writ and forming the House of Lords. Thus the peculiar English meaning of a peerage gradually was formed. All other classes of free tenants were represented by knights of the shire elected in the county court. Edward invited the burghers to send elected representatives to parliament and they eventually became a part of the House of Commons.

Records of writs summoning knights, burgesses, and citizens to parliament are first found towards the end of the reign of Henry III., such writs having issued in the thirty-eighth and forty-ninth years of his reign. 4 Bla. Com. 425; Frynne, 4th Inst. 2. The earliest parliamentary roll is said to be 1290. 1 Poll. & Maitl. 178.

Since the reign of Edward III. the history of England shows an almost constant increase in the power of parliament. Anne was the last sovereign who exercised the royal prerogative of veto; and, as this prerogative no longer practically exists, the authority of parliament is absolutely unrestrained. The parliament can only meet when convened by the sovereign, except on the demise of the sovereign with no parliament in being, in which case the last parliament is to assemble; 6 Anne, c. 7. The sovereign has also power to prorogue and dissolve the parliament.

The origin of the English parliament seems traceable to the witena-gemote of the Saxon kings. Encyc. Brit. A writer traces the origin back to the local institutions of the Germanic tribes, but considers that the final stages of its growth are to be sought in the period between the accession of Henry II. and the close of the reign of Edward I; 1 Social Eng. 396.

The House of Lords. Besides the temporal peers of England, Great Britain and the United Kingdom, and such Scotch and Irish peers as also have imperial titles, the House of Lords includes sixteen Scotch peers elected for each parliament by the body of Scotch peers; twenty-eight Irish peers elected for life by the Irish peers; also the two English archbishops, and twenty-four of the English bishops. The total number of members varies, but may be placed at about six hundred and thirty-eight.

The House of Lords exercises criminal jurisdiction, both as a court of first instance and as a court of criminal appeal. It tries any person impeached by the House of Commons for any high crime or misdemeanor; also temporal peers and peeresses accused of treason, felony or misprision. In such case the accused cannot waive his privilege to be so tried. In the latter case the indictment is found by the grand jury and removed to the House of Lords (or into the Court of the Lord High Steward, q. v.) by writ of certiorari. For the purposes of the trial the house is presided over by a peer as Lord High Steward appointed by the king's commission, or in the absence of such appointment, by the Lord Chancellor. The judges may be summoned to give their opinions on any questions of law that may arise. All the members of the House of Lords are entitled to be present, and when present are judges of law and fact. A Lord High Steward, if presiding, may regulate the procedure, but is a judge of the law to no greater extent than any other peer. The bishops have a right to be present, but by common law may not vote in a capital case, and so withdraw before judgment is given; 1 Odgers, Com. Law 990. For a trial before the Court of the Lord High Steward when the Lords are not in session, see that title. For the last trial of a peer (for bigamy) see L. R. 1901, A. C. 446.

The House of Lords forms no part of the Supreme Court of Judicature; it has no original jurisdiction in ordinary civil actions.

An appeal lies to it against any judgment or order of the Court of Appeal. When sitting to hear such appeals, it is usually composed of the following: The Lord Chancellor; the ex-Lord Chancellor, if any, and the six Lords of Appeal in Ordinary. Such peers as have held high judicial office (e. g., the office of Lord Chancellor, of a salaried judge of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, or of the Supreme Court of England or Ireland, or of the Scotch Court of Session) are also entitled to sit. At least three members of the Court must be present. Lay peers have a right to vote, but since 1883 no lay peer has attempted to exercise it; his vote would be ignored.

It is a court of final appeal. This jurisdiction is practically confined to civil cases, but an appeal lies from the Court of Criminal Appeal if the attorney general certifies that the case involves a point of law of exceptional public importance.

It exercises jurisdiction in cases of claims to peerages. It decides questions as to disputed elections of the Scotch and Irish peers.

See COURTS OF ENGLAND; 17 L. Q. Rev. 155; Jenks, House of Lords.

House of Commons. There is no property qualification for the House of Commons. Any male British subject may be elected, unless specifically barred. In one or two instances natives of India have been elected. Infants are excluded (by common law and by statute), though in two notable instances, Fox and Lord John Russell, the rule has been disregarded.

Peers are excluded, including Scotch peers who have not been elected as representatives in the lords of the Scotch peerage, but an Irish peer not elected to represent Ireland in the lords may sit for a constituency of Great Britain, but not of Ireland.

Clergy of the Church of England and the Roman Catholic Church and ministers of the Church of Scotland are ineligible.

Government contractors, holders of certain pensions, bankrupts, and persons convicted of treason or a felony or guilty of corrupt practices are ineligible.

All holders of civil offices, not distinctly political, and the judges of the higher courts and most of those of the lower courts are ineligible.

Bankruptcy and lunacy continuing for six months are ground for unseating a member.

From 1715 to 1911 the life of a parliament was seven years. In 1911, it was changed to five years. See PARLIAMENTARY ACT. Upon the demise of the crown, parliament is required to meet without summons in the usual form.

The districting of Great Britain, by the act of 1885, is uniform in boroughs and counties. Oxford and Cambridge Universities have sent representatives since the time of James I. Those of London and Dublin each have a member; Edinburgh and St. Andrews together have one, and Glasgow and Aberdeen another. In case of a tie vote at an election, the returning officers of an election may break the tie.

By act of August, 1911, members of the House of Commons not receiving a salary from the government are paid £400 a year.

The one fundamental dogma of English constitutional law is the absolute sovereignty or despotism of the parliament. Dicey, Const. 141; no English court sits as a court of appeal from parliament; L. R. 6 C. P. 582.

PARLIAMENT, CONVENTION. See CONVENTION PARLIAMENT.

PARLIAMENTARY ACT. The name of an act of parliament of August 18, 1911, which recites that "it is intended to substitute for the House of Lords as it at present exists a second chamber constituted on a popular instead of hereditary basis, but such substitution cannot immediately be brought into operation"; it provides that money bills, if sent to the House of Lords at least one month before the end of the session and not passed by it without amendment within one month, shall, upon the royal assent being signified, become acts of parliament. Public bills (other than a money bill or a bill extending the duration of parliament beyond five years), if passed by the Commons at three successive sessions, whether of the same parliament or not, and sent to the House of Lords at least one month before the end of the session and rejected by it in each of these sessions, shall on their rejection for the third time become acts of parliament, upon the royal assent being signified thereto, but this provision shall not take effect unless two years have elapsed between the second reading in the first of these sessions in the Commons and the passage of the bill in the Commons in the third of these sessions. The speaker of the House of Commons conclusively decides as to whether a money bill is such, and whether the provisions as to the passage of public bills other than money bills, etc., have been complied with. If the House of Lords amends such public bills (the Commons not concurring), it is made equivalent to a rejection by the former. The enacting clause of bills so passed reads: "Be it enacted by the King's Most Excellent Majesty by and with the consent of the Commons."

The duration of parliament, fixed at seven years in 1715, is reduced to five years.

PARLIAMENTARY AGENTS. Persons professionally employed in the promotion of or opposition to private bills, and otherwise in relation to private business in parliament. Whart. Law Lex. Business in relation to private bills must be transacted through them, and counsel may be instructed by them. 2 Brett, Com. 775.

PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE. A committee of members of the house of peers, or of the house of commons, appointed by either house for the purpose of making inquiries, by the examination of witnesses or otherwise, into matters which could not be conveniently inquired into by the whole house. Whart. Law Lex.

PARLIAMENTARY COUNSEL TO THE TREASURY. An office created in Great Britain in 1869 by a treasury minute. The title had existed before. The duties are to settle all departmental bills and draw such other government bills (except Scotch and Irish) as may be required; prepare memoranda of existing laws; advise on amendments to bills passing through parliament, etc. He may obtain aid from other members of the bar. Legislative Methods, by Ilbert 84.

PARLIAMENTARY LAW. That body of the recognized usages of parliamentary and legislative assemblies by which their procedure is regulated, which takes its name from the British parliament and on the practice of which it is mainly founded, with such changes and modifications in American deliberative bodies as have been necessary to adapt it to the usages of that country. See MEETINGS; QUORUM.

PARLIAMENTARY ROLLS. See ROLLS.

PARLIAMENT, CONVENTION. See CONVENTION PARLIAMENT.

PARLIAMENTUM DIABOLICUM. A parliament held at Coventry, 38 Henry VI., wherein Edward, Earl of March (afterwards Edward IV.), and many of the chief nobility were attainted, was so called; but the acts then passed were annulled by the succeeding parliament. Jacob.

PARLIAMENTUM INDOCTUM (Lat. unlearned parliament). A name applied to a parliament assembled at Coventry, under a law that no lawyer should be a member of it. 6 Hen. IV.; 1 Bla. Com. 177; Walsingham 412, n. 30; Rot. Parl. 6 Hen. IV.

PARLIAMENTUM INSANUM. A parliament assembled at Oxford, 41 Hen. III., so styled from the madness of their proceedings, and because the lords came to it with armed men. Jacob.

PARLOR CAR. See SLEEPING CAR.

PAROL (more properly, parole. A French word, which means, literally, word, or speech). A term used to distinguish contracts which are made verbally, or in writing not under seal, which are called parol contracts, from those which are under seal, which bear the name of deeds or specialties. 1 Chitty, Contr., 12th ed. 7; 7 Term 350; Ballard v. Walker, 3 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 60; 1 Chitty, Pl. 88. When a contract is made under seal, and afterwards it is modified verbally, it becomes wholly a parol contract; Vicary v. Moore, 2 Watts (Pa.) 451, 2 (Am. Dec. 323; Munroe v. Perkins, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 298, 20 Am. Dec. 475. See CONTRACT.

Pleadings are frequently denominated the parol. In some instances the term parol is used to denote the entire pleadings in a cause: as, when in an action brought against an infant heir, on an obligation of his ancestors, he prays that the parol may demur, i. e. that the pleadings may be stayed till he shall attain full age; 3 Bla. Com. 300; 4 East 485; 1 Hoffm. 178. See a form of a plea in abatement, praying that the parol may demur, in 1 Wentw. Pl. 43, and 2 Chitty, Pl. 520. But a devisee cannot pray the parol to demur; 4 East 485.

PAROL DEMURRER. See PAROL.

PAROL EVIDENCE. Evidence verbally delivered by a witness. See Browne, Parol Evidence; RECEIPT; CONTRACT.

As to the admission of such evidence to vary a written contract, see EVIDENCE.

PAROL LEASE. An agreement made orally between parties, by which one of them leases to the other a certain estate. See LEASE.

PAROLE. In International Law. The agreement of persons who have been taken prisoner by an enemy that they will not again take up arms against those who captured them, either for a limited time or during the continuance of the war. Vattel, liv. 3, c. 8, § 151.

It is a sacred obligation to the fulfilment of which the national faith is pledged. U. S. v. Wright, 5 Phila. (Pa.) 299, Fed. Cas. No. 16,777.

A parole can be given only by a commissioned officer for himself or the troops under him. And an inferior officer, if his superior is within reach, cannot give his parole without the consent of the latter. If the prisoner's government refuse to confirm his parole, he is bound in honor to return into captivity. A captor is not bound to offer, nor a prisoner to accept, parole; it is voluntary on both sides. Giving a parole precludes only active service in the field. It is ended by the prisoner's exchange or by peace. A prisoner who violates his parole and is again captured may be shot as a bandit. Risley, Law of War, 131; Spaight, War Rights on Land, 290-300.

Articles 10-12 of the Convention Concerning the Laws and Customs of War on Land, adopted by the Hague Peace Conference of 1899, define the obligations which a release on parole imposes upon the prisoner himself and upon his government.

In Criminal Law. In some states acts have been passed providing for the release on parole of prisoners committed to prison upon conviction of crime. See PRISONERS.

PARQUET. In French Law. The magistrates who are charged with the conduct of proceedings in criminal cases and misdemeanors.

PARRICIDE (from Lat. pater, father, caedere, to slay). In the Civil Law. One who murders his father. One who murders his mother, his brother, his sister, or his children. Merlin, Rep. Parricide; Dig. 48, 9, 1, 3, 4.

This offence is defined almost in the same words in the penal code of China. Penal Laws of China, b. 1, s. 2, § 4.

The criminal was punished by being scourged, and afterwards sewed in a sort of sack, with a dog, a cock, a viper, and an ape, and then thrown into the sea or into a river; or, if there were no water, he was thrown in this manner to wild beasts. Dig. 48, 9, 9; Code 9, 17, 1, 1, 4, 18, 6; Brown, Civ. Law 423.

By the laws of France, parricide is the crime of him who murders his father or mother, whether they be the legitimate, natural, or adopted parents of the individual, or the murder of any other legitimate ascendant. Code Penal, art. 297. This crime was there punished by the criminal's being taken to the place of execution without any other garment than his shirt, barefooted, and with his head covered with a black veil. He was then exposed on the scaffold, while an officer of the court read his sentence to the spectators; his right hand was then cut off, and he was immediately put to death. Id. art. 13.

The common law does not define this crime, and makes no difference between its punishment and the punishment of murder; 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 380; Prin. Penal Law, c. 18, § 8, p. 243; Dalloz, Dict. Homicide, § 2.

PARS ENITIA (Lat.). In Old English Law. The share of the eldest daughter where lands were parted between daughters by lot, she having her first choice after the division of the inheritance. Co. Litt. 166 b; Glanv. lib. 7, c. 3; Fleta, lib. 5, c. 10, § In divisionem.

PARS RATIONABILIS (Lat. reasonable part). That part of a man's goods which the law gave to his wife and children. 2 Bla. Com. 492; Magn. Cart.; 9 Hen. III. c. 18; 2 Steph. Com., 11th ed. 194. See DEAD MAN'S PART.

PARSON. One that hath full possession of all the rights of a parochial church.

So called because the church, which is an invisible body, is represented by his person. In England he is himself a body corporate, in order to protect and defend the church (which he personates) by a perpetual succession; Co. Litt. 300. He is sometimes called the rector (q. v.), or governor, of the church: but the appellation of parson, however it may be depreciated by familiar, clownish, and indiscriminate use, is the most legal, most beneficial, and most honorable title that a parish priest can enjoy; because "such a one," Sir Edward Coke observes, "and he only, is said vicem seu personam Ecclesiæ gerere"; 1 Bla. Com. 334.

The parson has, during life, the freehold in himself of the parsonage-house, the glebe, the tithes, and other dues, unless these are appropriated, i. e. given away, to some spiritual corporation, sole or aggregate, which the law esteems as capable of providing for the service of the church as any single private clergyman; id.; 1 Hagg. Cons. 162; 3 Steph. Com., 11th ed. 5.

The ecclesiastical or spiritual rector of a rectory. 1 Woodd. Lect. 311; Fleta, lib. 7, c. 18; Co. Litt. 300. Also, any clergyman having a spiritual preferment. Co. Litt. 17. Holy orders, presentation, institution, and induction are necessary for a parson; and a parson may cease to be such by death, resignation, cession, or deprivation, which last may be for simony, nonconformity to canons, adultery, etc.; Co. Litt. 120; 4 Co. 75, 76.

PARSON IMPERSONEE. A persona, or parson, may be termed impersonata, or impersonatee, only in regard to the possession he hath of the rectory by the act of another. Co. Litt. 300. One that is inducted and in possession of a benefice; e. g. a dean and chapter. Dy. 40, 221. He that is in possession of a church, be it presentative or appropriate, and with whom the church is full,—persona in this case meaning the patron who gives the title, and persona impersonata the parson to whom the benefice is given in the patron's right. Reg. Jud. 24.

PARSONAGE. The house set apart for the minister's residence. A portion of lands and tithes established by law for the maintenance of a minister. Toml.

PART. A share; a purpart. This word is also used in contradistinction to counterpart: covenants were formerly made in a script and rescript, or part and counterpart.

PART-OWNERS. Those who own a thing together, or in common.

In Maritime Law. A term applied to two or more persons who own a vessel together, and not as partners.

In general, when a majority of the part-owners are desirous of employing such a ship upon a particular voyage or adventure they have a right to do so upon giving security in the admiralty by stipulation to the minority, if required to bring her back and restore the ship, or in case of her loss, to pay them the value of their respective shares; Abb. Ship. 84; 3 Kent 151; Story, Partnership § 489; The Orleans v. Phœbus, 11 Pet. (U. S.) 175, 9 L. Ed. 677. When the majority do not choose to employ the ship, the minority have the same right, upon giving similar security; The Orleans v. Phœbus, 11 Pet. (U. S.) 175, 9 L. Ed. 677; 1 Hagg. Adm. 306; Jacobsen, Sea-Laws 442. Where part-owners are equally divided as to the employment upon any particular voyage, the courts of admiralty have manifested a disposition to support the right of the court to order a sale of the ship; Story, Partn. § 439; Davis v. Seneca, Gilp. 10, Fed. Cas. No. 3,650. See VESSEL.

PARTES FINIS NIL HABUERUNT (Lat. the parties to the fine had nothing; i. e. nothing which they could convey). The plea to a fine levied by a stranger, which only bound parties and privies. 2 Bla. Com. *356; Hob. 334; 1 P. Wms. 520.

PARTIAL LOSS. See Loss.

PARTIBLE LANDS. Lands which might be divided; lands held in gavelkind. See 2 Poll. & Maitl. 268, 271; GAVELKIND.

PARTICEPS CRIMINIS. A partner in crime. See ACCOMPLICE.

PARTICIPATE. To take equal shares and proportions; to share or divide. 6 Ch. 696. Participate in an estate. To take as tenants in common. 28 Beav. 266.

PARTICULAR AVERAGE. Every kind of expense or damage, short of total loss, which regards a particular concern, and which is to be wholly borne by the proprietor of that concern or interest alone. See Bargett v. Ins. Co., 3 Bosw. (N. Y.) 385; Pierce v. Ins. Co., 14 Allen (Mass.) 320; 2 Phill. Ins. § 354; 1 Pars. Marit. Law 284; Gourlie, Gen. Average; AVERAGE. It also designates a partial loss. Arn. Ins. 1008.

PARTICULAR AVERMENT. See AVERMENT.

PARTICULAR CUSTOM. A custom which only affects the inhabitants of some particular district.

To be good, a particular custom must have been used so long that the memory of man runneth not to the contrary; must have been continued; must have been peaceable; must be reasonable; must be certain; must be consistent with itself; must be consistent with other customs. 1 Bla. Com. 74, 79.

PARTICULAR ESTATE. An estate which is carved out of a larger, and which precedes a remainder, as, an estate for years to A, remainder to B for life; or, an estate for life to A, remainder to B in tail: this precedent estate is called the particular estate, and the tenant of such estate is called the particular tenant. 2 Bla. Com. 165; 4 Kent 226; 16 Vin. Abr. 216; 4 Com. Dig. 32; 5 id. 346; Will. Real P. 281. See REMAINDER.

PARTICULAR LIEN. The right which a person has to retain property in respect of money or labor expended on such particular property. See LIEN.

PARTICULAR MALICE. Ill will; grudge; a desire to be revenged on a particular person. Brooks v. Jones, 33 N. C. 261. See MALICE.

PARTICULAR SERVICES. In this phrase is included the professional services of an expert; Buchman v. State, 59 Ind. 13, 26 Am. Rep. 75; but not of a witness; Daly v. Multnomah Co., 14 Or. 20, 12 Pac. 11.

PARTICULAR TENANT. See PARTICULAR ESTATE.

PARTICULARS. See BILL OF PARTICULARS.

PARTIDAS. See LAS PARTIDAS.

PARTIES. Those who take part in the performance of an act, as, making a contract, carrying on an action. Parties in law may be said to be those united in interest in the performance of an act; it may then be composed of one or more persons. The term includes every party to an act. It is also used to denote all the individual, separate persons engaged in the act,—in which sense, however, a corporation may be a party.

In Contracts. Those persons who engage themselves to do or not to do the matters and things contained in an agreement.

In general, all persons may be parties to contracts. But no person can contract with himself in a different capacity, as there must be an agreement of minds; 2 Bro. C. C. 400; Michoud v. Girod, 4 How. (U. S.) 503, 11 L. Ed. 1076; Gorham's Adm'r v. Meacham's Adm'r, 63 Vt. 231, 22 Atl. 572, 13 L. R. A. 676.

Aliens were under greater disabilities at common law with reference to real than to personal property; 7 Co. 25 a; Levy v. Mc-

Cartee, 6 Pet. (U. S.) 102, 8 L. Ed. 334; Taylor v. Carpenter, 11 Palge Ch. (N. Y.) 292, 42 Am. Dec. 114; Judd v. Lawrence, 1 Cush. (Mass.) 531. The disability is now removed, in a greater or less degree, by statutes in the various states, and alien friends stand on a very different footing from alien enemies; Coats v. Holbrook, 2 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 586; Re Barry, 2 How. (U. S.) 65, 11 L. Ed. 181. See ALIEN; WAR.

Bankrupts and insolvents are disabled to contract, by various statutes, in England, as well as by insolvent laws in the states.

Duress renders a contract voidable at the option of him on whom it was practised. See DURESS.

Infants are generally incapable of contracting before the age of twenty-one years. This provision is intended for their benefit; and therefore most of their contracts are voidable, and not void. It is the infant's privilege at majority to elect whether to avoid or ratify the contract he has made during minority; Phipps v. Phipps, 39 Kan. 495, 18 Pac. 707. Though the infant is not bound, the adult with whom he may contract is. The infant may always sue, but cannot be sued; Stra. 937. The infant cannot avoid his contract for necessities; Phelps v. Worcester, 11 N. H. 51; 6 M. & W. 42; Shaw v. Bryant, 65 Hun 57, 19 N. Y. Supp. 618. See [1891] 1 Q. B. 413. If he avoids an executed contract when he comes of age, on the ground of infancy, he must restore the consideration which he has received; the privilege of infancy is to be used as a shield, not as a sword; Clark v. Tate, 7 Mont. 171, 14 Pac. 761; Utermehle v. McGreal, 1 App. D. C. 359. See INFANT; NECESSARIES.

Married women, at common law, were almost entirely disabled to contract, their personal existence being almost entirely merged in that of their husbands; Turtle v. Muncy, 2 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 82; Prescott v. Brown, 23 Me. 305, 39 Am. Dec. 623; 5 Exch. 388; so that contracts made by them before marriage could be taken advantage of and enforced by their husbands, but not by themselves; Howes v. Bigelow, 13 Mass. 384; Winslow v. Crocker, 17 Me. 29; Hyde v. Stone, 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 230, 18 Am. Dec. 501; Morgan v. Bank, 14 Conn. 99. The contract of a feme covert was, then, generally void, unless she was the agent of her husband, in which case it was the husband's contract, and not hers; 6 Mod. 171; Pickering v. Pickering, 6 N. H. 124; Green v. Sperry, 16 Vt. 390, 42 Am. Dec. 519; Stultz v. Dickey, 5 Binn. (Pa.) 285, 6 Am. Dec. 411; Benjamin v. Benjamin, 15 Conn. 347, 39 Am. Dec. 384. See MARRIED WOMAN.

Non compos mentis. At common law, formerly, in this class were included lunatics, insane persons, and idiots. It is understood now to include drunkards; Grant

v. Thompson, 4 Conn. 203, 10 Am. Dec. 119; Rice v. Peet, 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 503; Seaver v. Phelps, 11 Pick. (Mass.) 304, 22 Am. Dec. 372; 13 M. & W. 623; Youn v. Lamont, 58 Minn. 216, 57 N. W. 478. See Thomas' Adm'r v. Lewis, 89 Va. 56, 15 S. E. 389, 18 L. R. A. 170, 37 Am. St. Rep. 848. Spendthrifts under guardianship are not competent to make a valid contract for the payment of money; Manson v. Felton, 13 Pick. (Mass.) 206. Seamen "are the wards of the admiralty, and though not technically incapable of entering into a valid contract, they are treated in the same manner as courts of equity are accustomed to treat young heirs dealing with their expectancies, wards with their guardians, and cestuis que trust with their trustees." Harden v. Gordon, 2 Mas. 541, Fed. Cas. No. 6,047. See 3 Kent 193; 2 Dods. 504.

As to the character in which parties contract. They may act independently or severally, jointly, or jointly and severally. The decision of the question of the kind of liability incurred depends on the terms of the contract, if they are express, or, if not express, upon the intention of the parties as gathered from the circumstances of the case. Whenever, however, the obligation is undertaken by two or more, or a right given to two or more, it is a general presumption of law that it is a joint obligation or right; words of joinder are not necessary for this purpose; but, on the other hand, there should be words of severance in order to produce a several responsibility or a several right; 13 M. & W. 499; Ehle v. Purdy, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 629; Elliott v. Bell, 37 W. Va. 834, 17 S. E. 399. It may be doubted, however, whether anything less than express words can raise at once a joint and several liability. No joint liability exists upon separate individual contracts, though for the same subject-matter; Fischer v. Spang, 43 Ill. App. 378. Parties may act as the representatives of others, as agents, factors, or brokers, attorneys, executors, or administrators, and guardians. They may also act in a collective capacity, as corporations, joint-stock companies, or as partnerships. See these titles.

New parties may be made to contracts already in existence, by novation, assignment, and indorsement, which titles see.

To Suits in Equity. The person who seeks a remedy in chancery by suit, commonly called the plaintiff, or complainant, and the person against whom the remedy is sought, usually denominated the defendant, or respondent, are the parties to a suit in equity.

In equity all persons materially interested, either legally or beneficially, in the subject-matter of a suit, are to be made parties to it, either as plaintiffs or defendants, so that there may be a complete decree which shall bind them all; Christian v. R. Co., 133 U. S. 233, 10 Sup. Ct. 260, 33 L. Ed. 589; Gregory

v. Stetson, 133 U. S. 579; it is not indispensable that all the parties should have an interest in all the matters contained in the suit, but it is sufficient if each party has an interest in some material matter in the suit, and it is connected with the others; Brown v. Safe Deposit Co., 128 U. S. 403, 9 Sup. Ct. 127, 32 L. Ed. 468. In the absence of parties, and without their having an opportunity to be heard, a court is without jurisdiction to make an adjudication affecting them; New Orleans W. W. Co. v. New Orleans, 164 U. S. 471, 17 Sup. Ct. 161, 41 L. Ed. 518.

Active parties are those who are so involved in the subject-matter in controversy that no decree can be made without their being in court. Passive parties are those whose interests are involved in granting complete relief to those who ask it. Joy v. Wirtz, 1 Wash. C. C. 517, Fed. Cas. No. 7, 554. See Logan v. Barclay, 3 Ala. 361.

Passive parties are those to whom complete relief can be afforded without affecting the rights of those omitted; Appeal of Coleman, 75 Pa. 459.

They consist of: 1. Formal parties; 2. Persons having an interest and who ought to be made parties, in order that the court may adjust all rights involved; these are commonly termed necessary parties, but if their interests are separable from those of the other parties so that complete justice can be done without affecting those not before the court, the latter are not indispensable parties; 3. Persons who have an interest such that a final decree cannot be made without either affecting that interest or leaving the controversy in such a condition that its final determination may be wholly inconsistent with equity and good conscience. Minnesota v. Securities Co., 184 U. S. 199, 22 Sup. Ct. 308, 46 L. Ed. 499. Where granting the relief prayed would injuriously affect persons who are materially interested who are not parties, the court will dismiss the bill sua sponte, though the question be not raised by the pleadings or by counsel; Minnesota v. Securities Co., 184 U. S. 199, 22 Sup. Ct. 308, 46 L. Ed. 499.

PLAINTIFFS. In general, all persons, whether natural or artificial, may sue in equity; and an equitable title only is sufficient; Frye v. Bank, 5 Gilman (Ill.) 332. Incapacities which prevent suit are absolute, which disable during their continuance, or partial which disable the party to sue alone.

Persons representing antagonistic interests cannot be joined as complainants; Smith v. Smith, 102 Ala. 516, 14 South. 765.

Alien enemies are under an absolute incapacity to sue. Alien friends may sue; Mitf. Eq. Pl. 129; if the subject-matter be not such as to disable them; Co. Litt. 129 b; although a sovereign; 1 Sim. 94; Society for the Propagation of Gospel v. New Haven, 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 464, 5 L. Ed. 662; Silver Lake Bank v. North, 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 370. In such case he must have been first recognized by the executive of the forum; Gelston v. Hoyt, 3 Wheat. (U. S.) 324, 4 L. Ed. 381.

In such case the sovereign submits to the jurisdiction, as to the subject-matter, and must answer on oath; Mitf. Eq. Pl. 30; Ad. Eq. 313; 6 Beav. 1. See SOVEREIGN.

Attorney-general. Government (in England, the crown) may sue both in its own behalf, for its own political rights and interests, and in behalf of the rights and interests of those partaking of its prerogatives or claiming its peculiar protection; Mitf. Eq. Pl. 421; usually by the agency of the attorney-general or solicitor-general; Mitf. Eq. Pl. 7; Ad. Eq. 312. See INJUNCTION; QUO WARRANTO; MANDAMUS; TRUSTS.

Corporations, like natural persons, may sue; Moraw. Pr. Corp. § 357; Grant, Corp. 198; although foreign; id. 200; but in such case the incorporation must be set forth; 1 Cr. M. & R. 296; Silver Lake Bank v. North, 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 372; as it must if they are domestic and created by a private act; Central Mfg. Co. v. Hartshorne, 3 Conn. 199; 15 Viner, Abr. 198. All the members of a voluntary association must be joined; Whitney v. Mayo, 15 Ill. 251; unless too numerous; Beatty v. Kurtz, 2 Pet. (U. S.) 566, 7 L. Ed. 521. See JURISDICTION; EXPRESS COMPANIES.

As to the right of a stockholder to sue, see Hawes v. Oakland, 104 U. S. 460, 26 L. Ed. 827; Detroit v. Dean, 106 U. S. 537, 1 Sup. Ct. 500, 27 L. Ed. 300; Dodge v. Woolsey, 18 How. (U. S.) 331, 15 L. Ed. 401.

Idiots and lunatics may sue by their committees; Mitf. Eq. Pl. 29. As to when a mere petition is sufficient, see In re Hallock, 7 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 24; Latham v. Wiswall, 37 N. C. 294. See NEXT FRIEND.

Infants may sue; Mitf. Eq. Pl. 25; and, if they be on the wrong side of the suit, may be transferred at any time, on suggestion; Le Fort v. Delafield, 3 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 32. The bill must be filed by the next friend; Bowie v. Minter, 2 Ala. 406; who must not have an adverse interest; Walker v. Crowder, 37 N. C. 478; and who may be compelled to give bail; Fulton v. Roosevelt, 1 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 178, 19 Am. Dec. 409. If the infant have a guardian, the court may decide in whose name the suit shall continue; Holmes v. Field, 12 Ill. 424.

A married woman, at common law, was under partial incapacity to sue; Bradley v. Emerson, 7 Vt. 369. Otherwise, when in such condition as to be considered in law a feme sole; Troughton's Adm'rs v. Hill's Ex'rs, 3 N. C. 406. She could sue on a separate claim by aid of a next friend of her own choice; Story, Eq. Pl. § 61; but see Wood v. Wood, 2 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 454; and the defendant might insist that she should sue

In this manner; Dandridge v. Minge, 4 Rand. (Va.) 397.

Though at common law an action could not be maintained by a partnership against another partnership having a common member with the former, upon an agreement made between the two firms, equity will take jurisdiction, and afford an adequate remedy; Crosby v. Timolat, 50 Minn. 171, 52 N. W. 526.

Societies. A certain number of persons belonging to a voluntary society may sue on behalf of themselves and their associates for purposes common to them all; Beatty v. Kurtz, 2 Pet. (U. S.) 566, 7 L. Ed. 521; such as bondholders and stockholders.

The objection for want of proper parties may be taken advantage of either by demurrer, plea, answer, or at the hearing; 24 U. S. App. 601; but see ANSWER as to the changes in equity pleading under the new equity rules of the supreme court of the United States.

DEFENDANTS. Generally, all who are able to sue may be sued in equity. To constitute a person defendant, process must be prayed against him; Hoyle v. Moore's Devises, 39 N. C. 175; Carey v. Hillhouse, 5 Ga. 251. Those who are under incapacity may be made defendants, but must appear in a peculiar manner. One, or more, interested with the plaintiff, who refuse to join may be made defendants; Contee v. Dawson, 2 Bland. Ch. (Md.) 264; Pogson v. Owen, 3 Des. (S. C.) 31; Billings v. Mann, 156 Mass. 203, 30 N. E. 1136. A court of equity even after a final hearing on the merits, and on appeal to the court of last resort, will compel the joinder of necessary parties defendant; O'Fallon v. Clopton, 89 Mo. 284, 1 S. W. 302. One cannot be made a defendant on his own application, against the objection of the complainant; Whitney v. Bank, 71 Miss. 1009, 15 South. 33, 23 L. R. A. 531; Stretch v. Stretch, 2 Tenn. Ch. 140. See INTERVENTION.

Corporations must be sued by their corporate names, unless authorized to come into court in the name of some other person, as president, etc.; Story, Eq. Pl. § 70. Governments cannot, generally, be sued in their own courts; Story, Eq. Pl. § 69; yet the attorney-general may be made a party to protect its rights when involved; Garr v. Bright, 1 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 157; and the rule does not prevent suits against officers in their official capacity; Michigan State Bank v. Hastings, 1 Dougl. (Mich.) 225, 41 Am. Dec. 549. As to joining corporate officers in patent cases, see INFRINGEMENT.

Foreclosure. For the mere purpose of extinguishing an equity of redemption, the mortgagor is strictly the only necessary party; Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Trust Co., 23 Fed. 513; but if it be intended to divest other liens, other parties must be brought in; id.

In a suit to foreclose a junior mortgage, a prior mortgagee need not be joined; Woodworth v. Blair, 112 U. S. 8, 5 Sup. Ct. 6, 28 L. Ed. 615; and more particularly if the prior mortgage is not yet due; Jerome v. McCarter, 94 U. S. 734, 24 L. Ed. 136; but it is otherwise where the bill prays a receiver for the property covered by such prior mortgage; Miltnerberger v. R. Co., 106 U. S. 286, 1 Sup. Ct. 140, 27 L. Ed. 117; or where the junior mortgagee seeks a sale of the property free of incumbrance; Jerome v. McCarter, 94 U. S. 734, 24 L. Ed. 136; or where there is a doubt as to the amount of the debt due under the prior incumbrance; Metropolitan Trust Co. v. R. Co., 43 Hun (N. Y.) 521; Jerome v. McCarter, 94 U. S. 734, 24 L. Ed. 136. Senior mortgagees cannot become parties to an action to foreclose a junior mortgage; Petition of McHenry, 9 Abb. N. C. (N. Y.) 256. But where joined he may enforce his lien by a cross-bill; Osborne & Co. v. Barge, 30 Fed. 805. Even junior incumbrancers are not indispensable parties, but if not joined, their rights will not be affected; Chandler v. O'Neil, 62 Ill. App. 418; Simmons v. Taylor, 23 Fed. 849.

A receiver is a proper, though not a necessary party to foreclosure proceedings begun after his appointment; Herring v. R. Co., 105 N. Y. 340, 12 N. E. 763; Kirkpatrick v. Corning, 38 N. J. Eq. 234; he may be permitted to intervene; Willink v. Banking Co., 4 N. J. Eq. 377.

Bondholders cannot bring proceedings to foreclose a mortgage without showing that they have requested their trustee to proceed and he has refused; General Electric Co. v. Electric Co., 79 Fed. 25.

Mortgage bondholders may proceed for the protection of their interests where the trustee has refused to sue; First N. F. Ins. Co. v. Salisbury, 130 Mass. 303; Chicago, D. & V. R. Co. v. Fosdick, 106 U. S. 47, 27 L. Ed. 47; or has acquired interests adverse to those of the bondholders; American T. & I. Co. v. Oil & Gas Co., 51 Fed. 826; and, in such case, one or more bondholders may sue for themselves and other like bondholders; Farmers' L. & T. Co. v. R. Co., 59 Fed. 957; such others may come in at any stage; Wilmer v. R. Co., 2 Woods 447, Fed. Cas. No. 17,776.

A mortgage trustee is the only necessary party to a bill to foreclose the mortgage; he represents the bondholders; see Kerrison v. Stewart, 93 U. S. 156, 23 L. Ed. 843; Union Trust Co. v. R. Co., 117 U. S. 434, 6 Sup. Ct. 809, 29 L. Ed. 963; and he is the proper person to bring foreclosure proceedings; Barnes v. R. Co., 122 U. S. 1, 7 Sup. Ct. 1043, 30 L. Ed. 1128; Credit Co. of London v. R. Co., 15 Fed. 52. A non-resident mortgage trustee may be brought in as defendant by publication in the federal courts; Stansell v. Levee Board, 13 Fed. 857. In a railroad foreclosure brought by a non-resident bondholder, the fact that the trustee is a resident of the same state as the plaintiff does not affect the jurisdiction of a federal court; Barry v. R. Co., 27 Fed. 1.

A trustee may intervene in a bondholder's suit to foreclose and carry on the suit in his own name; People v. Fletcher, 2 Scam. (Ill.) 487. A buyer at a foreclosure sale makes himself a party to the record; Kneeland v. Trust Co., 136 U. S. 89, 10 Sup. Ct. 950, 34 L. Ed. 379. See INTERVENTION; MORTGAGE.

Corporations are indispensable parties to a bill which affects corporate rights or liabilities; Swan L. & C. Co. v. Frank, 148 U. S. 604, 13 Sup. Ct. 691, 37 L. Ed. 577; Deerfield v. Nims, 110 Mass. 115.

Idiots and lunatics may be defendants and defend by committees, usually appointed guardians ad litem as of course; Mitt. Eq. Pl. 103; New v. New, 6 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 237.

A guardian de facto may not have a bill against a lunatic for a balance due him, but must proceed by petition; Tally v. Tally, 22 N. C. 385, 34 Am. Dec. 407; Brasher's Ex'rs v. Van Cortlandt, 2 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 242.

Infants defend by guardians appointed by the court; Bank of U. S. v. Ritchie, 8 Pet. (U. S.) 128, 8 L. Ed. 890; Parker v. Lincoln, 12 Mass. 16. On becoming of age, an infant is allowed, as of course, to put in a new plea, or to demur, on showing that it is necessary to protect his rights; Stephenson v. Stephenson, 6 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 353.

Married women might be made defendants, and might answer as if femes sole, if the husband was plaintiff, an exile, or an alien enemy, has abjured the realm or been transported under criminal sentence; Mitt. Eq. Pl. 104.

She should be made defendant where her husband sought to recover an estate held in trust for her separate use; Grant v. Van Schoonhoven, 9 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 255, 37 Am. Dec. 393; and, generally, where the interests of her husband conflicted with hers in the suit, and he was a plaintiff; Alston v. Jones, 3 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 397. See MARRIED WOMEN.

See, generally, as to who may be defendants, JOINDER OF PARTIES.

A failure to join the husband of a married woman in an equitable action against her, is cured by his death pending suit; Alexander v. Steele, 84 Ala. 332, 4 South. 281.

Where proceedings are against an association having numerous members, all need not be made parties defendant; they are good as to all the members named; Story, Eq. Pl. § 94.

In Fidelity Ins. Co. v. Safe Deposit Co., 175 Pa. 13, 34 Atl. 314, the same trust company as trustee for two different estates was both plaintiff and defendant in a cause. The court in its opinion adverted to the fact without comment.

At Law. IN ACTIONS EX CONTRACTU.

There are two necessary parties to an action, viz. the person who seeks to establish a right in himself, commonly called the plaintiff, and the person upon whom he seeks to impose a corresponding duty or liability, commonly called the defendant. In attachment proceedings there is still a third party, commonly called the garnishee.

PLAINTIFFS. In general, all persons who have a just cause of action may sue, unless some disability be shown; Dicey, Part. 1. An action on a contract, of whatever description, must be brought in the name of the party in whom the legal interest is vested; 3 B. & P. 147; Crawford v. The William Penn, 1 Pet. C. C. 109, Fed. Cas. No. 3,372; Buckbee v. Brown, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 110. See Saltmarsh v. Candia, 51 N. H. 71.

On simple contracts, by the party from whom (in part, at least) the consideration moved; 1 Stra. 592; Anderson v. Blakely, 2 W. & S. (Pa.) 237; although the promise was made to another, if for his benefit; Cabot v. Haskins, 3 Pick. (Mass.) 83; Sailly v. Cleveland, 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 156; Clarke v. McFarlands' Ex'rs, 5 Dana (Ky.) 45; and not by a stranger to the consideration, even though the contract be for his sole benefit; Browne, Act. 101. On contracts under seal, by parties to the instrument only; Spencer v. Field, 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 87; Co. Litt. 231.

Agents contracting in their own name, without disclosing their principals, may, in general, sue in their own names; 3 B. & Ald. 280; 5 M. & W. 650; Gilpin v. Howell, 5 Pa. 41, 45 Am. Dec. 720; or the principals may sue; Corlies v. Cumming, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 181; Broom, Part. 44. See, generally, Ans. Contr. 352.

So they may sue on contracts made for an unknown principal; 3 E. L. & E. 391; and also when acting under a del credere commission; 4 Maule & S. 566; White v. Chouteau, 10 Barb. (N. Y.) 202; but not an ordinary merchandise broker. An auctioneer may sue for the price of goods sold; 1 H. Bla. 81; Hulse v. Young, 16 Johns. (N. Y.) 1; but a mere attorney having no beneficial interest may not sue in his own name; Gunn v. Cantine, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 387.

Alien enemies, unless resident under a license, or contracting under specific license, cannot sue, nor can suit be brought for their benefit; 1 Campb. 482; 1 Kent 67; Jackson v. Decker, 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 418. License is presumed if they are not ordered away; Clarke v. Morey, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 69; Russel v. Skipwith, 6 Binn. (Pa.) 241. See, also, Co. Litt. 129 b; 15 East 260; 1 Kent 68.

Alien friends may bring actions concerning personal property; Bac. Abr. Aliens; for libel published here; 8 Scott 182; and now, in regard to real estate generally, by statute; Ellice v. Winn, 12 Wend. (N. Y.) 342; and, by common law, till office found, against an intruder; Jackson v. Beach, 1 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 399. But see People v. Folsom, 5 Cal. 373. See WAR. As a general rule, an alien may maintain a personal action in the federal courts; Taylor v. Carpenter, 3 Story 458, Fed. Cas. No. 13,784; Coffeen v. Brunton, 4 McLean, 516, Fed. Cas. No. 2,946.

Assignees of choses in action cannot, at common law, maintain actions in their own names; Broom, Part. 10; Pollard v. Ins. Co., 42 Me. 221. Promissory notes, bills of exchange, bailbonds, and replevin bonds, etc., are exceptions to this rule; Hamm, Part. 108. Assignees of a note and mortgage can maintain an action thereon, whether they paid any consideration for the assignment, or not; Whitney v. Traynor, 74 Wis. 289, 42 N. W. 267.

An assignee of real estate may have an action in his own name for breaches of a covenant running with the land, occurring after assignment; Kane v. Sanger, 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 89; and he need not be named in an express covenant of this character; Broom, Part. 8.

An assignee in insolvency or bankruptcy should sue in his own name on a contract made before the act of bankruptcy or the assignment in insolvency; 1 Chitty, Pl. 14; Com. Dig. Abatement (E 17); Kennedy v. Ferris, 5 S. & R. (Pa.) 394. Otherwise of a suit by a foreign assignee; Raymond v. Johnson, 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 488. The discharge of the insolvent pending suit does not abate it; id. But see Bird v. Pierpont, 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 118.

An assignee who is to execute trusts may sue in his own name; 4 Abb. 106. Cestuis que trustent cannot sue at law; 3 Bouvier, Inst. 135.

Civil death occurring in case of an outlaw, an attainted felon, or one sentenced to imprisonment for life, incapacitates the person for suing as plaintiff during the continuance of the condition; Broom, Part. 85. Sentence as above, during suit, abates it; O'Brien v. Hagan, 1 Duer (N. Y.) 664; but the right to sue is suspended only; Broom, Part. 85.

Corporations may sue in their true corporate name, on contracts made in their behalf by officers or agents; Garland v. Reynolds, 20 Me. 45; Dacey, Part. 276; Krell Plano Co. v. Kent, 39 W. Va. 294, 19 S. E. 409; as a bank, on a note given to a cashier; Commercial Bk. v. French, 21 Pick. (Mass.) 486, 32 Am. Dec. 280. A suit against a director for his secret profits on a sale to the company is properly brought by the company and not by its stockholders; Yale Gas S. Co. v. Wilcox, 64 Conn. 101, 29 Atl. 303, 25 L. R. A. 90, 42 Am. St. Rep. 159.

The name must be that at the time of suit; Morgan v. Ins. Co., 3 Ind. 285; Porter v. Nekervis, 4 Rand. (Va.) 359; with an averment of the change, if any, since the making of the contract; Ready v. Tuscaloosa, 6 Ala. 327; Madison College v. Burke, id. 494; even though a wrong name were used in making the contract; Berks & Dauphin T. Road v. Myers, 6 S. & R. (Pa.) 16, 9 Am. Dec. 402; Medway Cotton Manufactory v. Adams, 10 Mass. 360. See NAME.

If the corporation be a foreign one, proof of its existence must be given; Bank of Augusta v. Earle, 13 Pet. (U. S.) 519, 10 L. Ed. 274; Michigan Bank v. Williams, 5 Wend. (N. Y.) 478; Portsmouth Livery Co. v. Watson, 10 Mass. 91; Bank of Ala. v. Simonton, 2 Tex. 531; Bank of Edwardsville v. Simpson, 1 Mo. 184. See Dodge v. Tulleys, 144 U. S. 451, 12 Sup. Ct. 728, 36 L. Ed. 501.

Executors and administrators, in whom is vested the legal interest, are to sue on all personal contracts; 5 Term 393; see Bushel v. Ins. Co., 15 S. & R. (Pa.) 183; or covenants affecting the realty but not running with the land; 2 H. Bla. 310; and on such covenants running with the land, for breach during the decedent's lifetime occasioning special damage; Van Rensselaer's Ex'rs v. Platner's Ex'rs, 2 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 17. They must sue, as such, on causes accruing prior to the death of the decedent; 1 Saund. 112; Com. Dig. Pleader (2 D 1); Winningham v. Crouch, 2 Swan (Tenn.) 170; and as such, or in their own names, at their election, for those accruing subsequently; McDonald v. Williams, 16 Ark. 36; and upon contracts made by them in their official capacity; Goodman v. Walker, 30 Ala. 482, 68 Am. Dec. 134; Claiborne v. Yeoman, 15 Tex. 44; in their own names only, in some states; Halley v. Wheeler, 49 N. C. 159.

On the death of an executor, his executor, or administrator, if he die intestate, is the legal representative of the original decedent; 7 M. & W. 306; Smith v. Pearce, 2 Swan (Tenn.) 127; 2 Bla. Com. 506; unless altered by statute.

Foreign governments, whether monarchical or republican; Mexico v. De Arangoiz, 5 Duer (N. Y.) 634; if recognized by the executive of the forum; Gelston v. Hoyt, 3 Wheat. (U. S.) 324, 4 L. Ed. 381; see Rose v. Himely, 4 Cra. (U. S.) 272, 2 L. Ed. 608; 9 Ves. 347; may sue; Delafield v. Illinois, 26 Wend. (N. Y.) 212.

Husband must sue alone for wages accruing to the wife, for the profits of business carried on by her, or money lent by her during coverture; 2 W. Bl. 1239; Avogadro v. Bull, 4 E. D. Sm. (N. Y.) 384; and see 1 Maule & S. 180; for slanderous words spoken of the wife which are actionable only by reason of special damage; 2 Du. 633; on a fresh promise, for which the consideration was in part some matter moving from him renewing a contract made with the wife, dum sola; 1

Maule & S. 180; and see Steward v. Chance, 3 N. J. L. 827; for a legacy accruing to the wife during coverture; Hapgood v. Houghton, 22 Pick. (Mass.) 480; and as administrator of the wife to recover chattels real and personal not previously reduced into possession; Broom, Part. 74. See MARRIED WOMAN.

He may sue alone for property that belonged to the wife before coverture; Trimble v. Stipe, 5 T. B. Monr. (Ky.) 264; on a joint bond given for a debt due to the wife dum sola; 1 Maule & S. 180; 1 Chitty, Pl. 20; on a covenant running to both; Cro. Jac. 399; 1 B. & C. 443; to reduce choses in action into possession; 2 Ad. & E. 30; for damages to his wife's separate real estate; Lee v. Turner, 71 Tex. 264, 9 S. W. 149; and, after her death, for anything he became entitled to during coverture; Co. Litt. 351 a, n. 1. And see 4 B. & C. 529.

Infants may sue only by guardian or prochein ami; 13 M. & W. 640; McChord v. Fisher's Heirs, 13 B. Monr. (Ky.) 193. In a suit by an infant against his guardian, the infant and not his next friend must be made the plaintiff; Morgan v. Potter, 157 U. S. 195, 15 Sup. Ct. 590, 39 L. Ed. 670. Infants who, by their next friend, have procured a judgment from a court with jurisdiction, for the sale of their lands, are bound thereby; Tyson v. Belcher, 102 N. C. 112, 9 S. E. 634.

Joint tenants. See JOINDER.

Lunatic, or non compos mentis, may maintain an action, which should be in his own name; Broom, Part. 84; McKillip v. McKillip, 8 Barb. (N. Y.) 552. His wife may appear, if he have no committee; 7 Dowl. 22. An idiot may, by a next friend, who petitions for that purpose; 2 Chitty, Archb. Pr. 909.

Married women cannot, in general, sue alone at common law; Broom, Part. 74; but a married woman may sue alone where her husband is civilly dead; see Cro. Eliz. 519; 2 B. & P. 165; or, in England, where he is an alien out of the country, on her separate contracts; 1 B. & P. 357; 3 Campb. 123; while he is in such condition; Broom, Part. § 114.

So she may sue alone after a sentence of nullity or divorce a vinculo; 9 B. & C. 698; but not after a divorce a mensa et thoro, or voluntary separation merely; 3 B. & C. 297.

She may, where he is legally presumed to be dead; 2 M. & W. 894; or where he has been absent from the country for a very long time; Rose v. Bates, 12 Mo. 30; 23 E. L. & E. 127.

When the wife survives the husband, she may sue on all contracts entered into by others with her before coverture, and she may recover all arrears of rent of her real estate which became due during the coverture, on their joint demise; 8 Taunt. 181; 1 Rolle, Abr. 350 d. She is also entitled to all her real property, and her chattels real and choses in action not reduced into possession by the husband; Broom, Part. 76.

These are rules which are affected by the married woman's acts, to which reference must be made.

Partners. One partner cannot, in general, sue another for goods sold; 9 B. & C. 356; for work done; 7 B. & C. 419; for money had and received in connection with a partnership transaction; 6 B. & C. 194; or for contribution towards a payment made under compulsion of law; 1 M. & W. 504. But one may sue the other for a final balance struck; Broom, Part. 57; 5 M. & W. 21; see JOINDER; and they may sue the administrator of a deceased partner; Shields v. Fuller, 4 Wis. 102, 65 Am. Dec. 293. One making a contract for himself and his partner cannot sue therein in his own name alone; De Wit v. Lander, 72 Wis. 120, 39 N. W. 349. An action on an account due a firm is properly brought in the names of its members, though the firm has been dissolved; Hyde v. Nerve Food Co., 160 Mass. 559, 36 N. E. 585. The fact that after suit brought by partners, one of them sells his interest in the firm to the others, does not necessitate a change of parties; Evans Co. v. Reeves, 6 Tex. Civ. App. 254, 26 S. W. 219.

Partners cannot sue or be sued in their copartnership name, but the individual names of the members must be stated; Lewis v. Cline (Miss.) 5 South. 112. A dormant partner is not a necessary party plaintiff in an action brought by the firm; Keesey v. Old, 3 Tex. Civ. App. 1, 21 S. W. 693.

Survivors. The survivor or survivors of two or more jointly interested in a contract not running with the land must sue as such; Archb. Pl. 54; 1 East 497; Wallace v. Fitzsimmons, 1 Dall. (Pa.) 248, 1 L. Ed. 122; Bernard v. Wilcox, 2 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 374.

The survivor of a partnership must sue alone as such; 9 B. & C. 538; 2 Maule & S. 225. See Campbell v. Pence, 118 Ind. 313, 20 N. E. 840.

The survivor of several parties to a simple contract should describe himself as such; Vandenheuvel v. Storrs, 3 Conn. 203.

Tenants in common may sue each other singly for actual ouster; Woodf. Landl. & T. 789. See JOINDER; Webb's Pollock, Torts 447.

Trustees must sue, and not the cestuis que trustent; Weathers v. Ray, 4 Dana (Ky.) 474. See JOINDER.

DEFENDANTS. All persons having a direct and immediate legal interest in the subject-matter of the suit are to be made parties. The proper defendants to a suit on a specialty are pointed out by the instrument.

In case of simple contracts, the person made liable expressly by its terms; 3 Bingh. N. C. 732; or by implication of law, is to be made defendant; 2 Bla. Com. 443. See Bainbridge v. Downle, 6 Mass. 253; 1 Chitty, Pl. 24. Where there are several persons parties, if the liability be joint, all must be joined as defendants, either on specialties; 1 Wms. Saund. 154; or simple contracts; Chitty, Contr. 99. If it be joint and several, all may be joined; 1 Wms. Saund. 154, n. 4; or each sued separately; 1 Wms. Saund. 191, c.; Com. Dig. Obligations (G); 1 Ad. & E. 207; if it be several, each must be sued separately; 1 East 226. The presumption is, in such case, that a written agreement is joint; 2 Campb. 640; otherwise of verbal contracts; 1 Ad. & E. 691; 3 B. & Ald. 89.

Alien enemies may be sued; Broom, Part. 18; 1 W. Bla. 30; Cro. Eliz. 516; 4 Bingh. 421; Com. Dig. Abatement (E 3); see Masterson v. Howard, 18 Wall. (U. S.) 99, 21 L. Ed. 764; Seymour v. Bailey, 66 Ill. 288; and, of course, alien friends.

Assignees of a mere personal contract cannot, in general, be sued; of covenants running with the realty may be, for breach after assignment; 2 Saund. 304, n. 12; Woodf. Landl. & T. 260; 7 Term 312; Pollard v. Shaffer, 1 Dall. (Pa.) 210, 1 L. Ed. 104, 1 Am. Dec. 239; but not after an assignment by him; Bac. Abr. Covenant (E 4).

Assignees of bankrupts cannot be sued as such at law; Cowp. 134.

Bankrupts after discharge cannot be sued. An insolvent after discharge may be sued on his contracts, but his person is not liable to arrest in a suit on a debt which was due at the date of his discharge; 8 East 311; 1 Saund. 241, n. 5.

See CONFLICT OF LAWS; BANKRUPTCY; INSOLVENCY.

Corporations must be sued by their true names; Moraw, Pr. Corp. § 355; Minot v. Curtis, 7 Mass. 441; Bank of Utica v. Smalley, 2 Cow. (N. Y.) 778, 14 Am. Dec. 526; Illinois State Hospital v. Higgins, 15 Ill. 185. See NAME. Assumpsit lies against a corporation aggregate on an express or implied promise, in the same manner as against an individual; Overseers of Poor v. Overseers of Poor, 3 S. & R. (Pa.) 117; Danforth v. Turnpike Road, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 231; Hayden v. Turnpike Corp., 10 Mass. 397, 6 Am. Dec. 143; Chesapeake & O. C. Co. v. Knapp, 9 Pet. (U. S.) 541, 9 L. Ed. 222; Witte v. Fishing Co., 2 Conn. 260; 5 Q. B. 547.

Executors and administrators of a deceased contractor or the survivor of several joint contractors may be sued; Hamm. Part. 156; but not if any of the original contractors survive; Hench v. Metzger, 6 S. & R. (Pa.) 272.

The liability does not commence till probate of the will; Ward v. Bowen, 2 Sneed (Tenn.) 58. The executor or administrator de bonis non of a deceased person is the proper defendant; Broom, Part. 197.

The liability is limited by the amount of assets, and does not arise on subsequent breach of a covenant which could be performed only by the covenantor; Broom, Part. 118. They, or real representatives, may be parties, at the election of the plaintiff, where both are equally liable; 1 Lev. 189, 303.

The personal representative must be made a party before debts can be decreed against a decedent's estate; Smith v. Turley, 32 W. Va. 14, 9 S. E. 46; Schmidtke v. Miller, 71 Tex. 103, 8 S. W. 638.

Foreign governments cannot be sued to enforce a remedy, but may be made defendants to give an opportunity to appear; Manning v. Nicaragua, 14 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 517. A foreign sovereign cannot be sued for any act done by him in the character of a sovereign prince; 2 H. L. C. 1; 17 Q. B. 171; it would appear most probably that he can in no case be made defendant in an action; Dicey, Part. *5; but see 10 Q. B. 656. See JURISDICTION; SOVEREIGN; STATE.

Heirs may be liable to suit under the ancestor's covenant, if expressly named, to the extent of the assets received; Broom, Part. 118; Platt, Cov. 449.

Husband may be sued alone at common law for breach of joint covenant of himself and wife; Whitbeck v. Cook, 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 483, 8 Am. Dec. 272; Griffin v. Reynolds, 17 How. (U. S.) 609, 15 L. Ed. 229; and must be on a mere personal contract of the wife made during coverture; Com. Dig. Pleader (2 A 2); 2 B. & P. 105; Edwards v. Davis, 16 Johns. (N. Y.) 281; even if made to procure necessities when living apart; Jacobs v. Featherstone, 6 W. & S. (Pa.) 346; may be on a new promise for which the consideration is a debt due by the wife before marriage; 7 Term 348; but such promise must be express; Broom, Part. 174; and have some additional consideration, as forbearance, etc.; 11 Ad. & E. 438, 451; on lease to both made during coverture; Com. Dig. Baron & F. (2 B); on lease to wife dum sola, for rent accruing during coverture, or to wife as executrix; Broom, Part. 178; Com. Dig. Baron & F. (T); not on wife's contracts dum sola after her death; 3 P. Wms. 410; except as administrator; Cro. Jac. 257; 1 Campb. 189, n.

He is liable, after the death of the wife, in cases where he might have been sued alone during her lifetime. See MARRIED WOMEN.

Idiots, lunatics, and non compos mentis, generally, may be sued on contracts for necessities; 2 M. & W. 2.

Infants may be sued on their contracts for necessities; 10 M. & W. 195; Macph. Inf. 447. Ratification in due form; 11 Ad. & E. 934; after arriving at full age, renders them liable to action on contracts made before.

Partner is not liable to action by his co-partners. A sole ostensible partner, the others being dormant, may be sued alone by one contracting with him; Broom, Part. 172.

A partnership cannot be sued as such, but the names of its members must be set out; Dunham v. Shindler, 17 Or. 256, 20 Pac. 326. Garnishment to secure a claim against a partnership cannot be maintained against a partner individually; Jones v. Langhorne, 19 Colo. 206, 34 Pac. 997.

Survivor of two or more joint contractors must be sued alone; 1 Saund. 291, n. 2; 2 Burr. 1196. A sole surviving partner may be sued alone; 1 B. & Ald. 29.

IN ACTIONS EX DELICTO. PLAINTIFFS. The plaintiff must have a legal right in the property affected, whether real; 2 Term 684; Co. Litt. 240 b; 2 Bla. Com. 185; or personal; Robinson v. Gould, 11 Cush. (Mass.) 55; though a mere possession is sufficient for trespass, and trespass quare clausum; Cro. Jac. 122; 1 Ad. & E. 44; and the possession may be constructive in case of trespass for injury to personal property; 6 Q. B. 606; Cary v. Hotailing, 1 Hill (N. Y.) 311, 37 Am. Dec. 323. The property of the plaintiff may be absolute; 5 Bingh. 305; or special.

Agents who have a qualified property in goods may maintain an action of tort in their own names for injury to the goods.

A principal may sue in the name of his agent for a false representation to the agent; Raymond v. Howland, 12 Wend. (N. Y.) 176.

Assignees of property may sue in their own names for tortious injuries committed after the assignment; 3 Maule & S. 7; 1 Ad. & E. 580; although it has never been in their possession; Langdon v. Buell, 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 80; Wms. Saund. 252 a, n. (7). Otherwise of the assignee of a mere right of action; Zabriskie v. Smith, 13 N. Y. 322, 64 Am. Dec. 551. Assignees in insolvency may sue for torts to the property; Wilmarth v. Mountford, 8 S. & R. (Pa.) 124; but not to the person of the assignee; W. Jones 215.

Executors and administrators cannot, in general, sue in actions ex delicto, as such actions are said to die with the plaintiff; Broom, Part. 212; Zabriskie v. Smith, 13 N. Y. 322, 64 Am. Dec. 551. See ACTIO PERSONALIS. They may sue in their own names for torts subsequent to the death of the deceased; Carter v. Estes, 11 Rich. (S. C.) 363.

Heirs and devisors have no claim for torts committed during the lifetime of the ancestor or devisor; 2 Inst. 305.

Husband must, at common law, sue alone for all injuries to his own property and person; 3 Bla. Com. 143; Cro. Jac. 473; including personalty of the wife which becomes his upon marriage; Lowry v. Mountjoy, 6 Call. (Va.) 55; Brown v. Fitz, 13 N. H. 283; Cro. Eliz. 133; 6 Ad. & E. 259; Rawlins v. Rounds, 27 Vt. 17; and including the continuance of injuries to such property commenced before marriage; Lowry v. Mountjoy, 6 Call. (Va.)

55; in replevin for timber cut on land belonging to both; Fairchild v. Chaustelleux, 8 Watts (Pa.) 412; for personal injuries to the wife for the damages which he sustains; 3 Bla. Com. 140; 4 B. & Ald. 523; McKinney v. Stage Co., 4 Ia. 420; as in battery; 8 Mod. 342; Chapman v. Hardy, 2 Brev. (S. C.) 170; Fournet v. S. S. Co., 43 La. Ann. 1202, 11 South. 541; slander, where words are not actionable per se; 4 B. & Ad. 514; Williams v. Holdredge, 22 Barb. (N. Y.) 396; or for special damages; 4 B. & Ad. 514; Harper v. Pinkston, 112 N. C. 293, 17 S. E. 161.

He may sue alone, also, for injuries to personalty commenced before marriage and consummated afterwards; 2 B. & P. 407; and the right survives to him after death of the wife in all cases where he can sue alone; 1 Chitty, Pl. 75; Viner, Abr. Baron & F. (G); for cutting trees on land held by both in right of the wife; Allen v. Kingsbury, 16 Pick. (Mass.) 235; and generally, for injury to real estate of the wife during coverture; Cushing v. Adams, 18 Pick. (Mass.) 110; Tallmadge v. Grannis, 20 Conn. 296; 2 Wils. 414; although her interests be reversionary only; 5 M. & W. 142; he may also sue alone for damages for the negligent failure of a telegraph company to transmit and deliver a message to his wife; Loper v. Tel. Co., 70 Tex. 689, 8 S. W. 600.

Infants may sue by guardian for torts; Broom, Part. 238.

Lessors and reversioners, generally, may have an action for injury to their reversions; Broom, Part. 214. Damage necessarily to the reversion must be alleged and shown; 1 Maule & S. 234; 11 Ad. & E. 40; 10 B. & C. 145.

Lessees and tenants, generally, may sue for injuries to their possession; 4 Burr. 2141; Woodf. Landl. & T. 661.

Married woman must sue alone for injury to her separate property; Ackley v. Tarbox, 29 Barb. (N. Y.) 512; see Mississinewa Min. Co. v. Patton, 129 Ind. 472, 28 N. E. 1113, 28 Am. St. Rep. 203; she may bring an action of detinue to recover her separate personal property and join her husband as co-plaintiff; Robinson v. Woodford, 37 W. Va. 377, 16 S. E. 602.

The restrictions on her power to sue are the same as in actions ex contractu; Broom, Part. 233. Actions in which she might or must have joined her husband survive to her; Rolle, Abr. 349 (A). A married woman though living with her husband may maintain an action for slander in her own name, and without joining him; Pavlovski v. Thornton, 89 Ga. 829, 15 S. E. 822.

The dissolution of marriage by divorce does not enable the wife to sue her husband for a tort committed on her during coverture; Main v. Main, 46 Ill. App. 106. She may maintain in her own name an action for the alienation of her husband's affections;

Haynes v. Nowlin, 129 Ind. 581, 29 N. E. 389, 14 L. R. A. 787, 28 Am. St. Rep. 213; Holmes v. Holmes, 133 Ind. 386, 32 N. E. 932.

Master has an action in tort for enticing away an apprentice; 3 Bla. Com. 342; 3 Maule & S. 191; and, upon the same principle, a parent for a child; Van Horn v. Freeman, 6 N. J. L. 322; 4 B. & C. 660; and for personal injury to his servant, for loss of time, expenses, etc.; 3 Bla. Com. 342.

For seduction or debauchery, a master; Broom, Part. 227; Moran v. Dawes, 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 412; and if any service be shown, a parent; 2 M. & W. 542; has his action.

Survivor, whether sole or several, must sue for a tortious injury, the rule being that the remedy, and not the right, survives; Broom, Part. 212; 2 Maule & S. 225.

Tenants in common must sue strangers separately in distress and avowry for rent; Decker v. Livingston, 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 479.

A tenant in common may sue his cotenant, where there has been actual ouster, in ejectment; Littleton § 322; 1 Campb. 173; or trespass quare clausum; McGill v. Ash, 7 Pa. 397; and trespass for mesne profits after recovery; 3 Wils. Ch. 118. Where there is a total destruction or conversion of the property, one tenant in common may sue his cotenant in trespass; Co. Litt. 200 a, b; Cro. Eliz. 157; 8 B. & C. 257; or in trover; 1 Term 638; Leonard v. Scarborough, 2 Ga. 73; St. John v. Standring, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 468; Guyther v. Pettijohn, 28 N. C. 388, 45 Am. Dec. 499. For a misfeasance, waste, or case in the nature of waste, may be brought.

DEFENDANTS. He who commits the tortious act or asserts the adverse title is to be made defendant: as the wrongful occupant of land, in ejectment; 1 B. & P. 573; the party converting, in trover; Broom, Part. 246; making fraudulent representations; 3 M. & W. 532. The act may, however, have been done by the defendant's agent; 2 M. & W. 650; his mischievous animal; 12 Q. B. 29; or by the plaintiff himself if acting with due care and suffering from the defendant's negligence; 1 Q. B. 29; Johnson v. Barber, 5 Gilman (Ill.) 425, 50 Am. Dec. 416.

Agents and principals; Story, Ag. § 625; Paley, Ag. 294; are both liable for tortious act or negligence of the agent under the direction; 1 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 431, n.; or in the regular course of employment, of the principal; Johnson v. Barber, 5 Gilman (Ill.) 425, 50 Am. Dec. 416. As to the agent of a corporation acting erroneously without malice, see 1 East 555.

Subsequent ratification is equivalent to prior authority; Broom, Part. 259.

Agents are liable to their principals for conversion; Kennedy v. Strong, 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 128; Etter v. Bailey, 8 Pa. 442.

Assignees are liable only for torts committed by them: as, where one takes property from another who has possession unlawfully; Bac. Abr. Actions (B); or continues a nuisance; 1 B. & P. 409.

Bankrupts; 3 B. & Ald. 408; Kellogg v. Schuyler, 2 Den. (N. Y.) 73; and insolvents; 2 B. & Ald. 407; Strong v. White, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 161; are liable even after a discharge, for torts committed previously.

Corporations are liable for torts committed by their agents; Moraw. Pr. Corp. § 725; Chesnut H. & S. H. T. Co. v. Rutter, 4 S. & R. (Pa.) 16, 8 Am. Dec. 675; Goodloe v. Cincinnati, 4 Ohio 500, 22 Am. Dec. 764; Crawfordsville & W. R. Co. v. Wright, 5 Ind. 252; but not, it seems, at common law, in replevin; Kyd. Corp. 205; or trespass quare clausum; Foote v. Cincinnati, 9 Ohio 31, 34 Am. Dec. 420. In an action against a corporation for a tort, the corporation and its servant by whose act the injury was done may be joined as defendants; Hussey v. R. Co., 98 N. C. 34, 3 S. E. 923, 2 Am. St. Rep. 312.

Death of a tort-feasor, at common law, takes away all cause of action for torts disconnected with contract; 5 Term 651; 1 Saund. 291 c. But actions against the personal representatives are provided for by statute in most of the states, and in England by stat. 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 42, § 2.

Executors and administrators, at common law, are liable for the continuance of torts first committed by the deceased; W. Jones 173; Gentry's Adm'r v. McKeben, 5 Dana (Ky.) 34; but such continuance must be laid to be, as it really is, the act of the executor; 1 Cowp. 373; Burton's Adm'r v. Miller, 1 Harring. (Del.) 7.

Husband must be sued alone for his torts, and in detinue for goods delivered to himself and wife; 1 Leon. 312.

He may be sued alone for a conversion by the wife during coverture; 2 Rop. Husb. & W. 127. In an action for a wife's personal tort the husband is properly joined as defendant; Quilty v. Battie, 61 Hun 164, 15 N. Y. Supp. 765; Wirt v. Dinan, 44 Mo. App. 583.

Idiots and lunatics are liable, civilly, for torts committed; Bac. Abr. Trespass (G); Webb, Pollock, Torts 59, n.; though they may be incapable of design; Broom, Part. 281. But if the lunatic is under control of chancery, proceedings must be in that court, or it will constitute a contempt; In re Heller, 3 Paige (N. Y.) 199.

Infants may be sued in actions ex delicto, whether founded on positive wrongs or constructive torts; Broom, Part. 280; Co. Litt. 180 b, n. 4; as, in detinue for goods delivered for a specific purpose; 4 B. & P. 140; for tortiously converting or fraudulently obtaining goods; Homer v. Thwing, 3 Pick. (Mass.) 492; Wallace v. Morss, 5 Hill (N. Y.) 391; for uttering slander; 8 Term 337; but only if the act be wholly tortious and disconnected from contract; Wilt v. Welsh, 6 Watts (Pa.) 9; Vasse v. Smith, 6 Cra. (U. S.) 226, 3 L. Ed. 207.

Lessor and lessee are respectively liable for their part of the tort in case of a wrong commenced by one and continued by the other; as, for example, a nuisance; 2 Salk. 460; Woodf. Landl. & T. 671.

Master is liable for a negligent tortious act or default of his servant while acting within the scope of his employment; Arthur v. Balch, 23 N. H. 157; Electric Power Co. v. Tel. Co., 75 Hun 68, 27 N. Y. Supp. 93; Brunner v. Tel. Co., 160 Pa. 300, 28 Atl. 690; Gregory's Adm'r v. R. Co., 37 W. Va. 606, 16 S. E. 819; for the direct effect of such negligence; [1893] A. C. 16; but not to one servant for the neglect of another engaged in the same general business; 36 Eng. L. & Eq. 486; Sherman v. R. Co., 15 Barb. (N. Y.) 574; Madison & I. R. Co. v. Bacon, 6 Ind. 205; Bugbee v. Sargent, 23 Me. 269; Mulhern v. Coal Co., 161 Pa. 270, 28 Atl. 1087; McGuirk v. Shattuck, 160 Mass. 45, 35 N. E. 110, 39 Am. St. Rep. 454; Jarman v. R. Co., 98 Mich. 135, 57 N. W. 32; Watts v. Hart, 7 Wash. 178, 34 Pac. 423, 771; Northern P. R. Co. v. Hambly, 154 U. S. 349, 14 Sup. Ct. 983, 38 L. Ed. 1009; if the servant injured be not unnecessarily exposed; Noyes v. Smith, 28 Vt. 59, 65 Am. Dec. 222; Halloway v. Henley, 6 Cal. 209.

And the servant is also liable; 1 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 431; for wilful acts; 9 C. & P. 607; Hay v. Cohoes Co., 3 Barb. (N. Y.) 42; for those not committed while in the master's service; Bard v. Yohn, 26 Pa. 482; or not within the scope of his employment, he alone is liable.

Partners may be sued separately for acts of the firm, its agents or servants; 1 C. & M. 93; Patten v. Gurney, 17 Mass. 182, 9 Am. Dec. 141; Bostwick v. Champion, 11 Wend. (N. Y.) 571.

In an action to recover damages for a tort committed by a corporation prior to the appointment of a receiver, the latter is not a proper party; Northern P. R. Co. v. Heflin, 83 Fed. 93, 27 C. C. A. 460.

PARTITION. The division which is made between several persons of lands, tenements, or hereditaments, or of goods and chattels which belong to them as coproprietors. The term is more technically applied to the division of real estate made between co-parceners, tenants in common, or joint tenants.

Voluntary partition is that made by the owners by mutual consent. It is effected by mutual conveyances or releases to each person of the share which he is to hold, executed by the other owners. Cruise, Dig. tit. 32, c. 6, § 14.

Compulsory partition is that which takes place without regard to the wishes of one or more of the owners.

At common law the right of compulsory partition existed only in cases of co-parceners;

Litt. § 264. By statutes of 31 Henry VIII, c. 1, and 32 id. c. 2, the right was extended to joint tenants and tenants in common. These statutes have been generally reenacted or adopted in the United States, and usually with increased facilities for partition; 4 Kent 362; Co. Litt. 175 a; 2 Bla. Com. 185; 16 Vin. Abr. 217. Partition at common law is effected by a judgment of the court and delivering up possession in pursuance of it, which concludes all the parties to it. In England the writ of partition has been abolished by stat. 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 27, § 36.

Courts of equity also exercise jurisdiction in cases of partition where no adequate remedy could be had at law, as where the titles to the estates in question are such as are cognizable only in equity or where it is necessary to award owelty of partition. This jurisdiction was first settled in Elizabeth's time, and has increased largely on account of the peculiar advantages of the chancery proceeding; 1 Spence, Eq. 654. Nor have the increased facilities grafted by statute upon the common-law proceedings ousted the jurisdiction; 1 Story, Eq. § 646.

Partition in equity is effected by first ascertaining the rights of the several parties interested; and then issuing a commission to make the partition required; and finally on return of the commissioners and confirmation thereof, by decreeing mutual conveyances between the parties; Mitt. Eq. Pl. 120; 2 Sc. & L. 371. Where the titles of the parties are legal titles, the decree in the partition has been held to vest the titles in the purparts without conveyances.

A suit in the nature of partition cannot be maintained where there has been an ouster of the complainants by the defendant tenant in common, by acts so overt and notorious as to imply notice to his co-tenants; Rich v. Bray, 37 Fed. 273, 2 L. R. A. 225. An adverse holding by any one of the parties for a period of time, however short, before the institution of proceedings in partition, is effectual to defeat the proceedings; Welch's Appeal, 126 Pa. 297, 17 Atl. 623.

A voluntary partition of land by persons under legal disabilities is binding when fairly and equally made and free from fraud; Mickels v. Ellsesser, 148 Ind. 415, 49 N. E. 373.

Where there is a parol partition, a party acquiescing in it and accepting exclusive possession under it is estopped from asserting title or right to possession in violation of its terms; Berry v. Seawall, 65 Fed. 742, 13 C. C. A. 101.

PARTNERSHIP. A relation founded upon a contract between two or more persons to do business as individuals on joint, undivided account.

A contract of two or more competent persons to place their money, effects, labor, and skill, or some or all of them, in lawful commerce or business, and to divide the profit and bear the loss in certain proportions. 3 Kent 23; Goldsmith v. Elchold, 94 Ala. 116, 10 South. 80, 33 Am. St. Rep. 97; Krall v. Forney, 182 Pa. 11, 37 Atl. 846.

This definition was criticised by Jessel, M. R., in 5 Ch. D. 472, on the ground that there may be partners who do not contribute any property, labor, or skill, as where a share is given to the widow of a former partner. Pollock (Partnership 3) considers it the most businesslike and substantially accurate definition, and one which might be accepted, with some verbal condensation and amendment.

A voluntary contract between two or more persons for joining together their money, goods, labor, and skill, or any or all of them, in some lawful commerce or business, under an understanding, express, or implied from the nature of the enterprise, that there shall be a communion of profit and loss between them, will constitute a partnership. Colly. Part. § 2; Beecham v. Dodd, 3 Harr. (Del.) 485; Howell v. Harvey, 5 Ark. 278, 39 Am. Dec. 376.

A legal entity formed by the association of two or more persons for the purpose of carrying on business together and dividing its profits between them. Parsons, Part., Beale's ed. § 1. See 5 Ch. D. 458.

The relation which subsists between persons who have agreed to share the profits of a business carried on by all or any of them on behalf of all of them. Colly. Part., 5th ed. 4.

Sir F. Pollock says: "The nearest approach to a definition which has been given by judicial authority in England is the statement that 'to constitute a partnership the parties must have agreed to carry on business and to share profits in some way in common;' but he adds that this principle 'excludes several kinds of transactions which, at first sight, have some appearance of partnership.' Poll. Part. 4.

A contract of partnership is one by which two or more persons agree to carry on a business for their own benefit, each contributing property or services and having a community of interest in the profits. It is, in effect, a contract of mutual agency, each partner acting as a principal in his own behalf and as agent for his co-partner. Gray, J., in Karrick v. Hannaman, 168 U. S. 334, 18 Sup. Ct. 135, 42 L. Ed. 484.

An agreement that something shall be attempted with a view to gain, and that the gain shall be shared by the parties to the agreement, is the grand characteristic of every partnership, and is the leading feature in every definition of the term. Ewell's Lind. Part., 2d Am. ed. *2, where many definitions are collected.

The relation which subsists between persons carrying on a business in common with a view of profit. English Partnership Act, 1890.

Nature and Characteristics. It has been said that "the various definitions have been approximate rather than exhaustive;" Meehan v. Valentine, 145 U. S. 611, 12 Sup. Ct. 972, 36 L. Ed. 835.

Partnership, though often called a contract, is in truth the result of a contract; the relation which subsists between persons who have so agreed that the profits of a business inure to them as co-owners. George, Part. 30.

That a partnership is an entity, distinct from the partners, is the mercantile conception of a partnership; Liverpool, B. & R. P. Nav. Co. v. Agar, 14 Fed. 615; Hallowell v. Bank, 154 Mass. 359, 28 N. E. 281, 13 L. R. A. 315; Bank of Buffalo v. Thompson, 121 N. Y. 280, 24 N. E. 473; and such is the law where the civil law is in force; Succession of Pilcher, 39 La. Ann. 362, 1 South. 929; but the distinction is rarely recognized under the common law; Drucker v. Wellhouse, 82 Ga. 129, 8 S. E. 40, 2 L. R. A. 328; Adams v. Church, 42 Or. 270, 70 Pac. 1037, 59 L. R. A. 782, 95 Am. St. Rep. 740; L. R. 14 Ch. D. 122, where James, L. J., said, "it was not the lease of the firm, because there is no such thing as a firm known to the law." See Bracken v. Dillon, 64 Ga. 243, 37 Am. Rep. 70; Henry v. Anderson, 77 Ind. 361; Fitzgerald v. Grimmell, 64 Ia. 261, 20 N. W. 179.

In an action at law, at least, the partners alone are recognized as parties in interest, any change among them destroys the identity of the firm and what is called its property is their property, as are its debts and liabilities, in fact, theirs; a partner may be the debtor or creditor of his copartners, but not in law of his firm; 4 Myl. & C. 171; yet even at law certain doctrines are explained only by recognizing the firm as an entity. The courts of equity show more recognition of the true character of a partnership; but even in equity this has not been made clear until recently. There is now, however, a strong disposition on the part of the courts to recognize the mercantile doctrine. Pars. Part., Beale's ed. 2.

In the construction of statutes the courts frequently act upon the conception that a firm is a separate entity, as by treating as sufficient the filing of a chattel mortgage at the place of business of the firm where one partner resided, the other being a non-resident; Hubbardston L. Co. v. Covert, 35 Mich. 255; or by holding mercantile firms included in the terms "any person or persons, or body corporate," in a statute to regulate commercial paper; West v. Bank, 6 Ohio St. 169.

The notion that the firm is an entity distinct from its members has grown in popularity and has been confirmed by recent speculations as to the nature of corporations; but the fact remains that partnership debts are debts of the members of the firm and that the individual liability of the members is not collateral, but primary; Francis v. McNeal, 228 U. S. 695, 33 Sup. Ct. 701, 57 L. Ed. 1029.

"The firm is the contracting party, not the individuals composing the firm; the credit is given to the firm; the partnership, the ideal person, formed by the union of interest, is the legal debtor. A partnership is considered in law as an artificial person, or being, distinct from the individuals composing it." Hollingshead v. Curtis, 14 N. J. L. 410.

"Everybody knows that partnership is a sort of agency, but a very peculiar one. You cannot grasp the notion of agency, properly speaking, unless you grasp the notion of the existence of the firm as a separate entity from the existence of the partners; a notion which was well grasped by the old Roman lawyers, and which was partly understood in the courts of equity before it was part of the whole law of the land, as it is now. But when you get that idea clearly, you will see at once what sort of agency it is. It is the one person acting on behalf of the firm." 5 Ch. D. 476, per Jessel, M. R.

"When one joins a partnership, he makes himself a part of an entity already existing, which has acquired certain property and business, and in acquiring it has incurred certain indebtedness. The firm owns the property, holds the business, and owes the debts." Cross v. Bank, 17 Kan. 340, per Brewer, J.

A partnership is a distinct entity, having its own property, debts, and credits; for the purpose for which it was created, it is a person, and as such is recognized by the law. Rosenbaum v. Hayden, 22 Neb. 744, 36 N. W. 147.

"The partnership for most legal purposes is a distinct entity." Robertson v. Corsett, 39 Mich. 784, per Cooley, J.

"A partnership, or joint stock company, is just as distinct and palpable an entity in the idea of the law, as distinguished from the individuals composing it, as is a corporation. . . . The obligation and the liability, inter partes, are the same in the one case as the other. The only practical difference is a technical one, having reference to the forum and form of remedy." Walker v. Wait, 50 Vt. 676.

There are statutes in some states providing that a partnership may sue and be sued by its name.

The relation between the partners and the firm is that of agent to principal; and the firm property, the legal title to which is held by the partners, is in trust for the firm. Each partner, in doing an act which is within the scope of his agency, is acting therefor for the firm, and not for himself nor for his co-partners. Pars. Part., Beale's ed. 4.

The relation of partnership is never created by operation of law and results only from contract between the parties; Wilson's Ex'rs v. Cobb's Ex'rs, 28 N. J. Eq. 177; Providence Mach. Co. v. Browning, 72 S. C. 424, 52 S. E. 117; but the agreement need not be in writing; Simmons v. Ingram, 78 Mo. App. 603; Deering & Co. v. Coberly, 44 W. Va. 606, 29 S. E. 512; neither the use of the term partnership nor the adoption of a firm name is essential; Johnson Bros. v. Carter & Co., 120 Ia. 355, 94 N. W. 850.

The law of partnership, in England and the United States, rests on foundations derived from three sources,—the common law, the law merchant, and the Roman law; Colly. Part. § 1.

Partnership in the Roman law (societas) included every associated interest in property which resulted from contract; e. g. where two bought a farm together. Every other associated interest was styled communitas, e. g. where a legacy was left to two; Pothier, Droit Franc. III. 444; Ewell's Lind. Part. *58; Pickerell v. Fisk, 11 La. Ann. 277.

Partnership at the common law is an active notion. The relation implies a business and a turning of capital. It is to be contrasted with ownership, which is, whatever the tenancy, a passive notion; United Ins. Co. v. Scott, 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 106; Quackenbush v. Sawyer, 54 Cal. 439. But there may be at the common law a joint purchase and an individual liability for the whole price without a partnership. In a purchase expressly by two the contract is prima facie joint with a consequent liability of each for the whole price. But this inference may be contradicted by circumstances known to the seller which indicate a division of title; 1 Wms. Saund. 291 c; Iliff v. Brazill, 27 Ia. 131, 99 Am. Dec. 645; Post v. Kimberly, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 475.

Partnership, in the Roman law, was in buying or selling. True partnership, at common law, is only in buying and selling. This peculiarity of the common law is due to the commercial origin of the relation and of the rules by which the relation is governed. The Roman societas was an outgrowth of the ancient tribal constitution. The common-law partnership is an expedient of trade; Porter v. McClure, 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 187; Chisholm v. Cowles, 42 Ala. 179; Woodward v. Cowing, 41 Me. 9, 66 Am. Dec. 211; Camp, 793. Buying to sell again fixes the transaction as a joint one. The transaction is joint because the sale excludes the idea of division of title in the purchase. The property dealt in becomes the instrument of both parties in obtaining a totally distinct subject of distribution, i. e. the profit; Dearborn v. Kent, 14 Wend. (N. Y.) 187; 3 Kent *25. There must be an agreement, not a mere intention, to sell jointly; Baldwin v. Burrows, 47 N. Y. 199.

In a partnership, the members do business in their unqualified capacity as men, without special privilege or exemption; they are treated in law as a number of individuals, occupying no different relation to the rest of the world than if each were acting singly; 7 Ves. 773. On the other hand, a corporation, though in fact but an association of individuals with special privileges and exemptions, is in contemplation of law a fictitious person distinct from the members who compose it; Ewell's Lind. Part. *4. Every unincorporated association for purposes of gain is a partnership; unless it can claim corporate privilege on the ground of a de facto standing; Central City Sav. Bk. v. Walker, 66 N. Y. 425; Kramer v. Arthurs, 7 Pa. 165; Hodgson v. Baldwin, 65 Ill. 532. A club or association not for gain is not a partnership: it is not a commercial relation; Richmond v. Judy, 6 Mo. App. 465; 2 M. & W. 172. In this country there is a far wider extent in the variety of purposes for which partnerships are established than anywhere else; Pars. Part. § 37; including farming, manufacturing, mining, lumbering, the business of lawyers, physicians, etc.; id.

Whether a partnership exists or not in a particular case is not a mere question of fact, but one mixed of law and fact; Thompson v. Bank, 111 U. S. 529, 4 Sup. Ct. 689, 28 L. Ed. 507. It is, nevertheless, generally to be decided by a jury. See Terrill v. Richards, 1 N. & McC. (S. C.) 20; 3 C. B. N. S. 562; Chisholm v. Cowles, 42 Ala. 179; Kingsbury v. Tharp, 61 Mich. 216, 28 N. W. 74. If the facts are admitted or the evidence consists of a written instrument, it is for the court to say whether a partnership exists; Morgan v. Farrel, 58 Conn. 413, 20 Atl. 614, 18 Am. St. Rep. 282; Boston & C. S. Co. v. Smith, 13 R. I. 27, 43 Am. Rep. 3.

Elements of partnership. The elements of partnership are the contribution and a sharing in the profits. These two elements must be combined. Without contribution the alleged partner cannot be said to do business; unless he shares the profits, the business is not carried on for his account. Contribution without a share in the profits is a simple gift to the firm, by which firm creditors are enriched, not damaged. Sharing profits without contribution is a gift by the firm to the beneficiary, with which creditors may of course interfere by seizing the property and closing out the concern. In neither case does the alleged partner enter into business relations with the customers and creditors of the firm; 8 H. L. Cas. 286; 5 Ch. Div. 458; Wills v. Simmonds, 8 Hun (N. Y.) 189; L. R. 7 Exch. 218.

Contribution need not be made to the firm stock; any co-operation in the business will be enough; 4 East 144; Dob v. Halsey, 16 Johns. (N. Y.) 34, 8 Am. Dec. 293; Story, Partn. §§ 27, 40. A contribution must be kept in the concern, and take the risk of the business; a loan, on the other hand, is made upon the personal credit of the partners merely, and may be used by them as they please; it is to be repaid at all events. Because of this difference, sharing profits in lieu of interest upon a loan does not create a partnership. The English statute to this effect has been decided to be merely declaratory; 5 Ch. Div. 458; 7 Ch. Div. 511; Arnold v. Angell, 62 N. Y. 508; Bailey v. Clark, 6 Pick. (Mass.) 372. Mere loaning of money to a partnership for a definite period, the creditor to receive interest in proportion to the profits, does not make the lender liable as a partner; Meehan v. Valentine, 145 U. S. 611, 12 Sup. Ct. 972, 36 L. Ed. 835. It is not necessary, however, that each partner should bring into the concern both labor and property; Parsons, Partn. Beale's ed § 63. The contribution of money or property by an incoming partner is not essential to the creation of a partnership; it is competent for the prior partners, in consideration of the new partner undertaking the entire charge and control of the business of the company, to give him an interest as partner in the property which is to constitute, at the outset, the whole capital of the partnership; Paul v. Cullum, 132 U. S. 539, 10 Sup. Ct. 151, 33 L. Ed. 430.

It was formerly held that sharing profits constituted the parties partners, though no such relationship was intended between them; 2 W. Bla. 998; 2 H. Bla. 235; Hazard v. Hazard, 1 Story 371, Fed. Cas. No. 6,279; Leggett v. Hyde, 58 N. Y. 272, 17 Am. Rep. 244; but not sharing gross profits; 1 Camp. 329. The doctrine of the leading case of Waugh v. Carver, 2 H. Bla. 235, was that participation in the profits made one a partner, as to third persons, though the parties themselves had no intention of being partners inter se.

Again, it is called prima facie evidence of partnership, but a contribution will have the same effect. Each is an element in a relation not complete without both.

It has been held that a partnership subsists between merchants who divide the commissions received by each other on the sale of goods recommended or "influenced" by the one to the other; 4 B. & Ald. 663. So between persons who agree to share the profits of a single adventure; 9 C. B. 431; 1 Rose 297; and between persons one of whom is in the position of a servant to the others, but is paid a share of the profits instead of a salary; 1 Deac. 341; 1 Rose 92; (contra, Ryder v. Jacobs, 182 Pa. 624, 38 Atl. 471); and between persons one of whom is paid an annuity out of the profits made by the others; 17 Ves. 412; 8 Bingh. 469; or an annuity in lieu of any share in those profits; 2 W. Bla. 999. So between the vendor and purchaser of a business, if the former guarantee a clear profit of so much a year, and was to have all profits beyond the amount guaranteed; 3 C. B. 641. The character in which a portion of the profits was received did not affect the result; see 1 Maule & S. 412; 21 Beav. 164. Persons who share profits were quasi-partners, although their community of interest was confined to the profits; 2 B. & C. 401. But it is held that a contract for the sale of goods, which provides that they shall be charged for at reasonable prices, and that the purchaser shall have a credit of one-half the profits, does not establish a partnership between the seller and purchaser; Teller v. Hartman, 16 Colo. 447, 27 Pac. 947.

An agreement to share losses is not essential; that follows as an incident to the relation. Indeed all liability inter se may be provided against by contract and a partnership may nevertheless subsist; 3 M. & W. 357; Pollard v. Stanton, 7 Ala. 761; Consol. Bk. v. State, 5 La. Ann. 44. Partnership is a question of intention, and the intention which makes a partnership is ordinarily to contribute to the business and share the profits. In this way, the parties become co-principals in a business carried on for their account. The question of intention is to be decided by a consideration of the whole agreement into which the parties have entered, and ought not to be made to turn upon a consideration of only a part of its provisions; 15 M. & W. 292; 3 Kent 27.

An agreement to share profits, nothing being said about the losses, amounts prima facie to an agreement to share losses also; so that an agreement to share profits is prima facie an agreement for a partnership; and, accordingly, it is held that, unless an agreement to the contrary is shown, persons engaged in any business or adventure, and sharing the profits derived from it, are partners as regards that business or adventure. It is strong presumptive evidence of partnership; Parker v. Canfield, 37 Conn. 250, 9 Am. Rep. 317. Still, it cannot be said that persons who share profits are necessarily partners in the proper sense of the word; Ewell's Lind. Part. *7, *12; Harvey v. Childs, 28 Ohio St. 319, 22 Am. Rep. 387; Campbell v. Dent, 54 Mo. 325; Holmes v. R. Corp., 5 Gray (Mass.) 59, 60; Loomis v. Marshall, 12 Conn. 69, 30 Am. Dec. 596; 8 H. L. Cas. 268; see Everitt v. Chapman, 6 Conn. 347; Paul v. Cullum, 132 U. S. 539, 10 Sup. Ct. 151, 33 L. Ed. 430; unless the business is carried on by them personally or by their agents; 8 H. L. Cas. 268. Although a presumption of partnership would seem to arise in such a case; Chapin v. Brown, 101 Cal. 500, 35 Pac. 1051; Caldwell v. Miller, 127 Pa. 442, 17 Atl. 983; still, the particular circumstances of the case may be such as to repel this presumption. It may appear that the share of the profits taken was merely a compensation to one party for labor and service, or for furnishing the raw materials, or a mill privilege, or a factory, or the like, from which the other is to earn profits; Holmes v. R. Corp., 5 Gray (Mass.) 60; 3 Kent 33; Perrine v. Hankinson, 11 N. J. L. 181; Lowry v. Brooks, 2 McCord (S. C.) 421; but see Bromley v. Elliot, 38 N. H. 289, 75 Am. Dec. 182. Originally it was immaterial whether the profits were shared as gross or net; but the later cases have established a distinction. A division of gross returns is thought to be identical with a purchase for the purpose of division; the price represents the thing. There is no unity of interest; 3 Kent *25; 4 Maule & S. 240; Pattison v. Blanchard, 5 N. Y. 186. But the distinction is not absolutely decisive on the question of partnership. See 1 Camp. 330; Ambler v. Bradley, 6 Vt. 119; Loomis v. Marshall, 12 Conn. 69, 30 Am. Dec. 596; Bromley v. Elliot, 38 N. H. 287, 304, 75 Am. Dec. 182; 4 B. & Ald. 663. The officers and crews of whaling and other fishing vessels, who are to receive certain proportions of the produce of the voyage in lieu of wages; Rice v. Austin, 17 Mass. 206; 2 Y. & C. 61; captains of merchant-ships who, instead of wages, receive shares in the profits of the adventure; 4 Maule & S. 240; or who take vessels under an agreement to pay certain charges and receive a share of the earnings; Taggard v. Loring, 16 Mass. 336, 8 Am. Dec. 140; Winsor v. Cutts, 7 Greenl. (Me.) 261; persons making shipments on half-profits; Turner v. Bissell, 14 Pick. (Mass.) 195; have generally been held not to be partners with the owners, and the like. Running a steamboat on shares does not make the owners partners in respect of the vessel; The Daniel Kaine, 35 Fed. 785; so of an agreement between two parties to farm on shares; Holloway v. Brinkley, 42 Ga. 226; Donnell v. Harshe, 67 Mo. 170; Rose v. Buscher, 80 Md. 225, 30 Atl. 637; and a purchase of land on joint account for the purpose of sale and profit; Clark v. Sidway, 142 U. S. 682, 12 Sup. Ct. 327, 35 L. Ed. 1157; and a hotel lease where the rental depends in part on the profit of the hotel; Dake v. Butler, 7 Misc. 302, 28 N. Y. Supp. 134; or running a saw mill where one erects it and another furnishes logs and they divide profits; Robinson v. Bullock, 58 Ala. 618. A seaman who is to receive pay in proportion to the amount of fish caught, is not a partner; Holden v. French, 68 Me. 241. Sharing profits in lieu of wages is not a partnership. There is no true contribution; Crawford v. Austin, 34 Md. 49; Whitehill v. Schickle, 43 Mo. 538; Sankey v. Iron Works, 44 Ga. 228. Where a person enters into a contract with another by which the latter is to receive a certain salary and a percentage of the profits, while the former is to own the entire capital, no partnership exists; Bremen Sav. Bk. v. Saw Co., 104 Mo. 425, 16 S. W. 209; L. R. 4 P. C. App. 419; Loomis v. Marshall. 12 Conn. 69, 30 Am. Dec. 596; In re Haines & Co.'s Estate, 176 Pa. 361, 35 Atl. 237; nor where one receives a share of the profits by way of compensation; Richardson v. Hughtitt, 76 N. Y. 55, 32 Am. Rep. 267; Mason v. Hackett, 4 Nev. 420. The device of allowing a percentage of profits is based upon a shadowy distinction and seems to have no basis of common sense, but the rule rests upon authority. A factor, simple or del credere, may receive a portion of the profits in lieu of commissions, without becoming a partner; Edwards v. Tracy, 62 Pa. 374; 24 L. J. Ch. 58. A mere participation in profits and losses of a business does not necessarily constitute a partnership; Clifton v. Howard, 89 Mo. 192, 1 S. W. 26, 58 Am. Rep. 97.

Where a business is assigned to trustees who are to manage it and pay creditors out of the profits, the creditors are not partners; the distribution of so-called profit is really the payment of a debt; 8 H. L. C. 268; but creditors who set up their insolvent debtor in business and share the profits with him, forbearing meanwhile to press their claims, have been held to be partners; Wills v. Simmonds, 8 Hun (N. Y.) 189.

The case of Cox v. Hickman, 8 H. L. C. 268, which held that persons who share profits do not thereby incur the liability of partners, is said to have put an end to two doctrines formerly held to be fundamental; that persons may be held to the liability of partners who are not partners in fact, merely because some other relation exists between them; and that profit-sharing is conclusive of the existence of a partnership; Pars. Part. § 43. The true question of partnership is said in L. R. 1 C. P. 86, to be as stated by Lord Cranworth in 8 H. L. C. 268: "Whether the trade is carried on, on behalf of the person sought to be charged as a partner, the participation in the profits being a most important element in determining that question, but not being in itself decisive; the test being whether it is such a participation of profits as to constitute the relation of principal and agent between the person taking the profits and those actually carrying on the business."

The doctrine of Cox v. Hickman has been generally followed in this country; Meehan v. Valentine, 145 U. S. 611, 12 Sup. Ct. 972, 36 L. Ed. 835; George, Partn. 43, where cases in nearly all the states are collected; as they are also in Gilmore, Partn. 10-24; but in Pennsylvania the rule in Waugh v. Carver, 2 H. Bla. 235, supra, has been held to be firmly established, though overruled in England; Edwards v. Tracy, 62 Pa. 374. In New York, Cox v. Hickman was considered, but not followed, in Leggett v. Hyde, 58 N. Y. 272, 17 Am. Rep. 244; and in Hackett v. Stanley, 115 N. Y. 625, 22 N. E. 745; the rule in Waugh v. Carver was held to be still in force in that state. The rule was fully discussed in Eastman v. Clark, 53 N. H. 276, 16 Am. Rep. 192, and Beecher v. Bush, 45 Mich. 188, 7 N. W. 785, 40 Am. Rep. 465.

The courts which have adhered to Waugh v. Carver, have done so upon the ground that they were concluded by their own earlier decisions, and that to change the law, as settled, would require legislation.

The result of the English doctrine is said to be that there can be no partnership between parties unless by contract among themselves, but parties may be charged as partners by way of estoppel. It is the present law of England that no person who does not hold himself out as a partner is liable to third persons for the acts of persons whose profits he shares, unless he and they are really partners inter se; 1 Lind. Part. *42; L. R. 1 C. P. 86.

Mutual agency as a final test of partnership has been approved in some cases; Eastman v. Clark, 53 N. H. 276, 16 Am. Rep. 192; 64 L. J. Q. B. 170; and rejected in others; 5 Ch. Div. 458; Meehan v. Valentine, 145 U. S. 611, 12 Sup. Ct. 972, 36 L. Ed. 835.

The ultimate test is said to be the co-ownership of the profits, which the owner receives as owner and not by way of compensation for something, such as services, etc.; George, Partn. 50. To constitute partnership each person must have an interest in the profits as a principal in the joint business; Campbell v. Dent, 54 Mo. 325.

In order to render a man liable as partner he must have a specific interest in the profits as a principal trader; Bucknam v. Barnum, 15 Conn. 73; Bradley v. White, 10 Metc. (Mass.) 303, 43 Am. Dec. 435; Harvey v. Childs, 28 Ohio St. 319, 22 Am. Rep. 387. But in reference to these positions the questions arise: When may a party be said to have a specific interest in the profits, as profits? when, as a principal trader?—questions in themselves very nice, and difficult to determine. See Denny v. Cabot, 6 Metc. (Mass.) 82; Loomis v. Marshall, 12 Conn. 77, 30 Am. Dec. 596.

Sometimes the partnership relation has been made dependent on the power to control the business. In strictness the only control necessary is the power to control the application of the contribution. A partner may have no power, as between him and his partners, to manage the business; Ogden v. Astor, 4 Sandf. (N. Y.) 311.

Again, partnership has been said to require that a partner have an initiative in the conduct of the business; but the proposition seems to lose sight of dormant partners; L. R. 4 P. C. 419.

Again, partnership has been made to depend on what is termed the legal title to the business: A was held not a partner, though he shared in the profits of a business created solely by his contribution but assigned to B for A's protection; L. R. 1 C. P. 86. There are other cases in which considerable stress is laid on the right to an account of profits, as furnishing a rule of liability; 3 Kent 25; Champion v. Bostwick, 18 Wend. (N. Y.) 184, 31 Am. Dec. 376; 3 C. B. N. S. 544, 561. But, although it is true that every partner must have a right to an account, it seems not to be equally true that every party who has a right to an account is a partner; Holmes v. R. Corp., 5 Gray (Mass.) 58.

Partnership has sometimes been styled a branch of the law and relation of principal and agent. But mutual agency is not the basis, it is the incident of partnership. Partners are co-principals, and the right and power of representation springs from this circumstance. A dormant partner is not at all the agent of the firm; L. R. 7 Ex. 227. The principal distinction between a partnership and a mere agency is that a partner has a community of interest with the other partners in the business and responsibilities of the partnership,—sometimes both in the stock and profits, and sometimes only in the profits,—whereas an agent, as such, has no interest in either; 4 B. & C. 67. The authority of a partner is very much more extensive than that of a mere agent; Greeley v. Wyeth, 10 N. H. 16. The reference to agency as a test of partnership is unfortunate and inconclusive, inasmuch as agency results from partnership, rather than partnership from agency; Meehan v. Valentine, 145 U. S. 611, 12 Sup. Ct. 972, 36 L. Ed. 835.

The formation of a contract of partnership does not require any particular formality. It is, in general, sufficient that it is formed by the voluntary consent of the parties, whether that be express or implied, whether it be by written articles, tacit approbation, or by parol contract, or even by mere acts; 3 Kent 27; Bunnel v. Taintor's Adm'r, 4 Conn. 568. As a general rule a writing is unnecessary; Smith v. Tarlton, 2 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 336; Ewell's Lind. Part. *80. Under the statute of frauds, where there is an agreement that a partnership shall commence at some time more than a year from the making of the agreement, a writing is necessary; 5 B. & C. 108. As to partnership in lands, see infra.

Where there is no written agreement, the evidence generally relied upon to prove a partnership is the conduct of the parties, the mode in which they have dealt with each other, and the mode in which each has, with the knowledge of the others, dealt with other persons. This can be shown by the books of account, by the testimony of clerks, agents, and other persons, by letters and admissions, and, in short, by any of the modes by which facts can be established. As to the presumption arising from the joint retainer of solicitors, see 20 Beav. 98; 7 Hare 159. For cases in which partnership has been inferred from various circumstances, see 4 Russ. 247; 2 Camp. 45. Though formed by deed, partnership may be dissolved by parol; Ewell's Lind. Part. *572.

A contract for the creation of a partnership is enforceable at law; Rush Centre Creamery Co. v. Hillis, 3 Pa. Super. Ct. 527. The practical construction of partnership articles given for several years by the partners to its language will usually be accepted by the courts as conclusive; Winchester v. Glazier, 152 Mass. 316, 25 N. E. 728, 9 L. R. A. 424.

There is a distinction between the creation of a partnership and the making of an executory contract for one. The partnership itself may, if so provided in the contract, take effect after a certain time has elapsed, or a certain contingency has happened, and until that time no partnership will exist; Savannah R. & E. Co. v. Sabel & Son, 145 Ala. 681, 40 South. 88; In re Hoagland's Estate, 164 N. Y. 573, 58 N. E. 1088; the arrangement meanwhile is contingent and if one of the parties refused performance there is no remedy except a suit in equity for specific performance or an action for damages, if any; Meagher v. Reed, 14 Colo. 335, 24 Pac. 681, 9 L. R. A. 455; and even an agreement to be partners after a fixed time does not necessarily make the parties partners upon the arrival of that time, since either one may repudiate the agreement; it is necessary that the partnership be "launched"; Dow v. Bank, 88 Minn. 355, 93 N. W. 121; Latta v. Kilbourn, 150 U. S. 524, 14 Sup. Ct. 201, 37 L. Ed. 1169.

Whether a partnership exists is, after the facts are established, a question of law; Morgan v. Farrel, 58 Conn. 413, 20 Atl. 614, 18 Am. St. Rep. 282; Rider v. Hammell, 63 Kan. 733, 66 Pac. 1026; Kingsbury v. Tharp, 61 Mich. 216, 28 N. W. 75. The burden of proving it is on him who relies on its existence; Hallstead v. Coleman, 143 Pa. 353, 22 Atl. 977, 13 L. R. A. 370; Martin Browne Co. v. Morris, 1 Ind. T. 495, 42 S. W. 423; Sheldon v. Bigelow, 118 Ia. 586, 92 N. W. 701.

THE PARTNERS. The members of a partnership are called partners. They are of various kinds.

General partners are those whose liability for partnership debts is unlimited.

Ostensible partners are those whose names appear to the world as partners, and who in reality are such.

Nominal partners are those who are held out as partners but who have no interest in the firm or business. They may be liable as partners by reason of their own acts, without being actually partners.

Secret partners are partners whose connection with the firm is not publicly made known.

Silent partners are those who, though having a share in the firm profits, have no voice in the firm business.

Dormant partners are those whose names and transactions as partners are professedly concealed from the world. They combine the characters of both secret and silent partners.

A dormant partner is one whose name is not mentioned in the title of the firm, or embraced in some general term, as company, son, etc.; 4 Phill. 1. It is not necessary that his membership be universally unknown; it is enough if he is not an ostensible partner; Metcalf v. Officer, 2 Fed. 640.

Special partners are those whose liabilities are limited by statute to the amount of their respective contributions. Ordinarily a special partner is associated with at least one general partner by whom the business is managed, but in the "partnerships limited" organized under recent statutes, all the parties have a limited liability.

WHO MAY BE. General rule. Persons who have the legal capacity to make other contracts may enter into that of partnership; *Lind. Part. 77; 1 Col. Part. § 11; Pars. Part. § 14; Gilmore, Partn. 77.

Aliens. An alien friend may be a partner; *Lind. Part. 78; Co. Litt. 129 b; Griswold v. Waddington, 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 57. An alien enemy cannot enter into any commercial contract; 1 Kent *66; Scholefield v. Eichelberger, 7 Pet. (U. S.) 586, 8 L. Ed. 793; McAdams' Ex'rs v. Hawes, 9 Bush (Ky.) 15; 11 Exch. 135; and the breaking out of a war between two countries in which partners reside dissolves the partnership; Matthews v. McStea, 91 U. S. 7, 23 L. Ed. 188; Kershaw v. Kelsey, 100 Mass. 561, 97 Am. Dec. 124, 1 Am. Rep. 142. See WAR.

Corporations. There is no general principle of law which prevents a corporation from being a partner with another corporation, or with ordinary individuals, except the principle that a corporation cannot lawfully employ its funds for purposes not authorized by its charter; *Lind. Part., 2d Am. ed. 78; Butler v. Toy Co., 46 Conn. 136; Grant, Corp. 5; Holmes v. R. Corp., 5 Gray (Mass.) 58.

In the absence of authority in its charter, however, a corporation is probably not competent to enter into a partnership; White Star Line v. Star Line of Steamers, 141 Mich. 604, 105 N. W. 135, 113 Am. St. Rep. 551; People v. Sugar Ref. Co., 121 N. Y. 582, 24 N. E. 834, 9 L. R. A. 33, 18 Am. St. Rep. 843; Morris Run Coal Co. v. Coal Co., 68 Pa. 173, 8 Am. Rep. 159; Mallory v. Oil Works, 86 Tenn. 598, 8 S. W. 396; and it has been specifically decided that a national bank cannot be a partner; Merchants' N. Bk. v. Wehrmann, 69 Ohio St. 160, 68 N. E. 1004; nor a department store corporation; Franz v. Dry Goods Co., 132 Mo. App. 8, 111 S. W. 636; Breinig v. Sparrow, 39 Ind. App. 455, 80 N. E. 37; nor can two corporations form a partnership; New York & S. C. Co. v. Bank, 7 Wend. (N. Y.) 412; nor does the purchase of an interest in a firm by a corporation make it a partner; Aurora State Bk. v. Oliver, 62 Mo. App. 390; but a corporation may be expressly authorized by its charter to enter into a partnership, as was the case in Butler v. Toy Co., 46 Conn. 136.

A corporation which shares profits may be held to make good losses; Catskill Bank v. Gray, 14 Barb. (N. Y.) 479. While a contract of partnership between a corporation and an individual is ultra vires as to this corporation, yet if the corporation has received the benefit of the contract, it must account to the other party for what is due him under the contract; Boyd v. Carbon Black Co., 182 Pa. 206, 37 Atl. 937.

Clergymen were disqualified to enter into a partnership in England by 57 Geo. III.

Firms. Two firms may be partners in one joint firm; Smith v. Wright, 1 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 243; In re Hamilton, 1 Fed. 800; Willson v. Morse, 117 Ia. 581, 91 N. W. 823. Where a partnership and an individual form a second partnership, all the members of the first partnership are members of the new firm; Meyer v. Krohn, 114 Ill. 574, 2 N. E. 495.

Felons. Felons probably are not disqualified, in the absence of any statutory restriction, to enter into a contract of partnership in this country; George, Partn. 11; Avery v. Everett, 110 N. Y. 317, 18 N. E. 148, 1 L. R. A. 264, 6 Am. St. Rep. 368.

Infants. An infant may contract the relation of partner, as he may make any trading contract which is likely to prove for his advantage; Penn. v. Whitehead, 17 Gratt. (Va.) 503, 94 Am. Dec. 478; 5 B. & Ald. 147. Such a contract made by a person during infancy is voidable and may be affirmed or disaffirmed by him at majority; Story, Part. § 7; Osburn v. Farr, 42 Mich. 134, 3 N. W. 299; but whether he may disaffirm before majority is doubtful; Dunton v. Brown, 31 Mich. 182; *Lind. Part., 2d Am. ed. 74, n.; though it is said that he may; Pars. (Jas.) Partn. § 136; Childs v. Dobbins, 55 Ia. 205, 7 N. W. 496; Adams v. Beall, 67 Md. 53, 8 Atl. 664, 1 Am. St. Rep. 379; Folds v. Alldart, 35 Minn. 488, 29 N. W. 201.

He may reclaim his contribution before majority; Sparman v. Keim, 83 N. Y. 245. Unless he gives notice of disaffirmance, or in some manner repudiates the contract within a reasonable time after becoming of age, he will be presumed to have ratified it; Story, Part. § 7; Richardson v. Boright, 9 Vt. 368; but it is held that there must be positive acts of ratification after majority; neglect to disaffirm is not ratification; Dana v. Stearns, 3 Cush. (Mass.) 372; see 8 Exch. 181; Jones v. Bank, 8 N. Y. 228; and his liability then relates back to firm contracts made during his minority; Salinas v. Bennett, 33 S. C. 285, 11 S. E. 968; Minock v. Shortridge, 21 Mich. 304. The person with whom the minor contracts will be bound; 2 M. & S. 205; Voorhees v. Wait, 15 N. J. L. 343. In England and in Maine ratification, after majority, must be in writing.

Lunatics. A lunatic is probably not absolutely incapable of being a partner; Lind. Part. *84; since the insanity of a partner does not per se dissolve the firm, but simply amounts to a sufficient cause for a court of equity to decree a dissolution; 1 Cox, Ch. 107; 2 Myl. & K. 125; Griswold v. Waddington, 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 57; contra, Isler v. Baker, 6 Humphr. (Tenn.) 85. Subject to these qualifications a lunatic may enter into a partnership; Behrens v. McKenzie, 23 Ia. 333, 92 Am. Dec. 428; Fay v. Burditt, 81 Ind. 433, 42 Am. Rep. 142.

Whether a contract by a lunatic to become a partner can in all cases be avoided by him, is, perhaps, unsettled; Story, Part. § 7, n. 1. But until such dissolution, the lunatic is entitled to a share of the profits made by the other partners, and is liable for their misconduct; Raymond v. Vaughn, 128 Ill. 256, 21 N. E. 566, 4 L. R. A. 440, 15 Am. St. Rep. 112; Reynolds v. Austin, 4 Del. Ch. 24.

Married women, at common law, are incapable of becoming partners, since they are generally unable to contract or engage in trade; Mayer v. Soyster, 30 Md. 402; 3 De G., M. & G. 18; and cannot be made partners by contract; Foxworth v. Magee, 44 Miss. 430; Ringold v. Suiter, 35 W. Va. 186, 13 S. E. 46; contra, Graff v. Kinney, 15 Abb. N. C. (N. Y.) 397; or by estoppel; Montgomery v. Sprankle, 31 Ind. 113. But where a married woman is authorized by custom, statute, or otherwise to trade as a feme sole, she may probably be a partner; Newman v. Morris, 52 Miss. 402; Norwood v. Francis, 25 App. D. C. 463, 4 Ann. Cas. 865; Dupuy v. Sheak, 57 Ia. 361, 10 N. W. 731; contra, Haas v. Shaw, 91 Ind. 384, 46 Am. Rep. 607; Story, Part. § 10; Pars. Part. § 19. The mere consent of her husband to her trading as a feme sole does not necessarily permit her to become a partner; Story, Part. § 12. In some states she may be a partner as to her separate estate; Silveus' Ex'rs v. Porter, 74 Pa. 448; Vail v. Winterstein, 94 Mich. 230, 53 N. W. 932, 18 L. R. A. 515, 34 Am. St. Rep. 334; contra, Carey & Co. v. Burruss, 20 W. Va. 571, 43 Am. Rep. 790. When she becomes a member of a firm she has the same rights and liabilities as the other members; Loeb v. Mellinger, 12 Pa. Super. Ct. 592. A married woman, by acting as partner and continuing the business after her husband's death, creates a partnership from the beginning; Everit v. Watts, 10 Paige (N. Y.) 82.

Except as above stated, a married woman cannot become a partner without statutory authority; Gwynn v. Gwynn, 27 S. C. 525, 4 S. E. 229; Carey & Co. v. Burruss, 20

W. Va. 571, 43 Am. Rep. 790; in any case, however, the capital she puts in is liable for the firm debts; Weil v. Simmons, 66 Mo. 617. It has been held that where the wife cannot be a partner, the husband will be considered as such; Miller v. Marx, 65 Tex. 131.

Under modern married women statutes, a wife is not, according to most of the cases, permitted to enter into partnership with her husband; Bowker v. Bradford, 140 Mass. 521, 5 N. E. 480; Board of Trade v. Hayden, 4 Wash. 263, 30 Pac. 87, 32 Pac. 224, 16 L. R. A. 530, 31 Am. St. Rep. 919; Artman v. Ferguson, 73 Mich. 146, 40 N. W. 907, 2 L. R. A. 343, 16 Am. St. Rep. 572; Gilkerson-Sloss Commission Co. v. Salinger, 56 Ark. 294, 19 S. W. 747, 16 L. R. A. 526, 35 Am. St. Rep. 105 (and note on partnership between husband and wife); contra, Suau v. Caffé, 122 N. Y. 308, 25 N. E. 488, 9 L. R. A. 593. See In re Kinkead, 3 Biss. 405, Fed. Cas. No. 7,824.

Number of persons. Generally speaking, the common law imposes no restriction as to the number of persons who may carry on trade as partners; Gilmore, Partn. 89; Manning v. Gasharie, 27 Ind. 399. But a partnership cannot consist of but one person; Stirling v. Heintzman, 42 Mich. 449, 4 N. W. 165. By the English Companies Act, 1862, no more than ten persons may be partners in banking, and not more than twenty in any other business for profit.

THE FIRM AND FIRM NAME. It may be that the names of all the members of the partnership appear in the name or style of the firm, or that the names of only a part appear, with the addition of "and company," or other words indicating a participation of others, as partners, in the business; Goddard v. Pratt, 16 Pick. (Mass.) 428; or that the name of only one of the partners, without such addition, is the name of the firm. It sometimes happens that the name of neither of the partners appears in the style of the firm; 9 M. & W. 284. In some states no partner is permitted to transact business in the name of a person not interested in the firm.

The proper style of the firm is frequently agreed upon in the partnership articles; and where this is the case, it becomes the duty of every partner, in signing papers for the firm, to employ the exact name agreed upon; Story, Partn. § 202. This may be necessary, not only to bind the firm itself; Story, Partn. § 102; but also to prevent the partner signing from incurring a personal liability both to third persons and to his co-partners; 11 Ad. & E. 339; Pothier, Partn. nn. 100, 101. Where persons associate themselves together and carry on business under a common name, and the association is not a corporation, they may be regarded as partners, whatever name they may have adopted.; Carico v. Moore, 4 Ind. App. 20, 29 N. E. 328.

So, the name which a partnership assumes, recognizes, and publicly uses becomes the legitimate name of the firm, not less so than if it had been adopted by the articles of co-partnership; Le Roy v. Johnson, 2 Pet. (U. S.) 198, 7 L. Ed. 391; Folk v. Wilson, 21 Md. 538, 83 Am. Dec. 599; and a partner has no implied authority to bind the firm by any other than the firm name thus acquired; 9 M. & W. 284; Munroe v. Williams, 35 S. C. 572, 15 S. E. 279; McLinden v. Wentworth, 51 Wis. 170, 8 N. W. 118, 192. Wherefore, where a firm consisted of J B & C H, the partnership name being J B only, and O H accepted a bill in the name of "J B & Co.," it was held that J B was not bound thereby; 9 M. & W. 284. See In re Warren, 2 Ware (Dav. 325) 322. Fed. Cas. No. 17,191. If no firm name is designated, each partner has implied power to use an appropriate one; Meriden N. Bk. v. Gallaudet, 120 N. Y. 298, 24 N. E. 994; and the name so chosen becomes the firm name and the only one by which the partnership may be bound; 9 Mees. & W. 284.

If the firm have no fixed name, a signing by one, in the name of himself and company, will bind the partnership; Austin v. Williams, 2 Ohio 61; Holland v. Long, 57 Ga. 36; and a note in the name of one, and signed by him "For the firm, etc.," will bind the company; Caldwell v. Sithens, 5 Blackf. (Ind.) 99. Where the business of a firm is to be carried on in the name of B & D, a signature of a note by the names and surnames of the respective parties is a sufficient signature to charge the partnership; 3 C. B. 792. Where a written contract is made in the name of one, and another is a secret partner with him, both may be sued upon it; Graeff v. Hitchman, 5 Watts (Pa.) 454.

Where partners agree that their business shall be conducted in the name of one person, whether himself interested in the partnership business or not, that is the partnership name, and the partners are bound by it; Rogers v. Coit, 6 Hill (N. Y.) 322; Little Grocer Co. v. Johnson, 50 Ark. 62, 6 S. W. 231. By agreement among themselves, the individual names of partners, or of any one of them, may be used to bind the firm and create obligations good against the partnership; Severson v. Porter, 73 Wis. 70, 40 N. W. 577. Where the name used is the name of one of the partners, and he does business also on his own private account, a contract signed by that name will not bind the firm, unless it appears to have been entered into for the firm; but, if there be no proof that the contract was made for the firm, the presumption will be that it was made by the partner on his own separate account, and the firm will not be responsible; Pars. (Jas.) Partn. 76; Mifflin v. Smith, 17 S. & R. (Pa.)

165; Winship v. Bank, 5 Pet. (U. S.) 529, 8 L. Ed. 216.

The name of the firm should be distinct from the names of all other firms. When there is confusion in this respect, the partners composing one firm may, in some cases, be made responsible for the debts of another. See 7 East 210; Phillips v. Paxton, 3 Mart. N. S. (La.) 39. As to the right of a surviving partner to carry on the business in the name of the firm, see 7 Sim. 127; Story, Partn. § 100, n.

A firm can neither sue nor be sued, otherwise than in the name of the partners composing it; Pars. (Jas.) Partn. 76. Consequently, no action can be brought by the firm against one of its partners, nor by one of its partners against it; for in any such action one person at least would appear both as plaintiff and defendant, and it is considered absurd for any person to sue himself, even in form; 4 Mylne & C. 171; Ryder v. Wilcox, 103 Mass. 24. For the same reason, one firm cannot bring an action against another if there be one or more persons partners in both firms; 2 B. & P. 120; unless by statute; as in Pennsylvania, by the act of April 14, 1838.

One partner cannot sue another for his share while their partnership accounts are unsettled; Bouzer v. Stoughton, 119 Ill. 47, 9 N. E. 208; Robinson v. Green's Adm'r, 5 Harring. (Del.) 115; Ozeas v. Johnson, 1 Binney (Pa.) 191; Learned v. Ayres, 41 Mich. 677, 3 N. W. 178; and where a trustee, under a deed of trust executed by one partner on firm property, as security for an individual debt, has recovered the property in replevin against the partner executing the deed, who was in possession, the other partner cannot sue at law to recover it from the trustee as its co-owner, but must resort to equity; Hoff v. Rogers, 67 Miss. 208, 7 South. 358, 19 Am. St. Rep. 301. So a partner cannot sue for partition of firm real estate against his co-partner in advance of an adjustment of the firm accounts; Kruschke v. Stefan, 83 Wis. 373, 53 N. W. 679; Meinhart v. Draper, 133 Mo. App. 50, 112 S. W. 709; MacFarlane v. MacFarlane, 82 Hun 238, 31 N. Y. Supp. 272; contra, Molineaux v. Raynolds, 54 N. J. Eq. 559, 35 Atl. 536. The reason of the inability of one partner to sue another upon a claim or liability is that, until the affairs of the concern are wound up, what one partner might owe the firm is not a debt of the other members to him; Ives v. Miller, 19 Barb. (N. Y.) 196; Christopherson v. Olson, 104 Minn. 330, 116 N. W. 840; Burns v. Nottingham, 60 Ill. 531; Newby v. Harrell, 99 N. C. 149, 5 S. E. 284, 6 Am. St. Rep. 503.

An appeal or writ of error taken in the name of a firm and not giving the names of the individuals comprising it will be dismissed, and the defect cannot be amended;

The Protector, 11 Wall. (U. S.) 86, 20 L. Ed. 47; Porter v. Foley, 21 How. (U. S.) 393, 16 L. Ed. 154; Hodge v. Williams, 22 How. (U. S.) 87, 16 L. Ed. 237.

Whenever a firm is spoken of by its name or style, the courts admit evidence to show what persons did in fact constitute the firm at the time in question; 4 Maule & S. 13; 2 Keen 255. If persons trade or carry on business under a name, style, or firm, whatever may be done by them under that name is binding as much as if real names had been used: 1 Chitty, Bailm. 707; 2 C. & P. 296; 2 Campb. 548.

Any change in the persons composing a firm is productive of a new signification of the name. If, therefore, a legacy is left to a firm, it is a legacy to those who compose it at the time the legacy vests; see 2 Keen 255; 7 De G. M. & G. 673; and if a legacy is left to the representatives of an old firm, it will be payable to the executors of the survivors of the partners constituting the firm alluded to, and not to its successors in business; 11 Ir. Eq. 451; 1 Lindl. Partn. 216. Where a creditor takes a note made by one partner in the firm name after its dissolution, whereby the time of payment of a firm debt is extended, the other party is discharged from liability; Silas v. Adams, 92 Ga. 350, 17 S. E. 280.

If a retiring partner leaves a firm and the remaining partners agree to pay the debts and indemnify the outgoing partner, the creditors who know these facts and raise no objections are bound to treat the outgoing partner merely as surety for the debts; [1894] A. C. 586.

Again, an authority given to a firm of two partners cannot, it would seem, be exercised by them and a third person afterwards taken into partnership with them; 6 Bing. N. C. 201. See 7 Hare 351; 4 Ves. 649.

The addition of a member to a firm creates a new firm and operates as a dissolution of the old one, even though the business be continued under the old firm name, and so does the retirement of a member; Allen v. Logan, 96 Mo. 591, 10 S. W. 149.

A name may be a trade-mark; and, if it is, the use of it by others will be illegal, if they pass off themselves or their own goods for the firm or the goods of the firm whose name is made use of; 2 Keen 213; 4 K. & J. 747. Moreover, if this is done intentionally, the illegality will not be affected by the circumstance that the imitators of the trade-mark are themselves of the same name as those whose mark they imitate; 13 Beav. 209; 3 De G. M. & G. 896.

The protection of a name is not confined to individuals, but the right belongs as well to a partnership; Meriden Britannia Co. v. Parker, 39 Conn. 450, 12 Am. Rep. 401; Mattingly v. Mattingly, 96 Ky. 430, 27 S. W. 985, 17 Ky. Law Rep. 1; id., 31 S. W. 279, 17 Ky.

Law Rep. 1; Fish Bros. Wagon Co. v. Wagon Works, 82 Wis. 546, 52 N. W. 595, 16 L. R. A. 453, 33 Am. St. Rep. 72.

Where one partner acts for the firm in demanding illegal charges and detains goods until they are paid, every member of the firm is liable for damages; Lockwood v. Bartlett, 130 N. Y. 340, 29 N. E. 257.

An action by a firm may be defeated by a defence founded on the conduct of one of the partners. If one member of a firm is guilty of a fraud in entering into a contract on behalf of the firm, his fraud may be relied on as a defence to an action on the contract brought by him and his copartners; for their innocence does not purge his guilt. See Ry. & M. 178; 2 Beav. 128; 9 B. & C. 241. The above rule seems not to rest upon the ground that the act of the one partner is imputable to the firm; Pars. (Jas.) Part. 139; it governs when the circumstances are such as to exclude the doctrine of agency. Thus, if a partner pledges partnership property, and in so doing clearly acts beyond the limits of his authority, still, as he cannot dispute the validity of his own act, he and his copartners cannot recover the property so pledged by an action at law; 5 Exch. 489. So, although a partner has no right to pay his own separate debt by setting off against it a debt due from his creditor to the firm, yet if he actually agrees that such set-off shall be made, and it is made accordingly, he and his copartners cannot afterwards in an action recover the debt due to the firm; 7 M. & W. 204; 9 B. & C. 532. When a partner executing a firm note waives exemptions, and signs the firm name, the waiver is confined to the partner signing; Reed Lumber Co. v. Lewis, 94 Ala. 626, 10 South. 333. An individual note given by a partner, and indorsed by him in the firm name without authority, in satisfaction of a debt which the creditor knows to be that of the individual, is not enforceable by the latter against the firm; Lyon v. Fitch, 18 N. Y. Supp. 867.

If a person becomes surety to a firm, it is important to ascertain whether he clearly contemplated changes in the firm, and agreed to become surety to a fluctuating body, or not. If he did, his liability is not discharged by any change among the members constituting the partnership at the time he became surety; 10 B. & C. 122; 5 B. & Ald. 261; but if no such intention can be shown, then a contract of suretyship entered into with a firm will be deemed to be binding so long only as the firm remains unchanged, and consequently any change in it, whether by the death or the retirement of a partner; 7 Hare 50; 3 Q. B. 703; or by the introduction of a new partner; 2 W. Bla. 934; immediately puts an end to the surety's liability so far as subsequent events are concerned. In all such cases the surety's position and risk are altered, and, whether he has in fact been damaged by the change or not, he has a right to say, non in hac fœdera veni. Similar doctrines apply to cases where a person becomes surety for the conduct of a firm; 5 M. & W. 580. See 6 Q. B. 514; 4 B. & P. 34; 8 Cl. & F. 214; 1 Lindl. Partn. 172.

CLASSIFICATION OF PARTNERSHIPS. The Roman law recognized five sorts of partnership. First: societas universorum bonorum, a community of goods: probably a survival of the old tribal relation. Second: societas universorum quæ ex quæstu veniunt, or partnership in everything which comes from gain,—the usual form; Pothier, Part. nn. 29, 43. Such contracts are said to be within the scope of the common law; but they are of very rare existence; Story, Part. § 72; U. S. Bank v. Binney, 5 Mas. 183, Fed. Cas. No. 16,791. Third: societas vectigalium, a partnership in the collection of taxes. It was not dissolved by the death of a member; and if it was so agreed in the beginning, the heir immediately succeeded to the place of the ancestor. Fourth: societas negotiationis alicujus, i. e. in a given business venture. Fifth: societas certarum rerum vel unius rei, i. e. in the acquisition or sale of one or more specific things; Pothier, Part. *24.

In the French law there are four principal classes of partnership; First: en nom collectif, the ordinary general partnership. Second: en commandite, an association corresponding to our limited partnership, composed of general and special partners in which the liability of the latter is limited to the fund invested by them. Third: anonyme, a joint stock company with limited liability. Fourth: en participation, simply a partnership with a dormant partner; Merlin, Rèpert. de Jur. tit. Société; Mackenzie, Rom. Law 217; Pothier, Part. *39. See Goiraud, Code, etc.

In the common law all partnership is for gain. General partnership is for a general line of business; 3 Kent *25; Cowp. 814. But where the parties are engaged in one branch of trade or business only, they would be usually spoken of as engaged in a general partnership; Story, Part. § 74. Special or particular partnership is one confined to a particular transaction. The extent or scope of the agreement is different in the two cases, but the character of the relation is the same. A partnership may exist in a single transaction as well as in a series; Daveis 323; Solomon v. Solomon, 2 Ga. 18; 3 C. B. 641; Schollenberger v. Seldonridge, 49 Pa. 83. Special or limited partnership differs from the ordinary relation. It is composed of general partners to whom all the ordinary rules of partnership apply, and of limited partners with circumscribed power and liability limited to the amount of their contribution. The privilege is imparted by charter in England. In America it exists by statute; and unless the provisions of the act are strictly complied with, the association will be treated as a general partnership; 3 Kent *35; Van Ingen v. Whitman, 62 N. Y. 513; Hinkel v. Heyman, 91 Ill. 96; Vanhorn v. Corcoran, 127 Pa. 255, 18 Atl. 16, 4 L. R. A. 386. The special exemption of a limited partner will be recognized in other jurisdictions than the one in which the association is formed, though the firm has made the contract in the foreign jurisdiction; King v. Sarria, 69 N. Y. 24, 25 Am. Rep. 128.

Another sort of association is styled limited partnership. It is of recent, statutory origin and strongly resembles a corporation. The members incur no liability beyond the amount of their subscription; unless they violate in some manner the requirements of the statute under which they organize. It is a general requirement, that the word "limited" be in all cases added to the firm name. Limited partnerships in Pennsylvania, which can be sued in the partnership name, are nevertheless not corporations entitled to sue as artificial citizens of the states, within the constitution and laws of the United States; Imperial Refin. Co. v. Wyman, 38 Fed. 574, 3 L. R. A. 503.

In Louisiana and in Panama and the Canal Zone, under the civil law, a limited partnership is known as a partnership in commendam; and in Hawaii it is provided that limited partnerships may be formed between corporations. For a list of statutes on the subject in force to 1911, see Gilmore, Partn. 597, n. 20.

There is still another class of partnerships, called joint-stock companies (q. v.).

Sub-partnerships. The delectus personæ, q. v., which is inherent in the nature of partnership (excepting mining partnerships; see Kahr v. Smelting Co., 102 U. S. 641, 26 L. Ed. 266; Duryea v. Burt, 28 Cal. 569; and joint-stock companies, and certain partnership associations in Massachusetts; see Edwards v. Gasoline Works, 168 Mass. 564, 47 N. E. 502, 38 L. R. A. 791) precludes the introduction of a stranger into the firm without the concurrence of all the partners; Gilmore v. Black, 11 Me. 488; Putnam v. Wise, 1 Hill (N. Y.) 234, 37 Am. Dec. 309; Moddewell v. Keever, 8 W. & S. (Pa.) 63; Channel v. Fassitt, 16 Ohio 166; 2 Rose 254. Yet no partner is precluded from entering into a sub-partnership with a stranger; nam socii mei socius meus socius non est. In such case the stranger may share the profits of the particular partner with whom he contracts; and although it has been decided that it is not true as a general proposition that such stranger will not be liable for the debts of the general partnership; Fitch v. Harrington, 13 Gray (Mass.) 468, 74 Am. Dec. 641; still, it is quite evident that a mere participation in profits renders one responsible only for the debts and liabilities of those with whom he participates; and, inasmuch as such stranger shares the profits only of and with one of the partners, he can be held only as the partner of that partner; he cannot be held as a partner in the general partnership, because he does not share or participate with the other persons who compose it. See 3 Kent 52; 1 B. & P. 546; Reynolds v. Hicks, 19 Ind. 113; Meyer v. Krohn, 114 Ill. 574, 2 N. E. 495. Besides, a sub-partner does not receive a certain share of the whole profits of the firm, but only a part of a share thereof; and he does not receive this part of a share, nor is he entitled to interfere with it at all, to say whether it shall be more or less in amount, until it has actually been set out and the time has come for a division between himself and the partner with whom he contracted. He does not draw out of the general concern any of its profits; he only draws from the profits of one who has previously drawn them from the general partnership. See 6 Madd. 5; 4 Russ. 285. If this stranger has caused damage to the partnership by his default, the party who has taken him into the partnership will be liable to the other partners the same as if he had done the damage himself; Pothier, Part. n. 93.

Any number of partners less than the whole may form an independent co-partnership, which, though not strictly a sub-partnership, is entitled to a separate standing in equity. In case of insolvency the subordinate co-partnership is treated as a distinct concern, and the assets are marshalled accordingly. Consequently, although the creditors of the smaller firm are strictly separate creditors when compared with the creditors of the larger firm; yet debts owing by one firm to the other are collected on insolvency for the benefit of the creditors of the creditor firm; 1 B. & P. 539; 1 Cox 140. See In re Haines & Co.'s Estate, 176 Pa. 354, 35 Atl. 237. Indeed, one partner may have this independent standing if the trade is distinct; Lind. Part. 2d Am. ed. *725. But the debts must arise in the ordinary course of trade; Lind. Part. 2d Am. ed. *527.

Quasi-partnership. This is simply the case of a man who without being actually a partner, holds himself out or suffers himself to be held out as such; he is estopped to deny his liability as a partner; Hicks v. Cram, 17 Vt. 449; 6 Ad. & E. 469; Sun Ins. Co. v. Kountz Line, 122 U. S. 583, 7 Sup. Ct. 1278; 30 L. Ed. 1137. This rule of law rests, not upon the ground of the real transaction between the partners, but upon principles of general policy, to prevent the frauds to which creditors would be liable if they lent their money upon the apparent credit of three or four persons, when in fact they lent it only to two of them, to whom, without others they would not have been willing to lend anything; 3 Kent 32; Purviance v. McClintee, 6 S. & R. (Pa.) 259; Gill v. Kuhn, id. 333; Dob v. Halsey, 16 Johns. (N. Y.) 40, 8 Am. Dec. 293; Osborne v. Brennan, 2 N. & McC. (S. C.) 427, 10 Am. Dec. 614; Brown v. Grant, 39 Minn. 404, 40 N. W. 268; Fletcher v. Pullen, 70 Md. 205, 16 Atl. 887, 14 Am. St. Rep. 355.

In legal effect it is a partnership by estoppel which exists only where the parties have not agreed to be, and are not in fact, partners but are held as such only because they have so represented themselves, and some third person has relied upon the representations; Deputy v. Harris, 1 Marv. (Del.) 100, 40 Atl. 714; Uhl v. Harvey, 78 Ind. 26; Light-hiser v. Allison, 100 Md. 103, 59 Atl. 182.

The term "holding one's self out as partner" imports, at least, the voluntary act of the party holding himself out; Morgan v. Farrel, 58 Conn. 413, 20 Atl. 614, 18 Am. St. Rep. 282; 2 Camp. 617; but no particular mode of holding himself out is requisite to charge a party. It occurs most frequently where a partner retires from a firm and his retirement is not made known. It may be express and either by direct assertion or by authority to a partner to use the party's name. It may result from negligence, as a failure to forbid the use of one's name by the firm; Poillon v. Secor, 61 N. Y. 456; Drennen v. House, 41 Pa. 30; Dailey v. Coons, 64 Ind. 545; Barnett Line of Steamers v. Blackmar, 53 Ga. 98. It must appear that the "holding out" was done by him or by his consent; Seabury v. Bolles, 51 N. J. L. 103, 16 Atl. 54, 11 L. R. A. 136; Munton v. Rutherford, 121 Mich. 418, 80 N. W. 112; Rittenhouse v. Leigh, 57 Miss. 697; 8 L. J. C. P. 257.

Holding out is a question of fact; Stephenson v. Cornell, 10 Ind. 475; Nelson Distilling Co. v. Loe, 47 Mo. App. 31; Fletcher v. Pullen, 70 Md. 205, 16 Atl. 887, 14 Am. St. Rep. 355. The usual evidence to charge a party in such cases is that he has suffered the use of his name over the shop-door, etc., or that he has done other acts, or suffered his agents to do acts; Wright v. Boynton, 37 N. H. 9, 72 Am. Dec. 319; no matter of what kind, sufficient to induce others to believe him to be a partner; Buckingham v. Burgess, 3 McLean 364, Fed. Cas. No. 2,087; id., 3 McLean 549, Fed. Cas. No. 2,089; 3 Camp. 310, per Tindal, C. J.; State v. Wiggins, 20 N. H. 453; Holmes v. Porter, 39 Me. 157; Carmichael v. Greer, 55 Ga. 116; Bartlett v. Raymond, 139 Mass. 275, 30 N. E. 91; McClellan Dry-Dock Co. v. Steamboat Line, 43 La. Ann. 258, 9 South. 630. A person is not relieved from liability though he was induced by the fraud of others to hold himself out as a partner with them. See 5 Bingh. 521; 1 Rose 69. The holding out must have been before the contract with the third person was entered into, and must have been the inducement to it; 7 B. & C. 409; Wright v. Powell, 8 Ala. 560; Hefner v. Palmer, 67 Ill. 161; Palmer v. Pinkham, 37 Me. 252; Howes v. Fisk, 67 N. H. 289, 30 Atl. 351. A third party will be held liable as a partner only to one who knew of the holding out at the time he acted and who acted in reliance upon it; 1 B. & Ald. 11; Thompson v. Bank, 111 U. S. 529, 4 Sup. Ct. 689, 28 L. Ed. 507; Marble v. Lypes, 82 Ala. 322, 2 South. 701; Partridge v. Kingman, 130 Mass. 476; Burnett v. Snyder, 81 N. Y. 550, 37 Am. Rep. 527; Adrian Knitting Co. v. R. Co., 145 Mich. 323, 108 N. W. 706; Spaulding v. Nathan, 21 Ind. App. 122, 51 N. E. 742; Daniel v. Schultz, 12 Ky. L. Rep. 387; and so is "the great weight of authority"; Gilmore, Partn. 66; though on the strength of a rule laid down in Parsons, Partn. (3d Ed.) 130, there is at least one case contra, Poillon v. Secor, 61 N. Y. 456, which may be considered as overruled by subsequent cases; Central City Sav. Bk. v. Walker, 66 N. Y. 424; Cassidy v. Hall, 97 N. Y. 159; Rogers v. Murray, 110 N. Y. 658, 18 N. E. 261; and it was said that the cases of Poillon v. Secor, 61 N. Y. 456 and 2 H. Bla. 242, cannot be considered as good law; Pars. Partn. Beale's ed. § 93. If the plaintiff knew at the time he made the contract that the party he seeks to charge was not a partner, he cannot hold him as such; Willis v. Rector, 50 Fed. 684, 1 C. C. A. 611; or if the plaintiff had notice of any kind; Alabama Fertilizer Co. v. Reynolds, 85 Ala. 19, 4 South. 639; 1 Camp. 404; and a representation made after the contract was entered into will not charge the defendant; 1 C. M. & R. 415. The doctrine is based upon estoppel. But it has been held that even where there was no evidence that the plaintiff was misled, the reputed partner will be held liable; Rizer v. James, 26 Kan. 221.

Where the new firm had the same name as the old, one who sold goods to the former may recover of the members of the old firm, though notice of dissolution was published in a newspaper, and though the old firm owed him nothing at the dissolution, and though he did not know the names of the members of the old firm; Elkinton v. Booth, 143 Mass. 479, 10 N. E. 460.

Where persons hold themselves out as a corporation, without having even a de facto corporate existence, persons dealing with them, if not estopped to deny their corporate existence, may hold them liable as partners; Eaton v. Walker, 76 Mich. 579, 43 N. W. 638, 6 L. R. A. 102; Elliot v. Himrod, 108 Pa. 569; Wechselberg v. Bank, 64 Fed. 90, 12 C. C. A. 56, 26 L. R. A. 470. Other cases hold that the remedy is against the agent who professed to act for a non-existent corporation; 1 Thomps. Corp. § 418; Fay v. Noble, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 188. Where there is a de facto corporation, the members cannot be held as partners; Snider's Sons Co. v. Troy, 91 Ala. 224, 8 South. 658, 11 L. R. A. 515, 24 Am. St. Rep. 887; Stout v. Zulick, 48 N. J. L. 599, 7 Atl. 362; Planters' & Miners' Bk. v. Padgett, 69 Ga. 159. If the organization is defective and the parties act in good faith, they are not liable as partners; Gartside Coal Co. v. Maxwell, 22 Fed. 197; American Salt Co. v. Heidenheimer, 80 Tex. 344, 15 S. W. 1038, 26 Am. St. Rep. 743; contra, Ferris v. Thaw, 72 Mo. 446; Whipple v. Parker, 29 Mich. 369. Text writers differ widely. That stockholders in a defective or illegal corporation are liable as partners, see Cook, Stockh. § 233; contra, whether the corporation is de facto or not; Moraw. Priv. Corp. § 748; Tayl. Priv. Corp. § 148; Bates, Partn. § 4. Incorporators who transact business upon the strength of an organization which is materially defective, are individually liable, as partners, to those with whom they have dealt. Failure to record the charter as required by law, renders the incorporators personally liable to persons who deal with them without knowledge of the attempted incorporation or without knowledge of facts which ought to put them on inquiry; Guckert v. Hacke, 159 Pa. 303, 28 Atl. 249.

Where persons enter into articles of association for banking purposes, and go through the usual steps for forming a corporation, such as subscribing for shares, etc., but without a charter, they are liable as partners; Pettis v. Atkins, 60 Ill. 454. Where persons associate together to form a corporation, but none is formed, by reason of a failure to comply with the statute, they become a quasi-partnership; Flagg v. Stowe, 85 Ill. 164; but not as against a creditor who is also a stockholder; Loverin v. McLaughlin, 161 Ill. 417, 44 N. E. 99; or is a director; Curtis v. Tracy, 169 Ill. 233, 48 N. E. 399, 61 Am. St. Rep. 168; or when it appears that third parties dealt with the concern as a corporation; Merchants & M. Bk. v. Stone, 38 Mich. 779.

If the charter is obtained by fraud, the members will be held liable as partners; Paterson v. Arnold, 45 Pa. 410; or if it be obtained for gambling purposes; McGrew v. City Produce Exch., 85 Tenn. 572, 4 S. W. 38, 4 Am. St. Rep. 771. Where parties go to another state to get a charter to carry on business in their own state, with powers which they could not obtain at home, they will be held liable as partners, the transaction being substantially forbidden by statute; Empire Mills v. Grocery Co., 4 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 221, 15 S. W. 200, 505, 12 L. R. A. 366; contra, Demarest v. Flack, 128 N. Y. 205, 28 N. Y. 645, 13 L. R. A. 854. It is held that when parties incorporate in one state to do business in another, they are partners; Hill v. Beach, 12 N. J. Eq. 31; contra, Second Nat. Bank v. Hall, 35 Ohio St. 158; Cook, St. & Stockh. § 237; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Fletcher, 35

Kan. 242, 10 Pac. 596. The intent to form a corporation will not prevent parties being held as partners; Martin v. Fewell, 79 Mo. 401.

After dissolution of a corporation, stockholders are not liable as partners for corporate debts; Central City Sav. Bk. v. Walker, 66 N. Y. 424; unless they agree to continue the business as partners; National Union Bk. v. Landon, 45 N. Y. 410.

The fact that a special partner fails to comply with the stipulated requirements, does not change his special partnership into a general one, but simply makes him liable to creditors as a general partner; Abendroth v. Van Dolsen, 131 U. S. 66, 9 Sup. Ct. 619, 33 L. Ed. 57.

THE SCOPE AND SUBJECT-MATTER. A partnership is primarily a commercial relation. The notion has, however, been gradually extended to include other associations than those for trade merely: e. g. partnerships between two attorneys at law; Livingston v. Cox, 6 Pa. 360; Warner v. Griswold, 8 Wend. (N. Y.) 665; Smith v. Hill, 13 Ark. 173. It is said by Collyer that "perhaps it may be laid down generally that a partnership may exist in any business or transaction which is not a mere personal office, and for the performance of which payment may be enforced." Colly. Part. 5th ed. § 56.

The classification of partnerships with respect to the nature of the business is into trading and non-trading forms and the difference is in the powers of the partners, as in the former they have implied power to borrow money and to give the firm paper therefor, but in the latter they have no such power unless the act in question is clearly within the scope of the firm's business; Lee v. Bank, 45 Kan. 8, 25 Pac. 196, 11 L. R. A. 238; Alley v. Bowen-Merrill Co., 76 Ark. 4, 88 S. W. 838, 113 Am. St. Rep. 73, 6 Ann. Cas. 127; Kimbro v. Bullitt, 22 How. (U. S.) 256, 16 L. Ed. 313; and the burden is on the plaintiff to show authority, express or implied, or ratification; Pease v. Cole, 53 Conn. 53, 22 Atl. 681, 55 Am. Rep. 53. Formerly the question whether the act done was within the scope of the business, was for the jury; Irwin v. Williar, 110 U. S. 499, 4 Sup. Ct. 160, 28 L. Ed. 225; but latterly in the case of ordinary transactions, the question was treated as one of law for the court; Alsop v. Trust Co., 100 Ky. 375, 38 S. W. 510; Farmer v. Bank, 51 S. W. 586, 21 Ky. L. Rep. 425; and in one case it was said to be a matter of which courts take judicial cognizance under the law merchant; Woodruff v. Scaife, 83 Ala. 152, 3 South. 311; and see Gilmore, Partn. 287.

The early law did not recognize partnerships for trading in land, because the land was all held by the barons who did not engage in trade. But in modern times, and especially in America, where the social conditions are different, land is largely held by speculators whose operations as partners the law must recognize; Dudley v. Littlefield, 21 Me. 421, 422; Kramer v. Arthurs, 7 Pa. 165; Ludlow's Heirs v. Cooper's Devises, 4 Ohio St. 1; Chester v. Dickerson, 54 N. Y. 1, 13 Am. Rep. 550. In transferring title to and from the firm the ordinary rules of conveying must be observed. When the title is in all the partners, all must join in the deed; if in the name of one, he alone need execute; Story, Part. § 92; Coles v. Coles, 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 159, 8 Am. Dec. 231; Davis v. Christian, 15 Gratt. (Va.) 11; Arnold v. Stevenson, 2 Nev. 234.

Building operations are now upon the same footing as land speculations; Reynolds v. Cleveland, 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 282, 15 Am. Dec. 369. But the tradition has been too strong to be impaired as yet in landlord and tenant cases. Farming on shares is not partnership. The owner of land may either receive a share in the produce as rent, or give such a portion to a laborer in lieu of wages; *Lind. Part. Am. ed. 651; Keiser v. State, 58 Ind. 379. But there may be a partnership in the development of land owned by one; Autrey v. Frieze, 59 Ala. 587.

A much mooted question whether under the Statute of Frauds an ordinary contract of partnership for dealing in land either incidentally or as a business, must be in writing, seems to be determined, on the weight of authority, in the negative; Williams v. Gillies, 75 N. Y. 197; Pennybacker v. Leary, 65 Ia. 220, 21 N. W. 575; Marsh v. Davis, 33 Kan. 326, 6 Pac. 612; Brooke v. Washington, 8 Gratt. (Va.) 248, 56 Am. Dec. 142; Van Housen v. Copeland, 180 Ill. 74, 54 N. E. 169; Stitt v. Lumber Co., 93 Minn. 52, 107 N. W. 824; Garth v. Davis, 120 Ky. 106, 85 S. W. 692, 117 Am. St. Rep. 571; Morgart v. Smouse, 103 Md. 463, 63 Atl. 1070, 115 Am. St. Rep. 367, 7 Ann. Cas. 1140; Fall River Whaling Co. v. Borden, 10 Cush. (Mass.) 458; contra, Goldstein v. Nathan, 158 Ill. 641, 42 N. E. 72; Norton v. Brink, 75 Neb. 566, 106 N. W. 668, 110 N. W. 669, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 945, 121 Am. St. Rep. 822; Schultz v. Waldons, 60 N. J. Eq. 71, 47 Atl. 187; Appeal of Everhart, 106 Pa. 349; Langley v. Sanborn, 135 Wis. 178, 114 N. W. 787; Scheuer v. Cochem, 126 Wis. 209, 105 N. W. 573, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 427; McKinley v. Lloyd, 128 Fed. 519. This is said to result from the fact that partnership is based on a contract which may be shown by oral evidence and then what are its assets and the interests of the partners may be also shown by such evidence; 5 Ves. 309; 5 Hare 369; contra, Smith v. Burnham, 3 Sumn. 435, Fed. Cas. 13,019, where Story, J., discusses the authorities at large; and see Gilmore, Partn. 94, where the cases are collected.

See infra, as to mining partnerships; also MINES AND MINING.

Firm Property. Partners have, presumptively, the same interest in the stock that they have in the profits; Ryder v. Gilbert, 16 Hun (N. Y.) 163. Their shares are presumed to be equal both in capital and profits; Ryder v. Gilbert, 16 Hun (N. Y.) 163; Griggs v. Clark, 23 Cal. 427. Where no definite arrangement is made between partners as to a division of profits, the presumption of law is that they are to be equally divided; Frazer v. Linton, 183 Pa. 186, 38 Atl. 589. But a joint stock is not essential to a partnership. The partner without capital is then interested, not in the fund, but in the adventure; 2 Bingham, 170; Moore v. Huntington, 7 Hun (N. Y.) 425; Ewell's Lind. Part. *13.

Sometimes a partnership exists between parties merely as the managers and disposers of the goods of others; 4 B. & Ald. 663; Walden v. Sherburne, 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 409, 422. So, it seems, two persons may be owners in common of property, and also partners in the working and management of it for their common benefit; 2 C. B. N. S. 357, 363; 16 M. & W. 503.

Whether a partnership includes the capital stock, or is limited to the profit and loss, must be determined from the agreement and intention of the parties; Bradbury v. Smith, 21 Me. 120. See 4 B. & C. 867; Story, Part. § 26.

A partner may contribute only the use of his capital, retaining full control of the principal; and he may charge interest for the use whether profits are earned or not; Ewell's Lind. Part. *328. If, however, the firm funds are expended in repairing and improving the property thus placed at their disposal, it becomes partnership stock; Ewell's Lind. Part. *330; Lane v. Tyler, 49 Me. 252; Deveney v. Mahoney, 23 N. J. Eq. 247; Appeal of Clark, 72 Pa. 142.

The partnership property consists of the original stock and the additions made to it in the course of trade. The term means such property, real and personal, as by the agreement of the partners is to be devoted to firm purposes; Jenkins v. Jenkins, 81 Ark. 68, 98 S. W. 685; and when one partner put in his property as against the other's experience, the partnership was only as to the profits; Hillock v. Grape, 111 App. Div. 720, 97 N. Y. Supp. 823.

All real estate purchased for the partnership, paid for out of the funds thereof, and devoted to partnership uses and trusts, whether the legal title is in one or all of the partners, is treated in equity in the same manner as other partnership property until the partnership account is settled and the partnership debts are paid; 5 Ves. 189; Fall River W. Co. v. Borden, 10 Cush. (Mass.) 458; 3 Kent 37; Jarvis v. Brooks, 27 N. H. 37, 59 Am. Dec. 359; Ewell's Lind. Part. *324. Leases or real estate taken by one partner for partnership purposes, mines, and trade-marks are held to be partnership property; 1 Taunt. 250; Story, Part. § 98. The good-will of a business is an asset of the firm. But Kent says, "The good-will of a trade is not partnership stock;" 3 Kent 64. The good-will of a professional partnership belongs, in the absence of express stipulations, exclusively to the survivors; 3 Madd. 64; a surviving partner has the right to carry on the business under the firm name; 28 Beav. 536; 34 id. 566; Caswell v. Hazard, 121 N. Y. 484, 24 N. E. 707, 18 Am. St. Rep. 833; 7 Sim. 421; Staats v. Howlett, 4 Den. (N. Y.) 559; contra, Fenn v. Bolles, 7 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 202; Colton v. Thomas, 7 Phila. (Pa.) 257; the reason being assigned that to permit it would impair the value of the good-will and might subject the retired partners to additional liabilities; Lindl. Partn. 2d Am. Ed. *444; 43 Ch. D. 208. It is said to be the better opinion that the firm name is an asset of the firm; Pars. Partn. § 182, n. Where there is a sale of the business to a partner, the latter does not, without express agreement, acquire a right to the firm name; 43 Ch. D. 208 (C. A.); Williams v. Farrand, 88 Mich. 473, 50 N. W. 446, 14 L. R. A. 161; but see 10 Ch. D. 436 (C. A.); Holmes, B. & H. v. Mfg. Co., 37 Conn. 278, 9 Am. Rep. 324; even so as to advertise himself as "successor"; id.; but he may advertise that he is "late of" the former firm; id. A continuing partner who has acquired the right to a retiring partner's name, cannot transfer it to a corporation; Bagby & R. Co. v. Rivers, 87 Md. 400, 40 Atl. 171, 40 L. R. A. 632, 67 Am. St. Rep. 357; nor, when in selling out, there was no mention of the good-will, can he use it so as to give third persons cause to believe that the retired partner is still associated with the business; McGowan Bros. P. & M. Co. v. McGowan, 22 Ohio St. 370.

The firm name is a part of the good-will; Hegeman & Co. v. Hegeman, 8 Daly (N. Y.) 1; upon dissolution, it passes as such to one who buys the business and continues it; Adams v. Adams, 7 Abb. N. C. (N. Y.) 292; L. R. 10 Ch. Div. 436; subject only to the liability to be enjoined in the absence of a special agreement if he make such use of it as to cause injury to the purchaser of the business; L. R. 45 Ch. D. 577; in whose hands it was held taxable capital employed in the state, although the then owner was a corporation of another state, in which it had never done any business; People v. Roberts, 159 N. Y. 70, 53 N. E. 685, 45 L. R. A. 126; but if one partner transfers his interest with the understanding that his co-partners are to succeed to the business, he cannot use the firm name in a similar business in the vicinity; Brass & I. W. Co. v. Payne, 50 Ohio St. 115, 33 N. E. 88, 19 L. R. A. 82. Otherwise, on dissolution and a division of firm assets, each partner may use the firm name in a similar business; 34 Beav. 566; Lathrop v.

Lathrop, 47 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 532 (but see Blumenthal v. Strauss, 53 Hun 501, 6 N. Y. Supp. 393); see Morgan v. Schuyler, 79 N. Y. 490, 35 Am. Rep. 543; but he must not do it in such a way as to mislead the public; L. R. 9 Ch. Div. 196; McGowan Bros. P. & M. Co. v. McGowan, 22 Ohio St. 370. The name of a withdrawing partner cannot be used by the remaining partners without an agreement; L. R. 43 Ch. Div. 208; nor can a partner who buys the firm stock in trade, but not the good-will, keep the name of the retiring partner in the firm name; 26 L. J. N. S. 391. There are statutes which partially govern the subject in New York and Massachusetts. See Vonderbank v. Schmidt, 44 La. Ann. 264, 10 South. 616, 15 L. R. A. 462, 32 Am. St. Rep. 336; Good-WILL.

A ship, as well as any other chattel, may be held in strict partnership; 3 Kent 154; Lamb v. Durant, 12 Mass. 54, 7 Am. Dec. 31. But ships are generally owned by parties as tenants in common; and they are not in consequence of such ownership to be considered as partners; Harding v. Foxcroft, 6 Greenl. (Me.) 77; French v. Price, 24 Pick. (Mass.) 19; Buddington v. Stewart, 14 Conn. 404; Hopkins v. Forsyth, 14 Pa. 34, 38, 53 Am. Dec. 513; Williams v. Lawrence, 47 N. Y. 462. The same is true of any other species of property in which the parties have only a community of interest; 8 Exch. 825; 21 Beav. 536. As against an assignment of partnership property for the benefit of creditors, property in the possession of and used by the firm, cannot be claimed to have been the individual property of a member of the firm, by one to whom such member subsequently assigned it; Sherman v. Jenkins, 70 Hun 593, 24 N. Y. Supp. 186.

Partners hold land by a peculiar title. In one respect it most resembles an ancient joint tenancy. Neither partner can convey title to a moiety of the goods; his assignee takes subject to the right of the other partner to have firm debts paid out of that fund; he therefore can assign only a moiety of what is left after firm debts paid. Upon this principle depends also the special right of survivorship for the purposes of liquidation. With these qualifications the partner's title at law differs but slightly from a tenancy in common; Story, Part. §§ 90, 97; Commercial Bank v. Wilkins, 9 Greenl. (Me.) 28; Rodriguez v. Hefferman, 5 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 417. They hold the land in common and must grant it as other tenants in common; Dillon v. Brown, 11 Gray (Mass.) 179, 71 Am. Dec. 700. The legal title to the land, with all the characteristics of realty, attaches to it until applied to partnership purposes; Espy v. Comer, 76 Ala. 501; equity interferes for partnership purposes only; Wilcox v. Wilcox, 13 Allen (Mass.) 252. Co-partners may withdraw realty from the partnership for the purpose of holding it in severalty; and in this event they become simply co-tenants in such land; Lindley v. Davis, 7 Mont. 206, 14 Pac. 717.

A partner has the same title to the stationary capital of the firm that he has to its product in his hands for sale, but his power over it is less extensive. He cannot sell the permanent capital stock. The power of a partner to sell results not from the title, but from the general partnership relation; Sloan v. Moore, 37 Pa. 217.

It has been held that in order to make the land really firm assets the title should be in the partners as a firm, otherwise, the partners would be mere tenants in common, and the land, as to purchasers and creditors, would be the individual estate of the partners, regardless of the funds by which it was purchased and the uses to which it was put; Foster v. Barnes, 81 Pa. 377; but as to the partners and their representatives, the land would belong to the firm, in such case; Howard v. Priest, 5 Metc. (Mass.) 582; Appeal of Black, 89 Pa. 203 (even if the title is in one partner's name; Dawson v. Parsons, 10 Misc. 428, 31 N. Y. Supp. 78; Teschemacher v. Lenz, 82 Hun 594, 31 N. Y. Supp. 543). The rule is applied to cases of equitable, as well as legal, estates; Appeal of Ebbert, 70 Pa. 79. In other cases it has been held that where land has been bought with firm money and is used for firm purposes, or been dedicated to the firm, it must be regarded as partnership property without considering the record title; Fairchild v. Fairchild, 64 N. Y. 479; Price v. Hicks, 14 Fla. 565; Dupuy v. Leavenworth, 17 Cal. 262. It has been thought necessary to resort to an equitable conversion of firm land into personalty in order to subject it to the rules governing partnership property; Appeal of Foster, 74 Pa. 391, 15 Am. Rep. 553; Riddle v. Whitehill, 135 U. S. 621, 10 Sup. Ct. 924, 34 L. Ed. 282. But this fiction seems unnecessary. See Lang's Heirs v. Waring, 25 Ala. 625, 60 Am. Dec. 533; Campbell v. Campbell, 30 N. J. Eq. 415; Buckley v. Buckley, 11 Barb. (N. Y.) 43.

Partnership lands are liable for firm debts prior to the claim of the widow or heirs of a deceased partner; Clay v. Freeman, 118 U. S. 97, 6 Sup. Ct. 964, 30 L. Ed. 104. After liquidation, the lands or their surplus proceeds pass as real estate; Campbell v. Campbell, 30 N. J. Eq. 415; Buckley v. Buckley, 11 Barb. (N. Y.) 43; Appeal of Foster, 74 Pa. 391, 15 Am. Rep. 553; upon a dissolution the equitable title to land passes to the surviving partner; Clay v. Field, 34 Fed. 375; Weld v. Mfg. Co., 86 Wis. 552, 57 N. W. 374; Williams v. Whedon, 109 N. Y. 333, 16 N. E. 365, 4 Am. St. Rep. 460.

If one partner buys land with firm money and takes title in his own name, a resulting trust arises to the firm; Rice v. Pennypacker, 5 Houst. (Del.) 279; Fairchild v. Fair- child, 64 N. Y. 471; Riddle v. Whitehill, 135 U. S. 621, 10 Sup. Ct. 924, 34 L. Ed. 282; Pepper v. Thomas, 85 Ky. 539, 4 S. W. 297. No length of possession by one partner of real estate paid for with partnership funds and conveyed to him, bars the other partners; Riddle v. Whitehill, 135 U. S. 621, 10 Sup. Ct. 924, 34 L. Ed. 282. A deed made to a partnership as grantee in the firm name, vests in the individual partners the power to convey; 8 C. C. App. 600; Kelley v. Bourne, 15 Or. 476, 16 Pac. 40; but it has been held that such a conveyance vests title only in the partner whose name appears in the firm name; Arthur v. Weston, 22 Mo. 378. In Pennsylvania, so far as third parties without notice are concerned, the title of the firm must appear of record; Warriner v. Mitchell, 128 Pa. 153, 18 Atl. 337. As to partnership realty, see Yorks v. Tozer, 59 Minn. 78, 60 N. W. 846, 28 L. R. A. 86, 50 Am. St. Rep. 395; Galbraith v. Tracy, 153 Ill. 54, 38 N. E. 937, 28 L. R. A. 129, 46 Am. St. Rep. 867; Goldthwaite v. Janney, 102 Ala. 431, 15 South. 560, 28 L. R. A. 161, 48 Am. St. Rep. 56; Robinson Bk. v. Miller, 153 Ill. 244, 38 N. E. 1078, 27 L. R. A. 449, 46 Am. St. Rep. 883.

Profits made by a member of a firm through individual outside transactions do not belong to the firm, though he employs therein the skill and information acquired by him as a member thereof; Latta v. Kilbourn, 150 U. S. 524, 14 Sup. Ct. 201, 37 L. Ed. 1169. Nor do they when made with the consent of the firm which receives a commission on them; Davis v. Darling, 80 Hun 299, 30 N. Y. Supp. 321; but if a partner avails himself of information obtained by him in the firm business, and uses it for any purposes within the scope of the firm business, or in competition with the firm in its business, he is liable to account to it for the profits made by him; [1891] 2 Ch. 244.

POWERS OF PARTNERS. General rule. It has been customary to derive the authority of a partner from an assumed relation of mutual agency between the members of the firm, and it is true that the firm is responsible for whatever is done by any of the partners while acting for it within the limits of the authority conferred by the nature of the business carried on; 8 H. L. Cas. 268; Loudon Sav. Fund Soc. v. Bk., 36 Pa. 498, 78 Am. Dec. 390; Keck v. Fisher, 58 Mo. 532; Davis v. Richardson, 45 Miss. 499, 7 Am. Rep. 732. The principle of agency applies to copartners; but it is only when one is acting as their agent that he binds them; Midland N. Bk. v. Schoen, 123 Mo. 650, 27 S. W. 547. It is perhaps more accurate to trace a partner's power to his standing as a co-principal, and to consider his agency an incident of this relation; 5 Ch. Div. 458, L. R. 7 Ex. 218. The relation is a peculiar sort of agency, where the partner is agent for the firm and not merely for the other partners; 5 Ch. Div. 458. Whatever the source of a partner's power, it is, as a rule, limited to acts incident to carrying on, in the usual way, the particular business in which the firm is engaged, and each partner has the power to manage the ordinary business of the firm, and, consequently, to bind his copartners, whether they be ostensible, dormant, actual, or nominal; 2 B. & Ald. 673; 1 Cr. & J. 316; by whatever he may do, in the course of such management, as entirely as to bind himself. But the acts of a partner wholly unconnected with the business of the partnership do not bind the firm; 2 B. & Ald. 678; Eastman v. Cooper, 15 Pick. (Mass.) 290, 26 Am. Dec. 600; Lawrence v. Dale, 3 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 23; nor will an act beyond the scope of the partnership; Sargent v. Henderson, 79 Ga. 268, 5 S. E. 122.

The partner's authority is incident to, and co-extensive with, the business; Pars. (Jas.) Partn. § 133. A partner's authority to act cannot be restricted by notice from another partner to a third party; Gillilan v. Ins. Co., 41 N. Y. 376. An insolvent partner has the same authority, even after dissolution; Hubbard v. Guild, 1 Duer (N. Y.) 662. Partners may, by agreement, restrict the authority of a partner, as between themselves, but not as to third parties, without notice; Pars. (Jas.) Partn. § 134; nor can either exclude the other from an equal share in the management of the concern or the possession of partnership effects; Law v. Ford, 2 Paige (N. Y.) 310; 2 J. & W. 558.

One of two partners in the practice of the law has no authority to accept for the firm an agency for the mere sale of real estate; Robertson v. Chapman, 152 U. S. 673, 14 Sup. Ct. 741, 38 L. Ed. 592.

Accounts. One partner can bind his firm by rendering an account relating to a partnership transaction; 8 Cl. & F. 121; Cady v. Kyle, 47 Mo. 346; Lind. Part., 2d Am. ed. *28; and the periodical statements of firm accounts are, in the absence of fraud or mistake, conclusive on the partners; Stretch v. Talmadge, 65 Cal. 510, 4 Pac. 513; Gage v. Parmelee, 87 Ill. 329; Broderick v. Beaupre, 40 Minn. 379, 42 N. W. 83.

Actions. One partner can bring an action on firm account in his own and his copartners' names without their consent; In re Barrett, 2 Hughes 444, Fed. Cas. No. 1,043; but they are entitled to indemnity if he sues against their will; 2 Cr. & M. 318; Jones v. Hurst, 67 Mo. 568. This power of a partner survives the dissolution of the firm; Ward v. Barber, 1 E. D. Sm. (N. Y.) 423. One partner cannot, as a rule, sue in his own name for a firm debt; the suit must be in the names of all; Wright v. Williamson, 3 N. J. L. 978.

Admissions. After the relation of partnership has been established, a partner may bind his co-partner by an admission; Pars.

(Jas.) Partn. § 121; Collett v. Smith, 143 Mass. 473, 10 N. E. 173; Franklin v. Hoadley, 115 App. Div. 538, 101 N. Y. Supp. 374; Munson v. Wickwire, 21 Conn. 513; Caris v. Nimmons, 92 Mo. App. 66; Western Assur. Co. v. Towle, 65 Wis. 247, 26 N. W. 104; but the existence of the partnership must be shown by other evidence; Union N. Bk. v. Underhill, 102 N. Y. 336, 7 N. E. 293; Hahn v. Ins. Co., 50 Ill. 456; Taft v. Church, 162 Mass. 527, 39 N. E. 283. The admissions of a partner as to firm business bind the firm; 2 C. & P. 232; but are not necessarily conclusive; 2 K. & J. 491; McElroy v. Ludlum, 32 N. J. Eq. 828. The admission of one partner in legal proceedings is the admission of all; 1 Maule & S. 259; Abrahams v. Myers, 40 Md. 499; Dodds v. Rogers, 68 Ind. 110; Cady v. Kyle, 47 Mo. 346.

Appearance. In an action against partners, one may enter or authorize an appearance for the rest; 7 Term 207; Bennett v. Stickney, 17 Vt. 531; McCullough v. Guetner, 1 Binn. (Pa.) 214; Wheatley v. Tutt, 4 Kan. 205; contra, L. R. 8 Q. B. 398; Critchfield v. Porter, 3 Ohio 519; see Pars. (Jas.) Partn. § 119; 10 App. Cas. 680; but not after dissolution of the firm; Haslet v. Street, 2 McCord (S. C.) 311, 13 Am. Dec. 724. Nor can one partner bind his co-partners personally and individually by entering an appearance for them when they are not within the jurisdiction, nor served with process; Phelps v. Brewer, 9 Cush. (Mass.) 390, 57 Am. Dec. 56. A partner cannot authorize an appearance for a co-partner, not subject to the jurisdiction of the court, or if the firm has been dissolved; Hall v. Lanning, 91 U. S. 160, 23 L. Ed. 271; but a solicitor instructed by a managing partner may enter an appearance for all partners; [1896] 1 Q. B. 386.

Arbitration. As a general rule, one partner cannot bind the firm by submitting any of its affairs to arbitration, whether by deed or parol; 3 Kent 49; 3 C. & B. 742; Backus v. Coyne, 35 Mich. 5; Walker v. Bean, 34 Minn. 427, 26 N. W. 232; Fancher v. Furnace Co., 80 Ala. 481, 2 South. 268; Buchanan v. Curry, 19 Johns. (N. Y.) 137, 10 Am. Dec. 200; Karthaus v. Ferrer, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 222, 7 L. Ed. 121. The reason given being that such a power is unnecessary for carrying on the business in the ordinary way; Lind. Part., 2d Am. ed. *129, *272. But the acting partner may be bound; Buchanan v. Curry, 19 Johns. (N. Y.) 137, 10 Am. Dec. 200. And the general rule is perhaps somewhat relaxed; Pars. Partn. § 121. It is held that one partner may bind the firm by submission to arbitration, by an agreement not under seal; Gay v. Waltman, 89 Pa. 453; but apparently only so as to bind firm assets; Gay v. Waltman, 89 Pa. 453.

Assignments. The right of a partner to dispose of the property of the firm extends to the assignment of at least a portion of it as security for antecedent debts, as well as for debts thereafter to be contracted; Story, Part. § 101; Harrison v. Sterry, 5 Cra. (U. S.) 289, 3 L. Ed. 104; Keck v. Fisher, 58 Mo. 532; Dana v. Lull, 17 Vt. 394. Although the authorities differ, the better opinion seems to be that one partner cannot, without the knowledge or consent of his co-partners, assign all the property of the firm to a trustee for the benefit of creditors; Hook v. Stone, 34 Mo. 329; Dunklin v. Kimball, 50 Ala. 251; Brooks v. Sullivan, 32 Wis. 444; Mayer v. Bernstein, 69 Miss. 17, 12 South. 257; unless the co-partner is absent, or is incapable of giving his assent or dissent; Hill v. Postley, 90 Va. 200, 17 S. E. 946; Williams v. Frost, 27 Minn. 255, 6 N. W. 793; but not against the assent, or without the consent, of the co-partner, if the latter is present and capable of acting; Fox v. Curtis, 176 Pa. 52, 34 Atl. 952. A surviving partner has power to make an assignment for the benefit of the firm's creditors; Riley v. Carter, 76 Md. 581, 25 Atl. 667, 19 L. R. A. 489, 35 Am. St. Rep. 443.

Bills of exchange and promissory notes. A partner may draw, accept, and indorse bills and notes in the name and for the use of the firm, for purposes within the scope of its business; 7 Term 210; Blodgett v. Weed, 119 Mass. 215; Zuel v. Bowen, 78 Ill. 234; First N. Bk. v. Freeman, 47 Mich. 408, 11 N. W. 219; Ketcham N. Bk. v. Hagen, 164 N. Y. 446, 58 N. E. 523; Pettyjohn v. Bank, 101 Va. 111, 43 S. E. 203. A restriction of this power by agreement between the partners does not affect third persons unless they have notice; Lagan v. Cragin, 27 La. Ann. 352; Faler v. Jordan, 44 Miss. 283. This power cannot be exercised after dissolution of the firm; Carleton v. Jenness, 42 Mich. 110, 3 N. W. 284; Curry v. White, 51 Cal. 531; but its exercise may bind the firm if such dissolution be without proper notice; Stimson v. Whitney, 130 Mass. 591; or when the other party subsequently assents thereto; Norton v. Oil Can Co., 98 Ga. 468, 25 S. E. 501.

The doctrine is generally limited to partnerships in trade and commerce, and does not apply to other partnerships, unless it is the common usage of such business so to bind the firm, or it is necessary for the due transaction thereof; Dowling v. Bank, 145 U. S. 512, 12 Sup. Ct. 923, 36 L. Ed. 795. Non-trading partners, such as farmers; Ulery v. Ginrich, 57 Ill. 531; lawyers; Smith v. Sloan, 37 Wis. 285, 19 Am. Rep. 757; physicians; Crosthwait v. Ross, 1 Humph. (Tenn.) 23, 34 Am. Dec. 613; cannot usually bind the firm by such instruments. Parties dealing with non-trading partnerships are put on inquiry; Pooley v. Whitmore, 10 Helsk. (Tenn.) 629, 27 Am. Rep. 733; Benedict v. Thompson, 33 La. Ann. 196; the doctrine of general agency does not apply; Pease v. Cole, 53 Conn. 53, 22 Atl. 681, 55 Am. Rep. 53.

A bill or note made by one partner in the name of the firm is prima facie for partnership purposes; Carrier v. Cameron, 31 Mich. 373, 18 Am. Rep. 192; Hogg v. Orgill, 34 Pa. 344; Faler v. Jordan, 44 Miss. 283.

A partner has no implied authority to indorse a note made payable to a co-partner, although for firm account; McCauley v. Gordon, 64 Ga. 221, 37 Am. Rep. 68; nor to bind the firm as a party to a note for the accommodation of or as surety for another; Van Dyke v. Seelye, 49 Minn. 557, 52 N. W. 215; Presbrey v. Thomas, 1 App. D. C. 171; unless by special authority implied from the nature of the business or previous course of dealing; 3 Kent 46; Bank of Tennessee v. Saffarrans, 3 Humph. (Tenn.) 597; Austin v. Vandermark, 4 Hill (N. Y.) 261; and the burden is on the holder of the instrument to show such authority; Foot v. Sabin, 19 Johns. (N. Y.) 154, 10 Am. Dec. 208; Mechanics' Bk. v. Barnes, 86 Mich. 632, 49 N. W. 475; Mayer v. Bernstein, 69 Miss. 17, 12 South. 257; nor can a partner bind the firm by a guaranty of payment of a bill of exchange; 3 Camp. 478; Lemke v. Faustmann, 124 Ill. App. 624.

Direct proof is not necessary; the authority or ratification may be inferred from circumstances; Sweetser v. French, 2 Cush. (Mass.) 309, 48 Am. Dec. 666; Darling v. March, 22 Me. 188; Jones v. Booth, 10 Vt. 268. Indorsement of a note for a third person by a partner in the firm name without the knowledge of the other member of the firm and having no connection with its business, does not bind the firm; Bank of Ft. Madison v. Alden, 129 U. S. 372, 9 Sup. Ct. 332, 32 L. Ed. 725.

Borrowing money. One partner may borrow money on the credit of the firm, when it is necessary for the transaction of the business in the ordinary way; Smith v. Collins, 115 Mass. 388; Hoskinson v. Eliot, 62 Pa. 393; Pahlman v. Taylor, 75 Ill. 629; Wagner v. Simmons & Co., 61 Ala. 143; Union Nat. Bk. v. Neill, 149 Fed. 711, 70 C. C. A. 417, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 426; Sherwood v. Snow, Foote & Co., 46 Ia. 481, 26 Am. Rep. 155; but the amount must be within the usual business of the firm; Pars. (Jas.) Partn. § 125; but a partner in a cash business, as a firm of solicitors, cannot borrow; Smith v. Sloan, 37 Wis. 285, 19 Am. Rep. 757; or physicians; Humph. 23. It is said that a partner cannot borrow to increase the firm's capital; 2 Hare 218. A contract to borrow money in violation of a partnership agreement is not valid, though made in furtherance of the interests of the firm; King v. Levy (Miss.) 13 So. 282.

Checks. One partner has the implied power to bind the firm by firm checks drawn on its bankers; 3 C. B. N. S. 442. Such checks must not be post-dated; L. R. 6 Q. B. 209.

Compromise. A partner may compromise with debtors or creditors of the firm; Story, Partn. § 115; Noyes v. R. Co., 30 Conn. 1; Doremus v. McCormick, 7 Gill (Md.) 49.

Confession of judgment. One partner cannot, by confessing a voluntary judgment against the firm, bind his co-partners; Miller v. Glass Works, 172 Pa. 70, 33 Atl. 350; Morgan v. Richardson, 16 Mo. 409, 57 Am. Dec. 235; Hier v. Kaufman, 134 Ill. 215, 25 N. E. 517. But a judgment so confessed will bind the partner who confessed it; 3 C. B. 742; Franklin v. Morris, 154 Pa. 152, 26 Atl. 364; North v. Mudge, 13 Ia. 496, 81 Am. Dec. 441; Shedd v. Bank, 32 Vt. 709; Conery v. Rotchford, 30 La. Ann. 692; but see Clark v. Bowen, 22 How. (U. S.) 270, 16 L. Ed. 337; and will bind the firm assets; see Wilmot v. The Ouachita Belle, 32 La. Ann. 607, where it was held that a "commercial partner" has a right to confess judgment on behalf of the firm. Only the other partner can object to it; Farwell v. Cook, 42 Ill. App. 291. Where a judgment note has been signed in the firm name only, the plaintiff may name the individual members, and judgment may be entered in this form; Miller v. Glass Works, 172 Pa. 70, 33 Atl. 350.

Contracts. A partner has the power to bind the firm by simple contracts within the scope of the partnership business; Winship v. Bank, 5 Pet. (U. S.) 529, 8 L. Ed. 216; and make a contract which will bind them as partners and also as individuals; Morris v. Neel, 78 Ga. 797, 3 S. E. 643; but not a contract to convey firm real estate; Lawrence v. Taylor, 5 Hill (N. Y.) 107.

Debts. One partner may receive debts due the firm, and payment to him by the debtor extinguishes the claim; Yandes v. Lefavour, 2 Blackf. (Ind.) 371; Salmon v. Davis, 4 Binn. (Pa.) 375, 5 Am. Dec. 410; even after dissolution; 15 Ves. 198; although the debtor knew there was an agreement that one party alone was to collect and pay the debts; Hansen v. Miller, 44 Ill. App. 550. A partner may also bind the firm by assenting to the transfer of a debt due to it, as the transfer of the firm's account from one banker to another; 2 H. & N. 326. A partner cannot employ partnership funds to pay his own pre-existing debt, without the consent of his co-partners; Filley v. Phelps, 18 Conn. 294; Thomas v. Pennrich, 28 Ohio St. 55; Huiskamp v. Wagon Co., 121 U. S. 310, 7 Sup. Ct. 899, 30 L. Ed. 971. But in Blair v. Harrison, 57 Fed. 257, 6 C. C. A. 326, it was held that one of two co-partners could pledge the partnership property to secure his private debts, to the extent of his interest therein.

Of course, the power to receive money implies the power to receipt for the firm; Story, Partn. § 115.

Deeds. One partner has no implied authority to bind his co-partners by a deed, even for a debt or obligation contracted in the ordinary course of commercial dealings within the scope of the partnership business; 3 Kent 47; McNaughten v. Partridge, 11 Ohio 223, 38 Am. Dec. 731; McDonald v. Eggleston, 26 Vt. 154, 60 Am. Dec. 303. Such an instrument binds the maker only; Hoskinson v. Eliot, 62 Pa. 393. But such a deed may be ratified; Wilcox v. Dodge, 12 Ill. App. 517; and this consent or adoption may be by parol; McDonald v. Eggleston, 26 Vt. 154, 60 Am. Dec. 303; Cady v. Shepherd, 11 Pick. (Mass.) 400, 22 Am. Dec. 379. It binds the firm if they were present at the execution; 3 Ves. 578. The fact that the partnership articles are under seal does not give such authority; 7 Term 297; unless they contain a particular power to that effect; id. One partner may convey by deed property of the firm which he might have conveyed without deed. The seal in such a case would be surplusage; Purviance v. Sutherland, 2 Ohio St. 478; Lawrence v. Taylor, 5 Hill (N. Y.) 107; Milton v. Mosher, 7 Metc. (Mass.) 244; he may assign a mortgage in payment of a firm debt, or release a mortgage; Smith v. Stone, 4 Gill & J. (Md.) 310; Halsey v. Fairbanks, 4 Mas. 206, Fed. Cas. No. 5,964. See infra under Release. One partner may acknowledge a deed for the firm; Sloan v. Machine Co., 70 Mo. 206.

So a partner may sometimes execute under seal a paper, as a charter party, which "is exclusively a mercantile transaction, and always in the course of trade"; T. U. P. Charlt. 163, 4 Am. Dec. 705; or a release of a firm debt, as incident to the power to collect it; 2 Co. 68; per Kent, C. J., in Pierston v. Hooker, 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 68, 3 Am. Dec. 467; Allen v. Cheever, 61 N. H. 32; Dyer v. Sutherland, 75 Ill. 583; Smith v. Stone, 4 Gill & J. (Md.) 310; Fluck v. Bond, 3 Phila. (Pa.) 207; Foster's Curator v. Risson, 17 Gratt. (Va.) 321; but see Brayley v. Goff, 40 Ia. 76; and though not originally valid to bind the firm it may be made so by previous authority or ratification; Sterling v. Bock, 40 Minn. 11, 41 N. W. 236; see Fore v. Hitson, 70 Tex. 517, 8 S. W. 292; which may be implied from circumstances; McDonald v. Eggleston, 26 Vt. 154, 60 Am. Dec. 303. Such release is not effective if made in consideration of a debt due to the partner himself; Gram v. Cadwell, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 489; nor if made by one of a legal firm; Remington v. R. Co., 109 Wis. 154, 84 N. W. 898, 85 N. W. 321. As a release by one partner is a release by all; Wood v. Goss, 21 Ill. 604; Thrall v. Seward, 37 Vt. 573; so a release to one partner is a release to all; Clagett v. Salmon, 5 Gill & J. (Md.) 314; Wiggin v. Tudor, 23 Pick. (Mass.) 444.

Distress. Where a lease has been granted by the firm, any partner may distrain or appoint a bailiff to do so; 4 Bing. 562, and cases there cited.

Firm property. Each partner has the power to dispose of the entire right of his copartners in the partnership effects, for the purposes of the partnership business and in the name of the firm; Story, Part. § 9; Lambert's Case, Godb. 244; Arnold v. Brown, 24 Pick. (Mass.) 89, 35 Am. Dec. 296; Graser v. Stellwagen, 25 N. Y. 315; Tapley v. Butterfield, 1 Metc. (Mass.) 515, 35 Am. Dec. 374; and the fact that he appropriated the price to the payment of private debts did not invalidate the sale as against a creditor of the partnership; Arnold v. Brown, 24 Pick. (Mass.) 89, 35 Am. Dec. 296; but this general power seems to be modified by modern cases so as to limit it to sales made in the course of, or in furtherance of, the partnership business; Creath v. Kolb, 70 Mo. App. 296; Freeman v. Abramson, 30 Misc. 101, 61 N. Y. Supp. 839; and in some states such blanket sales are forbidden by statute; Doll v. Mercantile Co., 33 Mont. 80, 81 Pac. 625; Phillips v. Thorp, 12 Okl. 617, 73 Pac. 268. See SALES. A bona fide sale of all the partnership effects by one partner to another is valid, although the firm and both partners are at the time insolvent; Howe v. Lawrence, 9 Cush. (Mass.) 553, 57 Am. Dec. 68; Allen v. Center Valley Co., 21 Conn. 130, 54 Am. Dec. 333; Ferson v. Monroe, 21 N. H. 462. But an insolvent partner was enjoined from selling the property pending an accounting; Taylor v. Russell, 119 N. C. 30, 25 S. E. 510.

This power is held not to extend to real estate, which a single partner cannot transfer without special authority; Story, Part. § 101; Anderson v. Tompkins, 1 Brock. 456, Fed. Cas. No. 365; Platt v. Oliver, 3 McLean, 27, Fed. Cas. No. 11,116. Since the power to transfer the firm property must be exercised for the ordinary purposes of the partnership business, it is held that a partner's employment of firm capital in a new partnership, which he forms for his firm with third persons charges him for a conversion of the fund to his own use; Reis v. Hellman, 25 Ohio St. 180.

Guarantees. A partner derives no authority from the mere relation of partnership to bind the firm as guarantor of the debt of another; 4 Exch. 623; Rollins v. Stevens, 31 Me. 454; Langan v. Hewett, 13 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 122; McQuewans v. Hamlin, 35 Pa. 517. If the contract of guaranty is strictly within the scope of the firm business, one partner may bind the firm by it; First N. Bk. v. Carpenter, Stibbs & Co., 41 Ia. 518; or if guaranty is usual in that kind of business or is such as the firm has frequently recognized; Pars. Partn. § 144; and where a partner sold notes and applied the proceeds to firm use; Sweet v. Bradley, 24 Barb. (N. Y.) 549.

Insurance. One partner may effect an insurance of the partnership goods; 1 M. & G. 130; Hillock v. Ins. Co., 54 Mich. 531, 20 N. W. 571. The assignment of a partner's interest in the firm stock without the insurer's consent, does not violate a policy of insurance upon it; West v. Ins. Co., 27 Ohio St. 1, 22 Am. Rep. 294.

Leases. The rule is that a partner has no power to contract on behalf of the firm for a lease of a building for partnership purposes; 22 Beav. 606. But it is held that a partner may bind the firm for the rent of premises necessary for partnership purposes, and so used; Stillman v. Harvey, 47 Conn. 26; but see 22 Beav. 606. A partner can give a valid notice to quit; 1 B. & Ad. 135.

Statute of limitations. Before dissolution an acknowledgment by one partner of a debt barred by the statute will bind the firm; Pars. Part. § 127; as to whether it will do so, if made after dissolution, the authorities are conflicting; the better view appears to be that it will not; id.; Cronkhite v. Herrin, 15 Fed. 888; Espy v. Comer, 76 Ala. 501; Mayberry v. Willoughby, 5 Neb. 368, 25 Am. Rep. 491; some cases distinguish between acknowledgments made before and after the statutory period has run; if made after, it does not bind; Newman v. McComas, 43 Md. 70; if made before, it does; Beardsley v. Hall, 36 Conn. 270, 4 Am. Rep. 74; McClurg v. Howard, 45 Mo. 365, 100 Am. Dec. 378. Some cases hold that it binds though made after dissolution and after the statutory period has run; Mix v. Shattuck, 50 Vt. 421, 28 Am. Rep. 511; Brockenbrough v. Hackley, 6 Call (Va.) 51. If made after dissolution by a liquidating partner, it is binding; Houser v. Irvine, 3 W. & S. (Pa.) 345, 38 Am. Dec. 768; but not otherwise; Wilson v. Waugh, 101 Pa. 233. In England and in many states statutes have rendered the acknowledgment of one partner insufficient to toll the statute.

Majority, power of. The weight of authority seems to be in favor of the power of a majority of the firm, acting in good faith, to bind the minority in the ordinary transactions of the partnership business; 3 Kent 45; 33 Beav. 595; Peacock v. Cummings, 46 Pa. 434; Johnston v. Dutton's Adm'r, 27 Ala. 245; Campbell v. Bowen, 49 Ga. 417. But see 1 Yo. & Jer. 227; Yeager v. Wallace, 57 Pa. 365. It is said that, in the absence of an express stipulation, a majority may decide as to the disposal of the partnership property; 3 Chitty, Com. L. 234; but the power of the majority must be confined to the ordinary business of the partnership; 14 Beav. 367; 2 De G. M. & G. 49; it does not extend to the right to change any of the provisions therein; Abbot v. Johnson, 32 N. H. 9; nor to engage the partnership in transactions for which it was never intended; 3 Maule & S. 488; and all must be consulted; Western Stage Co. v. Walker, 2 Ia. 504, 65 Am. Dec. 789. Where a majority is authorized to act, it must be fairly constituted and must proceed with the most entire good faith; 10 Hare 493; 5 De G. & S. 310. A majority cannot change the place of business after a lease has expired; 8 Ch. Div. 129. The American cases are said to have enlarged the power of the majority; Pars. Partn. § 147; but the question is not clearly settled; id.

Mortgages. A partner has no implied power to make a mortgage of partnership real estate; Lind. Part., 2d Am. ed. *139; Napier v. Catron, 2 Humph. (Tenn.) 534; Cottle v. Harrold, 72 Ga. 830; Hardin v. Dolge, 46 App. Div. 416, 61 N. Y. Supp. 753; McGahan v. Bank, 156 U. S. 218, 15 Sup. Ct. 347, 39 L. Ed. 403. See Horton v. Bloedorn, 37 Neb. 666, 56 N. W. 321. But one partner may execute a valid chattel mortgage of firm property, without the consent of his co-partners; Hembree v. Blackburn, 16 Or. 153, 19 Pac. 73; Williams v. Gillespie, 30 W. Va. 586, 5 S. E. 210; McCarthy v. Seisler, 130 Ind. 63, 29 N. E. 407; Rock v. Collins, 99 Wis. 630, 75 N. W. 426, 67 Am. St. Rep. 885; Union N. Bk. v. Bank, 136 U. S. 223, 10 Sup. Ct. 1013, 34 L. Ed. 341; Beckman v. Noble, 115 Mich. 523, 73 N. W. 803. The power to pledge results by implication from the power to borrow money on the firm's credit; George v. Tate, 102 U. S. 564, 26 L. Ed. 232; Harris v. Baltimore, 73 Md. 22, 17 Atl. 1046, 20 Atl. 111, 8 L. R. A. 677, 25 Am. St. Rep. 565.

A deed of trust of partnership property to secure certain creditors to the exclusion of others will bind the partnership, though executed by only two out of three partners; Union N. Bk. v. Bank, 136 U. S. 223, 10 Sup. Ct. 1013, 34 L. Ed. 341. Two or three members of a firm have authority to mortgage partnership stock for the security of the debts of the firm; Southern White Lead Co. v. Haas, 73 Ia. 399, 33 N. W. 657, 35 N. W. 494. A mortgage by one partner of the whole stock in trade to secure a firm debt has been held valid; Tapley v. Butterfield, 1 Metc. (Mass.) 515, 35 Am. Dec. 374.

Pledges of firm property. A partner may pledge its personal property to raise money for the firm; 3 Kent 46; 10 Hare 453; 7 M. & G. 607; 3 Bradw. 261. It is thought that a partner's equitable mortgage of firm real estate, by depositing deeds of partnership property as a pledge, would be valid; Lind. Part., 2d Am. ed. *140.

Purchases. A partner may bind the firm by purchasing on credit such goods as are necessary for carrying on the business in the usual way; 1 Camp. 185; Feigley v. Sponeberger, 5 W. & S. (Pa.) 564; Baker v. Napier, 19 Ga. 520; Johnson v. Bernheim, 76 N. C. 139; even land; Davis v. Cook, 14 Nev. 265; but see Judge v. Braswell, 13 Bush (Ky.) 67, 26 Am. Rep. 185.

Servants. One partner has the implied power to hire servants for partnership purposes; 9 M. & W. 79; Appeal of Moist's Adm'rs, 74 Pa. 166; and probably to discharge them, though not against the will of his co-partner; Lind. Part., 2d Am. ed. *147.

Specialties. As a rule, the relation of partnership gives a partner no authority to bind his co-partners by specialty; Story, Part. § 117; and see Deeds and Mortgages, supra. But he may bind his firm by an executed contract under seal, because the firm is really bound by the act, and the seal is merely evidence; Appeal of Dubois, 38 Pa. 231, 80 Am. Dec. 478. If the seal was not necessary, it will be regarded as surplusage; as in an assignment for creditors; Harrison v. Sterry, 5 Cra. (U. S.) 289, 3 L. Ed. 104; a mortgage of firm chattels; Milton v. Mosher, 7 Metc. (Mass.) 244; an assignment of a chose in action due the firm; Everit v. Strong, 5 Hill (N. Y.) 163. A lender may disregard a specialty executed by one partner, for a loan, and recover from the firm in assumpsit; Walsh v. Lennon, 98 Ill. 27, 38 Am. Rep. 75.

Warranties. It is laid down as a general rule that a power to sell does not carry with it the implied authority to bind the firm by a warranty; Pars. Part. 4th ed. § 144. But if the partner has power to sell, his warranty would probably bind the firm; Pars. Partn. § 144; Sweet v. Bradley, 24 Barb. (N. Y.) 549.

LIABILITIES OF PARTNERS. General Rule. If an act is done by one partner on behalf of the firm, and it can be said to have been necessary for the carrying on of the partnership business in the ordinary way, the firm will prima facie be liable, although in point of fact the act was not authorized by the other partners; but if the act cannot be said to have been necessary for the carrying on of the partnership business in the ordinary way, the firm will prima facie not be liable; 10 B. & C. 128; 14 M. & W. 11. As to reason for such liability, see Powers, supra.

Agreements inter se. No arrangement between the partners themselves can limit or prevent their ordinary responsibilities to third persons, unless the latter assent to such arrangement; 2 B. & Ald. 679; 3 Kent 41; Winship v. Bank, 5 Pet. (U. S.) 529, 8 L. Ed. 216; 3 B. & C. 427. But where the creditor has express notice of a private arrangement between the partners, by which either the power of one to bind the firm or his liability on partnership contracts is qualified or defeated, such creditor will be bound by the arrangement; Baxter v. Clark, 26 N. C. 129; Bromley v. Elliot, 38 N. H. 287, 75 Am. Dec. 182; Bailey v. Clark, 6 Pick. (Mass.) 372; Livingston v. Roosevelt, 4 Johns. (N. Y.) 251, 4 Am. Dec. 273; 5 Bro. P. C. 489.

Attachment. A partner's interest in a firm is liable to attachment by his creditors; 7 C. B. 229; Moody v. Payne, 2 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 548; Morrison v. Blodgett, 8 N. H. 252, 29 Am. Dec. 653; but one partner cannot maintain an attachment against the firm of which he is a member; Newsom v. Pitman, 98 Ala. 526, 12 South. 412.

Contribution. A partner's contribution to the capital of his firm is a partnership debt for the repayment of which each partner is liable on an accounting and after payment of debts; Whitcomb v. Converse, 119 Mass. 38, 20 Am. Rep. 311. Failure of a partner to pay his contribution in full does not entitle his co-partner to exclude him from the business without a dissolution; Hartman v. Woehr, 18 N. J. Eq. 385.

Debts. Each partner is liable to pay the whole partnership debts. In what proportion the partners shall contribute is a matter merely among themselves; 5 Burr. 2613. Universally, whatever agreement may exist among the partners themselves, stipulating for a restricted responsibility, and however limited may be the extent of his own separate beneficial interest in, and however numerous the members of, the partnership, each individual member is liable for the joint debt; 5 Burr. 2611; Gill v. Kuhn, 6 S. & R. (Pa.) 333; Gardner v. Conn, 34 Ohio St. 187. In Louisiana, ordinary partners are not bound in solido for the debts of the partnership; La. Civ. Code, art. 28; though commercial partners who deal in personal property are bound in solido; a partner is bound for his share of the partnership debts, calculating such share in proportion to the number of partners, without attention to the proportion of the stock or profits each is entitled to; id. art. 2873. In equity, partnership debts are regarded as both joint and several; Greene v. Butterworth, 45 N. J. Eq. 738, 17 Atl. 949.

An incoming partner is not liable for the debts of the firm incurred before he became a member, unless he assumes them by agreement; Babcock v. Stewart, 58 Pa. 179; Wright v. Brosseau, 73 Ill. 381; Rohlfing v. Carper, 53 Kan. 251, 36 Pac. 336; Ringo v. Wing, 49 Ark. 457, 5 S. W. 787; Smith v. Millard, 77 Cal. 440, 19 Pac. 824. But a retiring partner remains liable for the outstanding debts of the firm; 4 Russ. 430.

Dormant partners. Dormant partners are, when discovered, equally liable with those who are held out to the world as partners, upon contracts made during the time they participate in the profits of the business; 1 Cr. & J. 316; Etheridge v. Binney, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 272; Winship v. Bank, 5 Pet. (U. S.) 529, 8 L. Ed. 216; Mitchell v. Dall, 2 Harr. & G. (Md.) 159; Schmidt v. Ittman, 46 La. Ann. 894, 15 South. 310; 5 Ch. Div. 458; Wm. L. Allen & Co. v. Davids, 70 S. C. 260, 49 S. E. 846.

This liability is said to be founded on their participation in the profits; Winship v. Bank, 5 Pet. (U. S.) 574, 8 L. Ed. 216; Dob v. Halsey, 16 Johns. (N. Y.) 40, 8 Am. Dec. 293; 1 H. Bla. 31. Another reason given for holding them liable is that they might otherwise receive usurious interest without any risk; 4 B. & Ald. 663; Muzzy v. Whitney, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 226. But inasmuch as a dormant partner differs from an ostensible partner only in being unknown as such, the liability of each must be owing to the same cause, viz.: that they are principals in the business, the dormant partner being undisclosed; L. R. 7 Ex. 218. Sharing profits is simply evidence of this relation; 5 Ch. Div. 458; and the usurious interest theory is so palpably illogical that it has never been accepted to any extent; 2 W. Bla. 997.

So long as he is unknown he may retire "without giving notice to the world"; 1 B. & Ad. 11; Nussbaumer v. Becker, 87 Ill. 281, 29 Am. Rep. 53; Magill v. Merrie, 5 B. Mon. (Ky.) 168; Deford v. Reynolds, 36 Pa. 325; but when known to any persons he ceases to be dormant as to them and must give them notice of retirement; 1 C. & K. 580; Lieb v. Craddock, 87 Ky. 525, 9 S. W. 838; Park v. Wooten's Ex'rs, 35 Ala. 242; and if known to many, such notice must be the same as of a general partner; Elmira I. & S. R. M. Co. v. Harris, 124 N. Y. 280, 26 N. E. 541.

Dower. It has been held that a partner's widow is entitled to dower in firm lands subject to the equities of the parties; Campbell v. Campbell, 30 N. J. Eq. 415. Firm debts are a lien on partnership lands paramount to a widow's right of dower; Sumner v. Hampson, 8 Ohio 328, 32 Am. Dec. 722; Simpson v. Leech, 86 Ill. 286; where partnership land is sold to pay debts, the widow of a partner has no dower; Willett v. Brown, 65 Mo. 138, 27 Am. Rep. 265; but contra, Bowman v. Bailey, 20 S. C. 550; Markham v. Merrett, 7 How. (Miss.) 437, 40 Am. Dec. 76. Where the firm debts are all paid the dower revives; Brewer v. Browne, 68 Ala. 210.

The general result of American cases is that dower does not attach to firm real estate until it has served all the purposes of the partnership and then so much as remains in specie, unconverted, becomes individual real estate, subject to dower; Woodward-Holmes Co. v. Nudd, 58 Minn. 236, 59 N. W. 1010, 27 L. R. A. 340, 49 Am. St. Rep. 503; Walling v. Burgess, 122 Ind. 299, 22 N. E. 419, 23 N. E. 1076, 7 L. R. A. 481; Hauptmann v. Hauptmann, 91 App. Div. 197, 86 N. Y. Supp. 427; as to what descends to the heir there is dower; Perin v. Megibben, 53 Fed. 86, 3 C. C. A. 443; Galbraith v. Tracy, 153 Ill. 54, 38 N. E. 937, 28 L. R. A. 129, 46 Am. St. Rep. 867; Huston v. Neil, 41 Ind. 504; Greenwood v. Marvin, 111 N. Y. 423, 19 N. E. 228; Mowry v. Bradley, 11 R. I. 370. In some states dower attaches at once and the wife must join in a deed; Dyer v. Clark, 5 Metc. (Mass.) 562, 39 Am. Dec. 697; Bowman v. Bailey, 20 S. C. 553; Lenow v. Fones, 48 Ark. 557, 4 S. W. 56; Collins v. Warren, 29 Mo. 236; and see Gilmore, Partn. § 51, for cases on the subject.

Firm funds. A partner who withdraws firm funds from the business, thereby diminishing the stock, and applies them to his own use, is liable to the others for the injury; Honore v. Colmesnil, 1 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 507; Kelley v. Greenleaf, 3 Sto. 101, Fed. Cas. No. 7,657; and funds so used by a partner may be followed into his investments; Shaler v. Trowbridge, 28 N. J. Eq. 595.

Fraud. One partner will be bound by the fraud of his co-partner in contracts relating to the affairs of the partnership, made with innocent third persons; 2 Cl. & F. 250; Jackson v. Todd, 56 Ind. 406; Wright v. Brosseau, 73 Ill. 381; Chester v. Dickerson, 54 N. Y. 1, 13 Am. Rep. 550; Banner v. Schlessinger, 109 Mich. 262, 67 N. W. 116.

This doctrine proceeds upon the ground that where one of two innocent persons must suffer by the act of a third person, he shall suffer who has been the cause or the occasion of the confidence and credit reposed in such third person; Locke v. Stearns, 1 Metc. (Mass.) 562, 563, 35 Am. Dec. 382. The liability, therefore, does not arise when there is collusion between the fraudulent partner and the party with whom he deals; 1 East 48; or the latter has reason to suppose that the partner is acting on his own account; 2 C. B. 821; 10 B. & C. 298. See infra.

Not only gross frauds, but intrigues for private benefit, are clearly offences against the partnership at large, and, as such, are relievable in a court of equity; 3 Kent 51, 52; 1 Sim. 52, 89.

A fraud committed by a partner (in a law firm) while acting on his own separate account is not imputable to the firm, although, had he not been a member of the firm, he would not have been in a position to commit the fraud; Andrews v. De Forest, 22 App. Div. 132, 47 N. Y. Supp. 1011.

Insolvency. It has been held that the discharge of the partners in insolvency, as individuals, does not relieve them from liability for the firm debts; Glenn v. Arnold, 56 Cal. 631.

The United States bankrupt law of 1898 provides that partnership property shall not be administered in bankruptcy, unless all of the members have been adjudged bankrupt or the consent is given of those who have not been, and this has been held to apply only where all the partners were bankrupt; In re Mercur, 122 Fed. 384, 58 C. C. A. 472. The act also provides for bankruptcy of a partnership, even though each member of the firm had been adjudicated bankrupt. A discharge of an individual partner in bankruptcy discharges him from liability on partnership obligations; In re Kaufman, 136 Fed. 262.

Judgments. The rule is that a judgment obtained against one partner on a firm liability is a bar to an action against his co-partners on the same obligation; 3 De G. &

J. 33; Moale v. Hollins, 11 Gill & J. (Md.) 11, 33 Am. Dec. 684; Williams v. Rogers, 14 Bush (Ky.) 777; see contra, except when they are abroad and cannot be sued with effect; Lind. Part., 2d Am. ed. *255; Yoho v. McGovern, 42 Ohio St. 11; 4 De G. & S. 199; and this is so even if the other partners were not known to him. But in Pennsylvania and other states this rule is changed by statute, and what are termed the "Joint Debtor Acts" are held to apply to partnership debts and under them a judgment which is not against all of the partners does not extinguish the obligation of those not joined; Hall v. Lanning, 91 U. S. 160, 23 L. Ed. 271; Mason v. Eldred, 6 Wall. (U. S.) 231, 18 L. Ed. 783 (changing the rule of Sheehy v. Mandeville, 6 Cra. [U. S.] 254, 3 L. Ed. 215).

Where one partner is sued and judgment is given for him, the creditor may still have recourse to the others; 2 H. & C. 717.

Mismanagement. As a rule, a partner is not liable to the firm for the mismanagement of its business; Houston v. Polk, 124 Ga. 103, 52 S. E. 83; Peters v. McWilliams, 78 Va. 567; Lyons v. Lyons, 207 Pa. 7, 56 Atl. 54, 99 Am. St. Rep. 779; see infra, Torts. Because it is unreasonable to hold a partner, who acts fairly and for the best interests of the firm according to his judgment, liable for a loss thus unwittingly occasioned; Lyles v. Styles, 2 Wash. C. C. 224, Fed. Cas. No. 8,625. So for a loss caused by his culpable negligence or breach of duty, a partner is personally liable in an accounting between the members of the firm; Childers v. Neely, 47 W. Va. 70, 34 S. E. 828, 49 L. R. A. 468, 81 Am. St. Rep. 777; Finn v. Young, 50 Wash. 543, 97 Pac. 741; though not for mere omission or neglect; Iman v. Inkster, 90 Neb. 704, 134 N. W. 265; Northern v. Tatum, 164 Ala. 368, 51 South. 17.

Notice. A retiring ostensible partner remains liable to persons who have had dealings with the firm and who have no notice of his retirement; Stewart v. Sonneborn, 51 Ala. 126; Stall v. Cassady, 57 Ind. 284; Shamburg v. Ruggles, 83 Pa. 148. Some cases hold that the retiring partner becomes, as to creditors who have notice of the agreement of another partner to assume the debts, a surety merely and entitled to the rights of one; Smith v. Sheldon, 35 Mich. 42, 24 Am. Rep. 529; Preston v. Garrard, 120 Ga. 689, 48 S. E. 118, 102 Am. St. Rep. 124, 1 Ann. Cas. 724; Millerd v. Thorne, 56 N. Y. 402; [1894] App. Cas. 586; while in other cases it is held that the debtors cannot change their relations to the debt without the consent of the creditors; McAreavy v. Magril, 123 Ia. 605, 99 N. W. 193; and therefore the agreement between the partners cannot change their liability as principal debtors; McAreavy v. Magril, 123 Ia. 605, 99 N. W. 193; Dean & Co. v. Collins, 15 N. D. 535, 108 N. W. 242, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 49, 125 Am.

St. Rep. 610, 11 Ann. Cas. 1027; Rawson v. Taylor, 30 Ohio St. 389, 27 Am. Rep. 464. Another view is that a creditor having knowledge of the agreement must exercise reasonable diligence and good faith in enforcing his right against the partner who assumed the debts; Grotte v. Weil, 62 Neb. 478, 87 N. W. 173.

Actual notice by the retiring partner is not necessary to escape liability to new customers; Wade, Notice 226; Pars. Part. § 317; even though the business is continued in the same firm name; Cook v. State Co., 36 Ohio St. 135, 38 Am. Rep. 568. As a general rule, notice to one partner of any matters relating to the business of the firm is notice to all; Howland v. Davis, 40 Mich. 546; Gowan v. Jackson, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 176; Hubbard v. Galusha, 23 Wis. 398; even if two firms have a common partner; West Branch Bk. v. Fulmer, 3 Pa. 399, 45 Am. Dec. 651.

Surviving partner. The surviving partner stands chargeable with the partnership debts, and takes the partnership property by survivorship, for all purposes of holding and administering the estate, until the effects are reduced to money and the debts paid; 3 Kent 37; Egberts v. Woods, 3 Paige Ch. (N. Y.) 527, 24 Am. Dec. 236; In re F. Dobert & Son, 165 Fed. 749; Word v. Word, 90 Ala. 81, 7 South. 412; Hamlin v. Mansfield, 88 Me. 131, 33 Atl. 788.

The debts of the partnership must be collected in his name; Murray v. Mumford, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 441; 3 Kent 37; Burnside v. Merrick, 4 Metc. (Mass.) 540. He has full power to control and dispose of the firm assets for the purpose of winding up its affairs and may secure a firm creditor by the execution of a mortgage, which is not invalid by reason of the fact that it also secures money borrowed by him after the death of his partner, if used for the partnership debts; Burchinell v. Koon, 8 Colo. App. 463, 46 Pac. 932. He has power to make an assignment for the benefit of firm creditors with preferences; Emerson v. Senter, 118 U. S. 3, 6 Sup. Ct. 981, 30 L. Ed. 49.

Torts. The firm is not liable for the torts of a partner committed outside of the usual course of the business, unless they are assented to or adopted by its members; Taylor v. Jones, 42 N. H. 25; Durant v. Rogers, 87 Ill. 508; Graham v. Meyer, 4 Blatchf. 129, Fed. Cas. No. 5,673; Heirn v. McCaughan, 32 Miss. 17, 66 Am. Dec. 588; otherwise, in regard to torts committed in conducting the affairs of the partnership or those assented to by the firm; 1 Q. B. 396; Haase v. Morton, 138 Ia. 205, 115 N. W. 921, 16 Ann. Cas. 350; as for the negligent driving of a coach by a member of a firm of coach proprietors; 4 B. & C. 223; or where one member of a firm of butchers left meat where it was eaten by a dog who died from the effect of it; Dudley v. Love, 60 Mo. App. 420; or for the negligence of a servant employed by the firm while transacting its business; Linton v. Hurley, 14 Gray (Mass.) 191; or for the conversion of property by a partner, to be appropriated to the use of the firm; Durant v. Rogers, 87 Ill. 508; or for obtaining goods by false pretences and fraudulently disposing of them; Banner v. Schlessinger, 109 Mich. 262, 67 N. W. 116. Demand of, and a refusal by, one partner to deliver up property is evidence of a conversion by the firm; Holbrook v. Wight, 24 Wend. (N. Y.) 169, 35 Am. Dec. 607; Nisbet v. Patton, 4 Rawle (Pa.) 120, 26 Am. Dec. 122. A partnership may be liable for the publication of a libel; Lothrop v. Adams, 133 Mass. 471, 43 Am. Rep. 528; Haney Mfg. Co. v. Perkins, 78 Mich. 1, 43 N. W. 1073; Atlantic Glass Co. v. Paulk, 83 Ala. 404, 3 South. 800. If the firm is liable for the tort of a partner, each partner is liable in solido; Pars. Partn. § 100; and all or one or more may be sued; Wisconsin Cent. R. Co. v. Ross, 142 Ill. 9, 31 N. E. 412, 34 Am. St. Rep. 49.

It has been held that the fraud of one partner does not charge the firm; Pierce v. Jackson, 6 Mass. 245; without participation by the firm; Sherwood v. Marwick, 5 Greenl. (Me.) 295 (but see as to these cases Locke v. Stearns, 1 Metc. [Mass.] 564, 35 Am. Dec. 382); and that it is not liable for malicious prosecution instituted by one partner for the larceny of firm property, unless the others participated in the prosecution; Marks v. Hastings, 101 Ala. 165, 13 South. 297; or where a partner converted property to his own use; Townsend v. Hagar, 72 Fed. 949, 19 C. C. A. 256; Stokes v. Burney, 3 Tex. Civ. App. 219, 22 S. W. 126; or where without consultation he instigated malicious prosecution for an offence against the firm; Marks v. Hastings, 101 Ala. 165, 13 South. 297; Farrell v. Friedlander, 63 Hun 254, 18 N. Y. Supp. 215. A loss resulting from violation of the articles, gross negligence, fraud or wanton misconduct of a partner in the firm business, must be borne by him; Devall v. Burbridge, 6 W. & S. (Pa.) 529; 1 Sim. 89; but not if it be the result, merely, of an honest mistake in judgment; Charlton v. Sloan, 76 Ia. 288, 41 N. W. 303; Morris v. Allen, 14 N. J. Eq. 44.

RIGHTS AND DUTIES. General rules. Good faith, reasonable diligence and skill, and the exercise of a sound judgment and discretion, lie at the very foundation of the relation of partnership. In this respect the same general rules apply to partners which are applicable to the other fiduciary relations; Story, Part. § 169; 14 Beav. 250; Morrison v. Smith, 81 Ill. 221; Appeal of Raiguel, 80 Pa. 234. It becomes, therefore, the implied duty of each partner to devote himself to the interests of the business, and to exercise due diligence and skill for the promotion of the common benefit of the partnership. No partner has, ordinarily, a right to engage in any business or speculation which must necessarily deprive the partnership of a portion of his skill, industry, or capital; 3 Kent 51; Long v. Majestre, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 305; 1 S. & S. 133; nor to place himself in a position which gives him a bias against the discharge of his duty; Story, Part. § 175; 1 S. & S. 124; Gratz v. Bayard, 11 S. & R. (Pa.) 41, 48; 3 Kent 61; nor to make use of the partnership property for his own private benefit; 4 Beav. 534; 1 Sim. 52; Todd v. Rafferty's Adm'rs, 30 N. J. Eq. 254; nor to make a personal profit out of any transaction connected with firm interests; Mitchell v. Reed, 61 N. Y. 123, 19 Am. Rep. 252. He cannot make a profit out of any transaction between himself and the firm; L. R. 18 Eq. 524; a partner cannot engage in any other business in which he competes with his firm; 1 S. & S. 124. But a partner may traffic outside of the scope of the firm's business for his own benefit and advantage; Latta v. Kilbourn, 150 U. S. 524, 14 Sup. Ct. 201, 37 L. Ed. 1169.

In the absence of agreement to the contrary each partner has an equal right to share in the management; Wilcox v. Pratt, 125 N. Y. 688, 25 N. E. 1091; and this right may be protected by injunction; Miller v. O'Boyle, 89 Fed. 140; Abbot v. Johnson, 32 N. H. 9.

Account in equity. Every partner has a right to an account from his co-partner, which may be enforced in equity, whereby a partner is enabled to secure the application of partnership assets to firm debts and the distribution of the surplus among the members of the firm; 8 Beav. 106; Niles v. Williams, 24 Conn. 279.

It was formerly the rule that a bill for an account would not be entertained except as incidental to obtaining a dissolution; Lord v. Hull, 178 N. Y. 9, 70 N. E. 69, 102 Am. St. Rep. 484; Childers v. Neely, 47 W. Va. 70, 34 S. E. 828, 49 L. R. A. 468, 81 Am. St. Rep. 777; but this rule has been departed from where injustice would arise from its enforcement; 32 Beav. 177; Maloney v. Crow, 11 Colo. App. 518, 53 Pac. 828; Hogan v. Walsh, 122 Ga. 283, 50 S. E. 84; Sanger v. French, 157 N. Y. 213, 51 N. E. 979; Bruns v. Heise, 101 Md. 163, 60 Atl. 604.

A silent partner may have a bill for an account; Harvey v. Varney, 98 Mass. 118. It has been held that a partner's bill for an account will be barred by the statute of limitations; Cowart v. Perrine, 18 N. J. Eq. 457. See Gray v. Green, 66 Hun 469, 21 N. Y. Supp. 533. But not for secret profits made by one partner in transacting firm business; Todd v. Rafferty's Adm'rs, 30 N. J. Eq. 254. A partner cannot maintain account against a co-partner for the profits of an illegal traffic; Dunham v. Presby, 120 Mass. 283.

Accounts to be kept. In order to give the partners information that the business is being carried on for their mutual advantage, it is the duty of each to keep an accurate account ready for inspection; 2 J. & W. 556; Story, Part. § 181.

In the absence of agreement this duty rests equally upon each partner; Morris v. Griffin, 83 Ia. 327, 49 N. W. 846; though it is usually delegated to one partner, or a clerk, in which case it is the duty of each partner to give him necessary information; Knapp v. Edwards, 57 Wis. 191, 15 N. W. 140; Kelley v. Greenleaf, 3 Sto. 105, Fed. Cas. No. 7,657.

Actions. As a general rule an action at law does not lie by one partner against his co-partners for money paid or liabilities incurred on account of the partnership, because without an account it is impossible to tell whether a partner is a debtor or creditor of the firm; Smith v. Smith, 33 Mo. 557; Bracken v. Kennedy, 3 Scam. (Ill.) 558; Payne v. Freer, 91 N. Y. 43, 43 Am. Rep. 640; Johnson v. Wilson, 54 Ill. 419. See, contra, Gow, Part. c. 2, § 3. There are, however, many circumstances under which partners may sue each other; see Story, Part. § 219.

Articles of co-partnership. Partners may enter into any agreements between themselves, which are not void as against statutory provisions or general principles of law, even though they do conflict with the ordinary rules of the law of partnership, and such engagements will be enforced between the parties; Pars. Part., 4th ed. § 160; 28 E. L. & Eq. 7.

One partner may obtain an injunction to restrain his co-partner from violating his rights under the contract of partnership, even when the dissolution of the partnership is not asked; Leavitt v. Inv. Co., 54 Fed. 439, 4 C. C. A. 425, 12 U. S. App. 193; as not to carry on business; 3 Beav. 383; or to divulge trade secrets; Roberts v. McKee, 29 Ga. 161; 9 Hare 241; or to collect debts of the firm; 8 Ves. 317; Ellis v. Commander, 1 Strob. Eq. (S. C.) 188.

But it is held that equity will not interfere with the suit of a partner to prevent a dissolution made in contravention of the partnership articles, or to compel specific performance of them, the contract being of an essentially personal character; Satterthwait v. Marshall, 4 Del. Ch. 337; Somerby v. Buntin, 118 Mass. 279, 19 Am. Rep. 459; Karrick v. Hannaman, 168 U. S. 336, 18 Sup. Ct. 135, 42 L. Ed. 484.

But the partnership articles do not affect third persons, unless they have notice of them; 2 B. & Ald. 697; 8 M. & W. 703; Gano v. Samuel, 14 Ohio 592; Whitaker v. Brown, 16 Wend. (N. Y.) 505.

Claims against the firm. A partner may be a firm creditor and is entitled to payment of his claim before judgment creditors of the individual partners; Uhler v. Semple, 20 N. J. Eq. 288.

Compensation. As it is the duty of partners to devote themselves to the interests of the business, it follows that they are not entitled to any special compensation for so doing, although the services performed by them are very unequal in amount and value, unless there is an express stipulation for remuneration; Caldwell v. Leiber, 7 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 483; Pierce v. Pierce, 89 Mich. 233, 50 N. W. 851; Denver v. Roane, 99 U. S. 355, 25 L. Ed. 476; Lindsey v. Stranahan, 129 Pa. 635, 18 Atl. 524; Adams v. Warren (Ala.) 11 South. 754; Nevills v. Min. Co., 135 Cal. 561, 67 Pac. 1054; Roth v. Boies, 139 Ia. 253, 115 N. W. 930; Williams v. Pedersen, 47 Wash. 472, 92 Pac. 287, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 385, and note where the cases are collected; nor for services performed prior to the partnership, although they enure to its benefit; Dunlap v. Watson, 124 Mass. 305. A surviving partner has been held entitled to compensation for continuing the business, in order to save the good-will; Cameron v. Francisco, 26 Ohio St. 190. A surviving partner is ordinarily entitled to compensation after dissolution; 25 Beav. 382; but it is held that a liquidating partner is not entitled to compensation for winding up the concern; Burgess v. Badger, 82 Hun 488, 31 N. Y. Supp. 614; Appeal of Brown, 89 Pa. 139; Denver v. Roane, 99 U. S. 355, 25 L. Ed. 476; Dunlap v. Watson, 124 Mass. 305; so of a surviving or liquidating partner; Burgess v. Badger, 82 Hun 488, 31 N. Y. Supp. 614; Burgess v. Badger, 82 Hun 488, 31 N. Y. Supp. 614; but he is entitled to be paid his expenses; Book v. O'Neil, 2 Pa. Super. Ct. 306. But where it was agreed that a partner should not give personal services, he may recover for services rendered the firm at their request; Lewis v. Moffett, 11 Ill. 392. See Liquidating partner, infra.

Contribution. Since partners are coprin- cipals and all liable for the firm debts, any partner who pays its liabilities is, in the absence of agreement to the contrary, entitled to contribution from his co-partners; Lind. Part., 2d Am. ed. *367; 6 De G. M. & G. 572; Kelly v. Kauffman, 18 Pa. 351. The right exists independently of the articles of partnership even if not there recognized; Taft v. Schwamb, 80 Ill. 289; Moley v. Brine, 120 Mass. 324; Jones v. Butler, 87 N. Y. 613.

Exemption. The right of partners to statutory exemption out of firm property is a disputed point, and depends somewhat on the statutes of the several states. It has been held that they are not so entitled; Cowan v. Creditors, 77 Cal. 403, 19 Pac. 755, 11 Am. St. Rep. 294; First N. Bk. v. Hackett, 61 Wis. 335, 21 N. W. 280; Pond v. Kimball, 101 Mass. 105; Thurlow v. Warren, 82 Me. 164, 19 Atl. 158, 17 Am. St. Rep. 472; Hart v. Hiatt, 2 Ind. T. 245, 48 S. W. 1038; Gay- lord v. Imhoff, 26 Ohio St. 317, 20 Am. Rep. 762; Bonsall v. Conly, 44 Pa. 442; contra, Harris v. Visscher, 57 Ga. 229; Skinner v. Shannon, 44 Mich. 86, 6 N. W. 108, 38 Am. Rep. 232; Stewart v. Brown, 37 N. Y. 350, 93 Am. Dec. 578; Ladwig v. Williams, 87 Wis. 615, 58 N. W. 1103; McKinney v. Baker, 9 Or. 74. See Thomps. Hom. & Ex. § 197.

Firm property. Each partner has a claim, not to any specific share or interest in the property in specie, as a tenant in common has, but to the proportion of the residue which shall be found to be due to him upon the final settlements of their accounts, after the conversion of the assets and the liquidation of all claims upon the partnership; and therefore each partner has a right to have the same applied to the payment of all such claims, before any one of the partners, or his personal representatives, or his individual creditors, can claim any right or title thereto; Story, Part. § 97; 4 Ves. 396; 17 id. 193.

Each partner has also a specific lien on the present and future property of the partnership, the stock brought in, and everything coming in during the continuance and after the determination of the partnership, not only for the payment of debts due to third persons, but also for the amount of his own share of the partnership stock, and for all moneys advanced by him beyond that amount, as also for moneys withdrawn by his co-partners beyond the amount of his share; 3 Kent 65; Rice v. Barnard, 20 Vt. 479, 50 Am. Dec. 54; 25 Beav. 280; Standish v. Babcock, 52 N. J. Eq. 628, 29 Atl. 327. This lien attaches to real estate held for partnership purposes, as well as to the personal estate; Dyer v. Clark, 5 Metc. (Mass.) 562, 577, 39 Am. Dec. 697; and is co-extensive with the transactions on joint account; Houston v. Stanton, 11 Ala. 412.

Upon a settlement of a partnership by an account, the assets are divided among the partners in proportion to their contributions; and each partner is liable for a deficit in proportion to his share of the profits; Moley v. Brine, 120 Mass. 324.

Fraud. A partner has an equity to rescind the partnership and be indemnified for his co-partner's fraud in inducing him to enter the business; Smith v. Everett, 126 Mass. 304; 3 De G. & J. 304; Rosenstein v. Burns, 41 Fed. 841; White v. Smith, 63 Ark. 513, 39 S. W. 555; 13 Ch. Div. 384. Where the partnership suffers from the fraud or wanton misconduct of any partner in transacting firm business, he will be responsible to his co-partners for it; Story, Part. § 169. See supra.

Interest. As a general rule partners are not entitled to interest on their respective contributions to capital unless by special agreement, or unless it has been the custom of the firm to have such interest charged in its accounts; 6 Beav. 423; Appeal of Brown, 89 Pa. 139;

Whitcomb v. Converse, 119 Mass. 38, 20 Am. Rep. 311; Desha v. Smith, 20 Ala. 747; Topping v. Paddock, 92 Ill. 92; Jackson v. Johnson, 11 Hun (N. Y.) 509; Kelley v. Turner, 81 Md. 269, 31 Atl. 700. But a partner is entitled to interest on advances made by him to the firm; Baker v. Mayo, 129 Mass. 517; Matthews v. Adams, 84 Md. 143, 35 Atl. 60; Morris v. Allen, 14 N. J. Eq. 44; Collender v. Phelan, 79 N. Y. 366; and no express agreement is necessary; Morris v. Allen, 14 N. J. Eq. 44. In Rodgers v. Clement, 162 N. Y. 422, 56 N. E. 901, 76 Am. St. Rep. 342, it was held that a partner was entitled to interest on advances without an express agreement, but it would not be allowed where the partnership agreement was that he should furnish the capital and his co-partner supervise the work. See, however, Lee v. Lashbrooke, 8 Dana (Ky.) 214; Day v. Lockwood, 24 Conn. 185. But it is held that interest will not be allowed on advances and profits not drawn out; Winchester v. Glazier, 152 Mass. 316, 25 N. E. 728, 9 L. R. A. 424. Where profits are left in the business, a partner is not entitled to interest thereon; L. R. 5 Ch. 519; Appeal of Brown, 89 Pa. 139; Sweeney v. Neely, 53 Mich. 421, 19 N. W. 127; a partner who has not paid in his contribution to capital will be charged with interest; Krapp v. Aderholt, 42 Kan. 247, 21 Pac. 1063; Ligare v. Peacock, 109 Ill. 94; a partner will not be charged with interest on overdrafts; Prentice v. Elliott, 72 Ga. 154. A partner has been held entitled to interest on a sum contributed to capital in excess of the agreed share; Reynolds v. Mardis' Heirs, 17 Ala. 32.

There is undoubtedly conflict in the cases on the subject of interest on advances, and one writer contends that the weight of authority is against the allowance of interest; Gilmore, Partn. 396; but there is much authority in favor of allowing interest and the author cited admits that there is no question, where there is a special contract or fair ground for implication from the facts and circumstances. It is not unlikely that the courts would be inclined to find such to be the circumstances of the case and to lean in favor of allowing interest.

Liquidating partner. It is the duty of those upon whom, by appointment or otherwise, it devolves, after the dissolution of a firm, to wind up the affairs of the partnership, to act for the best advantage of the concern, to make no inconsistent use of the property, and to seek no private advantage in the composition of debts or in any other transaction in the performance of this business; Lewis v. Moffett, 11 Ill. 392; Insley v. Shire, 54 Kan. 793, 39 Pac. 713, 45 Am. St. Rep. 308. Nor, in this case, can any partner claim any commission for getting in the debts, or, in any other particular, reward or compensation for his trouble; id.; Denver v.

Roane, 99 U. S. 355, 25 L. Ed. 476; 1 Knapp, P. C. 312; 3 Kent 64; Washburn v. Goodman, 17 Pick. (Mass.) 519; Patton's Ex'rs v. Calhoun's Ex'rs, 4 Gratt. (Va.) 138; Slater v. Slater, 175 N. Y. 143, 67 N. E. 224, 61 L. R. A. 796, 96 Am. St. Rep. 605; Appeal of Gyger, 62 Pa. 73, 1 Am. Rep. 382; Kimball v. Lincoln, 99 Ill. 578; contra, Royster v. Johnson, 73 N. C. 474; but in Bradley v. Chamberlin, 16 Vt. 613, a partner who performed services in settling up the affairs of a firm after dissolution was allowed compensation for them, and where one partner contributed all the capital and exercised complete management of the business, he was allowed compensation; Mattingly v. Stone's Adm'r (Ky.) 35 S. W. 921; and where there is a great difference between the services of the partners, there may be compensation; Beatty v. Wray, 19 Pa. 516, 57 Am. Dec. 677; see Dunlap v. Watson, 124 Mass. 305; it is held that no compensation will be allowed for an excess of services without a special agreement; Heckard v. Fay, 57 Ill. App. 20. But it is held that a partner will be allowed compensation for extra and outside services in winding up; Schenkl v. Dana, 118 Mass. 236. See Compensation, supra.

Litigation. A partner may recover the costs of carrying on litigation for the firm—but not compensation for conducting it, unless by express agreement; Coddington v. Idell, 29 N. J. Eq. 504.

Profits and losses, how distributed. As between the partners, they may by agreement stipulate for equal or unequal shares in the profit and loss of the partnership; Paul v. Cullum, 132 U. S. 539, 10 Sup. Ct. 151, 33 L. Ed. 430; Story, Part. § 23; but in the absence of any express agreement or stipulation between them, and of all controlling evidence and circumstances, the presumption has been held to be that they are interested in equal shares; Frazer v. Linton, 183 Pa. 186, 38 Atl. 589; Turnipseed v. Goodwin, 9 Ala. 372; 20 Beav. 98; Lewis v. Loper, 54 Fed. 237; Paul v. Cullum, 132 U. S. 539, 10 Sup. Ct. 151, 33 L. Ed. 430; Fleischmann v. Gottschalk, 70 Md. 523, 17 Atl. 384. And the circumstance that each partner has brought an unequal amount of capital into the common stock, or that one or more have brought in the whole capital and the others have only brought industry, skill, and experience, would not seem to furnish any substantial ground of difference as to the distribution; 3 Kent 28, 29; Bradbury v. Smith, 21 Me. 117.

It has sometimes been asserted, however, that it is a matter of fact, to be settled according to all the circumstances, what would be a reasonable apportionment, uncontrolled by any natural presumption of equality in the distribution; Story, Partn. § 24; 2 Camp. 45. The opinion in England seems divided; but in America the authorities seem decidedly to favor the doctrine of a presumed equality of interest. See American cases cited above; Story, Part. § 24. "The better view is that although all or a large part of the capital is furnished by one partner, the entire loss is to be borne by all. Hence, after payment of the debts, the contributions of partners to capital are all to be repaid before there can be any division of profits (L. R. 7 Eq. 538; Whitcomb v. Converse, 119 Mass. 38, 20 Am. Rep. 311; Leserman v. Bernheimer, 113 N. Y. 39, 20 N. E. 869). And if the assets are not sufficient, after paying the debts, to repay the capital, the deficit must be shared by all the partners; and the partner who has contributed more than his share of capital is therefore entitled to contribution from the rest (Hellebush v. Coughlin, 37 Fed. 294; Emerick v. Moir, 124 Pa. 498, 17 Atl. 1)." Pars. Part., Beale's ed. § 173.

Receiver, appointment of. To authorize a partner to demand the appointment of a receiver of a subsisting partnership, he must show such a case of gross abuse and misconduct on the part of his co-partner, that a dissolution ought to be decreed and the business wound up; Story, Part. §§ 228, 231; Sutro v. Wagner, 23 N. J. Eq. 388; Campbell v. Oil Co., 96 S. W. 442, 29 Ky. L. Rep. 716; and the courts will not interfere with the management of a firm except as incidental to winding up its affairs and distributing its assets; 15 Ves. 10.

Where it appears that the surviving members of a firm are conducting the business for the purpose of enlarging and continuing it, and not to close it up, a receiver may be appointed for that purpose, on application of the legal representatives of the deceased member; Dawson v. Parsons, 20 N. Y. Supp. 65. After dissolution a court of equity will appoint a receiver almost as a matter of course; Lind. Part. *1008; 1 Ch. Div. 600; Richards v. Baurman, 65 N. C. 162. But see 18 Ves. 281; [1892] Ch. 633, where it was held that the mere fact of dissolution of a partnership does not give one partner an absolute right, as against his co-partners, to have a receiver appointed of the partnership business; and to the same effect are, Appeal of Slemmer, 58 Pa. 163, 98 Am. Dec. 255; Marshall v. Matson, 171 Ind. 238, 86 N. E. 339; Cox v. Peters, 13 N. J. Eq. 39; Lawrence Lumber Co. v. Lyon, 93 Miss. 859, 47 South. 849.

The mere fact of the death or bankruptcy of a partner is not ground for appointing a receiver, there must be some neglect or breach of duty shown; 2 Bro. C. C. 272; Renton v. Chaplain, 9 N. J. Eq. 62; Jones v. Weir, 217 Pa. 321, 66 Atl. 550, 10 Ann. Cas. 692; Hamill v. Hamill, 27 Md. 679; it is otherwise if there be misconduct of an insolvent partner; Phillips v. Trezevant, 67 N. C. 370; or misconduct of the partners in possession which imperils the assets; Davis v. Grove, 2 Rob. (N. Y.) 134; Buffin v. Boyce, 104 Ind. 53, 3 N. E. 615; or the exclusion of one partner by another from any control of the affairs of the firm; Katz v. Brewington, 71 Md. 79, 20 Atl. 139; 2 Jac. & W. 558; Maynard v. Bailey, 2 Nev. 313; Marten v. Van Schaick, 4 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 479.

The existence of a partnership must be established before a receiver is appointed; Rische v. Rische, 46 Tex. Civ. App. 23, 101 S. W. 849; McCarty v. Stanwix, 16 Misc. 132, 58 N. Y. Supp. 820; but where it is alleged by one party and denied by the other, and the court directs an issue to decide that question, until that is decided a receiver will be denied; 19 Ves. 144; 2 Macn. & G. 144; Hobart v. Ballard, 31 Ia. 521; Guyton v. Flack, 7 Md. 398.

Set-off. It may be stated as a general rule in law and equity that there can be no set-off of joint debts against separate debts unless under a special agreement; Story, Part. § 396. Thus, a debt due by one of the members of a firm cannot be set off against a debt due the firm; 2 C. B. 821; Colwell v. Bank, 16 R. I. 288, 15 Atl. 80, 17 Atl. 913; Edwards v. Parker, 88 Ala. 356, 6 South. 684; unless the partners assent; Montz v. Morris, 89 Pa. 392. Nor can a debt owing to a partner be set off against a debt due by the firm; International Bank v. Jones, 119 Ill. 407, 9 N. E. 885; 6 C. & P. 60; Lind. Part., 2d Am. ed. *269; but see Eyrich v. Bank, 67 Miss. 60, 6 South. 615.

But a partner sued for a firm debt, may set off his individual claim against the plaintiff; Lewis v. Culbertson, 11 S. & R. (Pa.) 48, 14 Am. Dec. 607; and when a surviving partner sues for a debt due to the firm, his individual debt may be set off; White v. Ins. Co., 1 Nott & McC. (S. C.) 556, 9 Am. Dec. 726; or if sued on an individual debt he may set off a firm debt due to him as survivor; Johnson v. Kaiser, 40 N. J. L. 286. But otherwise where the partnership's debt is reduced to judgment; Pars., Part., Beale's ed. § 262; Seligmann v. Clothing Co., 69 Wis. 410, 34 N. W. 232.

Marshalling Assets. A firm is not a corporation, and hence firm creditors are in theory separate creditors as well. But in administering insolvent estates equity has established the "rule of convenience" that firm and separate creditors shall have priority upon, and be confined to, the firm and separate funds respectively; Winslow v. Wallace, 116 Ind. 317, 17 N. E. 923, 1 L. R. A. 179; Spratt's Ex'r v. Bank, 84 Ky. 85; Rothell v. Grimes, 22 Neb. 526, 35 N. W. 392. A surplus of a separate fund is divided among firm creditors pro rata; and a surplus of a firm fund is divided among the separate creditors of the various partners in proportion to the shares of the partners therein; Hardy v. Mitchell, 67 Ind. 485; Appeal of Black, 44 Pa. 503; Union N. Bk. v.

Bank, 94 Ill. 271; Toombs v. Hill, 28 Ga. 371; Van Wagner v. Chapman's Adm'r, 29 Ala. 172. If there is no firm fund and no solvent partner, the firm creditors come in on an equal footing with separate creditors against the separate estates of partners pari passu with individual creditors; In re West, 39 Fed. 203; Shackelford's Adm'r v. Clark, 78 Mo. 491; Curtis v. Woodward, 58 Wis. 499, 17 N. W. 328, 46 Am. Rep. 647; contra, Weaver v. Weaver, 46 N. H. 188; Warren v. Farmer, 100 Ind. 593; Howe v. Lawrence, 9 Cush. (Mass.) 553, 57 Am. Dec. 68. A very slight firm fund over and above costs will suffice to exclude firm creditors from the separate estate; five shillings has been said to be enough; 7 Am. L. Reg. 499; and five pounds is enough, and so is a joint estate of less than two pounds; 2 Rose 54; one dollar and a quarter was considered too little; Pars. Part. 4th ed. § 384. A solvent partner, if living, is equivalent to a firm fund; Alsop v. Mather, 8 Conn. 584, 21 Am. Dec. 703; Lind. Part. *731.

But though there is no separate estate, separate creditors cannot come against the joint estate until the firm debts are paid, after which they may resort to the partners' interest in any surplus remaining; 3 B. & P. 288, 289; Nixon v. Nash, 12 Ohio St. 617, 80 Am. Dec. 390; Tenney v. Johnson, 43 N. H. 144.

As a general rule partnership creditors, after they have exhausted firm assets, cannot share equally with individual creditors in the individual assets; Clafin v. Behr's Adm'r, 89 Ala. 503, 8 South. 45; Peters v. Bain, 133 U. S. 670, 10 Sup. Ct. 354, 33 L. Ed. 696; Hundley v. Farris, 103 Mo. 78, 15 S. W. 312, 12 L. R. A. 254, 23 Am. St. Rep. 863; some cases hold that they can; Camp v. Grant, 21 Conn. 41, 54 Am. Dec. 321; Pettyjohn's Ex'rs v. Woodruff's Ex'r, 86 Va. 478, 10 S. E. 715. In Kentucky they share the separate assets equally with the separate creditors after the latter have received the same dividend from the separate estate that the firm creditors have received from the firm estate; Fayette N. Bk. v. Kenney's Assignee, 79 Ky. 133. It has been said not to be settled that, at law, the partnership creditors may not look to the several funds at once, in common with several creditors, but that the law is now tending towards the adoption of the rule to that effect which prevails in equity; Pars. Part. § 383.

If two firms having one or more common members, are both bankrupt, there can be no proof by one against the other; Pars. Part. § 381. Various explanations have been offered for this rule. Sometimes it is called a "rule of convenience"; sometimes a fundamental principle of equity; Ewell's Lind. Part. *692; Allen v. Wells, 22 Pick. (Mass.) 450, 33 Am. Dec. 757; Murray v. Murray, 5 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 60; Story, Part. § 377; Appeal of Black, 44 Pa. 503. Sometimes it is said to depend on the principle of destination; the partners by gathering together a firm fund have dedicated it to the firm creditors. Upon this theory, the partnership stock becomes a trust fund. The firm creditors occupy a commanding position and restrain even the partners in dealing with the property; In re Cook, 3 Biss. 122, Fed. Cas. No. 3,150; Menagh v. Whitwell, 52 N. Y. 146, 11 Am. Rep. 683. Usually it is declared to be the outgrowth of the partner's equity, i. e. his right to have firm funds applied first to the payment of firm debts; Shackelford's Adm'r v. Shackelford, 32 Gratt. (Va.) 481; Black v. Bush, 7 B. Monr. (Ky.) 210. Consequently, where the partner gives up this right, the firm creditor loses his priority; Case v. Beauregard, 1 Woods, 127, Fed. Cas. No. 2,487; Shackelford's Adm'r v. Shackelford, 32 Gratt. (Va.) 481. The rule does not apply where a partnership creditor has acquired a lien by contract; Spratt's Ex'r v. Bank, 84 Ky. 85. If insolvent partners divide the firm fund among their separate creditors in proportion to the interest of each in the partnership, firm creditors cannot object; McNutt v. Strayhorn, 39 Pa. 269; Atkins v. Saxton, 77 N. Y. 195.

As a general rule, insolvency fixes the position of the different funds. A debt to a partner by the firm cannot be collected for the benefit of separate creditors; a debt of a partner to the firm cannot be collected for the benefit of firm creditors; because a man cannot prove against his own creditors; Ridgely v. Carey, 4 H. & McH. (Md.) 167. What one partner owes his co-partner independently of the firm can be collected from the separate estate of the debtor for the benefit of the separate estate of the creditor; but this will not be allowed unless the situation is such that the firm creditors can derive no benefit even indirectly from the enforcement of the claim, i. e. there must be no surplus to go to them; 4 De G. J. & S. 551; contra, where both partners owe the firm one-half of the excess of one debt over the other, it is payable to the firm creditors out of the estate of the greater debtor; Appeal of McCormick, 55 Pa. 252. Partners, before insolvency, may, by an executed agreement, change firm into separate property. Firm creditors have no lien to prevent the alteration; e. g. where one partner sells out to the others, the fund becomes primarily liable for the claims of the creditors of the new firm; National Bk. of Metropolis v. Sprague, 20 N. J. Eq. 13; Howe v. Lawrence, 9 Cush. (Mass.) 553, 57 Am. Dec. 68; Maquoketa v. Willey, 35 Ia. 323; 6 Ves. 119.

Equity will not interfere to embarrass a vested legal right. Therefore if a firm creditor levies on a separate estate, he has priority over the subsequent execution of a separate creditor; Hoskins v. Johnson, 24 Ga. 625; Wisham v. Lippincott, 9 N. J. Eq. 353;

Meech v. Allen, 17 N. Y. 300, 72 Am. Dec. 465. A separate creditor can sell nothing but his debtor's interest. An execution against the firm, though subsequent, has priority, because it attaches this paramount right of the co-partner. But a firm creditor, without a legal lien, has no standing; Burpee v. Bunn, 22 Cal. 194; Mittnacht v. Smith, 17 N. J. Eq. 259, 88 Am. Dec. 233; Rodriguez v. Hefferman, 5 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 417. But where there is an execution against each partner and a subsequent execution against the firm, and the sheriff seizes and sells firm goods under the three, the proceeds are given first to the joint creditor, and the remainder to the separate creditors in proportion to each partner's interest; Appeal of Coover, 29 Pa. 9, 70 Am. Dec. 149. So in the case of judgments against real estate. A judgment on a separate claim has no lien on the firm real estate, but only on the partner's interest. But a firm judgment is a lien on a partner's separate real estate, and takes priority over a subsequent separate judgment; Meech v. Allen, 17 N. Y. 300, 72 Am. Dec. 465; Gillaspy v. Peck, 46 Ia. 461. Partnership creditors who have a levy on partnership goods are entitled to be paid before a creditor of one of the partners, who had a prior attachment on the individual interest of one partner; First N. Bk. v. Brenneisen, 97 Mo. 145, 10 S. W. 884.

When an assignment for creditors has been made by a firm, and also by the partners individually, the holder of a note executed by the firm and by the individual members is entitled to have the estates of the partnership and of each partner kept separate, and to receive a dividend from each, though the note was given for a firm liability; In re Carter, 98 Ia. 261, 67 N. W. 239.

As to the remedies of joint and separate creditors both at law and in equity, see Gilmore, Partn. ch. VII, pp. 404-458, where the cases are collected and classified.

Duration. Prima facie every partnership is determinable at will. But it may be entered into for a definite term by agreement express or implied; Ewell's Lind. Part. *121, 413.

A partnership at will is presumed to continue so long as the parties are in life and of capacity to continue it; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 42; Irby v. Brigham, 9 Humphr. (Tenn.) 750. See PARTNERS. A partnership for a term is presumed to continue during the term, provided the parties are in life and of legal capacity to continue it. If a partnership be continued by express or tacit consent after the expiration of the prescribed period, it will be presumed to continue upon the old terms, but as a partnership at will; Mifflin v. Smith, 17 S. & R. (Pa.) 165. But in no case will the law presume a partnership to exist beyond the life of the parties; 1 Wils. Ch. 181. When a partnership has been entered into for a definite term, it is nevertheless dissolved by death within the term; Story, Part. § 195. The delectus personæ is so essentially necessary to the constitution of a partnership that even the executors or other representatives of partners themselves do not, in their capacity of executors or representatives, succeed to the state and condition of partners; Kingman v. Spurr, 7 Pick. (Mass.) 237; 3 Kent 55; Remick v. Emig, 42 Ill. 342; Spaunhorst v. Link, 46 Mo. 197. The civilians carried this doctrine so far as not to permit it to be stipulated that the heirs or executors of partners should themselves be partners; Domat, lib. 1, tit. 8, s. 2; Pothier, Part. n. 145; though Pothier thinks it binding.

At common law, the representatives of a deceased partner may be made partners in his stead either by original agreement or by testamentary direction; Ewell's Lind. Part. *590; Alexander's Ex'rs v. Lewis, 47 Tex. 481. Clauses providing for the admission into the firm of a deceased partner's representatives will, in general, be construed as giving them an option to become partners, and not as constituting them partners absolutely; 7 Jarm. Conv. 120; 1 McCl. & Y. 569; 2 Russ. 62. The executor of a deceased partner is not compelled in such case to become a partner, so as to charge the estate with debts incurred after the partner's death; Wilcox v. Derickson, 168 Pa. 331, 31 Atl. 1080; Wild v. Davenport, 48 N. J. L. 129, 7 Atl. 295, 57 Am. Rep. 552. In any event it must be a new partnership; McGrath v. Cowen, 57 Ohio St. 385, 49 N. E. 338; Kennedy v. Porter, 109 N. Y. 526, 17 N. E. 426; Vincent v. Martin, 79 Ala. 540; Hoard v. Clum, 31 Minn. 186, 17 N. W. 275; contra, Butler v. Toy Co., 46 Conn. 136; Edwards v. Thomas, 66 Mo. 468; Lewis v. Alexander, 51 Tex. 578; and such is said to be the tendency of modern decisions; Pars. Part. Beale's ed. § 343, n.

Only the fund already invested or directed to be invested by the testator is subject to the claims of new creditors; Davis v. Christian, 15 Gratt. (Va.) 11; 10 Ves. 110; Columbus W. Co. v. Hodenpyl, 135 N. Y. 430, 32 N. E. 239; any direction, in order to charge the general assets, must be clear and unambiguous; Burwell v. Cawood, 2 How. (U. S.) 577, 11 L. Ed. 378; Laughlin v. Lorenz' Adm'r, 48 Pa. 275, 86 Am. Dec. 592.

The rule in England is clear that when an executor undertakes to participate in the business, whether in consequence of a testamentary direction or otherwise, he becomes personally liable to creditors as a partner, in addition to the liability of the estate. The common-law relation of partnership will not admit of a qualified liability; Ewell's Lind. Part. *593, *604; 11 Moo. P. C. 198. But simply taking the profits will not charge the executor; L. R. 7 Ex. 218. In America, some authorities have declared that the executor is not personally liable when the testator has directed him to continue the business, but only when he does so of his own motion; Edgar v. Cook, 4 Ala. 588; Owens v. Mackall, 33 Md. 382; Laughlin v. Lorenz' Adm'r, 48 Pa. 275, 86 Am. Dec. 592; contra, for personal liability of executor; Alsop v. Mather, 8 Conn. 584, 21 Am. Dec. 703. A simple direction to allow a fund to remain in a partnership may be construed as a loan to the survivors; 9 Hare 141. An executor is not liable personally if he merely leaves the estate of his testator in the business and takes no part in it; Avery v. Myers, 60 Miss. 367; Wild v. Davenport, 48 N. J. L. 129, 7 Atl. 95, 57 Am. Rep. 552.

Dissolution. A partnership may be dissolved: 1. By the act of the parties: as by their mutual consent; Bank v. Page, 98 Ill. 109; 3 Kent 54; and where no specified period is limited for the continuance of the partnership, either party may dissolve it at any time; Fletcher v. Reed, 131 Mass. 312; McElvey v. Lewis, 76 N. Y. 373; Karrick v. Hannaman, 168 U. S. 334, 18 Sup. Ct. 135, 42 L. Ed. 484; Carlton v. Cummins, 51 Ind. 478; Lawrence v. Robinson, 4 Colo. 567. It will then continue only for purposes of winding up; 17 Ves. 298; Brown's Ex'r v. Higginbotham, 5 Leigh (Va.) 583, 27 Am. Dec. 618; Davis v. Megroz, 55 N. J. L. 427, 26 Atl. 1009. But a court of equity would perhaps interfere to prevent irreparable injury by an untimely dissolution; 1 Swanst. 512. Where there is an agreement to continue the business for a certain time, one partner has no right to have a dissolution except for special cause; Waterbury v. Exp. Co., 50 Barb. (N. Y.) 169; Hannaman v. Karrick, 9 Utah 236, 33 Pac. 1039. But it is held that a partner can dissolve a partnership formed for a definite period, before the end of that period, but that he is liable in damages for the value of the profits which the other partner would otherwise have received; Bagley v. Smith, 10 N. Y. 489, 61 Am. Dec. 756; Karrick v. Hannaman, 168 U. S. 337, 18 Sup. Ct. 135, 42 L. Ed. 484. In general, any circumstance which renders the continuance of the partnership, or the attainment of the end for which it was created, practically impossible, would seem sufficient to warrant a dissolution; 22 Beav. 471. A sale by one partner of his interest in the firm's property to the others has been held not necessarily to work a dissolution of the firm; Lobdell v. Baldwin, 93 Mich. 569, 53 N. W. 730; but see Schleicher v. Walker, 28 Fla. 680, 10 South. 33.

Whether a partnership for a certain time can be dissolved by one partner at his mere will before the term has expired, seems not to be absolutely and definitely settled; Story, Part. § 275. In favor of the right of one partner in such cases, see 3 Kent 55; Solomon v. Kirkwood, 55 Mich. 256, 21 N. W. 336, per Cooley, J.; Appeal of Slemmer, 58 Pa.

155, 98 Am. Dec. 248; Karrick v. Hannaman, 168 U. S. 337, 18 Sup. Ct. 135, 42 L. Ed. 484; Swift v. Ward, 80 Ia. 700, 45 N. W. 1044, 11 L. R. A. 302; Monroe v. Conner, 15 Me. 178, 32 Am. Dec. 148; Lapenta v. Lettieri, 72 Conn. 377, 44 Atl. 730, 77 Am. St. Rep. 315. Among the authorities against this right are Story, Part. § 275; Howell v. Harvey, 5 Ark. 281, 39 Am. Dec. 376; Pearpoint v. Graham, 4 Wash. C. C. 234, Fed. Cas. No. 10,877; Ewell's Lind. Part. *571; Hannaman v. Karrick, 9 Utah 236, 33 Pac. 1039; Gerard v. Gateau, 84 Ill. 121, 25 Am. Rep. 438; Sieghortner v. Weissenborn, 20 N. J. Eq. 172.

A partner exercising such right would be liable for his breach of the partnership articles; Solomon v. Kirkwood, 55 Mich. 256, 21 N. W. 336; and if he, within the term stipulated in the articles, seeks to dissolve the partnership and take exclusive possession of its property and business, he is liable to account to his co-partner for profits according to the partnership agreement; Karrick v. Hannaman, 168 U. S. 328, 18 Sup. Ct. 135, 42 L. Ed. 484.

As against third persons, a partner may certainly withdraw from a partnership at his pleasure; 3 C. B. N. S. 561. Partners may terminate the partnership at any time by mutual agreement; Richardson v. Gregory, 126 Ill. 166, 18 N. E. 777; and this may be inferred from an abandonment of the undertaking; Ligare v. Peacock, 109 Ill. 94; Harris v. Hillegass, 54 Cal. 463; but see Goddard v. Pratt, 16 Pick. (Mass.) 412. The incorporation of the partners for a similar business may perhaps work a dissolution as by consent. See Pars. Part. § 285. Dissolution need not be under seal, even though the partnership articles were under seal; Pars. Part. § 284.

2. By the act of God: as, by the death of one of the partners; and this operates from the time of the death; 3 Mer. 610; Durant v. Pierson, 124 N. Y. 444, 26 N. E. 1095, 12 L. R. A. 146, 21 Am. St. Rep. 686; McGrath v. Cowen, 57 Ohio St. 385, 49 N. E. 338; Canfield v. Hard, 6 Conn. 184; Knapp v. McBride, 7 Ala. 19; Scholefield v. Eichelberger, 7 Pet. (U. S.) 594, 8 L. Ed. 793; Jenness v. Carleton, 40 Mich. 343. As to the effect of a provision in the partnership articles to the contrary, see supra.

A partnership dissolved by the death of one of the partners is dissolved as to the whole firm; Scholefield v. Eichelberger, 7 Pet. (U. S.) 586, 594, 8 L. Ed. 793; Hoard v. Clum, 31 Minn. 186, 17 N. W. 275; and the reason given for this rule is applicable not only to dissolution by death, but to every species of dissolution; Story, Part. § 317.

3. By the act of law: as by the bankruptcy of one of the partners; 5 Maule & S. 340; McNutt v. King, 59 Ala. 597; Eustis v. Bolles, 146 Mass. 413, 16 N. E. 286, 4 Am. St. Rep. 327; Halsey v. Norton, 45 Miss. 703,

7 Am. Rep. 745; Amsinck v. Bean, 22 Wall. (U. S.) 395, 22 L. Ed. 801; or by the bankruptcy of the firm; Wells v. Ellis, 68 Cal. 243, 9 Pac. 80; Appeal of McKelvy, 72 Pa. 409; 25 Can. Sup. Ct. 225; and see cases cited as to bankruptcy of partner. Such dissolution takes place when bankruptcy is legally declared, and then relates back to the act of bankruptcy; 11 Ves. 78; but in Blackwell v. Claywell, 75 N. C. 213, it was held that the partnership was dissolved by the adjudication and that the statute of limitations "began to run from that date" against a purchaser of any chose in action of the bankrupt.

The mere fact of insolvency does not work a dissolution; there must be some act of bankruptcy; Arnold v. Brown, 24 Pick. (Mass.) 89, 35 Am. Dec. 296; Siegel v. Chidsey, 28 Pa. 279, 70 Am. Dec. 124.

4. By a valid assignment of all the partnership effects for the benefit of creditors, which has been held to work immediate dissolution; Welles v. March, 30 N. Y. 344; Wells v. Ellis, 68 Cal. 243, 9 Pac. 80; either under insolvent acts; Colly. Part. 6th ed. § 102; or otherwise; Simmions v. Curtis, 41 Me. 373; but this is only prima facie evidence of dissolution which other circumstances may rebut; Pleasants v. Meng, 1 Dall. (Pa.) 380, 1 L. Ed. 185; by a sale of the partnership effects under a separate execution against one partner; 2 V. & B. 300; 3 Kent 59. It is said that this does not constitute a dissolution but inevitably leads to it; Arnold v. Brown, 24 Pick. (Mass.) 89, 35 Am. Dec. 296; Carter v. Roland, 53 Tex. 540; but it was said by Fuller, C. J., "The absolute right to have the affairs of the firm at once wound up, when the specified duration of the partnership has not expired, may be subject to modification according to circumstances;" Riddle v. Whitehill, 135 U. S. 621, 633, 10 Sup. Ct. 924, 34 L. Ed. 282. The mere insolvency of one or all of the members of a partnership, without a suspension or judicial process, etc., does not of itself operate a dissolution; Arnold v. Brown, 24 Pick. (Mass.) 89, 35 Am. Dec. 296; but it at least gives to the partners an option to require one; Williston v. Camp, 9 Mont. 88, 22 Pac. 501.

5. By the civil death of one of the partners; Pothier, Part. n. 147. But the absconding of a party from the state does not of itself operate a dissolution; Arnold v. Brown, 24 Pick. (Mass.) 89, 35 Am. Dec. 296. See Story, Part. § 298.

6. By the breaking out of war between two states in which the partners are domiciled and carrying on trade; Griswold v. Waddington, 16 Johns. (N. Y.) 438; McStea v. Matthews, 50 N. Y. 166; Matthews v. McStea, 91 U. S. 7, 23 L. Ed. 188. See WAR.

7. By the marriage of a feme sole partner; 4 Russ. 260; 3 Kent 55. This would now,

In view of the recent married women acts, depend upon the laws of the state; Brown v. Chancellor, 61 Tex. 437. The marriage of a male and female partner would work a dissolution; Rassett v. Shepardson, 52 Mich. 3, 17 N. W. 217.

8. By the extinction of the subject-matter of the joint business or undertaking; Griswold v. Waddington, 16 Johns. (N. Y.) 491; and by the completion of the business or adventure for which the partnership was formed; Story, Part. § 280.

9. By the termination of the period for which a partnership for a certain time was formed; Colly, Part. § 105.

10. By the assignment of the whole of one partner's interest either to his co-partner or to a stranger; 4 B. & Ad. 175; Marquand v. Mfg. Co., 17 Johns. (N. Y.) 525; Cochran v. Perry, 8 W. & S. (Pa.) 262; Clark v. Carr, 45 Ill. App. 469; Schleicher v. Walker, 28 Fla. 680, 10 South. 33; where it does not appear that the assignee acts in the concern after the assignment; Marquand v. Mfg. Co., 17 Johns. (N. Y.) 525; Mason v. Connell, 1 Whart. (Pa.) 381; Buford v. Neely, 17 N. C. 481. But in England this can occur only in partnerships at will. See Riddle v. Whitehill, 135 U. S. 632, 10 Sup. Ct. 924, 34 L. Ed. 282. It has been held that a sale by one partner of his interest in the firm's property to the other does not necessarily work a dissolution of the firm; Lobdell v. Baldwin, 93 Mich. 569, 53 N. W. 730; but it has been held that a sale by a partner of his share of the stock dissolves the firm and gives the purchaser a right to an account; Miller v. Brigham, 50 Cal. 615. In partnerships for a term, assignment is a ground for dissolution by remaining co-partners, but probably not by the transferee. In America, the transferee always has a right to an account; Monroe v. Hamilton, 60 Ala. 226; Miller v. Brigham, 50 Cal. 615. But see Taft v. Buffum, 14 Pick. (Mass.) 322; where it was held that such an assignment would not ipso facto work a dissolution. See Riddle v. Whitehill, 135 U. S. 632, 10 Sup. Ct. 924, 34 L. Ed. 282.

11. By the award of arbitrators appointed under a clause in the partnership articles to that effect. See 1 W. Bla. 475; 4 B. & Ad. 172; Byers v. Van Deusen, 5 Wend. (N. Y.) 268.

12. By judicial decree. A court of equity may dissolve a partnership on the occurrence of events or changes of circumstances which render the continuance of the relation impossible or unprofitable; Gilmore, Partn. 581. To dissolve a partnership at will requires no proceedings in court, as it may be done by the voluntary action of either partner; supra. Where it is for a term however, as already stated supra, it is held by many courts that the action of a partner is not sufficient and therefore there must be resort to the courts. This must be to a court of equity; Story, Partn. § 284; Wilson v. Las- sen, 5 Cal. 116; Barnstead v. Min. Co., 4d. 299. A dissolution may be decreed for the wilful fraud or other gross misconduct of one of the partners; Pars, Part. §§ 270, 357; 4 Beav. 502; Reynolds v. Austin, 4 Del. Ch. 24; Raymond v. Vaughn, 128 Ill. 256, 21 N. E. 566, 4 L. R. A. 444, 15 Am. St. Rep. 112; Griswold v. Waddington, 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 57; Howell v. Harvey, 5 Ark. 270, 39 Am. Dec. 376; Oteri v. Scalzo, 145 U. S. 578, 12 Sup. Ct. 895, 36 L. Ed. 824; 1 De G., M. & G. 171; so on his gross carelessness and waste in the administration of the partnership, and his exclusion of the other partners from their just share of the management; 1 J. & W. 592; Howell v. Harvey, 5 Ark. 278, 39 Am. Dec. 376; Groth v. Payment, 79 Mich. 290, 41 N. W. 611; or persistent violation of partnership articles; Rosenstein v. Burns, 41 Fed. 841; or the loss of health by a partner; Pars, Part. § 360; or the pecuniary inability of a partner to fulfil his engagement with the others; id.; so on the existence of violent and lasting dissension between the partners; Blake v. Dorgan, 1 G. Greene (Ia.) 537; where these are of such a character as to prevent the business from being conducted upon the stipulated terms; 3 Kent 60, 61; and to destroy the mutual confidence of the partners in each other; 21 Beav. 482; Sieghortner v. Weissenborn, 20 N. J. Eq. 172.

So equity will dissolve for any breach of duty, though not at the suit of the party who is alone at fault; Gilmore, Partn. 585; in such case, for example, as the desertion or absconding of a partner, which has been in some cases held to work a dissolution ipso facto; Whitman v. Leonard, 3 Pick. (Mass.) 177; Ayer v. Ayer, 41 Vt. 346; Beaver v. Lewis, 14 Ark. 138; Potter v. Moses, 1 R. I. 430; but, generally, it is treated merely as ground of a suit; Burgess v. Badger, 124 Ill. 288, 14 N. E. 850; Arnold v. Brown, 24 Pick. (Mass.) 89, 35 Am. Dec. 296; Denver v. Roane, 99 U. S. 355, 25 L. Ed. 476; Ambler v. Whipple, 20 Wall. (U. S.) 546, 22 L. Ed. 403; 3 Ves. 74. The courts have interfered where profit, which is the object of partnership, was clearly out of the question; Burns v. Rosenstein, 135 U. S. 449, 10 Sup. Ct. 817, 34 L. Ed. 193; Moies v. O'Neill, 23 N. J. Eq. 207; Dunn v. McNaught, 38 Ga. 179; 13 Sim. 495; or where the firm was formed to exploit a patented device which proved to be a failure; 1 Cox 213; or where the business was a whaling voyage, with no prospects of success after six months trial; Brown v. Hicks, 8 Fed. 155; or where the firm property had been destroyed or taken away by an army of invasion; Jackson v. Deese, 35 Ga. 84; or where the business could not be carried on as provided in the articles; Holladay v. Elliott, 8 Or. 85; Rosenstein v. Burns, 41 Fed. 841; or where the partners were unwilling or unable to advance necessary funds; Sieghortner v. Weissenborn, 20 N. J. Eq. 172; 3 Kay & J. 78.

Equity will not act on slight grounds; Appeal of Slemmer, 58 Pa. 168, 98 Am. Dec. 255; it requires a strong case; Gerard v. Gateau, 84 Ill. 121, 25 Am. Rep. 438; Sloan v. Moore, 37 Pa. 217; Loomis v. McKenzie, 31 Ia. 425; 25 Beav. 190; for minor difficulties it will be sufficient to interfere by injunction; Sieghortner v. Weissenborn, 20 N. J. Eq. 172. As to what are slight grievances and also gross misconduct, it is sometimes difficult to determine and must depend upon the circumstances of the case as bearing upon the question whether the acts complained of would prevent the profitable continuance of the business upon the terms of the articles; Page v. Vankirk, 1 Brewst. (Pa.) 282.

A partner cannot, by misconducting himself and rendering it impossible for his co-partners to act in harmony with him, obtain a dissolution on the ground of the impossibility so created by himself; 21 Beav. 493; 3 Hare 387; Gerard v. Gateau, 84 Ill. 121, 25 Am. Rep. 438. A partnership may be dissolved by decree when its business is in a hopeless state, its continuance impracticable, and its property liable to be wasted and lost; 3 Kent 60; Griswold v. Waddington, 16 Johns. (N. Y.) 491; 13 Sim. 495; Holladay v. Elliott, 8 Or. 84; Rosenstein v. Burns, 41 Fed. 841; or where there was fraud in inducing a partner to enter into the partnership; id.

The confirmed lunacy of an active partner is sufficient to induce a court of equity to decree a dissolution, not only for the purpose of protecting the lunatic, but also to relieve his co-partners from the difficult position in which the lunacy places them. See 6 Beav. 324; 3 Y. & C. 184; Raymond v. Vaughn, 128 Ill. 256, 21 N. E. 566, 4 L. R. A. 440, 15 Am. St. Rep. 112. The same may be said of every other inveterate infirmity, which has seized upon one of the partners and rendered him incompetent to act where his personal labor and skill were contracted for; 3 Kent 62. But lunacy does not itself dissolve the firm, nor do other infirmities; 3 Kent 58; Story, Part. § 295; this is said to be supported by the current of authorities; Pars. Part. § 362. It is, however, contended by Mr. Justice Story and by Parker, C. J., that a clear case of insanity ought to effect that result; Story, Part. § 295; Davis v. Lane, 10 N. H. 156. An inquisition of lunacy found against a member dissolves the firm; Isler v. Baker, 6 Humph. (Tenn.) 85. The court does not decree a dissolution on the ground of lunacy except upon clear evidence that the malady exists and is incurable; 3 Y. & C. 184; 2 K. & J. 441. A temporary illness is not sufficient; 2 Ves. Sen. 34; 1 Cox 107. A dissolution by the court on the ground of insanity dates from the decree and not from a prior day; 1 K. & J. 765.

13. The sale by a partner of all the firm property, or of his entire interest therein effects a dissolution of the firm; Davis v. Niswonger, 145 Ind. 426, 44 N. E. 542; Coggs-well & Boulter Co. v. Coggs-well (N. J.) 40 Atl. 213; Appeal of Haeberly, 191 Pa. 239, 43 Atl. 207. It is immaterial whether the sale is to a co-partner; Lesure v. Norris, 11 Cush. (Mass.) 328; Schleicher v. Walker, 28 Fla. 680, 10 South. 33; Wiggin v. Goodwin, 63 Me. 389; or to a third person; Monroe v. Hamilton, 60 Ala. 226; McCall v. Moss, 112 Ill. 493; 25 Ont. 559. In the former case, the sale is sometimes treated only as evidence of a dissolution; Waller v. Davis, 59 Ia. 103, 12 N. W. 798; Lobdell v. Baldwin, 93 Mich. 569, 53 N. W. 730; Taft v. Buffum, 14 Pick. (Mass.) 322.

Annulment. In cases of fraud, imposition, and oppression in the original agreement, the partnership may be declared void ab initio; Gilmore, Partn. 589. Such decree has been made where the complaining party was induced to enter into the contract by fraudulent entries and alterations of books; Richards v. Todd, 127 Mass. 169; or where the contract was induced by false representations; Caplen v. Cox, 42 Tex. Civ. App. 297, 92 S. W. 1048; Hynes v. Stewart, 10 B. Mon. (Ky.) 429; Harlow v. La Brum, 151 N. Y. 278, 45 N. E. 859. This remedy has been invoked in many cases; Oteri v. Scalzo, 145 U. S. 578, 12 Sup. Ct. 895, 36 L. Ed. 824; Smith v. Everett, 126 Mass. 304; Hollister v. Simonson, 36 App. Div. 63, 55 N. Y. Supp. 372; Gibson v. Cunningham, 92 Mo. 131, 5 S. W. 12; 20 Ch. Div. 1; and it will be applied wherever the misrepresentation was material; 1 Giff. 355; although it might not be sufficient to sustain an action for deceit; 34 Ch. Div. 582; but it cannot be availed of for a comparatively trifling cause, as mere exaggeration of the value of property or puffing the prospects of the venture; Gerard v. Gateau, 84 Ill. 121, 25 Am. Rep. 438; 5 De G. M. & G. 126. A partner having knowledge of the fraud, who has recognized the fraudulent contract as valid, cannot obtain a rescission; Andriessen's Appeal, 123 Pa. 303, 16 Atl. 840; Evans v. Montgomery, 50 Ia. 325; St. John v. Hendrickson, 81 Ind. 350; 10 L. T. 561.

Actual notice of dissolution must be brought home to persons who have been in the habit of dealing with the firm; but as to all persons who have had no previous dealings with the firm, notice fairly given in the public newspapers is deemed sufficient; Colly. Part. 6th ed. 163, n. See Robinson v. Floyd, 159 Pa. 165, 23 Atl. 258; Cent. N. Bk. v. Frye, 148 Mass. 498, 20 N. E. 325. This notice is necessary to terminate the agency of each partner, and, consequently, his powers and liabilities as a member; Howell v. Adams, 68 N. Y. 314; Woodruff v. King, 47 Wis. 261, 2 N. W. 452; Southern v. Grim, 67 Ill. 106. If there is no notice of the dissolution and the retiring partner permits the use of his name, he is liable for the acts of the continuing partner; Hahn v. Kenefiek, 48 Mo. App. 518. It is said that notice of dissolution need not be given to one who has sold goods to the firm for cash; Merritt v. Williams, 17 Kan. 287; Clapp v. Rogers, 12 N. Y. 283; or to one who, without the knowledge of the firm, has discounted its commercial paper; City Bank v. McChesney, 20 N. Y. 241.

It is not necessary to give notice of the retirement of a dormant partner from the firm, if the fact of his being a partner be unknown to all the creditors of the firm; if it be known to some, notice to those must be given, but that will be sufficient; 1 B. & Ad. 11; Deford v. Reynolds, 36 Pa. 325; Warren v. Ball, 37 Ill. 76. But where there were an active and two dormant partners, and the firm retained a solicitor in pending litigation, and the dormant partners retired, the solicitor never having known that they were partners and having no notice of dissolution, the dormant partners were held liable for the solicitor's costs incurred after dissolution; [1897] 2 Q. B. 397.

Notice of the dissolution is not necessary, in case of the death of one of the partners, to free the estate of the deceased partner from further liability; 3 Kent 63; Washburn v. Goodman, 17 Pick. (Mass.) 519; Dickinson v. Dickinson, 25 Gratt. (Va.) 321; nor is notice, in fact, necessary in any case where the dissolution takes place by operation of law; 3 Kent 63, 67; Griswold v. Waddington, 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 57; 9 Exch. 145. Bankruptcy of a member, after dissolution, is notice of dissolution; Eustis v. Bolles, 146 Mass. 413, 16 N. E. 286, 4 Am. St. Rep. 327.

One partner may obtain an injunction to restrain his co-partner from violating his rights under the partnership articles, even when the dissolution of the partnership articles is not asked; Leavitt v. Inv. Co., 54 Fed. 439, 4 C. C. A. 425.

Effect of dissolution. The effect of dissolution, as between the partners, is to terminate all transactions between them as partners, except for the purpose of taking a general account and winding up the concern; Petrikov v. Collier, 1 Pa. 247; 3 Kent 62. As to third persons, the effect of a dissolution, with notice as stated supra, is to absolve the partners from all liability for future transactions, but not for past transactions of the firm; Maxey v. Strong, 53 Miss. 280; Curry v. White, 51 Cal. 530; Floyd v. Miller, 61 Ind. 225; Easter v. Bank, 57 Ill. 215.

It is said that a firm, notwithstanding its dissolution, continues to exist so far as may be necessary for the winding up of its business; 11 Ves. 5; Ewell's Lind. Part. *217. The power of the partners subsists for many purposes after dissolution: among these are—first, the completion of all the unfinished engagements of the partnership; second, the conversion of all the property, means, and assets of the partnership existing at the time of the dissolution, for the benefit of those who were partners, according to their respective shares; third, the application of the partnership funds to the payment of the partnership debts; 3 Kent 57; Washburn v. Goodman, 17 Pick. (Mass.) 519. See Riddle v. Whitehill, 135 U. S. 621, 10 Sup. Ct. 924, 34 L. Ed. 282. But although, for the purposes of winding up the concern and fulfilling engagements that could not be fulfilled during its existence, the power of the partners certainly subsists even after dissolution, yet, legally and strictly speaking, it subsists for those purposes only; 10 Hare 453; Bennett v. Buchan, 61 N. Y. 222; Dunlap v. Limes, 49 Ia. 177. The surviving members of a co-partnership have the legal title to the firm property, and the right to dispose of its assets only for the purpose of closing the business, not to continue it; Dawson v. Parsons, 66 Hun 628, 21 N. Y. Supp. 212. After dissolution a partner has the power to sell; 4 De G. M. & G. 542; and they may sell firm realty to pay debts; Shanks v. Klein, 104 U. S. 18, 26 L. Ed. 635.

Whether the dissolution of a partnership is per se a breach of a contract by the firm to employ a person in their service is questionable; 3 H. & N. 931. A contract of employment for a year by a firm terminates on the dissolution of the firm during the year by the death of a partner; Greenburg v. Early, 4 Misc. 99, 23 N. Y. Supp. 1009.

PARTURITION. The act of giving birth to a child. See BIRTH.

PARTUS (Lat.). The child just before it is born, or immediately after its birth.

Offspring. See MAXIMS, Partus sequitur, etc.

PARTY. See PARTIES.

PARTY AGGRIEVED. The phrase is not technical. They are ordinary English words and are to be construed in the ordinary meaning put upon them. 7 Q. B. D. 470.

PARTY IN INTEREST. A scheduled creditor of a bankrupt is such, though he has not proved his claim; Haley v. Pope, 206 Fed. 266, 124 C. C. A. 330.

PARTY-JURY. A jury de medietate unguæ. See JURY.

PARTY TO BE CHARGED. A phrase used in the seventeenth section of the Statute of Frauds, under which, in the case of certain sales, a note or memorandum of the contract must be in writing, "signed by the parties to be charged by such contract." In the fourth section the language is "by the party to be charged." It is held to be sufficient if the signature is only by the party against whom the contract is sought to be enforced; Old Colony R. Corp. v. Evans, 6 Gray (Mass.) 31, 66 Am. Dec. 394; Easton

v. Montgomery, 90 Cal. 307, 27 Pac. 280, 25 Am. St. Rep. 123; Justice v. Lang, 42 N. Y. 493, 1 Am. Rep. 576; and if a written offer be made though accepted by parol; L. R. 1 Exch. 342; contra, Wilkinson v. Heavenrich, 58 Mich. 574, 26 N. W. 139, 55 Am. Rep. 708. The signature may be by mark, or by initials, or printed, if the printed name be shown to have been adopted: Tiff. Sales 75. If the name be shown to have been signed to the writing to authenticate it, it is immaterial in what part of the writing it is placed; L. R. 2 H. L. 127. An agent may be authorized to sign by parol and a subsequent ratification proved; Conaway v. Sweeney, 24 W. Va. 643; Roehl v. Haumesser, 114 Ind. 311, 15 N. E. 345. An auctioneer at a public sale may sign for either party; 7 East 558; Johnson v. Buck, 35 N. J. L. 338, 10 Am. Rep. 243; and so, ordinarily may a broker; Codrington v. Goddard, 16 Gray (Mass.) 436; and his memorandum need not be signed: id.

See FRAUDS, STATUTE OF; NOTE or MEMORANDUM.

PARTY-WALL. A wall erected on the line between two adjoining pieces of land belonging to different persons, for the use of both properties. 2 Washb. R. P. 385.

A structure for the common benefit and convenience of both the tenements which it separates. Field v. Leiter, 118 Ill. 17, 6 N. E. 877.

The phrase ordinarily means a wall of which the two adjoining owners are tenants in common. Emden, Building Leases 285. It does not as a matter of law necessarily imply a solid structure; Hammann v. Jordan, 129 N. Y. 61, 29 N. E. 294.

It has been held that by usage the terms party-wall and partition wall have come to mean a solid wall; Normile v. Gill, 159 Mass. 427, 34 N. E. 543, 38 Am. St. Rep. 441. Cuttings of 4 inches in a party wall 18 inches thick for the insertion of joists and sleepers do not impinge on a contract that the wall shall be and remain a solid wall; McMinn v. Karter, 116 Ala. 390, 22 South. 517.

It is a wall built by one owner partly on the land of another for the common benefit of both. The adjoining owners are not joint tenants or tenants in common of the party wall. Each is possessed in severalty of his own soil up to the dividing line, and of that portion of the wall which rests upon it; but the soil of each, with the wall belonging to him, is burdened with an easement or servitude in favor of the other, to the end that it may afford a support to the wall and buildings of such other; Hoffman v. Kuhn, 57 Miss. 746, 34 Am. Rep. 491; Odd Fellows' Hall Ass'n v. Hegele, 24 Or. 16, 32 Pac. 681.

"The words party wall appear to me to express a meaning rather popular than legal, and they may, I think, be used in four different senses. They may mean, first, a wall of which the two adjoining owners are tenants in common, which is the most common and the primary meaning of the term. In the next place the term may be used to signify a wall divided longitudinally into two strips, one belonging to each of the neighboring owners. Then, thirdly, the term may mean a wall which belongs entirely to one of the adjoining owners, but is subject to an easement or right in the other to have it maintained as a dividing wall between the two tenements. The term is so used in some of the building acts. Lastly, the term may designate a wall divided longitudinally into two moieties, each moiety being subject to a cross-easement in favor of the owner of the other moiety." 14 Ch. Div. 192.

A brick wall which is used in common, as the wall of two adjacent properties in a city, is a party-wall, if erected partly on the soil of each, and so used for many years without question or complaint by either; Kelly v. Taylor, 43 La. Ann. 1157, 10 South. 255.

Every wall and separation between two buildings is presumed to be a common or party wall if the contrary be not shown; Bellenot v. Laube's Ex'r, 104 Va. 842, 52 S. E. 698.

Party-walls are generally regulated by statute. The principles of these acts generally are that the wall shall be built equally on the lands of the adjoining owners, at their joint expense, but when only one owner wishes to use such wall, it is built at his expense, and when the other wishes to make use of it he pays one-half of its value; Spaulding v. Grundy, 126 Ky. 510, 104 S. W. 293, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 149, 128 Am. St. Rep. 328, 15 Ann. Cas. 1105. Each owner has a right to place his joists in it and use it for the support of his roof. See Sherred v. Cisco, 4 Sandf. (N. Y.) 480; Abrahams v. Krautler, 24 Mo. 69, 66 Am. Dec. 698.

The law of party-walls is based on the doctrine of lateral support and is a statutory extension of the principle to buildings. An owner of a party-wall cannot extend the beams of his building beyond the middle of the wall; Lederer & Strauss v. C. Inv. Co., 130 Ia. 157, 106 N. W. 357, 8 Ann. Cas. 317.

When the party-wall has been built, and the adjoining owner is desirous of having a deeper foundation, he has a right to undermine such wall, using due care and diligence to prevent any injury to his neighbor; and, having done so, he is not answerable for any consequential damages which may ensue; Panton v. Holland, 17 Johns. (N. Y.) 92, 8 Am. Dec. 369; Thurston v. Hancock, 12 Mass. 220, 7 Am. Dec. 57; Runnels v. Bullen, 2 N. H. 534. An adjoining owner of a party-wall has a right to increase its height, but in doing so is liable for any injury to the adjoining building, even though the addition is being built by a contractor and the damages result from a windstorm which causes the wall to fall; Brooks v. Curtis, 50 N. Y. 639, 10 Am. Rep. 545; Negus v. Becker, 68 Hun 293, 22 N. Y. Supp. 986.

When such a wall exists between two buildings, belonging to different persons, and one of them takes it down with his buildings, he is required to erect another in its place in a reasonable time and with the least inconvenience; the other owner must contribute to the expense, if the wall required repairs, but such expense will be limited to the costs of the old wall; 3 Kent 436; Eno v. Del Vecchio, 6 Duer (N. Y.) 17. When the wall is taken down, it must be done with care; but it is not the duty of the person taking it down to shore up or prop the house of his neighbor to prevent it from falling. If, however, the work be done with negligence, by which injury accrues to the neighboring house, an action will lie; 1 M. & M. 362; Partridge v. Gilbert, 15 N. Y. 601, 69 Am. Dec. 632.

Where the owner of two contiguous lots erects a brick messuage, with a division wall, and sells to different purchasers, the wall is not a party-wall; Oat v. Middleton, 2 Miles (Pa.) 247 (but see infra as to the Pennsylvania statute); contra, Eno v. Del Vecchio, 6 Duer (N. Y.) 17. The right to use a party-wall is not lost by lapse of time, even seventy-five years; Roudet v. Bedell, 1 Phila. (Pa.) 366. It can be acquired by prescription after a sufficient period; Schille v. Brokhaus, 80 N. Y. 614.

A party-wall must be built without openings; Dauenhauer v. Devine, 51 Tex. 480, 32 Am. Rep. 627. Corcoran v. Nailor, 6 Mackey (D. C.) 580; Bonney v. Greenwood 96 Me. 335, 52 Atl. 786; Dunscumb v. Randolph, 107 Tenn. 89, 64 S. W. 21, 89 Am. St. Rep. 915; Normille v. Gill, 159 Mass. 427, 24 N. E. 543, 38 Am. St. Rep. 441; National Commercial Bank v. Gray, 71 Hun 295, 24 N. Y. Supp. 997. A party-wall can only be built for mutual support; painting a sign on it is unlawful; Wistar v. Pub. Soc., 2 W. N. C. (Pa.) 333. The principle of party-walls is based upon mutual benefit, and does not extend to the interior of lots where the adjoining owner cannot be expected to build; Rodearmel v. Hutchison, 2 Pears. (Pa.) 324.

Where one built a party-wall, which was defective and fell over, injuring the adjoining premises, he was held liable to the owner of the premises; Gorham v. Gross, 125 Mass. 232, 28 Am. Rep. 224. Where a building having a party-wall is destroyed by fire, leaving the wall standing, the easement in the wall ceases; Hoffman v. Kuhn, 57 Miss. 746, 34 Am. Rep. 491; and so where the wall becomes unfit either from age or accident; Odd Fellows' Ass'n v. Hegele, 24 Or. 16, 32 Pac. 679.

An agreement between adjoining owners in relation to a party-wall erected on the division lines of their lots is binding on the parties and those who purchase subject to such agreement, and creates cross easements upon the lots; Stehr v. Raben, 33 Neb. 437, 50 N. W. 327; Mott v. Oppenheimer, 135 N. Y. 312, 31 N. E. 1097, 17 L. R. A. 409; but see Nalle v. Paggi, 9 S. W. 205, 1 L. R. A. 33. It creates a covenant running with the land; Keating v. Korfhage, 88 Mo. 524, 1 L. R. A. 3. But an agreement to pay half the cost is merely a personal covenant; Gibson v. Holden, 115 Ill. 199, 3 N. E. 282, 56 Am. Rep. 146.

A property owner who utilizes a party-wall erected by the owner of adjoining property must pay a reasonable price for such use, either to the one who erected it or to his grantee, although no agreement was made at the time the wall was erected, and the one making use of the wall may have acquired his title to the property after the wall was in existence; Spaulding v. Grundy, 126 Ky. 510, 104 S. W. 293, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 149, 128 Am. St. Rep. 328, 15 Ann. Cas. 1105.

By statute in Iowa, Mississippi, Pennsylvania, and South Carolina, and in the District of Columbia, one adjacent owner may build over his neighbor's line, without compensating him, except that the latter may, when he pleases, use the wall so built, upon paying for it. The cases should be read with a view to the statutes. The regulation of party walls is a very ancient form of exercise of the police power, and came to Pennsylvania from the customs of London, like so many other parts of our early law. The subject is discussed in a note in 7 Amer. L. Reg. N. S. 10. Such regulation, as it exists in Pennsylvania and some other states, is an interference with the rights and enjoyment of property, sustainable only on the police power, and therefore to be governed and measured by the strict extent of the statutory grant; Hoffstot v. Voight, 146 Pa. 636, 23 Atl. 351. The provincial act of 1692 in Massachusetts, similar to the Pennsylvania act, was held void as contrary to the bill of rights; Wilkins v. Jewett, 139 Mass. 29, 29 N. E. 214, a case cited by counsel, but not followed, in McCall's Appeal, 16 W. N. C. (Pa.) 95. But it has also been said that there can be no available objection to the principle upon which the law of party-walls is based. It has constituted a part of the law of France for ages. The principle is no invasion of the absolute right of property. Per Lowrie, J., in Evans v. Jayne, 23 Pa. 36.

The purpose of the Pennsylvania act of April 10, 1849, relating to party-walls was—first, to make the right to compensation pass with the land unless reserved until the wall is used; and second, to vest in the owner at the time of such use the right to compensation. Where such right of compensation has actually vested in an owner, the right does not pass from the owner by his subsequent conveyance of the property, even though there is no reservation of this right; Lea v. Jones, 209 Pa. 22, 57 Atl. 1113. Each purchaser of either lot on which a party-wall has been placed has the right to assume that any compensation as between their vendors has been paid; Mayer v. Martin, 83 Miss. 322, 35 South. 218.

A party-wall agreement by which it is agreed that a wall about to be erected by one of two adjoining owners shall be a party-wall, that it shall stand equally on the land of both, and that the other owner or his representatives, whenever he or they desire to use the wall, shall pay a share of the expense of erecting it, does not constitute a covenant running with the land; Sebald v. Mulholland, 155 N. Y. 455, 50 N. E. 260; Mayer v. Martin, 83 Miss. 322, 35 South. 218. That such a contract concerns an interest in real estate, and hence the covenants thereof run with the land, is held in Hall v. Geyer, 14 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 229.

One taking a warranty deed, without reservation, from tenants in common, is not bound by a previous party-wall agreement between his grantors on the one hand, and one of them owning an adjoining parcel on the other, though the agreement is declared to be a covenant running with the land; Kinnear v. Moses, 32 Wash. 215, 73 Pac. 380.

PARVA SERJEANTIA. Petty serjeanty. See SERJEANTY.

PARVIS. A part of St. Paul's Cathedral in London, where the Serjeants, standing each by his allotted pillar used to give advice to their clients. 2 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 411.

PARVUM CAPE. See PETIT CAPE.

PASS. A certificate given to a slave, by his master or mistress, in which it is stated that he is permitted to leave his home with their authority. The paper on which such certificate is written.

In Practice. To be given or entered: as, let the judgment pass for the plaintiff.

To become transferred: thus, the title to goods passes by the sale whenever the parties have agreed upon the sale and the price, and nothing remains to be done to complete the agreement; 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 939.

To decide upon. When a jury decide upon the rights of the parties, which are in issue, they are said to pass upon them.

The constitutions of various states forbid the issue of free passes on railroads, except in certain cases, as does the interstate commerce act.

A contract to issue free railroad passes to one in consideration of his grant of land to a railroad company is not within the prohibition of the interstate commerce act; Curry v. R. Co., 58 Kan. 6, 48 Pac. 579; so where the consideration is a release of damages for personal injury; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Mottley, 133 Ky. 652, 118 S. W. 982; but it was held otherwise where the consideration was an agreement to throw business in the way of the railroad company; Slater v. R. Co., 2 Inters. Com. R. 243; and where such passes were issued on account of interstate traffic furnished by the recipients, on the ground that it afforded transportation at less than established rates; Milk Producers' Protective Ass'n v. R. Co., 7 Inters. Com. R. 163; so where newspaper employes were employed on interstate trains to sort newspapers for quick delivery at stations, receiving return transportation to the starting point; In re Free Transp. of Newspaper Employes, 12 Inters. Com. R. 15. Furnishing transportation in payment of newspaper advertising is a violation of the amended interstate commerce act; U. S. v. R. Co., 163 Fed. 114; so under a like state act; Hicks Print. Co. v. R. Co., 138 Wis. 584, 120 N. W. 512; McNeill v. R. Co., 132 N. C. 510, 44 S. E. 34, 67 L. R. A. 227, 95 Am. St. Rep. 641; unless the advertising was equal to the transportation; Hicks Print. Co. v. R. Co., 138 Wis. 584, 120 N. W. 512.

The interstate commerce act, as amended, provides that railroad companies may give free carriage to their own officers and employes, and the principal officers may exchange passes or tickets with each other; see American Exp. Co. v. U. S., 212 U. S. 535, 29 Sup. Ct. 315, 53 L. Ed. 635.

See INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION; PASSENGER.

PASS AND REPASS. The phrase has been held to mean going and returning over the road once only. 34 J. P. 823.

PASS-BOOK. In Mercantile Law. A book used by merchants with their customers, in which an entry of goods sold and delivered to a customer is made.

It is kept by the buyer, and sent to the merchant whenever he wishes to purchase any article. It ought to be a counterpart of the merchant's books, as far as regards the customer's account.

The term pass-book is given to a small book made up from time to time from the banker's ledger and forwarded to the customer: this is not considered as a statement of account between the parties: yet when the customer neglects for a long time to make any objection to the correctness of the entries, he will be bound by them; 2 D. & C. 534; 2 M. & W. 2.

The entry of a deposit in a pass-book to the credit of the depositor is in the nature of a receipt, and is prima facie evidence that the bank has received the amount from the depositor and entered it to his credit; Quattrochi v. Bank, 89 Mo. App. 500.

A depositor in a bank, who sends his pass-book to be written up and receives it back with entries of credits and debits and his paid checks as vouchers for the latter, is bound to examine with due diligence the pass-book and vouchers, and to report to the bank without any unreasonable delay any errors which may be discovered in them; and if he fails to do so and the bank is thereby misled to its prejudice, he cannot afterwards discredit the balance as shown by the pass-book. If a depositor delegates the examination to a clerk without proper supervision he will not be protected from loss if it turns out that without his knowledge the clerk had committed forgery in raising the amounts of some of the checks, and thereby misled the bank to its prejudice, in spite of due care on the part of its officers; Leather Manufacturers' Bk. v. Morgan, 117 U. S. 96, 6 Sup. Ct. 657, 29 L. Ed. 811. He is not however, necessarily liable for his agent's dishonesty; Nat. Bk. of Commerce v. Mill Co., 182 Fed. 11, 104 C. C. A. 441.

PASSAGE. Properly a way over water. Where a seaman shipped for a voyage to foreign parts, and at the termination of the voyage was provided with a passage to a port within the United Kingdom, but not the one from which he originally shipped, he was held to have been provided with a passage home, within the meaning of the Merchant Shipping Act; [1897] 1 Q. B. 712.

PASSAGE COURT. An ancient court of record in Liverpool, once called the "mayor's court of pays sage," but now usually called the "court of the passage of the borough of Liverpool." M. & W.

PASSAGE-MONEY. The sum claimable for the conveyance of a person, with or without luggage, on the water.

The difference between freight and passage-money is this, that the former is claimable for the carriage of goods, and the latter for the carriage of the person. The same rules which govern the claim for freight affect that for passage-money; 3 Chitty, Com. Law 424; 1 Pet. Adm. 126; Watson v. Dwyer, 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 335. See COMMON CARRIERS OF PASSENGERS.

PASSAGIO. An ancient writ addressed to the keepers of the ports to permit a man who had the king's leave to pass over sea. Reg. Orig. 193.

PASSAGIUM REGIS. A voyage or expedition to the Holy Land made by the kings of England in person. Cowell.

PASSATOR. He who has the interest or command of the passage of a river; or a lord to whom a duty is paid for passage. Wharton.

PASSENGER. One who has taken a place in a public conveyance, by virtue of a contract, for the purpose of being transported from one place to another, on the payment of fare or its equivalent. Bricker v. R. Co., 132 Pa. 1, 18 Atl. 983, 19 Am. St. Rep. 585.

The Nature of the Relation between Carrier and Passenger. "The rights, privileges, and protection attaching to the relation of a passenger are imposed by law upon common carriers upon considerations of public policy, independent of contract, and arise from the nature of their public employment;" McNeill v. R. Co., 135 N. C. 682, 47 S. E. 765, 67 L. R. A. 227.

The purchase of a ticket and the entry by a person on the premises or accommodations of the carrier creates the relation of passenger and carrier with all its rights, duties, and obligations; Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Rector, 104 Ill. 296; Allender v. R. Co., 37 Ia. 264; so does entry on the premises with the intention of buying a ticket; Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Galliher, 89 Va. 639, 16 S. E. 935.

One becomes a passenger when in the station waiting for a train; Warner v. R. Co., 168 U. S. 339, 18 Sup. Ct. 68, 42 L. Ed. 491; Exton v. R. Co., 63 N. J. L. 356, 46 Atl. 1099, 56 L. R. A. 508, and Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Holloway, 71 Kan. 1, 80 Pac. 31, 114 Am. St. Rep. 462 (but not crossing the track with a ticket in his pocket, not having been to the depot; Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. Jennings, 190 Ill. 478, 60 N. E. 818, 54 L. R. A. 827; Southern R. Co. v. Smith, 86 Fed. 292, 30 C. C. A. 58, 40 L. R. A. 746); or when he purchased a ticket and passed through the turn-stile to take a train; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Treat, 179 Ill. 576, 54 N. E. 290; or with a return ticket waiting in the station for a train; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Walker, 217 Ill. 605, 75 N. E. 520. One who gets on the wrong train by his own mistake is a passenger and entitled to care and protection; Lewis v. Canal Co., 145 N. Y. 508, 40 N. E. 248; Cincinnati, H. & I. R. Co. v. Carper, 112 Ind. 26, 13 N. E. 122, 14 N. E. 352, 2 Am. St. Rep. 144; even if a freight train; Bogges v. R. Co., 37 W. Va. 297, 16 S. E. 525, 23 L. R. A. 777; but not if, on being informed of his mistake, he attempts to leave it; Robertson v. R. Co., 190 Mass. 108, 76 N. E. 513, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 588, 112 Am. St. Rep. 314. As to the duty of a carrier to passengers on wrong trains by mistake of its servants, see St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. White, 99 Tex. 359, 89 S. W. 746, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 110, note, 122 Am. St. Rep. 631, 13 Ann. Cas. 965. A contract to carry a passenger from one station to another does not, in the absence of special terms, entitle him to break his journey at any intermediate station; [1904] 2 K. B. 313.

One who travels regularly in the prosecution of his business on the trains or other conveyances of a carrier, and pays for the privilege of conducting his business, is a passenger entitled to protection, as one who sells popcorn on a train; Com. v. R. Co., 108 Mass. 7, 11 Am. Rep. 301; or conducts a bar on a steamboat; Yeomans v. Steam Nav. Co., 44 Cal. 71. Express messengers and mail clerks are passengers; Nolton v. R. Corp., 15 N. Y. 444, 69 Am. Dec. 623; Seybolt v. R. Co., 95 N. Y. 562, 47 Am. Rep. 75;

Davis v. R. Co., 122 Ky. 529, 92 S. W. 339, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 458, 121 Am. St. Rep. 481, 12 Ann. Cas. 723; Blair v. R. Co., 66 N. Y. 313, 23 Am. Rep. 55; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Crudup, 63 Miss. 291; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Price, 96 Pa. 256; but not a voluntary assistant to an express messenger or mail clerk; Union P. R. Co. v. Nichols, 8 Kan. 505, 12 Am. Rep. 475; or a newsboy permitted to ride free; Flower v. R. Co., 69 Pa. 210, 8 Am. Rep. 251; Snyder v. R. Co., 60 Mo. 413; or an employé of the carrier who rides free between his home and place of employment; McQueen v. R. Co., 30 Kan. 689, 1 Pac. 139. An express agent cannot recover against a stipulation of his ticket; Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. v. Voigt, 176 U. S. 498, 20 Sup. Ct. 385, 44 L. Ed. 560; and see note to that case in 35 Am. L. Rev. 306, where the cases are collected on the subject of express messengers, drovers, postal clerks, etc., and where it is strongly contended that the company should be liable upon the ground taken in a dissenting opinion by Harlan, J.

One who travels free; Philadelphia & R. Co. v. Derby, 14 How. (U. S.) 468, 14 L. Ed. 502; Cleveland, C., C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Ketcham, 133 Ind. 346, 33 N. E. 116, 19 L. R. A. 539, 36 Am. St. Rep. 550; McNeill v. R. Co., 135 N. C. 682, 47 S. E. 765, 67 L. R. A. 227; Bryant v. R. Co., 53 Fed. 997, 4 C. C. A. 146, 12 U. S. App. 115; Flint & P. M. R. Co. v. Wier, 37 Mich. 111, 26 Am. Rep. 499; on an annual or other free pass; Thompson v. R. Co., 47 Ia. Ann. 1107, 17 South. 503; In re California Nav. & Imp. Co., 110 Fed. 670; Young v. Ry. Co., 93 Mo. App. 267; State v. R. Co., 63 Md. 433; or on a drover's pass; Flinn v. R. Co., 1 Houst. (Del.) 469; Cleveland P. & A. R. Co. v. Curran, 19 Ohio St. 1, 2 Am. Rep. 362; Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Selby, 47 Ind. 471, 17 Am. Rep. 719; Rose v. R. Co., 39 Ia. 246; Indianapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Horst, 93 U. S. 291, 23 L. Ed. 898; Va. & T. R. Co. v. Sayers, 26 Grat. (Va.) 328; Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Nickless, 71 Ind. 271; is entitled to the same care as the holder of a regular ticket, even if he expressly assumes the risk of accident; Burnett v. R. Co., 176 Pa. 45, 34 Atl. 972; but an employé, travelling on a free pass containing a stipulation that the company will not be liable, cannot recover for injuries; Kinney v. R. Co., 34 N. J. L. 513, 3 Am. Rep. 265. It has been held that the carrier may exempt himself from liability to one travelling on a free pass even against its own negligence; Northern P. R. Co. v. Adams, 192 U. S. 442, 24 Sup. Ct. 408, 48 L. Ed. 513; Griswold v. R. Co., 53 Conn. 371, 4 Atl. 261, 55 Am. Rep. 115; Quimby v. R. Co., 150 Mass. 365, 23 N. E. 205, 5 L. R. A. 846. But it is held otherwise in England as to negligence; 13 Ir. L. T. 100; L. R. 10 Q. B. 437; L. R. 8 Q. B. 57; and in New York; Poucher v. R. Co., 49 N.

Y. 263, 10 Am. Rep. 364. Where the employés are carried back and forth to their work, whether on construction or passenger trains, outside of their regular hours of employment, they are passengers; Gillshannon v. R. Corp., 10 Cush. (Mass.) 228; St. Louis, C. & St. P. R. Co. v. Waggoner, 90 Ill. App. 556; Vick v. R. Co., 95 N. Y. 267, 47 Am. Rep. 36; Com. v. Power, 7 Mete. (Mass.) 596, 41 Am. Dec. 465.

One who was travelling on Sunday contrary to a statute is entitled to protection as a passenger; Carroll v. R. Co., 58 N. Y. 126, 17 Am. Rep. 221. This results from the theory of the relation cited, supra, from a North Carolina case, since, as it rested upon contract, there could be no liability for the breach of a contract entered into in violation of law, but the duty is independent of contract and "imposed by law from considerations of public policy"; Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. v. Trautwein, 52 N. J. L. 169, 19 Atl. 178, 7 L. R. A. 435, 19 Am. St. Rep. 442. Where a policeman, travelling free under a municipal ordinance, was injured, the company was held liable, although the ordinance was unconstitutional; Bradburn v. Light Co., 45 Wash. 582, 88 Pac. 1020, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 526. One permitted by an employé to ride for less than the fare and shut in a box car is not a passenger; McNamara v. R. Co., 61 Minn. 296, 63 N. W. 726; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Johnson, 3 Okl. 41, 41 Pac. 641; Grahn v. R. Co., 100 Tex. 27, 93 S. W. 104, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1025, and note, 123 Am. St. Rep. 767; a carrier is not liable to one who rides by stealth; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Michie, 83 Ill. 427; or who is a trespasser; Muehlhausen v. R. Co., 91 Mo. 332, 2 S. W. 315; although invited by an employé of the carrier to ride; Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Campbell, 76 Tex. 174, 13 S. W. 19.

The relation had ceased when the passenger started to go into the office of the stage company while the horses were changed; Central R. Co. v. Peacock, 69 Md. 257, 14 Atl. 709, 9 Am. St. Rep. 425; where he got off while the train was side-tracked; State v. R. Co., 58 Me. 176, 4 Am. Rep. 258; but, on the contrary, it is held that the railroad company owes a peculiar duty to passengers; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Shean, 18 Colo. 368, 33 Pac. 108, 20 L. R. A. 729; he need not be on the train while stopping, but may stand or walk around; Jeffersonville, M. & I. R. Co. v. Riley, 39 Ind. 568; or leave the car while the transit is interrupted; Conroy v. R. Co., 96 Wis. 243, 70 N. W. 486, 38 L. R. A. 419; or at a regular station for motives of either business or curiosity; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Sattler, 64 Neb. 636, 90 N. W. 649, 57 L. R. A. 890, 97 Am. St. Rep. 666; or to eat a meal at a nearby hotel; Watson v. R. Co., 92 Ala. 320, 8 South. 770. An employé going to work is not a passenger; Southern Indiana R. Co. v. Messick, 35 Ind. App. 676; one employed as a "greaser," who paid his fare with a ticket given by his employer with which he was going to his work, was held not a passenger, the ticket being part of his wages; Herbert v. R. Co., 103 Me. 315, 69 Atl. 266, 125 Am. St. Rep. 297, 13 Ann. Cas. 886; contra, O'Donnell v. R. Co., 59 Pa. 239, 98 Am. Dec. 336; nor is one a passenger if, as an employé, he is travelling on his own business; Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Muhling, 30 Ill. 9, 81 Am. Dec. 336; nor if the carrier refuses to accept him as such because he refuses to pay fare; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Johnson, 92 Ala. 204, 9 South. 269, 25 Am. St. Rep. 35; Moore v. R. Co., 38 S. C. 1, 16 S. E. 781; Brown v. R. Co., 64 Mo. 536; Higley v. Gilmer, 3 Mont. 90, 35 Am. Rep. 450; or is drunk and disorderly; L. & E. R. R. Co. v. McNally, 105 S. W. 124, 31 Ky. L. Rep. 1357; and in such case the railway company is not bound to transport him; 6 Fed. 362; but if refused on the latter ground, and the jury find the refusal wrongful, the carrier is liable; Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Galliher, 89 Va. 639, 16 S. E. 935; nor is one who secures a ticket by fraud a passenger; Brown v. R. Co., 64 Mo. 536; Moore v. R. Co., 41 W. Va. 160, 23 S. E. 539; Fitzmaurice v. R. Co., 192 Mass. 159, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1146, 116 Am. St. Rep. 236, 7 Ann. Cas. 586; 16 Yale L. J. 282, where it is said the decisions are almost unanimous but for Robostelli v. R. Co., 33 Fed. 796, where one using the commutation ticket of another was held a passenger if it was presented in good faith, though as suggested in the annotation cited it is difficult to see how this could be done in that case.

The relation continues until the passenger has left the railroad premises or has had reasonable time to do so; Burnham v. R. Co., 91 Mich. 523, 52 N. W. 14; Chicago & A. Ry. Co. v. Tracey, 109 Ill. App. 563; Imhoff v. R. Co., 20 Wis. 344; Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co. v. Wood, 104 Fed. 663, 44 C. C. A. 118; Wallace v. R. Co., 8 Houst. (Del.) 529, 18 Atl. 818; Glenn v. R. Co., 165 Ind. 659, 75 N. E. 282, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 872, 112 Am. St. Rep. 255, and note, 6 Ann. Cas. 1,032, collecting cases; but a reasonable time may include detention in the station by the weather; Louisville & N. R. R. Co. v. Keller, 104 Ky. 768, 47 S. W. 1072; remaining on a boat overnight, after arrival, by permission; Prickett v. Anchor Line, 13 Mo. App. 436; or looking after baggage; Ormond v. Hayes, 60 Tex. 180; but not attending to his own business; Hendrick v. R. Co., 136 Mo. 548, 38 S. W. 297; Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Krouse, 30 Ohio St. 222; or delaying to commit a breach of the peace; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Barrett, 16 Ill. App. 17; and what is a reasonable time is a question for the jury; Houston & T. R. Co. v. Batchler, 37 Tex. Civ. App. 116, 83 S. W. 902. So also he is entitled to a reasonable or sufficient time to leave the train, the two words being used indiscriminately; Raughley v. R. Co., 202 Pa.

43, 51 Atl. 597; Appleby v. R. Co., 60 S. C. 48, 38 S. E. 237; Rutledge v. R. Co., 129 Fed. 94, 63 C. C. A. 596; McDonald v. R. Co., 116 N. Y. 546, 22 N. E. 1068, 15 Am. Rep. 516; where the train is crowded so that passengers are on the platform, the carrier must exercise care commensurate with the situation and is liable for failure to do so; Lynn v. So. Pac. Co., 103 Cal. 7, 36 Pac. 1018, 24 L. R. A. 710, and note, as to the duty of the carrier with respect to crowded trains. A passenger may go on the platform to escape danger and his doing so will not prevent a recovery, even under a statute relieving the company from liability for injury to one riding on the platform; Mitchell v. R. Co., 87 Cal. 62, 25 Pac. 245, 11 L. R. A. 130; Buel v. R. Co., 31 N. Y. 314, 88 Am. Dec. 271.

The exposure of the body beyond the sides of a moving train is per se contributory negligence; Clarke's Adm'r v. R. Co., 101 Ky. 34, 39 S. W. 840, 36 L. R. A. 123; Benedict v. R. Co., 86 Minn. 224, 90 N. W. 360, 57 L. R. A. 639, 91 Am. St. Rep. 345; Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Scott, 88 Va. 958, 14 S. E. 763, 16 L. R. A. 91; Indianapolis & C. R. Co. v. Rutherford, 29 Ind. 82, 92 Am. Dec. 336; Pittsburg & C. R. Co. v. McClurg, 56 Pa. 294; Ga. Pac. R. Co. v. Underwood, 90 Ala. 49, 8 South. 116, 24 Am. St. Rep. 756; Breen v. R. Co., 109 N. Y. 297, 16 N. E. 60, 4 Am. St. Rep. 450; Pittsburg & C. R. Co. v. Andrews, 39 Md. 329, 17 Am. Rep. 568; but some courts hold that resting the elbow on the window sill is not negligence; Farlow v. Kelly, 108 U. S. 288, 2 Sup. Ct. 555, 27 L. Ed. 726; Breen v. R. Co., 109 N. Y. 297, 16 N. E. 60, 4 Am. St. Rep. 450; Winters v. R. Co., 39 Mo. 468; and others hold that in such cases it is a question for the jury, even where the arm projected outside the car; Barton v. R. Co., 52 Mo. 253, 14 Am. Rep. 418; Spencer v. R. Co., 17 Wis. 487, 84 Am. Dec. 758; Quinn v. R. Co., 29 S. C. 381, 7 S. E. 614, 1 L. R. A. 682; Moakler v. R. Co., 18 Or. 189, 22 Pac. 948, 6 L. R. A. 656, 17 Am. St. Rep. 717; Holbrook v. R. Co., 12 N. Y. 236, 64 Am. Dec. 502.

The carrier owes no duty to one who tries to board the train when a gate or vestibule door is closed; Sanders v. R. Co., 10 Okl. 325, 61 Pac. 1075; Robinson v. R. Co., 5 Misc. 209, 25 N. Y. Supp. 91; Clark v. R. Co., 68 App. Div. 49, 74 N. Y. Supp. 267, affirmed 175 N. Y. 476, 67 N. E. 1081; Graham v. R. Co., 131 Ia. 741, 107 N. W. 595, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 603, 117 Am. St. Rep. 445; and one refused as a passenger, riding on the step and refusing to come inside, is not a passenger; Hogner v. R. Co., 198 Mass. 260, 84 N. E. 464, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 960, and note. An attempt to board a train or car after the gate or door is closed is generally held to be negligence which will bar a recovery; Brown v. R. Co., 82 App. Div. 222, 81 N. Y. Supp. 755; Graham v. R. Co., supra; and as to getting on or off a moving train see Hoylman v. R. Co., 65 W. Va. 264, 64 S. E. 536, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 741, note, 17 Ann. Cas. 1149. But whether it was contributory negligence to remain on the platform, when the door was locked under what the court held to be a reasonable rule at stations, was a question for the jury; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Brown (Tex.) 39 S. W. 326; such negligence will not excuse the carrier, if by the negligent act of its employé an injury occurs; Sharrer v. Paxson, 171 Pa. 26, 33 Atl. 120; Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Recor, 104 Ill. 296. The mere fact of riding upon the platform or running board of a crowded street car is not contributory negligence; Kramer v. R. Co., 190 N. Y. 310, 83 N. E. 35; Lobner v. R. Co., 79 Kan. 811, 101 Pac. 463, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 972, and note where the cases are collected; as also Capi- tal Traction Co. v. Brown, 29 App. D. C. 473, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 831, 10 Ann. Cas. 813; Burns v. R. Co., 213 Pa. 143, 62 Atl. 564, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1191; contra, as to standing on the running board outside of the lowered bar; Harding v. R. Transit Co., 217 Pa. 69, 66 Atl. 151, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 352; and when there is a seat in the car; Burns v. R. Co., 213 Pa. 143, 62 Atl. 564, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1191; Pike v. R. Co., 192 Mass. 426, 78 N. E. 497; Chicago City R. Co. v. Schaefer, 121 Ill. App. 334; and the conductor has warned him; Schoenfeld v. R. Co., 74 Wis. 433, 43 N. W. 162; it is a question of fact; Brackney v. Public Service Corp., 77 N. J. L. 1, 71 Atl. 149; Betz v. Rhode Island Co. (R. I.) 70 Atl. 1058.

A railroad employé is not guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law in taking an exposed position (or one of some danger), unless he takes a risk of injury so great that no person of ordinary prudence would have assumed it; Milbourne v. Electric Power Station Co., 140 Mich. 316, 103 N. W. 821, 70 L. R. A. 600, where there is a full collection of cases in the opinions and arguments on the question of contributory negligence of employés in riding in a dangerous position.

A passenger is bound by the reasonable rules of a carrier; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Williams, 55 Ill. 185, 8 Am. Rep. 641; Gray v. R. Co., 11 Fed. 683; Com. v. Power, 7 Metc. (Mass.) 596, 41 Am. Dec. 472; which do not violate the obligation of the contract; Attorney General v. R. R., 142 Mass. 40, 6 N. E. 854. Whether such rule is reasonable is a question for the court; 18 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 356; Smith v. R. Co., 92 Mo. 359, 4 S. W. 129, 1 Am. St. Rep. 729; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Whittemore, 43 Ill. 420, 92 Am. Dec. 138; Louisville, N. & G. S. R. Co. v. Fleming, 14 Lea (Tenn.) 128; Montgomery v. R. Co., 165 N. Y. 139, 58 N. E. 770. As to what is a reasonable regulation, see COMMON CARRIERS OF PASSENGERS. There is a reciprocal duty of the passenger to ask of trainmen any information required and for the trainmen to furnish such information to the passenger; Boehm v. R. Co., 91 Wis. 592, 65 N. W. 506.

A carrier is liable for the misdirection of a passenger by a ticket agent which results in his not taking the best route and thereby suffering inconvenience and delay; St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. White, 99 Tex. 359, 89 S. W. 746, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 110, 122 Am. St. Rep. 631, 13 Ann. Cas. 965. Where the agent by mistake punched the mileage ticket to expire on the day of its date instead of a year later the ejection of the passenger was wrongful, because the circumstances were such as to put the conductor on inquiry before acting; Krueger v. Ry. Co., 68 Minn. 445, 71 N. W. 683, 64 Am. St. Rep. 487. If injury result from the discharge of a passenger at the wrong destination, then the negligence of the defendant must be shown to be the proximate cause; Georgia R. & Elec. Co. v. McAllister, 126 Ga. 447, 54 S. E. 957, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1177, and note.

A passenger paid his fare to a flag station and notified the conductor of his desire to be set down there. The train stopped about a mile before reaching the station, and upon being directed by the conductor that it was his station, the passenger alighted. The passenger recovered for injuries due to his being compelled to walk to his destination, regardless of carrier's negligence; Beaumont S. L. & W. R. Co. v. Bishop (Tex.) 160 S. W. 975.

A conductor ejecting passengers for alleged disorderly conduct acts at his peril in determining their identity; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Conder, 23 Tex. Civ. App. 488, 58 S. W. 58; Seaboard Air Line Ry. v. O'Quin, 124 Ga. 357, 52 S. E. 427, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 472. So it is a question for the jury whether due care was used in expelling a passenger when the right to do it existed; Tilburg v. R. Co., 217 Pa. 618, 66 Atl. 846, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 359, and note.

As a general rule a carrier is not liable as an insurer for torts of fellow passengers, but he is bound to due care to protect a passenger from them and is liable for the lack of it; Brown v. R. Co., 139 Fed. 972, 72 C. C. A. 20, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 105 and note; Meyer v. R. Co., 54 Fed. 116, 4 C. C. A. 221. Some cases put the liability upon the doctrine of respondet superior; Britton v. R. Co., 88 N. C. 536, 43 Am. Rep. 749; New Orleans, St. L. & C. R. Co. v. Burke, 53 Miss. 200, 24 Am. Rep. 689; while others hold that there is no such privity between a carrier and a disorderly passenger as to warrant the application of that rule; Pittsburgh, Ft. W. & C. R. Co. v. Hinds, 53 Pa. 512, 91 Am. Dec. 224. Some cases hold that the carrier is bound only to ordinary care; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Pillsbury, 123 Ill. 9, 14 N. E. 22, 5 Am. St. Rep. 483; Exton v. R. Co., 63 N. J. L. 356, 46 Atl. 1099, 56 L. R. A. 508; Tall v. Steam Packet Co., 90 Md. 248, 44 Atl. 1007, 47 L. R. A. 120; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Minor, 69 Miss. 710, 11 South. 101, 16 L. R. A. 627; while others require of it extraordinary care of the same degree as that which applies to its machinery, roadbed, etc.; Pittsburgh & C. R. Co. v. Pillow, 76 Pa. 510, 18 Am. Rep. 424; Newport News & M. V. R. Co. v. Mercer, 96 Ky. 475, 29 S. W. 301, 16 Ky. L. Rep. 557.

The best considered cases hold the carrier liable for insults &c. of strangers, fellow passengers, and servants; Sanford v. R. Co., 23 N. Y. 343, 80 Am. Dec. 286; even for torts outside of the scope of the servants' authority; Bryant v. Rich, 106 Mass. 180, 8 Am. Rep. 311; Indianapolis U. R. Co. v. Cooper, 6 Ind. App. 202, 33 N. E. 219; where the passenger was insulted by the carrier's servant, she was allowed to recover for mental humiliation; Gillespie v. R. Co., 178 N. Y. 347, 70 N. E. 857, 66 L. R. A. 618, 102 Am. St. Rep. 503; and as to the principles involved, see 15 Harv. L. Rev. 670. The carrier is under the same strict obligation to protect a passenger from the negligence or wilful misconduct of a fellow passenger as to carry him safely; Colorado M. R. Co. v. Brady, 45 Colo. 207, 101 Pac. 62.

An ordinance requiring a street railway company to run cars enough to provide with a seat every passenger from whom fare is demanded is valid, unless in particular cases where it can be shown to be impossible of performance; North Jersey St. R. Co. v. Jersey City, 75 N. J. L. 349, 67 Atl. 1072.

Where plaintiff bought a ticket and, although she did not become a passenger herself, used it to send baggage which was lost, she may recover the value of the baggage; Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Knox (Ala.) 63 South. 538, contra, Marshall v. R. Co., 126 Mich. 45, 85 N. W. 242, 55 L. R. A. 650.

Seamen have no right, even in cases of extreme peril, to sacrifice the lives of passengers, for the sake of preserving their own; U. S. v. Holmes, 1 Wall. Jr. 1, Fed. Cas. 15,383.

See NEGLIGENCE; BAGGAGE; TICKET; COMMON CARRIERS OF PASSENGERS; SLEEPING CAR; RAILROAD.

PASSENGER SHIP. "Every description of sea-going vessel carrying one or more passenger or passengers on any voyage from any place in Her Majesty's Dominions to any place whatever." 52 & 53 Vict. c. 29.

PASSENGER TRAIN. "A train advertised to take passengers generally,—people travelling from place to place,—upon the terms and in the manner ordinarily applicable to such passengers." 54 L. J. Q. B. 535.

PASSIAGIARIUS. A ferryman. Jacob.

PASSIM (Lat.). Everywhere. Often used to indicate a very general reference to a book or legal authority.

PASSIVE. See DEBT; TRUST.

PASSPORT (Fr. passer, to pass, port, harbor or gate). In Maritime Law. A paper containing a permission from a neutral state to the captain or master of a ship or vessel to proceed on the voyage proposed. It usually contains his name and residence, the name, property, description, tonnage, and destination of the ship, the nature and quantity of the cargo, the place from whence it comes, and its destination, with such other matters as the practice of the place requires.

It is also called a sea-brief, or sea-letter (q. v.). But Marshall distinguishes sea-letter from passport, which latter, he says, is pretended to protect the ship, while the former relates to the cargo, destination, etc. See Jacobs, Sea-Laws 66, note.

This document is indispensably necessary in time of war for the safety of every neutral vessel; Marsh. Ins. 317, 406 b.

A Mediterranean pass (q. v.), or protection against the Barbary powers.

A document granted in time of war to protect persons or property from the general operation of hostilities. Wheat. Int. Law, 3d Eng. ed. § 408; 1 Kent 161; The Amiable Isabella, 6 Wheat. (U. S.) 3, 5 L. Ed. 191.

In most countries of continental Europe passports are given to travellers. These are intended to protect them on their journey from all molestation while they are obedient to the laws. The secretary of state may issue, or cause to be issued in foreign countries by such diplomatic or consular officers of the United States, and under such rules as the president may prescribe, passports, but only to citizens of the United States; R. S. §§ 4075-4076. See SAFE CONDUCT.

PASTURES. Lands upon which beasts feed themselves. By a grant of pastures the land itself passes. 1 Thomas, Co. Litt. 202. See COMMON.

PATENT. A grant of some privilege, property, or authority, made by the government or sovereign of a country to one or more individuals. Phillips, Pat. 1.

As the term was originally used in England, it signified certain written instruments emanating from the king and sealed with the great seal. These instruments conferred grants of lands, honors, or franchises; they were called letters patent, from being delivered open, and by way of contradistinction from instruments like the French lettres de cachet, which went out sealed.

In the United States, the word patent is sometimes understood to mean the title-deed by which a government, either state or federal, conveys its lands. But in its more usual acceptation it is understood as referring to those instruments by which the government secures to inventors for a limited time the exclusive right to their own inventions.

The granting of exclusive privileges by means of letters patent was a power which for a long time was greatly abused by the sovereigns of England. The sole right of dealing in certain commodities was in that manner conferred upon particular individuals, either as a matter of royal favor or as a means of replenishing the royal treasury. These exclusive privileges, which were termed monopolies, became extremely odious, and, at an early date, met with the most determined resistance. One of the provisions of Magna Charta was intended to prevent the granting of monopolies of this character; and subsequent prohibitions and restrictions were enacted by parliament even under the most energetic and absolute of their monarchs. See Hallam, Const. Hist. 153, 205.
